Let This Machine Make Extra Money for You

It Draws Nickels that Would Go Elsewhere

This is the motion pop corn machine. People coming into your theatre, or waiting for the next show to begin, can't resist watching this machine work. They see it pop corn, sort out the unpopped kernels, butter the popped ones with pure, creamery butter and deliver them, ready to be eaten. Then they get the odor of it and out come the nickels. They can't resist all this fascination. Once tasted, Butter-Kist spoils them for any other kind of pop corn. They will come to your theatre, in preference to any other just to get some of this delicious, crisp, fluffy, toasty flavored pop corn on the way in, and out.

BUTTER-KIST
Pop Corn Machine

Extra Profits Run Over $3000 per Year

We have testimonials from moving picture men, merchants, storekeepers, telling of extra profits running as high as $3,120 per year. This machine is its own salesman. And people cannot get Butter-Kist from any other machine. All this extra money is yours without effort. The profit on each bag is 3½c. Capacity is 70c to $4.00 per hour. The machine occupies only 26x32 inches of space.

Profits Soon Pay For It

A small payment down brings the machine. It is making money for you an hour after you get it. It does not take it long to pay for itself out of its earnings. Why miss this money any longer? Get a Butter-Kist machine today.

"Little Gold Mine" Free. Ask for it Today

This wonderful book on money-making gives actual proofs of profits, with photographs and full details. It has shown hundreds of moving picture men the way to make from $2.00 to $10.00 per day extra profits with the Butter-Kist Machine. Send for it at once. No obligation.

Keep your eye on this fellow—whenever you see him you will know there's something doing worth while—

Pictures with a punch—pictures that pull—good pictures, new conceptions, attractions just a little different from the common run—short features, mostly comedy—the kind of pictures that fit into your daily program like a hand in a glove—

Reasonable priced films that you can run profitably at popular prices—the reliable kind of service that will cause the playgoers of your community to say of your show place, "let's go there—they're always good!"

Try it out on this one—

Now Ready for Release

GENE GREENE

Everybody knows Gene

Supported by a company of capable talent, including popular comedy stars, in a screaming farce of timely interest—

Raising an Army

Gene reads and worries about his country's unpreparedness, goes to sleep and in his dreams raises an army—into which is introduced the funniest medley of misfits ever—"soldiers" of all nations, ancient and modern—big and little, fat and skinny—recruited by the "General" from here, there, everywhere.

Gene's dream is a scream—clean, refined, without offense to any one and just one gale of hilarity from start to finish. It will laugh streams of coin into your box office and be the hit of the week in your community.

Get it while it's new—Through your Exchange—don't delay—it's too good to let the other fellow have it first.

Krazy Knuts

Krazy Knuts is right—but how in the name of anything that's human can they do this stuff? Of all the mix-ups, smashes, crashes, bangs, bumps, and slap-stick, this L-KO, "THE VILLAIN STILL PURSUED HER," has 'em all topped. These L-KO Knuts fear nothing, and stop at nothing to bring joy to millions of movie fans.

"The Villain Still Pursued Her"

Latest 2 Reel L-KO Komedy

—is a convulsion from the first flicker on the screen till the last dying gasp. If there's any woman living funnier than ALICE HOWELL, we challenge the world to produce her. In "THE VILLAIN STILL PURSUED HER" you see Alice at her best. She's a Knockout.

You can book it and advertise your head off—for "THE VILLAIN STILL PURSUED HER" will make good with a smash. It's the kind of a comedy that the millions are clamoring for. It entertains—it thrills—it's a corker, and with this cast supported by plenty of other Krazy Knut L-Ko Comedians, you are guaranteed another L-Ko that means added profits—more business—and greater popularity for your house. Book this release. Play it up. If you can get L-Ko's regular for your House, grasp the opportunity NOW and get them. If not, watch your first chance. L-Ko's are the Comedy Winners of the picture game.

Alice Howell
Fatty Voss Joe Moore

THE MAGNIFICENT 20WEEK SERIAL SPECTACLE

"LIBERTY"

A DAUGHTER OF THE U.S.A.

Offers Exhibitors the grandest assurance of a 20-weeks' clean-up ever presented by any serial photoplay. The most timely subject—introducing Mexican border raids; thrilling, dare-devil deeds of heroism; love interest that alone would make a great picture; American soldiers; Texas Rangers; Mexican bandits; a lavish production never surpassed in thrills, realism or tense human interest.

"LIBERTY" will be presented through a brilliant and notable cast, headed by

Marie Walcamp

Jack Holt — Eddie Polo

These popular players will be supported by others almost as well-known, including Bertram Grassby, G. Raymond Nye, L. M. Wells, Maude Emory, and hundreds of expert Rough Riders, trained military men, etc. The scenes along the border will compel the widest interest. Every man, woman and child in the United States will respond to the patriotic appeal of this great serial. Everyone wants to know all about the Mexican Border. Fathers, mothers, wives, sisters, brothers and sweethearts of the boys in khaki now at the front will storm the theatre showing this magnificent, sensational serial.

20 Weeks—40 Reels

Book now for the big money. Get ahead of your competitor. "LIBERTY" will be released Monday, August 14. BLUE BIRD PHOTOPLAYS (INC)

PERHAPS the most tangible result of the announced BLUEBIRD policy of "The Play's the Thing" is the wider latitude it opens to both producer and moving picture patron.

Where, under the star system, plays must always be selected with deference to the star's "type," the new era has made available as photoplay material the best plays and books the world has known.

The BLUEBIRD policy in the hands of its capable directors is responsible for the marvelous "art that conceals art," which makes BLUEBIRD Photoplays so delightfully realistic.

These facts are being presented each week to some 10,000,000 readers of the Saturday Evening Post, through the medium of advertisements now appearing and to appear for 52 weeks. Increased attendance in all BLUEBIRD theatres indicate the Exhibitor's share in this unprecedented co-operation.

A LETTER FROM LILIAN BELL

The Eminent Chicago Novelist

LILIAN BELL
1024 EAST 46TH STREET
CHICAGO

July 4, 1916.

My dear Mr. Dixon:

I enjoyed myself rarely last night at THE FALL OF A NATION. It is dramatic photography raised to the *n*th power, enhanced a hundred fold by Victor Herbert's descriptive music. I never have seen anything like it--probably because there IS nothing like it. The finish of this triumph of photography makes other productions seem crude. I shall go again and again and tell my friends to go. I had a distinguished party with me last night, all of whom were both thrilled and delighted. We hardly breathed!

Faithfully yours Lilian Bell

The tribute printed above is just an example of hundreds and hundreds received from prominent people by the NATIONAL DRAMA CORPORATION, 1465 Broadway, New York. The Dixon-Herbert spectacle has the quality of world-wide appeal. Exhibitors in all parts of the country and abroad are anxious to secure

Did you ever see a police dog go up to the second story of a house after a thief? Our camera man did. And he got a picture we can talk about.

Over in Jersey when we took the "Hazards of a War Bride," we almost lost two valuable men in a nitric acid fire. But you should see that picture!

And here we are telling you about them! We don't need to talk about Better Babies nor about those new articles showing American business efficiency, and the great outdoor stuff that is coming our way.

Attacked by the Conspirators
(Extract from Chapter 10)
With a smothered groan, the young officer sank to the ground. All this Cleo saw, but not until Mahlin started toward her did she realize that she was powerless to aid her friends and that her own life was in imminent peril. Then, with Mahlin barely a score of yards behind, she turned and ran like a frightened deer. Satsuma stopped only long enough to rifle Hope's pockets, taking from them his pocketbook, his papers, and the piece of the book-cover containing the key to the code.

Gentlemen:

We read every week in your advertisements at the bottom of your "Sign Post" the following:

"We can only govern our own course by the proven experience of others."

The moving picture manager governs his course by the likes and dislikes of his patrons and the box office receipts are the best way the manager has of telling what pictures his patrons like best.

Having run Big Four pictures for the past year, my experience has been that Big Four pictures head the list, not only for the excellent quality of the pictures and the box office results, but for the satisfactory service we get through the V-L-S-E.

Very truly yours,

Every Day a Winner for You

A pretty strong statement*—but one that will be vouched for by every exhibitor using *Unicorn Service. We receive request upon request for an increase of program—a sure sign that exhibitors, all over the country, are strong for *Unicorn Service.

The maintenance of our high standard of releases is indicated in the three subjects following, which show the wide range, the strength and the quality of Unicorn Films.

THE LOVE DOCTOR

With Mack Sennett

1 Reel Comedy

Cast: Mack Sennett, George Nicholls, Eddie Dillon, Florence Barker

M. T. Hedd, M.D., was a doctor whose pet hobby was to disinfect everything for fear of lurking germs. Even with this to draw him back he got along fairly well in the world. Finally, he decided to make love. Strangely enough, he was making considerable progress in this direction, when his foot slipped. He disinfected his lady love's lips before he kissed her. He hasn't stopped running yet. Released July 17th.

A NOBLE SACRIFICE

With Mary Pickford

1 Reel Drama

Cast: Mary Pickford, Arthur Johnson, Florence Lawrence, Mack Sennett, Flora Finch, James Kirkwood

That the maxim "Beauty is only skin deep" is a true one, is the point brought out in this film in a superb manner. The sacrifice of the love of a girl whose beauty had been marred by an unfortunate accident furnishes the central theme of this inspiring masterpiece. An unusual number of stars are presented to bring out the wonderful portrayals of character. Released July 19th.

WHOM GOD HATH JOINED—with Barbara Tennant

2 Reel Drama

Cast: Barbara Tennant, O. A. C. Lund, J. W. Johnson, Alec B. Francis, Guy Hedlund, Julia Stuart

Polka Holla Camp never encountered a worse criminal than Steve Stone. And yet this same Stone won a woman as his wife thru the uncertain medium of a pair of dice. A child was about to be born to the wife and it was at this point in his life that Steve became a real man, offering his life for that of the mother. Her noble soul saved him from the noose, thus fulfilling the almost divine injunction—"Whom God hath joined, let no man part asunder."

This film is a strong, virile study of every conceivable human emotion in the melting pot of caste and race, the Northwest. Exteriors showing miles of "God's own country" rival the faithful reproductions of true-to-life western mountain homes in this wonder-picture. Released Friday, July 21st.

Unicorn Film Service* will prove a winner for you; remember these points:

Twenty-one reels weekly of the best one and two reel subjects ever produced—
Stars of national reputation in every cast—
Clean and clear new film—
Prices lower than you are now paying for poor subjects and worn-out film—
Posters distinctive in design and compelling in character.

Facts and Comments

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD sincerely appreciates the action of the National Convention in recognizing its services to the cause of the organized exhibitor. We believe that no advance can be made in this industry without taking the exhibitor into the councils of the industry, we have always believed, and believe now, that for fighting the common enemy the exhibitor constitutes the infantry, cavalry and artillery. In the last analysis the moving picture depends for popular favor and prosperity on the man who shows the pictures to the public. The public will judge him as well as the pictures. If he has a just conception of the value and responsibility of his work, he will be the industry's great bulwark against ignorance, predjudice and fanaticism. We believe that the exhibitor can do more for himself and the industry at large by being properly organized. Such has been the signet of our policy ever since its birth. THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD does not look upon this great question as a question of expediency. We do not question and abuse the exhibitor in the early part of the week and load him down with flattery in the latter part of the week. Possessing a conviction we have never been under the necessity of constantly jumping from one side of the fence to the other. Editorial acrobatics may be interesting and as a spectacle even diverting, but there is no sense in it nor any usefulness.

THE hottest fight in the convention was precipitated by the discussion on the advanced deposits. On no subject which came before it did the convention show such vehemence and such unanimity. It seemed to be the consensus of opinion that exhibitors ought to be entitled to the same credit which is extended in other lines of business. Several of the delegates in the course of the debate declared that the deposit system was helping some of the companies to keep alive. In fact it was broadly intimated that some of them did business with the exhibitors' money. Even those who believed that a modified deposit system might be put into effect were emphatic in their opinion that the exhibitors should be allowed interest on their money.

"KEEPING high-priced reels on my shelves in order to give my patrons variety is a pretty expensive proceeding," said one exhibitor in the course of an informal discussion in one of the corridors of a Chicago hotel. His experience is by no means exceptional. At the present time some of the exhibitors following this practice manage to make money in spite of the handicap. It is not, however, a healthy condition by any means and again emphasizes the need of sensible internal regulations. The day is not far distant when such a handicap will be fatal to any exhibitor who attempts to carry it.

AMONG the minor resolutions adopted by the convention was one asking the exchanges not to furnish service to churches, etc., when such service might result in injury to an exhibitor. We do not know how such a rule could be enforced, but even if it could be enforced we seriously doubt its wisdom. Except in rare instances, such competition is negligible. The whole question presented by this resolution will solve itself in the near future when a special educational service will be furnished to churches and schools, which cannot come into conflict with the regular motion picture entertainment. Those of our readers who have followed the plans and suggestions outlined in the "Moving Picture Educator" in this paper will know exactly what we mean. The complete separation between the educational screen and the entertainment screen is one of the few certainties of the future of the motion picture industry.

ON ONE question there is a most emphatic agreement between producers and exhibitors. We are overdoing the star business and advertising third and fourth rate talent into stardom at our expense and to our detriment. This tendency to make stars out of unsuitable material is draining the coffers of the producer and is forcing high rentals on the exhibitors. We fail to see where this system is of any benefit to the public.

Perpetual Aspiration

By Louis Reeves Harrison

BY perpetual aspiration, by ardent desire for the promotion of knowledge for the building of character, for the advancement of human welfare are we able to accelerate the progress of this new art entrusted to our care. It will not do for us to stand still and absorb the benefits it is giving with a free hand. As authors, as critics, as supervisers of artistic treatment, as interpreters of thought and feeling, as contributors to scientific development, as developers of business system, we must have one steady aim, whether individual or collective, and that is for continued improvement.

This new art grew out of a combination of scientific knowledge and mechanical ability not created by any one inventor but through an evolution to which ingenuity of many contributed, here a little and there a little, until it became one of the wonders of the world, a rival to the typographic art as a means of teaching man what he was, what he is and what he may come to be, but the creative genius which built up the means of communication is of a kind distinct from that best calculated to use the means for ends of artistic achievement.

It is to be expected that capitalists outside the business will give initial consideration to the means. Their first idea is to get some sort of an organization in shape, an office, a studio, a director and a company. With scientific work well taken care of by specialists and distribution practically assured for any meritorious line of visualizations, attention becomes very naturally concentrated upon visualization itself, upon reaching some sort of an arrangement for the artistic picturing of this or that superior story in action.

A capitalist on the outside can be excused for thinking that he has mastered the art of producing moving pictures when he has acquired the means of visualization, but is it particularly intelligent on the part of those inside, who have fully acquired the means of visualization, and some experience besides, not to give due consideration to the ends in view? If the chief end of production is dependent upon having something worth while to produce, how many among those who have the artistic means well in hand are giving first consideration to the ultimate purpose?

The dynamo of electric thought and feeling to be distributed is a form of creative genius found in the human mind, one as yet faintly called upon. It is as though we had laid a very complete system of wires, capable of conveying tremendous power, and turned on a feeble current. Now that we have the means of transmitting energy and light and realize fairly well how it can be generally distributed at small cost, is it not time that some attention be given to the dynamo?

There is in existence today a series of effective organizations for the making, distribution and exhibition of moving pictures—moving pictures of what? We have reflected in new form a very large part of what has been done in the older arts, but our race keeps moving along, continually building a new world. The whole idea of civilization is contained in the elevation of our social and individual lives, in the advancement of the arts and learning. The answer will probably be found in the profession of letters, where men learn to build bridges of enlightenment between the past and the future, men with souls big enough not to use a process merely for profit, but for some splendid purpose besides.

The profession of letters is very deceiving in some respects. The fact that it is an intellectual calling has a peculiar effect upon some people. They imagine that a man of ideas, who has acquired a knowledge of how to express and preserve them in language, is one who inclines to make a dry and disagreeable display of what he has learned, a sort of talkative schoolmaster. In truth, when he is gifted with imagination, both creative and constructive, he adopts the entertaining medium of a life story and embodies his thoughts in fiction or in the drama.

The subtle simplicity of Mark Twain, as we are just beginning to find out, was but the mask for an unsuspected Shakespeare in our midst. He was addressing a people sick to death of the gloom and hypocrisy of Puritanism and suited his method to his audience. He so completely won our hearts in advance that we were unaware of his lecture until it had taken effect. Very largely unsuspected of being a man of letters, he was in reality a master of that most seductive and deceiving of all professions. Akin to this misconception is one more stupid, that superior fiction belongs to an inferior department of literature.

Few of us read the essay. Its terms are too concentrated to deeply impress any but logical minds. But let the idea it embodies be put in terms which profoundly affect the emotions, as in superior fiction, written or visualized, and we have a result easily recognized as a work of genius. The ultimate purpose of effective organizations for the making, distribution and exhibition of moving pictures is to widen the vision of our people through the great human story told in superior fiction and as wrought by the skill of those who have mastered the craftsmanship of this new and wonderful medium.

If a producer needs a clue as to what constitutes superior fiction, it is not reasonable to expect that he will ordinarily recognize it when it is brought to his attention, but there is suggestion for him in the idea to be conveyed. Is that idea in accord with the most advanced knowledge of our times, or does it depend upon some old idea, like the inheritance of disease, long proven false? The false should never be sent broadcast among millions of people. Make sure that the author knows what he is talking about and that he is not trying to further the interests of some fad or foolish faith. If he is not in touch with scientific discovery he is behind the times, and his story may be an instrument of evil instead of good.

We are less interested in what we were than in what we are, and less in what we are than in what we are to become. If the author's theme is not in accord with intelligence of today, it is not worth visualizing. Theme: He may develop it in time and place according to his own best judgment. Scrutinize the theme more sharply than structure and structure more closely than treatment. It is of high merit when it adequately presents an idea well thought and well wrought which may contribute to the elevation of our individual and social lives.

The way to pay our debt to great thinkers of yesterday and today, those who have contributed heavily toward making life more beautiful for us, is to enter bravely and unselfishly into the spreading of enlightenment through this wondrous new medium, that we may make life for others more beautiful today and tomorrow. Ours to perpetuate the light of intelligence and to kindle anew every day a desire for improvement, an aspiration perpetual.

The Best Convention Ever Held

By W. Stephen Bush.

WE ARE used to speaking of changes and movements in the motion picture industry as rapid, and in a general way this is quite true. Indeed some of the changes and movements in this industry have been altogether too rapid. In watching the heart-breaking pace at which the industry has moved along, we have come to adopt an unnatural, and I must add, an unhealthy standard of speed. We have lost sight of the fact that all growth must be slow in order to be permanent. Pretty nearly everybody in the industry has sought to apply our usual swift pace to the National League of Exhibitors. Because the organized exhibitor was slow in realizing his needs, because he frequently proved to be indifferent to the cause of organization, because he too frequently disparaged himself and his organization, many men with a contracted vision have been unable to realize the strength and power of the organized exhibitor until the convention just ended in Chicago has come upon them as a revelation.

The time for an unqualified eulogy of the organized exhibitor and of the work done at the Chicago Convention has not arrived as yet. Indeed, to a critical mind, its imperfections are quite apparent; to an impartial observer the work of the convention frequently looked like a pathetic struggle for articulate utterance. The proceedings not only moved slowly, but at times, irregularly and aimlessly. However, no discouraging conclusion can be drawn from these facts. On the contrary, when one considers the earnestness and enthusiasm of the men, their former lack of opportunity, the hard struggle they made in the face of extraordinary handicaps, one cannot help entertaining good hopes for the future. Compared with previous conventions, the Chicago Convention has been a convention of achievement. It has made important and much needed changes in its constitution and by-laws. It has considered, with great attention, and in an admirable spirit of co-operation, the proposals that have been made to it on behalf of the manufacturing interest. It goes without saying that the first steps of a movement toward a re-adjustment of the relations between producer and exhibitor are necessarily slow. Nothing could be more ill-advised than haste, nothing more calculated to excite suspicion at a time and place when every trace of suspicion must be banished.

Not the least significant feature of the Convention, the proceedings of which have been reported by The Moving Picture World with its usual thoroughness and accuracy, is its representative candidate, both in a personal and geographical sense of the word. Many states, formerly unheard of at National Conventions, have been represented at Chicago. The older organizations have been greatly strengthened as is shown by their larger representation. As now constituted the National League covers more than 50 per cent of the populous states in the Union. Thus more than a mere nucleus or skeleton of an organization exists to-day. The example of strong organization in the big states of the Union is bound to have a wholesome effect on the further development of the organization.

For the first time in the history of the Exhibitors' organization, the great majority of the delegates represent large and substantial investments in the industry. The theaters owned by the delegates at Chicago represent investments of many millions of dollars. At the same time, there is a generous sprinkling of the owners of smaller theaters whose aid and co-operation is as necessary as that of the big owner.

The most encouraging feature of the Convention has been its splendid spirit. There was no wrangling, no personalities were indulged in, and all its movements, though at times awkward, never lacked a certain dignity, the dignity which we always find associated with sincerity of motives.

At this writing it seems highly probable that the proposals of the Delmonico Conference will be accepted by the convention. No better evidence could be asked than the spirit of conciliation which has dominated the convention from the very beginning.

The New President

By W. Stephen Bush.

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD congratulates the National League of Motion Picture Exhibitors of America upon the election of Lee A. Ochs as President for the ensuing year. Mr. Ochs possesses the one quality which at this time, above all others, is greatly needed in the chief executive—the quality of energy. He is in the full flush of youth, and whatever success has come to him in life has been due to his strict integrity, to his constructive mind, and to his consistent hard work.

He has been connected with the cause of organization for about three years, and the present splendid state of the league in New York is largely due to his untiring activity.

He is the first president under the new dispensation, which provides for co-operation between producer and exhibitor. Everybody knows that he possesses, in an unusual degree, the qualifications which make success in the office a moral certainty. He has won the respect and confidence of the exhibitors. If he can likewise secure the respect and confidence of the producers he will undoubtedly accomplish a great thing for the cause of the organized exhibitor. The complexion of his mind is essentially practical. He is thoroughly familiar with the needs of the exhibitor, and no one knows the conditions of the industry better than he does.

We hope for a splendid record of achievement from President Lee A. Ochs.

No small credit is due to the retiring President, Frederick J. Herrington, who has labored strenuously and many times without the co-operation he should have received.

KANSAS CONVENTION BREWING.

Christ. Glamann, of Wellington, Kan., president of the Kansas branch of the Exhibitors' League, was in Kansas City on his way to the National. He had a long conference with E. R. Pearson and Charles W. Hardin, directors of the Amusement Association of Kansas, over plans for the joint convention at Topeka which will be called soon, and over the work which will be done in Kansas this fall. Some definite outlines of work were tentatively decided upon—and it can be said now that there will be "something doing." Mr. Glamann visited the various exchanges while in Kansas City.

PLANNING A CONVENTION IN OHIO.

Plans for the proposed convention of moving picture exhibitors of Ohio who are members of the several existing organizations in the state are assuming definite shape, after correspondence on the part of the Cincinnati Motion Picture Exhibitors' League extending over several months. Assurances have been received from the heads of the two state organizations that they favor participation on the part of their members, and indications are that the convention will have an attendance of more than 500 exhibitors. It will be held in September or October, and the principal object will be the organization of a single strong body of exhibitors in Ohio.

THE Sixth National Convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America was opened in convention hall, in the Hotel Sherman, on Monday, July 10, at 11.30 o'clock, by National President F. J. Herrington. Supporting him on the platform were Peter J. Jeup, national treasurer; James Delves, national secretary; A. P. Tugwell, member of the national executive board, and Samuel L. Trigger, of New York.

M. A. Corey of San Francisco, first national vice president; Marion S. Pearce of Baltimore, member of the National Executive Board, and S. H. Brophy of Oklahoma, second national vice president, were absent. Mr. Pearce was detained by serious illness, but Mr. Brophy was expected to arrive in time for Tuesday's opening session.

The following states were represented at the first session: New York, Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Pennsylvania, California, Tennessee, Alabama, Iowa, Wisconsin, Virginia, Kansas, Utah and Illinois. Expected on Tuesday are the delegations from Minnesota, Missouri, Mississippi, Kentucky and Louisiana. Thomas Furniss of Duluth and James Gilosky of St. Paul came on ahead of the Minnesota main delegation, which will number about eighteen members.

Governor Dunne, of Illinois, accompanied by Secretary of State Louis Stevenson, son of the late Adlai Stevenson, one time vice president of the United States, arrived promptly at the time of opening and the Governor was received with an enthusiastic demonstration that lasted for several minutes. He was introduced by the chairman in a brief speech in which he contrasted the condition of the moving picture industry as it is today with what it was four years ago, when the second national convention was held in this city, at the Hotel La Salle. The progress had been remarkable in all branches of the business, the speaker declared.

"In a little backwoods town in Pennsylvania, not long ago, the exhibitors held a meeting at which the chief subject of discussion was the selection of a fitting emblem for the moving picture," said Mr. Herrington. "After many suggestions one of the members referred to the wonderful popularity of moving pictures and to their dominance of the entire country.

"'There is only one emblem that can fill the bill,' said the man, 'and that is the Stars and Stripes.'"

Governor Dunne, who was formerly a judge of the Superior Court, of Chicago, and afterwards Mayor, enthused the delegates by a speech that paid high honor to moving pictures from an entertaining and an educational viewpoint. The speech, in part, is here given:

"On behalf of the State of Illinois I greet you and extend to you a hearty welcome while within our gates. The industry in which you are interested, and which you represent in this convention, is one of recent development, but it has become of far-reaching importance among the great industries of the country.

"The agricultural implement industry reaches the farmer, and the automobile industry reaches the people in comfortable circumstances, but the moving picture reaches every man, woman and child, because the mothers bring even their babies. In this respect the newspapers cannot be placed in the company of pictures.

"Because of the universality and widespread character of the moving picture, it is every citizen's concern that it be conducted honestly, decently and economically.

"In some respects it imparts information that cannot be given by the newspapers. No written description can give the accurate and thorough information of events taking place in this country and throughout the world that the moving pictures do.

"The moving picture, therefore, can become a mighty power for good, or it may become a power for evil. If conducted by evil men with evil objects, it might disseminate poison instead of profitable, instructive and intelligent information.

"The question has been frequently raised as to whether it is necessary for the state officially to censor its motion picture exhibitions. Many cities have already adopted boards of censorship and some states have created boards of censorship.

"As to whether this movement, in the direction of official interference with the industry, shall be extended or be abandoned depends largely upon the character of the men that operate the industry, and on the character of the exhibitions shown to the public.

"The people want what is just and fair. The less laws against legitimate business, legally conducted, the better.

"If the industry is conducted upon lines of decency and propriety, the demand for censorship will not prevail. If, on the other hand, vicious men, uncontrolled by public law, should exhibit vicious pictures which demoralize the young, then the demand for censorship will be insistent.

"Private enterprises should not be interfered with by restrictive legislation, unless in the legitimate exercise of the police power for the public good. If, however, the morals of the public are being lowered by purient and indecent exhibitions, that moment the state has the right to step in and prevent such injury to public morals.

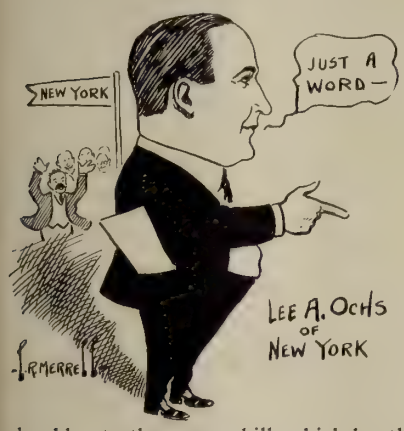
"These considerations had great weight with me recently when there was presented to me for my signature, as Governor, a law creating a board of censorship for the State of Illinois. I made careful inquiry at the time as to the need and necessity of such a law. I found that the city of Chicago had established such a board of censorship, and that motion pictures shown in that great city were censored by this board.

"I was informed that most of the pictures so censored in Chicago were exhibited throughout the State, and upon inquiry I found throughout the State no serious complaint against the moving picture men in reference to the pictures exhibited by them. I found no serious demand for the creation of the board of censorship and such being the situation I vetoed the bill creating such a board.

"I vetoed the bill because I was convinced that exhibitors in Illinois were conducting their business on clean, respectable lines. Conduct your business as conducted in the State of Illinois and you will have no censorship.

"I congratulate you men in the moving picture industry in this state upon having so managed your business as to justify me in my veto of the censorship bill. I hope and trust that the moving picture business will always be so conducted in this state as to make unnecessary the passage of any further censorship bills."

At the close of Governor Dunne's address it was moved by Benjamin Zerr, of Reading, Pa., that he be given honorary membership in the M. P. E. L. of America. The motion was seconded and carried by a rising vote, which was succeeded by a burst of cheering that lasted several minutes.



Secretary of State Stevenson followed the Governor in a short address, in which he informed the convention why he had recommended that Governor Dunne should veto the censor bill, which he, the Secretary, had been instrumental in passing through both houses of the Legislature. He declared that within ten days after the bill had passed his office had been deluged by applications, to the number of 200, while there were only three positions to be filled. He had carefully studied the fitness of these applicants eager to become censors of the people's chief amusement, and concluded that not one of them had the qualifications necessary.

"If the matter of State censorship should ever come up again I will oppose it, as the men who came forward then were so utterly unequal to the task," said the State Secretary.

Judge A. P. Tugwell of Los Angeles, being next called on by the chair, made a witty and eloquent short speech, in which he expressed the wish that he might be an Illinoisian—until after the election, in which Governor Dunne seeks to succeed himself. He closed by enjoining every exhibitor in Illinois to work, tooth and nail, and vote for the re-election of Governor Dunne.

Through the courtesy of the Monarch Film Co., of Chicago, Gene Greene then sang a number of ragtime comedy songs, to the great glee of the convention, which adjourned at 1 o'clock P. M., until 10 o'clock A. M., Tuesday, after the chair announced a meeting of the national executive board, at 8 o'clock Monday morning.

Meeting of National Executive Committee.

The session was held on the Mezzanine floor of the Hotel Sherman. Chairman Herrington announced that the meeting would be an open one and the proceedings informal, and that any delegate would be given an opportunity to speak on any subject for the general welfare of the industry.

Copies of the proposed by-laws of the new general organization had been freely distributed among the delegates. The copies contained a good many thousand words, and the exhibitors, being very busy, had had but little time to make themselves acquainted with the text.

W. Stephen Bush was called upon to say a few words upon the subject of the by-laws of the new organization. He called the attention of the meeting to the fact that the new organization was waiting upon the approval and co-operation of the national league. He said the subject was one of great importance and would require the deep and earnest consideration of the delegates. Some of the provisions might be found objectionable. Others, no doubt, would be considered with favor. He pointed out that with the growth of their organization, new power had come into the hands of the exhibitors and that it behooves them to exercise this power with a full sense of their responsibility. He said that the manufacturers, or at least those manufacturers affiliated with the board of trade, had come to recognize the importance of the exhibitor in any thorough representative film parliament.

Judge Tugwell interrupted the speaker to point out that the rules of the new organization were more liberal to the exhibitor than had been the constitution of the board of trade. The latter organization had given the exhibitor about one-fifth of the representation on the board of directors, while the new organization gave him one-third. Judge Tugwell thought that even that proportion was not commensurate with the influence and the numbers of the exhibitors.

Other delegates present criticised the entries first proposed by the new organization as inequitable and disproportionate.

Mr. Bush was followed by Frank J. Rembusch of Indiana, one of the candidates for the office of president. Mr. Rembusch complained of poor business, citing some of his experiences when he was in the business of making and selling mirrors. He thought there was too much competition in the exhibiting ranks.

"The moving picture business," he continued, "has reached that state when it is incapable of further expansion. This crisis comes about in every industry and it has now come about in the moving picture industry. We have really done nothing in the past to show our power as an organization."

Mr. Choynski expressed the opinion that the two organizations should exist separately, and each independent of the other; but that in all matters touching the common interests of the industry there should be intelligent and sympathetic co-operation between producer and exhibitor. Mr. Choynski imparted a strong flavor of humor to his remarks, dealing in a witty fashion on his personal experiences as an exhibitor in various parts of the country.

There was some more informal discussion, after which the meeting adjourned.

Among those present at the meeting were: A. P. Tugwell, Benjamin Zerr, M. A. Choynski, Frank J. Rembusch, Thomas Furniss, William J. Sweeney, James Delves and W. Stephen Bush.

Tuesday's Events, July 11.

Tuesday's session was called to order by President Herrington at 10.30 o'clock. In a few well chosen words he enjoined on delegates the high importance of peace and harmony throughout their deliberations. He then named the following committee on credentials: Thomas Furniss, Duluth, chairman; Wm. Slimm, Cleveland; S. H. Jones, Oklahoma; A. J. Moellar, Howell, Mich., and George Henry, Chicago.

The committee spent most of the day on their work, so as to be in readiness to make their report at the opening session Wednesday morning.

Benjamin Zerr, of Pittsburgh, then moved that the privilege of the floor be extended to W. Stephen Bush of the Moving Picture World, at all times during the convention. The motion was seconded and carried unanimously.

It was also carried that the representatives of the trade papers be permitted to be present on the convention floor during the proceedings.

W. E. Johnston of the Motion Picture News was then given the privilege of the floor to speak on the subject of the charter and by-laws of the National Association of the moving picture industry, which had been submitted July 6 to the committee-at-large on organization. Mr. Johnston stated that he preferred to yield the floor to hear W. Stephen Bush speak on the question. Mr. Bush replied that since there was so much urgent and important business to attend to mere speech making seemed to him a waste of time. He thanked the convention for the very generous reception which had been given him and on behalf of the Moving Picture World thanked the delegates sincerely. He then spoke as follows:

"There is just one thing that I want to point out to you. It has been said that we must forget the past and that yesterday has passed into oblivion forever. That may be true, but it must also be recognized that the past is the parent of the present and future, and if there is any way of progressing except through studying the lessons of the past, I have been unable to discover it. You cannot separate the past from the present. I advise you to study the processes by which the power in this industry has gradually passed into the hands of the exhibitor. Partly it has been due to your own efforts, which you have continued steadfastly in spite of much discouragement, and in spite of the neglect and indifference which are too often found in your own ranks. Partly this change in the situation has been due to other causes quite beyond your control.

"I will only touch upon these matters briefly now, for the one thing I desire to impress upon you this morning is the fact that with the acquisition of new powers you must be prepared to face new responsibilities. There are grave problems to be solved in the industry—problems that are not only grave, but that press for the earliest possible solution. These problems cannot be solved except by your acting for the benefit not only of yourselves, but of the entire industry. You must consent to accept the new responsibility and to discharge it to the best of your ability.

"I need not assure you that the Moving Picture World is anxious to serve you in this matter. The Moving Picture World believes that no advance can be made in this industry without the active support of the exhibitor. They are in close touch with the people. No business is more directly subject to the will of the people than your business. No industry depends more than ours on the good will and the confidence of the public. To gain that good will, to secure that confidence, the exhibitor is indispensable.

"It is the same with the material prosperity of the motion picture. Here, too, no satisfactory progress can be made unless the prosperity of the exhibitor is assured by intelligent work on his part and by intelligent co-operation from every other branch of the industry. Our conviction is that the progress and prosperity of the motion picture depends, to a very large extent, upon the quality and the character of the men who constitute the exhibiting body. I urge you to use the power which has come to you with great caution and deliberation.

"When the time comes and the occasion calls, you must be prepared unhesitatingly to place this power at the disposal of the entire industry. The time may come when other branches of the industry may ask you to share this power with them. In that case, I advise you to be prudent and circumspect, not to part with it lightly, and, above all things, to maintain the separate entity and the full integrity of your own exhibitors' organization."

Sam Spedon, publicity manager of the Vitagraph, was next called upon. He declared that the producer was looking to the convention to do many essential things that he would like to do himself in the interests of the business. The producer would rather have the exhibitors take up the task themselves. Producers had found that they could not do the right things without the co-operation of exhibitors.

The exhibitors must settle many of the questions that arise in the business for the producer. He objected to the use of the word "power" by Mr. Bush in his speech and advocated that instead of exercising "power" the exhibitors should consider it a "trust" that has been placed in their hands for settlement. This trust must be exercised to the benefit of the business generally, and he hoped that the convention would be able to handle the question wisely so that the result of their deliberations would result in the welfare of all the branches of the industry.

P. A. Powers, treasurer of Universal, was the next speaker named by the chair. Mr. Powers said that he agreed with all that Mr. Spedon said. He was much interested in what exhibitors would do, and not in dictating what they should do.

Producers are now suffering from the increased competition and the enormous salaries paid to artists. He charged that the demands of exhibitors had created this increase of salaries, which he considered a great detriment to the business.

"A few artists get all the money in the business, so far as profits are concerned," Mr. Powers said. "They will receive more during the coming year than is made by the entire industry."

It had been the experience of Mr. Powers that there is no easy road in the moving picture business. At first things looked roseate and he had expected a home by the shore in summer and a house in town during the winter, and other things, but that they had not come in yet.

He looked upon the competition of Wall Street as a great menace, as it meant that men of money are induced to put amount after amount of large sums of money in production in the hope of big gains. This abuse must be remedied in order that the business is placed on a sound basis. He believed that the exhibitors and producers can help to protect the business by hearty co-operation.

Al Reichman of the World Film Corporation, Paul Cromlein of Cosmofoto Film, and Bennie Zeidman, of the Fine Arts studio, Los Angeles, representative of D. W. Griffith, next in order, made a few remarks on the question.

In answer to a question put by F. J. Rembusch concerning admission to the meetings of the convention, President Herrington ruled that exhibitors were welcome at all meetings, whether members of the League or not, but that the sergeant at arms should first ascertain whether they were exhibitors or not before admitting them.

Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, arrived at this time and was invited to address the convention. He remarked that he had some times heard people say that the interests of the producing, distributing and the exhibiting branches of the business are not identical, but he believed that all were in the same boat. Each one must do its best. He had formerly been an exhibitor and realized early that the public is very discriminating. He had always been proud of being in the moving picture business. He declared that Paramount will do its best to cooperate with the exhibitor, and will work hand in hand with him for the betterment of the business. He closed by drawing attention to the fact that Paramount Day at the exposition would be made prominent by the presence of Mary Pickford and Pauline Frederick.

Judge Tugwell then moved adjournment until Wednesday morning at 10 o'clock, and it was so ordered.

The influx of delegates Monday evening and Tuesday morning was quite noticeable in the large crowd at the Hotel Sherman. Minnesota came in strong, and the contingents from Missouri and Mississippi arrived. S. H. Brophy of Oklahoma City also came in Tuesday morning. The delegation from Iowa is very strong, and includes many exhibitors who are not members of the League. A strong delegation has been promised from Wisconsin Wednesday morning. Charles Philips of Milwaukee, who came on in advance, asked the chair to see that at least two rows were reserved for the Wisconsin delegation.

Reception at Essanay Plant.

Delegates and their families, nearly all of them from out-of-town cities throughout the country, to the number of 650 by actual count, paid a visit to the Essanay plant Tuesday afternoon.

The party went out on three special trains, on the Northwestern Elevated Railroad, in charge of Ben Bedell, a representative of Essanay. They arrived at 2 o'clock and many of them waited until 5, seeing the sights and witnessing the production of two big pictures.

On the arrival at the plant the party marched two abreast past a moving picture camera, and the pictures resulting were produced in the theater, in the Coliseum Annex, Wednesday evening, the opening night of the exposition.

The exhibitors then assembled in front of a large platform, on which there appeared, in order, a large number of the Essanay stars, chief among whom were Henry Walthall, Bryant Washburn, Edward Arnold, Earnest Maupain, John Cossar, Thomas Commerford, Warda Howard, Nell Craig, Anna Kirke, etc.

V. R. Day of Essanay had general charge of the arrangements and of the reception, which will be long remembered by the visitors.

Before leaving most of the visitors were given tickets to "Ramona" at the Auditorium, which had been secured by the members of the Chicago local from the "Ramona" management.

Wednesday's Events, July 12.

The inevitable "lull in the proceedings" which comes in the work of every convention characterized the third day of the convention. The day started off briskly enough and the forenoon saw a good deal of important work accomplished. The session was called to order promptly at 10 o'clock A. M. at the Hotel Sherman, and the first order of business was the report of the Committee on Credentials.

This report had been awaited with great interest and some anxiety. When it was read to the convention by the chairman, Thomas Furniss of Minnesota, it was found altogether acceptable. Mr. Furniss reported that all credentials and all claims to representation on the floor of the convention had been carefully examined into and passed upon by the committee with the result that one hundred and twenty-seven delegates had been found eligible to take part in the deliberations and in the voting of the convention.

The following states were represented: New York, Massachusetts, Pennsylvania, Illinois, New Jersey, Iowa, Indiana, Missouri, Mississippi, Florida, Oklahoma, Michigan, Minnesota, Wisconsin, California, Ohio, Kansas and Louisiana.

President Herrington appointed the following committees: Ways and Means—Charles Megown, Ohio; Samuel Trigger, New York; L. H. Frank, Illinois; H. A. Barthell, Pennsylvania, and Louis Blumenthal, New York.

Committee on Resolutions—Samuel Bullock, Ohio; A. P. Tugwell, California; Dr. J. M. Rhodes, Indiana; Alfred Hamburger, Illinois, and Louis Blumenthal, New York.

Committee on Constitution and By-Laws.—Charles H. Phillips, Wisconsin, Frank J. Rembusch, Indiana, Charles Megown, Ohio, and M. A. Choynski, Illinois.

Committee on the Press.—Benjamin Zerr, Pennsylvania; J. J. O'Donnell, New York, and Benjamin Lang, Illinois.

The appointment of the committees was well received and seemed to please everybody. Ernest Horstman of Massachusetts asked that a rising vote of thanks be given to Granville S. McFarland, editor of the Boston-American, for his splendid and unselfish services on behalf of the motion picture industry. Mr. Horstman declared that the House Committee on Education had absolutely decided to stand by its original favorable report on the Smith-Hughes film. All efforts to induce this committe to reconsider their action and grant a new hearing to the moving picture men had failed. It was at this critical moment when Mr. McFarland stepped into the breach. He enlisted the aid of Congressman Frank W. Dallinger, a member of the committee, and through Mr.

Delegates Being Introduced to Stars at Essanay Plant.

Delegates to Sixth Annual Convention of Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America in Session at Hotel Sherman, Chicago, July 10 to 15, 1916.

Dallinger's energetic work a rehearing was granted. The resolution of Mr. Horstman was warmly supported by W. Stephen Bush and Wm. M. Seabury. The resolution was carried unanimously.

Another resolution endorsing Wm. Randolph Hearst and his newspapers for their stand on the censorship question met a less kindly fate. It was freely acknowledged by all who spoke on the proposed resolution that Mr. Hearst had rendered valuable services to the motion picture interests, but it was pointed out that other journals had also gallantly championed the motion picture interests and that it would be invidious to single out any special publication. A motion to lay this resolution on the table was carried by a substantial majority.

It was about this time that a certain restlessness began to show itself on the floor. It may have been due to the heat or it may have been due to some other cause, but one after another of the delegates arose and complained about the slowness of the proceedings. A motion was made and carried limiting each speaker to five minutes, unless his time was extended by unanimous consent. Complaint was also made that the convention on Monday and Tuesday had adjourned too early and a resolution was passed that morning sessions hereafter were to last from 10 A. M. to 12.30 P. M.

The committees appointed as mentioned above retired to their rooms and at once entered upon their work. This meant a thinning of the first ranks and the subsequent lull and tendency to drift no doubt were caused by this circumstance.

A resolution commending the Universal Film Manufacturing Company for its fight against the Motion Picture Patents Company was offered by John Manheimer of New York. It was tabled after some lively debate.

Another resolution called upon exchanges to refuse service to churches, schools, civic and social institutions, etc., if the church or school were located in the immediate neighborhood of a motion picture theater. Mr. Blumenthal of New York moved to amend this by allowing the exchanges to give such service provided that the exhibitor likely to be affected by the entertainment in his neighborhood had been consulted and his consent obtained.

This resolution precipitated a hot discussion. Most of the delegates spoke in favor of its adoption with the New York amendment. It was pointed out that in many cases churches had pleaded poverty with an exchange and had obtained reels at an absurdly low figure, much below the amount charged to the exhibitor. Judge Tugwell caused a burst of applause mixed with quite a little laughter when he said that churches and other institutions wishing to compete with motion picture exhibitors should "pay a license and hire a hall."

Another resolution called upon the studios not to admit the public indiscriminately because it had a tendency "to destroy the illusion and diminish the interest." The morning session adjourned about half past 12, until 2 o'clock.

Wednesday Afternoon Session.

In the afternoon the "lull in the proceedings" was very pronounced. Sometimes "trifles light as air" occupied the time of the convention; at other times the informal way of procedure and the lack of parliamentary knowledge became responsible for some snarls and tangles, and needless controversy.

It was asked when the election of officers would take place, and where the next convention would be held. The chairman replied that that would be the last business of the convention. Not having more business on their hands, two delegates were sent down to the room where the committee on resolutions were conducting their work. That committee, however, had nothing to feed into the yawning hopper upstairs and there ensued some more unmelodious grinding. Later it was announced that the committee on credentials would continue in session during the convention.

A motion was then made and carried to make W. Stephen Bush of The Moving Picture World an honorary member of the National League. An adjournment was then taken until 10 a. m., Thursday, July 13.

Chairman Herrington gave a warning to the effect that he would open the proceedings promptly at 10 o'clock and that he would send the sergeant at arms after all belated members.

Exhibitors' Trade Exposition at Chicago

Big Show Opens at the Coliseum on July 12 and Does a Turn-away Business.

THE sixth annual exposition of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America was opened at the Coliseum, Chicago, at 7 o'clock p. m., July 12, according to the program; but it was not until one hour and a half later that it was formally declared open by Henry Miller, Mayor Thompson's candidate for district attorney in the approaching election, who had been appointed proxy for the occasion.

Mr. Miller was introduced by M. A. Choynski, and his remarks were confined to an expression of good will toward exhibitors and good wishes for the success of the exposition, as the din of musical instruments and the deadening volume of sound from many thousands of throats made it impossible for any single voice to combat them.

The scene inside the Coliseum was marked by bewildering light effects and a veritable sea of changing colors. The writer had seen many expositions in the great building, but none that equaled this in artistic beauty; nor had he ever before encountered on the floor such almost impassable surges of people. It was really a great physical feat to make headway against the human streams that flowed slowly but irresistibly in the direction in mind.

The tally at the doors showed that the 10,000 figure was passed at nine o'clock, and this soon reached the 12,000 mark, after which the fire authorities refused further admission until the crowd had thinned out.

Essanay's Night at the Exposition.

The balconies, especially on the centers east and west, were crowded. Mothers with their children and others, who feared the strenuous task engaged in by those on the floor, looked down on the scene surrounding the Essanay booth, where the stars of that company were being favored with the honors of the evening. It was Essanay's night, and the home fans, as well as many visitors from surrounding towns, vied with each other to get within looking distance.

Among the Essanay stars in the attractive group who appeared in the booth were Henry Walthal, Miss Edna Mayo, Richard C. Travers, Miss Marguerite Clayton, Bryant Washburn, Misses Anna Kirke, Warda Howard, Nell Craig and Lillian Drew, and Edward Arnold, John Lorenz, Earnest Maupain, Thomas Commerford and Sidney Ainsworth.

The Universal Film Manufacturing Co. made the most spectacular and attractive entrance on the scene during the evening. Headed by the Universal band of 25 pieces, Carl Laemmle, P. A. Powers, Joe Brandt and a large following of leading members of their New York and Chicago staffs entered the doors shortly after 9 o'clock, the band playing vigorously. The band continued to play after it had reached its position until the close of the exposition that evening. The exposition management had overlooked to provide a band for the occasion, and so Universal came to the rescue and added to the pleasure of the thousands of visitors.

A walk over the floor of the Coliseum revealed a series of booths that for decorative display and color tone it would be hard to excel. All the big film companies seemed to have tried to make their booths give an expression of their attempts in the production of moving pictures. Metro had its distinctive type of booth, which is altogether different from that of Paramount, and this again from that of the General Film Co., and that again from Mutual, Universal, Pathe Exchange, Inc., and so on. A description of these booths will be given later.

The manufacturers of machines, supplies and accessories were beautifully housed. Chief among these may be mentioned the Nicholas Power Co., the Precision Machine Co., Enterprise Optical Co., Kleine Optical Co., Westinghouse Electric Mfg. Co., J. P. Seeburg Piano Co., American Photoplayer Co., Bartola Musical Instrument Co., Decorators' Supply Co., E. E. Fulton Co., Mid-West Theater Supply Co., Amusement Supply Co., etc. All these will be described in detail later on.

Clara Kimball Young's Day.

Thursday, July 13, was devoted to Clara Kimball Young at the exposition, and all day long her admirers lingered in front of the Central Film Corporation's booth, at the north end of the building.

The pleasing smile and winning manner of this popular star seemed impervious to the fatigue of standing on a chair for hours at a time, and the sound advice she gave hundreds of girls, who seek fame in front of the camera, should bear fruit in disillusionizing many who were hitherto ignorant of the work and the talent and the other attainments required.

In the booth were Lewis J. Selznick, Aaron J. Jones, Nathan Ascher, H. A. Spanuth, Ralph T. Kettering and a number of women relatives and a few favored visitors.

The noted star put up at the Blackstone Hotel, and even there her ardent admirers tried to disturb her peace and quietude by their solicitous requests for an audience.

She arrived Wednesday, July 12, and spent a very busy day in delivering addresses at several of the Ascher houses, and after a day at the exposition again resumed these pleasing little addresses at the remaining Ascher houses, and in others where the films in which she appears will be shown.

Miss Young was the recipient of an unusual honor on Friday, July 14, when she attended a luncheon at the select Hamilton Club, at 12:30 p. m. She is the first moving picture star who has ever received an invitation from this exclusive body.

On Thursday night Miss Young's party, occupying fifteen autos, on its way to the exposition from the Blackstone Hotel, was headed by the celebrated Chicago Newsboy Band. Miss Young left for New York Saturday afternoon, July 15, accompanied by Mr. Selznick.

On Thursday, July 13, Rose Tapley, the well known star, shared honors with Miss Clara Kimball Young at the Vitagraph booth and in the Annex, where she delighted and amused a great many visitors.

The attendance for the day, while it did not reach the mark set on the opening night, was another convincing evidence of the intense popularity of the moving picture and of its tremendous hold on the minds of the great masses of the people.

Metro Day at the Exposition.

Through some strange misunderstanding or mishap, the day set apart for Metro stars, Friday, July 14, at the exposition, brought some disappointment to expectant fans. The Metro stars were not forthcoming.

It appears, from what can be gleaned about the arrangement, that the head officers of the Metro were not directly approached by the exposition committee, but only through their representatives in the Chicago office.

The exposition committee, however, made the best of a difficult position, and called on Essanay for help, which was gladly extended. Miss Nell Craig, Bryant Washburn, Harry Dunkinson and others appeared in the Essanay booth to welcome the moving picture fans.

As good luck would have it, Miss Pauline Frederick also arrived the same day, in advance of the day set for the Paramount Co., and Miss Alice Brady stopped over in this city on her way from New York to Milwaukee, where she had thought of speaking to moving picture enthusiasts there. Miss Brady was induced by the members of the exposition committee to postpone her visit to the Cream City, in order to help them out, which she did very gracefully and popularly at the Chicago Herald booth.

Miss Rose Tapley, who has been a veritable busy bee every day thus far at the exposition, at the Vitagraph booth, also contributed her popular entertainment to the crowd in attendance.

Miss Dolores Cassinelli, of the Emerald Motion Picture Co., Chicago, also acceded to the request of the committee and joined with other stars in entertaining the exposition throngs.

The attendance, notwithstanding the extremely sultry weather, was quite worthy of the occasion.

READY FOR NORTH CAROLINA CONVENTION.

The plans for the summer convention of the North Carolina Motion Picture Exhibitors' League have about been completed. The convention will open at the Hotel Malbourne, Durham, N. C., on July 19, and last through the next day. Percy W. Wells, of Wilmington, president, and H. B. Varner, of Lexington, secretary-treasurer, have held a number of conferences and it is predicted that this will be the most successful affair of its kind ever held in the State.

Among the guests invited to attend the convention are Thos. Dixon, who, by the way, is a North Carolinian, having lived in Shelby, Cleveland County, and P. D. Gold, of High Point, who is financially interested in "The Fall of a Nation." The exhibitions by the motion picture exchanges of Washington and Atlanta, and of the supply houses, it is expected, will exceed previous affairs.

Universalites Give Ball to Exhibitors

Big U Folk Entertain Delegates and Friends at Hotel Sherman—Big Event of the Convention.

ONE of the most important of the entertainment events during "Moving Picture Week" was the big Universal Moving Picture Ball, which was held in the Louis XVI. Rooms of the Hotel Sherman, Thursday evening, July 13.

The place was handsomely decorated for the occasion, and many of the leading lights of filmdom were present to prove that they can forget business, conventions, expositions and everything in connection with elections, when the orchestra strikes up a fox trot. The ball was an invitation affair and the Universal officials sent out over 1,500 invitations, which were distributed to the exhibitors and manufacturers in town. These invitations permitted the bearer to bring as many friends as he cared to, with the result that over 2,000 people were in attendance.

The ball took place after the exposition in the Coliseum was closed for the day, and by midnight the big dance room was filled to overflowing with people, every one of whom was connected, in various capacities, with the business. An orchestra of fifteen pieces furnished the music, and as soon as the first number was started everybody was on the floor. Despite the intense heat, the eager crowd of dancers continued their evolutions until the small hours of the morning.

In two large rooms adjoining the dance parlors, refreshments were served between dances. A number of high-class entertainers filled in the gaps between the dance numbers, among them being Gross and Craft, professional dancers, and the cabaret performers from the Planters Hotel. In addition, the entire principals and chorus of "A World of Pleasure" company, which is now playing at the Palace, mingled with the guests and appeared in their specialties. Ted Barron's popular hit, "Liberty," which was donated by the writer to the Universal's forthcoming serial, "Liberty," proved one of the big musical attractions of the evening, and it was played and sung until everybody began humming and whistling the catchy air.

The newspaper dailies were represented in force, among the prominent writers being Kitty Kelly of the Tribune, Louella O. Parsons of the Herald, Florence Patton of the American, Mildred Novak of the Examiner, and others.

The Chicago Reel Fellows Club closed their quarters for the evening, and the members attended in full force.

Among the prominent moving picture people in attendance were: Carl Laemmle, P. A. Powers, Louis Laemmle, Maurice Fleckles, Joe Brandt, H. H. Van Loan, M. H. Hoffman, Manny Goldstein, Adolph Zukor, Lewis J. Selznick, Claude Plough, Frank Flaherty, Bryant Washburn, Richard C. Travers, Edna Mayo, Nell Craig, Henry Walthall, Harry Reichenbach, Darwin Karr, Mary McLaren, Walter Irwin, Lee Ochs, Sam Trigger, Al. Lichman, I. Van Ronkel, Sam Van Ronkel, E. Van Ronkel, G. M. Luttrell, W. Stephen Bush, James S. McQuade, Paul C. Hinz, William A. Johnston, F. C. Cropper, Harry Nolan, F. Van Husan, Clara Kimball Young, J. J. Garrity, John Flynn, Benjamin Schuleberg, W. Masters, Sam Spedon, Rose Tapley, Watterson R. Rothacker, Charles Stine, L. Lesserman, F. Weeks, etc.

NICHOLAS POWER LEAVES NEW YORK.

Nicholas Power, famous inventor of Power's Cameragraph and president of the projection machine company which bears his name, left New York on Monday, July 10, for the balance of the summer and will reside at his summer home on Lake Bomoseen, Vermont.

J. F. Skerrett, general manager of the Nicholas Power Company, has returned to the city after an absence of a month. Will C. Smith, assistant general manager, was in Chicago last week attending the exhibitors' convention in charge of the Nicholas Power Company display at the exposition there.

MOROSCO AGAIN ENLARGES PLANT.

Working facilities of the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company and Pallas Pictures are again being increased through enlargement of the plant. The outdoor stage across the street from the main building containing the glass canopied stage is being enlarged so that it will occupy double the original space. This stage is also being re-equipped with a new system of light diffusing and is being rapidly utilized for additional sets that have overflowed from the other stages.

The latest acquisition to the Morosco roster is Harold Holland, whose most recent work on the screen has been evidenced in Chaplin comedies including "The Bank," and "Shanghied."

Pathe Exchange Gets the Thanhouser Product

New Rochelle Producer Says Pathe Facilities Appeal to Him—Will Contribute Two Subjects Each Month

THE Thanhouser Film Corporation, one of the pioneers of the motion picture industry, announces that arrangements have been made with Pathe for the release of two five-reel features per month, on Pathe's greater program of Gold Rooster plays, beginning in August. The contract was signed Wednesday, July 12, by J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., and Edwin Thanhouser, president of the Thanhouser Film Corporation.

This announcement sets at rest many rumors which have been circulated since Thanhouser withdrew from the Mutual program. It was reported that there would be an alliance between Paramount and Thanhouser, and that Pathe had secured the pictures of this great producing company came as a distinct surprise.

"I take great pleasure in announcing an alliance with Pathe," Mr. Thanhouser said to an interviewer in his home in New Rochelle. "Our decision was based on a careful investigation of the motion picture field. One of the most important factors that led to our conclusion to release through Pathe was the fact that Mr. Berst is now general manager of that company.

"I consider Mr. Berst one of the most important factors in the motion picture industry today. Through his long years of association with exhibitors and manufacturers, he has a deep insight into all of the details of the motion picture business.

"I am familiar with his plans for the expansion of Pathe's activities in America and I am glad that we have been able to make arrangements to release our output through a concern with such an enviable reputation."

It is known that another important factor in Mr. Thanhouser's decision was the Pathe accounting system. The accounting system makes impossible much of the waste and inefficiency so common in many companies.

It is known that Mr. Thanhouser was also influenced by the fact that every exhibitor in the United States is visited at least once a month by a salesman from one of the thirty Pathe exchanges.

"It is because of all these things that Pathe has been able to build up one of the most successful organizations in the industry," Mr. Thanhouser said. "Pathe knows how to market high-class features, as well as serials, and I know that the class of pictures we will bring to their program will assure even greater success.

"With our splendid facilities in our New Rochelle and Jacksonville studios, we could turn out eight features a month. Instead we will concentrate on two productions every month. Three of these features have already been made. We have under contract excellent stars, authors and directors."

Thanhouser's new policy will be one-fourth the number of reels and four times the quality. Thanhouser has the resources and the ability to carry out these plans. Edwin Thanhouser is a producing genius; W. E. Shallenberger is one of the creative minds of the industry; Crawford Livingston is the well-known banker to whom is due credit for some of the greatest developments in the motion picture industry.

Mr. Berst was equally enthusiastic about having gained the Thanhouser product for the Pathe program. Mr. Berst made the following statement:

"Thanhouser pictures have been known and admired by exhibitors and public alike for years. The Thanhouser Film Corporation achieved success in the early days of the industry. Each year it has made its success still greater. The company is very strong financially; its stock pays large dividends. The Thanhouser people know the picture business from the ground up. The first features they have made for release through Pathe are excellent. Mr. Thanhouser and his associates are broad-minded and able men, with whom it is a pleasure to be associated in a business way.

"Our combination with Thanhouser gives us more productions for Greater Pathe program. With Arrow, Astra, Balboa, Blache and Thanhouser; with contracts for picture rights to the stage successes of Al. H. Woods and Henry W. Savage, and with a staff which includes some of America's best playwrights, we guarantee future releases up to the standard of 'At Bay,' 'Via Wireless,' 'Madame X,' 'The Woman's Law' and 'New York,' which rank among the greatest features ever produced. Pathe feature releases compare with Pathe serials and Pathe news, which all admit are in a class by themselves."

Negotiations looking toward the alliance between Thanhouser and Pathe were begun some time ago between Mr. Berst and Mr. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation which releases its features and "Who's Guilty?" series through Pathe. Mr. Shallenberger is the largest individual stockholder in the Thanhouser Film Corporation.

With preliminary negotiations opened between Mr. Berst and Mr. Shallenberger, the matter was placed before the executive committee of the Thanhouser Film Corporation consisting of Mr. Livingston, chairman; Mr. Thanhouser and Mr. Shallenberger. At Mr. Shallenberger's suggestion, it was decided that Mr. Thanhouser should conduct the negotiations with Mr. Berst, and the highly satisfactory agreements that have now been entered into by the two companies are splendid tribute to the business ability of these two men.

It is rumored that certain other well-known producing companies are negotiating with regard to an alliance with Pathe because of the unusual advantages which that company offers as a distributing agency.

Clara Kimball Young in Dixon's "The Foolish Virgin."

Picture Rights to Famous Novelist's Popular Story Acquired for Film Star's Second Offering.

TRUE to its stated policy of presenting only filmed versions of popular novels by the greatest modern writers, the Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation this week announces as the subject for its second feature picture "The Foolish Virgin," by Thomas Dixon, author of "The Birth of a Nation."

Miss Young, who is already at work upon the screen adaptation of Robert W. Chambers' widely read novel, "The Common Law," will begin the presentation of the Dixon novel within a week or two. This will be in accordance with the system devised by Albert Capellani, director-general of the corporation, under which Miss Young will be able to work in two productions simultaneously and the schedule of one release a month can be adhered to.

"The Foolish Virgin" is the first of Mr. Dixon's famous novels that he has been willing to sell to a film producing company. With the exception of "The Birth of a Nation," which he wrote from his book "The Clansman," Mr. Dixon has been unwilling to see any of his stories adapted for the screen. His works have been among the most sought-after of any American novelist, but until he decided to permit Miss Young to play the heroine in "The Foolish Virgin" the noted novelist of Dixieland had been deaf to all offers.

"I have sold the right to 'The Foolish Virgin' only because I feel that Miss Clara Kimball Young is best fitted to present my book in screen form," said Mr. Dixon after he had completed the business details with Lewis J. Selznick, president of the corporation.

"I have been a great admirer of Miss Young's work for several years. I am confident that her portrayal of the heroine in my novel will add not only to her reputation as an artist but to my own prestige as well."

"The Foolish Virgin" was first produced as a serial story in the Green Book Magazine. It attracted tremendous attention and when subsequently issued in book form sold by hundreds of thousands. The story is peculiarly suited to the screen, having a powerful dramatic theme and being replete with action.

The main thesis advanced in this work of Mr. Dixon's is that the lust for gold inevitably creates a lust to kill; that any man or woman to whom gain becomes an obsession will commit murder if necessary to achieve the desired end.

The heroine of the story is a young girl who is imbued with the belief that marriage is a woman's safeguard. She resists all the temptations thrown in the path of a girl seeking to earn her living in a big city, waiting the first chance that offers with a wedding ring attached. Her disillusionment and struggle to keep from sinking to the level of the man she marries forms the main thread of the story.

Herbert Brenon to Produce Independently

Director of "Neptune's Daughter" and Other Features Has Faith in "Open Market"—To Make Spectacle With Mary Garden

HERBERT BRENON, the well-known producer who has just completed "The Daughter of the Gods" for William Fox, announces his intention to enter the producing field on his own account. For the past two years Mr. Brenon has been one of the most successful producers on the Fox program. Concerning his new venture Mr. Brenon makes the following statements:

"I have decided to enter the producing field on my own account because I firmly believe that the present system of feature production cannot last. Three years ago I left the cast and technical forces and became a free lance director. At that time the feature was more prevalent than it is now. Companies were more stereotyped, many of them releasing but one picture a month. There were only a few companies releasing multi-reel films and practically everything was moving slowly. Into the same conditions exist to-day. Producers in the progressive vicinity have an interest in a short reel program field. The outstanding feature of many of the most successful companies is their reels.

"I don't say that the tendency has gone away on the one-reel, the comedy should and will remain but we have reached the time in the evolution where the manufacturer who releases more than an eight reel picture a year cannot hope to satisfy the public demands in the open market. A manufacturer can't afford to withhold having fresh stock on hand every a couple of days. Of them are there and the rest of them have to [illegible]. It seems to me that we are going to an unbalanced state altogether if they are not legislated for. We can do away with them.

"Exactly the same conditions obtains in the musical picture industry. There has been found about the terror of the exhibitor oriental and expensive the entire week's cost. The number of road theatres being only accounted for the number of good theatres that can be kept accommodated may have on the road.

"It will be remembered two years ago that I made the first seven-reel feature, 'Neptune's Daughter,' with Annette Kellermann as the star. I left the Fox company and produced 'The Birth of a Nation' that held the record for any long-time run-made production. It ran not months in a New York seven-week period in Chicago and over three months in Detroit. The public liked my handling about the beauty thing they liked in and went to see it. There was never seen 'The Birth of a Nation.' Did the public care about the length of that production? They flocked to see it, didn't they? Well, Belasco is also a wonderful entertainment. I appreciate that any producer who can release at more-than-a-dollar engage, to achieve what he intends, he can secure a profit to any exhibitor in the center of the most region and in the province himself. The regular program feature manufacturers realize very well that. Fine and well, the exhibitor gradually realizes the situation, and the manufacturer must forever respect the exhibitor who wishes to have a profit to any producer will succeed in long a several years.

"Believing that these conditions exist, I have decided to [illegible] from existing producing [illegible] manufacturers [illegible] producing on their screen to build the public. Lots of men have entered the manufacturing field with capital to open production, but the most vital thing they overlooked was that they could not find a market therefor. I can picture me my own showing of selected features, one to the right week, and one release every fortnight, with about a four-reader program to alternate with them. I am not thinking any more than I do believe that I know what the exhibitor wants, and I am going to keep faith with him, whether as I shall never experience a production. Where a feature is released with the name of Brenon as a trade-mark, I want the exhibitor to believe until I create that each time I shall have a remarkable production every time of it. I have the exhibitors' confidence, I am getting the goods. I ask them to remember what results they obtained with 'Neptune's Daughter,' 'The Battle of Gettysburg,' 'The Inventor Scheme,' 'The Unpardonable Sin' and 'The Two Orphans.' It was this last picture that the Fox selected for the opening of the Hippodrome policy.

"I shall make these pictures with various stars only because I believe the public prefers to see them on the screen. I shall make at least four or five productions before next March, using Mary Garden as the star. Between now and then I shall be out here on the coast. However, any and this time I shall be out here on the coast. However, any and this time I shall be out here on the coast. However, any and this time

Mack Sennett in the East

By George Blaisdell

Famous Keystone Producer, on His Annual Visit to New York, Says, "Things Look Great"

MACK SENNETT, champion funmaker of the films, is on his annual pilgrimage to New York. Mr. Sennett arrived in the big town on Tuesday, July 11, and he says he expects to remain several weeks. His visit is a busy one, being marked by many conferences with the officials of the New York Motion Picture Corporation and by interviews with writers on trade and other magazines and on the daily newspapers. As to the conferences, they are the usual things—taking up of contracts and the many details that enter into the grinding out of pictures that make the millions laugh. The interviews, singly and en bloc, indicate the growing recognition of Mr. Sennett's unique position in the moving picture world—and that is, of course, especially in the case of Keystone, the whole world.

Mack Sennett.

Mr. Sennett is in the pink of physical condition. To maintain just that most desirable attribute the producer gives more than a few minutes of his strenuous day. He does not say so, but it is not likely he will deny that a strong man with a sound body, one who looks upon the world at large through rose-colored glasses, is the one who is best fitted to see the humorous side of every-day life, to extract from the foibles of the ordinary human being material for Keystone comedies. Mr. Sennett brings with him his trainer, and he will tell you confidentially that his athletic preceptor knows a lot more about building muscle than he does about the English language and the niceties of diplomacy, especially when answering a telephone call in his chief's room. But that's another story.

"How do things look?" said Mr. Sennett in reply to a question. "Why, great! The people want to laugh, you know, and we are trying to keep them laughing. The Keystone situation looks better every day. No, we are not thinking about increasing our output. It's a hard thing to increase output and at the same time increase quality. We are trying to increase the quality, and if to do that it be necessary to reduce production why—we'll reduce, that's all. We are now making two reels a week. If we can't make two a week of the sort we want, we'll cut to one.

"Do you know it is getting to be mighty difficult to get funny plots, funny plays? It is not now as it was in other days. Then we could start out in the morning with a cameraman and a director and a funny fellow—oh, yes, with a girl and another man—and a few properties. We might have in mind nothing in particular, but we would look for a location, knowing we had with us the hero, the girl and the villain. We might also have along some robbers, and when we found the landscape that suggested something we would start—'writing' the story and making it, winding up with a few laughs at the end. It was a case of 'Leave it to us'—full of confidence, you know. But those are not pictures any more.

"Yes, it is different now. If every circumstance favors, we may make a subject in a few days or two weeks, or conceivably we may require very much more time. Take our two-reel release of 'The Snow Cure.' That required time for the making. Some of the scenes were photographed in Los Angeles and some in Truckee, 500 miles away. You remember in that picture we had a four-hundred-pound bear. There was one scene we photographed forty times to get that fellow to do what we wanted him to do, and he was not particularly sweet-tempered, either."

Someone remarked that Mr. Sennett had the reputation of not caring who made the picture so long as he had the privilege of cutting it or maybe it was that he was reputed to take more satisfaction in cutting a subject than in making it. The producer smiled.

"I guess that is right," he said. "Really, I think I am Mr. Eastman's best friend. I certainly get a lot of fun out of a pair of scissors. How do we work? Well, after a picture is finished it is assembled in the rough and I sit in with the director and watch it put on the screen. When he is through, I begin. Sometimes there is a noise approximating a groan when I cut out three or four hundred feet in one piece—all the 'fine stuff,' as the director describes it—and in its stead insert one sub-title. It is not so much a question of how much you cut out as it is how little you leave in. I am a believer in the policy of making pictures by elimination. These excisions are frequently occasions for studio sadness, but they are essential for the good of the picture and for contributing to the mirth of those who are going to see it on the screen."

The World man reverted to "Tillie's Punctured Romance," the first print of which Mr. Sennett had brought to New York on his visit of two years ago. The producer was asked if there was anything doing in the feature line.

"There surely is," he said. "Mabel Normand is working on a picture now for which we have hopes. While it is of Keystone origin, it contains no stunts, no tricks, no gags. Well, yes, dramatic comedy is a good description of it. It is serious, in spots. But just when it gets to the point where according to our views a picture lags something breaks. The story is built up steadily, progressively; something along the lines of 'Tillie's Romance,' yet really very much different. We don't know how long the subject will be. It may be released in three or four reels, possibly two; but we hope to have it six or seven. It will be a 'natural length,' anyway. Yes, it will be a special, you may be sure, for a lot of money has gone into the making."

Asked about his producing activities, Mr. Sennett confided that he did not think Keystone would maintain any more companies in the East. There had been some large extensions to the Keystone Western studios. One stage has a floor area of 250 by 125 feet. The roof is 45 feet high, and by the use of steel trusses the whole space is free of posts. Mr. Sennett said he believed his company now possessed one of the largest studios in the world, there being stage accommodations for seventy-five sets at one time. A director has 300 complete sets to choose from, and the company is building others all the time.

HAMILTON MAKING "INHERITED PASSION."

Gilbert P. Hamilton, managing director of the Century Film Corporation with headquarters and studios at Roundup, Mont., is making a seven-reel feature entitled "Inherited Passions," from a newspaper story by Jack Wolf, the scenario being by Dorothy Farley, who also takes the woman lead. Opposite her is William Conklin and in a large and strong cast are George H. Kern, business manager and assistant to Mr. Hamilton; Frank Newburg, Millard Wilson, Mrs. Alma Farley, Charles Mulhall, Beatrice Van and Mrs. Hutchinson. The feature is western and two of the reels are being made at Roundup, while the other five are being produced in Los Angeles.

The company is occupying a stage at the Al E. Christie comedy studios at Hollywood, Cal., and also has stage room at the Pacific studios. The players expect to return to Montana in a few weeks.

"PEG O' THE RING" TO CLOSE.

Notwithstanding the many requests the Universal has received for an extension of "Peg o' the Ring," it has been decided not to continue the serial after the fifteenth episode. "Liberty," the new Universal serial featuring Marie Walcamp, will immediately follow "Peg o' the Ring." "Liberty" is an up-to-the-minute military thriller of the Mexican border. Great bodies of troops take part in the night attacks against barbed wire entanglements and the clash of real Mexicans with real United States troopers is depicted in the serial.

"Girl from Frisco" Ready August 9

Kalem Series Featuring Marin Sais and True Boardman—Will Be Released in Regular Service

WEDNESDAY, August 9, has been definitely decided on as the date of release for the first episode of "The Girl from Frisco," Kalem's big new series of the West with Marin Sais and True Boardman in the leading roles. On that day "The Fighting Heiress," the initial episode of the series, will be issued. A two-reel episode will then follow every Wednesday until the fifteen week period is completed.

Kalem has decided on a radical step in the booking of "The Girl from Frisco," and will place this series by Robert Welles Ritchie through the regular service of the General Film Company. Exhibitors will thus be able to book the western series without any extra charge, in their regular program releases. "The Girl from Frisco" will be the only series on the market thus issued.

In announcing Kalem's decision to book the new series without extra rental, Mr. Wright, of that company, said it took considerable courage to take this stand for "The Girl from Frisco" is being staged at unusual cost and is certain to be one of the costliest series productions ever made. "There would have been every justification for seeking to recover the heavy expenditures by charging an extra rental," Mr. Wright explained, "but we feel that our confidence and faith in the regular program and something more than an 'even break' for the exhibitor will be repaid. Now that so many manufacturers are rallying to the cause of the short picture and the regular program, you will perhaps remember that Kalem has been backing up its words week after week with never a let-up by keeping popular stars in regular program. Now we are going a step further by putting out a feature series of fifteen week length in the same manner."

The stories of the first four episodes of "The Girl from Frisco" appear in the August issue of Short Stories Magazine. That of "The Fighting Heiress," the initial release, will give an idea of the theme underlying the series of the west. Marin Sais, as Barbara Brent, takes up her father's battle against powerful enemies when he is laid low by an assassin's bullet. In the course of the action that follows she leads the cattle rangers in a spirited battle with the sheep herders, captures her father's assailant after a pursuit on horseback that calls for some daring riding, and rescues her admirer, Wallace, from a spectacular prairie fire.

The cast of the first release carries names that make it of all-star proportions. Included among the players are Marin Sais, True Boardman, E. Forrest Taylor, Ronald Bradbury, Frank Jonasson, Edward Clisbee, B. Furey and Rupert Dell. Miss Sais, Boardman and Taylor are three of the players who have been individual stars in strongly advertised series and feature productions.

Director James W. Horne has his hands full in staging the new series, as Kalem has made a flat rule that the exact locations called for in Robert Welles Ritchie's stories must be secured for the pictures. A two hundred mile journey to the sheep country was necessary for "The Fighting Heiress," while other long trips planned for the early episodes are to Randsburg, on the edge of the desert, to the Bakersfield oil district and the mining section. Thus readers of the stories that will appear in Short Stories Magazine will experience the novelty of seeing the exact towns and spots named in the stories when they view the screen productions.

An Evil That Will Cure Itself

The Double Bill "Evil" Is Bound to Disappear, Says Berst of Pathe, Inc.

THE exhibitor who runs two five-reel features besides two or three short reels in one show is educating his patrons to demand long bills and sooner or later it will cause him to face the necessity of paying prices that he cannot afford for his service is the opinion of J. A. Berst of Pathe.

"There will come a time," he continued, "when the motion picture business will be largely controlled by three or four large companies and because the cost of production will be so great that rentals will correspondingly increase the exhibitor who has thus educated his patrons to see double bills in the hope of stifling competition will find that he has cut his own throat.

"The double bill was first tried out, so far as I know, by the Tivoli theater, San Francisco, which discontinued it soon after because the management found it bad business. Boston at this time is running double bills quite largely.

"Many believe that this is a crying evil and that something must be done about it. I agree that these methods are unwise, but I think that the matter will adjust itself with time. The few exhibitors who have employed this means of gaining temporary patronage will soon find that they were wrong and the many experienced, successful show men who foresaw which way the wind was blowing will continue the policy of a good show, not too long, and not too short, with good music, courteous attendants and all the equipment of a fine theatrical entertainment.

SLADDIN WITH CONSOLIDATED.

S. G. Sladdin, whose publicity work for "Cabiria" and other Broadway feature productions is well remembered, has been appointed Director of Publicity for the Consolidated Film Corporation. This company is producing "The Crimson Stain Mystery," a startling sixteen episode serial, and is preparing to launch one of the greatest national advertising campaigns yet attempted for a serial. Mr. Sladdin has been engaged to take charge of all the publicity. Mr. Sladdin's knowledge of the country through his several years of travel in promoting big propositions in the picture world has ably fitted him to conduct the campaign that the Consolidated is now mapping out.

GEORGE BEBAN LEAVES FOR MAINE WOODS.

George Beban, whose latest photoplay, "Pasquale," has already registered one of the greatest hits ever released by the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Co., has forsaken both the photoplay and the drama for the time being and has left for a few months vacation in the Maine woods. The popular characterizer of Italian roles has polished up his fishing tackle and expects to score as big a success in the matter of catching "big ones" up in the Maine lakes and streams as he evidenced in "Pasquale."

Adaptation of Two Successes Completed

Famous Players Produce Fitch's "The Woman in the Case" and Roi Cooper Megrue's "Under Cover"

THE adaptation of two of the five big stage successes the acquisition of which was announced by the Famous Players Film Company immediately after the formation of the new Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has just been completed. They are Clyde Fitch's great drama, "The Woman in the Case," with Pauline Frederick as the star, and Roi Cooper Megrue's celebrated comedy-melodrama, "Under Cover."

"Under Cover" marks Mr. Moore's return to the Famous Players after a long absence and is his first appearance with Hazel Dawn. It is one of Mr. Megrue's most brilliant successes and has attained a great reputation as a play of action and mystery on the stage. It is therefore particularly well suited to motion picture adaptation and has been admirably directed by Robert G. Vignola.

It will be remembered that the story deals with the efforts of Stephen Denby, a young man of apparent wealth but no visible means of support, to smuggle a $200,000 necklace into the United States. In the cast of "Under Cover," which is released on the Paramount program July 20, there appear Frank Losee, William Courtleigh, Jr., Ethel Fleming and other well-known players in support of Miss Dawn and Mr. Moore.

Pauline Frederick has upset theatrical tradition and all the rules of stardom in "The Woman in the Case," by deciding that she would rather play the less conspicuous role of Margaret Rolfe, the self-sacrificing wife, instead of playing the title role of Claire Foster, which is the part in which Blanche Walsh scored a great hit on the stage.

This powerful drama centers about the vindictive effort of a woman of the world to convict her former lover of murder when he robs her of another victim.

"The Woman in the Case" is one of Clyde Fitch's most successful dramas and contains in great abundance the elements necessary to success on the screen—quick action, suspense and great dramatic force. In the cast which appears in support of Miss Frederick there are several players of international reputation, including Marie Chambers in the role of Claire Foster; Clarence Handysides, Alan Hale and Paul Gordon. It will be released August 7.

"Under Fire," "Nearly Married" and "Rolling Stones," the other plays which were acquired at the same time as these, will be released on the Paramount Program at dates to be determined later.

Selig's V-L-S-E Subject of Unusual Character

"Prince Chap" With a Notable Cast to Be Released July 24

AN UNUSUAL and noteworthy film production in every sense of the word is promised by the Selig Polyscope Company when "The Prince Chap" is released through V-L-S-E, Inc., on Monday, July 24. First, one of the most notable casts of motion picture players is presented. These stars include Marshall Neilan, who enacts the title role; Bessie Eyton, Mary Charleson and George Fawcett. Each and every one of these stars has achieved success and earned wide popularity.

"The Prince Chap" is from the pen of Edward Pepel and is a story of love and adventure in New York City and London, England. The production is crowded with wonderful scenic effects and is marked with unusual photography. Marshall Neilan directed the production, which is in five reels.

Mary Carleson was engaged especially for "The Prince Chap," coming directly from New York with the Selig stock company which filmed scenes in Gotham. She has gone to the Pacific Coast to appear in other Selig productions. Marshall Neilan, Bessie Eyton and George Fawcett completed their work in "The Crisis" just in time to engage in the production of "The Prince Chap." The lighting effects in "The Prince Chap," according to the Selig Company, sets a new pace in filmland.

DUSTIN FARNUM'S ROUTE.

"Dusty" Farnum, the popular Pallas Pictures star, has worn out the index finger of his right hand figuring out his course for the cross-country auto trip which he will shortly make in his new touring car. "Dusty" contemplates using the following route: First stop, Oakland, Cal., then in the order named, Stockton, Sacramento, Placerville, Carson City, Reno, Fallon Austin, Shelburne Pass, Fish Springs, Salt Lake City, Ogden, Evanston, Fort Bridger, Rock Springs, Rawlins, Laramie, Cheyenne, Chappell, North Platte, Kearney, Central City, Fremont, Omaha, Des Moines, Iowa City, Davenport, Tri-City, Joliet, Chicago, La Porte, South Bend, Fort Wayne, Lima, Columbus, Mansfield, Washington, Pittsburgh, Bedford, York, Philadelphia, Trenton, Elizabeth, Jersey City, New York City, Bridgeport, New Haven, Providence and Boston. The film hero will make the trip at easy stages, stopping occasionally to fish and camp. Paramount exhibitors and exchanges are planning receptions for him all along the line.

Brady Inaugurates All-Star Policy

Three Releases Featuring Well-Known Players Starts the New Order of Things on World Film Program

FOR the balance of July, World Film will release three personally supervised William A. Brady pictures of unusual interest, with such stars as Alice Brady, Carlyle Blackwell, Gail Kane, Muriel Ostriche, Arthur Ashley, Johnny Hines, Gladden James and June Elvidge appearing in the casts.

These three releases will mark the inauguration of Mr. Brady's policy of all-star casts in support of the individual star in each forthcoming production. Judging from all present indications, this system will prove quite an innovation for World Films. The first of these releases will be "Paying the Price," which is the release of July 17, being a naval story taken from Burton E. Stevenson's story, "Reparation," scenarioized by Gardner Hunting and directed by Frank Crane. In this picture, the World Film Corporation had the hearty co-operation of the United States Government and by special permission from Secretary of the Navy Josephus E. Daniels, the U. S. Torpedo Boat No. 60, the "Wadsworth," was used to film several scenes, also for the discharge of several torpedoes, one against Clarges Rock in the Potomac River and one against the old ferryboat, the "Bronx," which was blown to smithereens for realistic effect in this picture. Each of the torpedoes exploded cost in excess of $4,500, which speaks in no uncertain terms of Mr. Brady's honest endeavors to give his "New-day" pictures the necessary atmosphere to make each story letter-perfect in every detail. In "Paying the Price" Gail Kane is starred, supported by an ideal cast, including Gladden James, June Elvidge, George Relph, Robert Cummings and Lydia Knott.

Carlyle Blackwell, the universal favorite of the World staff of stars, will be co-starred with Muriel Ostriche in "Sally in Our Alley," the release of July 24. This marks Mr. Blackwell's first appearance since he was seen with Ethel Clayton in "His Brother's Wife," while Miss Ostriche's last picture was "By Whose Hand?" "Sally in Our Alley" has a touch of melodramatic incidents, human interest and pathos combined. It is one of those "a sob, a tear and a smile" pictures that always goes big all over the country, and under Travers Vale's direction, this story of lower East Side life, with its sweatshop scenes taken in an East Side factory, and society scenes taken at the Schwab residence, is replete with heart interest material, and with Carlyle Blackwell taking the initiative in the romantic side of the picture, there is nothing left to be desired. Besides these two stars, Mr. and Mrs. Pat Foy and Jean Shelby are seen to good advantage.

"Miss Petticoats," with Alice Brady in the star role, will be the last release of the month. This picture play is from the book by Dwight Tilton and the scenario of Harley Knoles, who also directed the piece. "Miss Petticoats," it will be remembered, attained widespread attention a few years ago, especially in the New England states, as a stage production and also as a book. The play was on the road for several years, playing long runs in Boston, Providence and New Bedford, Mass., where the scenic plot of the story is laid.

Alice Brady is admirably well cast as "Miss Petticoats," and she is favored with an unusually strong cast headed by Arthur Ashley and Johnny Hines. Others in the supporting cast include Alec B. Francis, Isabel Berwin, Ed. M. Kimball, Louis Grisel, Lila Chester and Robert Elliott. It was directed by Harley Knoles and the principal scenes of New Bedford life were taken at that city, where a company of eighteen players spent over a week in taking those scenes.

Vitagraph Offers Another Anita Stewart Feature

And a Frank Daniels Comedy Make Up the Vitagraph V-L-S-E Program

AS A reporter in "The Daring of Diana," a Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature in five parts, Anita Stewart has a role admirably suited to her talent. Miss Stewart is forced to run the gamut of emotions, but whether confined in the cellar of Stange, the villain, not knowing what next to expect, or resting peacefully and contentedly in the arms of her lover, her portrayal is equally convincing.

The direction of the picture for which S. Rankin Drew is responsible is flawless. The scenes which are laid in Paris carry a true French atmosphere, and the photography throughout the production is excellent.

Anders Randolf, Julia Swayne Gordon, Francis Morgan, Donald MacBride, Charles Wellesley and Joseph Donohue render valuable support to Miss Stewart. The picture is from the pen of Charles L. Gaskill, and will be released through V-L-S-E.

Frank Daniels furnishes many hearty laughs in "Movie Money," a single-reel Vitagraph comedy. The action of the picture is fast, and Charles Dickson, the director, succeeded in keeping the interest from lagging. This is a picture which should send an average audience into spasms of hilarity. One of the particularly comical incidents occurs when Daniels, in search of some money he had lost, pulls a jail from its moorings with the aid of a "fliver." The jail, in which two convicts are having a game of pinochle, jolts over a box of dynamite and is shattered by a great explosion. After the smoke has cleared away, the gamblers are still seen playing their hands, unconscious of the disturbance. After a great deal of trouble, Daniels finds his money only to discover that it is confederate or "stage money." C. Graham Baker wrote the story.

ETHEL TEARE WITH "HAM."

In response to an insistent demand from exhibitors and fans following the "Ham" comedies that Ethel Teare be returned to that combination. Kalem last week transferred Ethel Teare to the Hollywood studio and work was started on "Ham's Whirlwind Finish" with the reunited trio in the principal parts. Kalem's decision to make this radical move, in view of the fact that Ethel Teare has been unusually successful as an individual star for a year, was hastened by the realization of the certain popularity that will come to such a three-star combination.

In "Ham's Whirlwind Finish," Ham and Bud are appointed official cooks in the construction camp kitchen, but their life as purveyors of spaghetti and vino is shortlived. Their passing is hastened by a flirtation with Ethel, the sweetheart of the gang's leader. From then on to "the whirlwind finish" life is one exciting thing after another for Ham and Bud, with dynamite the chief ingredient of the plot.

B. S. Moss Enters the Production Field

Proposes to Put Out One Feature a Month—Later Will Increase to One a Week

DURING the past week a new factor has loomed up upon the motion picture horizon in the person of B. S. Moss, who announces that he is about to take an aggressive and active part in the production of motion pictures. Mr. Moss naturally is a keen judge of the money making value of feature pictures, inasmuch as the chain of theaters which he controls will have the first run on all of his productions.

"It stands to reason," said Mr. Moss, in discussing his plans for the future, "that I would not dream of distributing a picture unless I was convinced that it would prove profitable in my own houses. Being myself an exhibitor and having my own interests to conserve, the B. S. Moss pictures naturally will be of a class that will insure showmen the best quality of photo dramas which it is possible to produce.

"The customary transaction of selling a man a picture for a certain territory was to sell him the picture and then forget all about him. We intend to do this differently, and that is the reason we have hit upon the one-a-month proposition.

"As previously stated, we will advertise continually in the trade papers and create a demand for our merchandise, which will be more easily saleable when the state right man comes to the exhibitor for business. It is also our purpose to show at least four of the finished pictures to every customer before he need tie up for the twelve features.

"My debut into the production field has not been made hastily. The pictures which I intend to put before the public are each and everyone of them carefully culled from the best available now upon the market. It has been my aim in selecting these pictures to choose those that offer the widest diversity in the fields of interest.

"For instance, the first picture which we will release is entitled 'In the Hands of the Law,' by the celebrated author, William O. H. Hurst. This picture deals with the much-discussed subject of circumstantial evidence, and before an audience composed of Police Commissioner Woods, Theodore Rosseau, secretary to Mayor Mitchel, and a selected body of legislators, received their strong endorsement as an example of the fact that occasionally the law can err."

The second picture will be "Boots and Saddles," based on Eugene Walter's famous play. The action takes place today on the Mexican border. A great big stirring picture, with great silhouettes of thousands of soldiers in battle, and all the activity of a bustling campaign.

Other productions contemplated are "The Power of Evil," by George Bronson Howard; "The Woman Redeemed," starring Marie Empress; "One Hour," "One Day" and "Rosedale."

It is the intention of the B. S. Moss Motion Picture Corporation, beginning in September, to release a feature each month, each feature to be headed by a noted star. Mr. Moss plans later on to construct a studio and place upon the market multiple-reel features of marked quality on a one-a-week basis.

All productions will be issued on the state right plan.

POWELL MAY VISIT SCREEN CLUBS.

Frank Powell, the noted photoplay director and the president of the film producing company which bears his name, is a charter member of the Screen Club, New York's famous organization of motion picture producers and actors. To Mr. Powell belongs the honor of originating the name of this club and in recognition of this signal service has been one of its board of governors since the inception of the organization.

This club was organized about three years ago with a very small representation among the film actors and has been so successful that under the able management of such men as Mr. Powell and others that today it has a membership exceeding 500 of the best-known artists of the screen.

During the past year numerous other clubs have been formed throughout the country under the same name as the New York organization, and as a great many invitations have been received by Mr. Powell from the presidents of these organizations to visit them, he has decided to devote part of his well-earned vacation in the cities represented by these clubs.

As the original Screen Club has been so successful, Mr. Powell will, no doubt, be called upon to give a number of talks relative to the method of procedure used by his organization and which could be used to advantage by the minor clubs.

YORKE FILM STUDIO OPENED.

The Yorke Film Corporation, producers for the Metro program of Harold Lockwood-May Allison features, has located in the studio and offices at No. 1329 Gordon street, Hollywood, California. The studio, which was obtained by Fred J. Balshofer, president of the Yorke corporation, was formerly occupied by the Nevada Pictures Company.

The company of players had left New York but a few days after Mr. Balshofer, and they were surprised and delighted to find on their arrival that everything was in readiness. Immediately the filming of "Mister 44," a picturization of the novel by E. J. Rath, was begun. Rath is also the author of the book from which "The River of Romance," a new Metro release, was made. The latter production was the first to be directed for Metro by Henry Otto.

The party that traveled from New York to the coast included Mr. Lockwood, Miss Allison, Mrs. Allison, Director Henry Otto and his assistant, Bennett Moulter; Lester Cuneo, heavy leading man; Antonio Gaudio, cameraman; Abraham Cantor, assistant to Mr. Balshofer, and Ben H. Grimm, publicity representative.

COLONIAL EQUIPPED BY P. T. E. CO.

A. C. Lewis, proprietor of the Colonial theater, Seaside Park, New Jersey, turned over his new theater to The Picture Theater Equipment Co., and demanded the best projection results be obtained for him.

They sent one of their projection engineers who went over the theater thoroughly and scientifically and suggested various items.

Mr. Lewis purchased from the Picture Theater Equipment Co. two Powers 6 B machines with Powers Inductor, Minusa Gold Fibre Screen and self stretching frame, and the famous Piteco lenses.

To say Mr. Lewis is satisfied would be putting it in a mild way. The projection is perfect, same having been attended to by the Picture Theater Equipment Company's expert who was on the job.

The theater seats about 500 and was built by Mr. Lewis who is a new exhibitor with the right idea.

CLIFFORD IN NEW HORSLEY COMPANY.

William Clifford, who during the past six months has been seen in Centaur features of the David Horsley productions as co-star with Margaret Gibson, will in the future be starred alone in Horsley-Mutual dramas of the one and two-reel length.

Mr. Clifford is now at work on his first story under the new management and it is of the one-reel length in which a number of the famous Bostock wild pumas will be prominently seen. A new company has been formed to support the star, such well known players as Jessie Burnett, Al D. Blake and Victor Rottman being included.

Alvin J. Neitz, for a long period assistant director of the Gibson-Clifford Company, has been elevated to the directorship of the new company and he is ably assisted by David Allen, one of the screen's most popular character actors, who has been identified with the David Horsley studios for a period extending over more than a year.

BILLY RICE'S WIDOW IN PICTURES.

Mrs. Blanche Rice, the widow of the late Billy Rice, the famous minstrel and comedian, is in "God's Half Acre," the Metro-Rolfe motion picture in which Mabel Taliaferro is the star. In her youth Mrs. Rice was a protege of the famous singer, Parepa Rosa. Mme. Rosa wanted to adopt her and educate her for grand opera, but the girl's marriage to the comedian caused her to give up all thought of a career for twenty-six years.

Eugene Strong

EUGENE STRONG, who is cast as Robert Clayton, the artist, in the forthcoming 16 episodes serial, "The Crimson Stain Mystery." by the Consolidated Film Corporation, is one of the most popular matinee idols of stage or screen. Mr. Strong has an enviable record on the stage, where he became a favorite through the portrayal of juvenile parts. For six years he was in stock in the west, and then appeared for two years in the leading role of "The Virginians."

Eugene Strong.

He appeared in a Paul Armstrong sketch, "To Save One Girl," on a forty-week vaudeville tour, supporting Catherine Calvert, Mr. Armstrong's wife. His first big success in the pictures was in the juvenile lead in "The Man Inside," in which he supported Edwin Stevens.

Mr. Strong is tall, handsome and athletic and a perfect type of matinee idol. In "The Crimson Stain Mystery," as an artist, he will be seen in many exceptionally powerful scenes with Olga Olonova, the latest Russian vampire find, who will appear in connection with her work, as the artist's model.

The studio scenes in "The Crimson Stain Mystery" promise to be the most daring yet attempted on the screen, and they will give Mr. Strong an opportunity to put into full play his magnificent talents as an actor.

EASTERN PLAYERS REACH UNIVERSAL CITY.

Following the announcement made by President Carl Laemmle and Vice-president and General-Manager H. O. Davis of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company the Eastern players and directors of the company are gradually being transferred to the Pacific Coast studios at Universal City. Practically every day sees a new arrival at the film capital, where over thirty companies are now producing photoplays.

One of the first to arrive was Director Stuart Paton, with his leading man, Allen Holubar; the leading lady, Jane Gail; Dorothy Phillips, Wm. DeGrasse, M. F. Murphy, assistant director; Joseph Gerrard and Wm. Welch.

Later arrivals include Director William Garwood, Director David LeBrandt, Ben Wilson, Irene Hunt, Edith Roberts, Howard Crampton, Lillian Concord, Gertrude Cameron and Hobart Henley.

HALE AN AVIATOR.

Creighton Hale, now starring in the feature pictures of the Frank Powell Productions, Inc., is the only actor appearing on the screen or legitimate stage who has qualified and become a member of the Aero Club of America. Mr. Hale addressed the Harlem Board of Trade on the adaptability of the aeroplane in modern warfare and succeeded in arousing their enthusiasm to the extent that it is rumored they contemplate donating to the United States Government a fully-equipped aeroplane to be used at the discretion of its aviation branch.

Mr. Hale has agreed to form an Aviation Corps among his co-workers in the motion picture industry, and in the event of trouble between this country and any foreign nation Mr. Hale assured the Board of Trade that he would be willing to leave for the front at any time.

HARVARD FILM CORPORATION MOVES.

The Harvard Film Corporation has moved from 231-233 Tenth avenue to the new film building at 729 Seventh avenue, where it has installed an up-to-date film and developing plant which is modern in every particular. All the Unity Sales Corporation work will be done by the Harvard, of which J. T. Reardon is president.

GAUMONT ISSUES THREE SINGLE-REELS FOR FIRST WEEK IN AUGUST.

There are no photodramas scheduled for release by Gaumont for the first week in August, that company confining its Mutual pictures to three single-reels. These are "See America First," with the Gaumont Kartoon Komics; "Reel Life," the Mutual Magazine in Film, and the Mutual Weekly. As it is the aim to keep the "Reel Life" subjects up to date, no announcement has yet been made of the features which will enliven this reel when it is released July 30. "Reel Life" bears the same relationship to a magazine that the Mutual Weekly does to a newspaper, and its editor often holds his program until the last minute in order to secure the pick of the market for his spectators.

"See America First" offers an intensely interesting city August 2. This is Philadelphia, rich in Colonial and revolutionary sites, suitable for the screen.

LAEMMLE CONTINUES SALARIES OF SOLDIER EMPLOYEES.

President Carl Laemmle of the Universal Film Mfg. Co. announces that the salaries of two of his factory employees, H. Manhaken and Edward Carey, who went to the front with their regiments, will be paid during their absence to their relatives.

Mr. Manhaken and Mr. Carey were both employed in the laboratories of the Universal at Fort Lee, Mr. Manhaken in the perforating department and Mr. Carey in the negative polishing department. Both Universal employees were members of Company F, Fifth Regiment, New Jersey Infantry, when the mobilization order called them away from their work.

RALPH HERZ PRODUCING ONE REEL COMEDIES FOR METRO.

Ralph Herz, the well known comedian, who recently made his debut on the Metro Program in "The Purple Lady," supported by Irene Howley, has been engaged to appear in one-reel comedies for Metro. They will be produced by the Rolma Film Corporation and one comedy will be released every week. Mr. Herz has already begun work on the first subject which is called "The Lady Killer." It was written by Edward McWade, and is being produced under the direction of "Billy" Quirk, the popular comedian, who recently joined the directing forces.

JEROME BEATTY WITH THANHOUSER.

Jerome Beatty, a newspaper and magazine writer, who has had wide experience in publicity work, has been made director of publicity for the Thanhouser Film Corporation at New Rochelle, N. Y. Mr. Beatty handled the newspaper publicity for Essanay's "The Strange Case of Mary Page." Before that he was a baseball writer on the New York Tribune. Mr. Beatty has had newspaper experience in New York, Washington, Kansas City, New Orleans and Los Angeles.

J. A. BERST VISITS CHICAGO EXPOSITION.

J. A. Berst, vice president and general manager of Pathe, showed his appreciation of the importance of the Chicago exposition by leaving on Saturday night for Chicago, where he spent Monday. In response to the urgent request of the exposition officials and many exhibitors, he took with him Pearl White, the Pathe star, who was at the Pathe exhibit during Monday, and distributed souvenir mirrors and postcards bearing her photograph.

PETE SCHMID TAKES VACATION.

Pete Schmid, the Morosco-Pallas P. A., whispered farewell to Broadway last Friday evening and departed on his annual camping trip. When last seen, Pete was speeding west on Forty-second street with a canoe paddle, fishing tackle and a mass of other vacation material squeezed under each arm. The "Terrible Teuton" expects to spend the next two weeks among the unexplored regions of Lake George and stated that his outfit contained nothing that resembles a razor blade or a stiff collar. He also boasted that he would not look at a newspaper for fourteen days.

LAST PATHE'S "WHO'S GUILTY?" AUGUST 7.

Pathe's "Who's Guilty?" series has proven to be such a strong drawing card that many exhibitors have written expressing their regret that there will be only fourteen episodes. The last one, "The Irony of Justice," will be released on August 7.

Big Theater Deal In Bay State

Lord, Horstmann and Howard Retire from Olympia Corporation—Gordon and Shoolman, President and Treasurer

THE biggest change in management and control of the moving picture business in New England has just been effected through the retirement from the management and control of the Olympia Theaters, Inc., of Arthur E. Lord, of Lynn, as general manager, Ernest H. Horstmann, of Salem, director, and Frank Howard, the New England pioneer. The three have sold their holdings, said to approximate 40 per cent. of the stock of the Olympia Theaters and valued at more than $2,000,000.

The Olympia Theaters, Inc., operate two of the biggest moving picture and vaudeville houses in Boston proper, and one each in Lynn, New Haven, New Bedford, Gloucester and Chelsea. They are all known as the Olympia theaters and are the largest and most luxuriously appointed of the moving picture houses of New England.

The management and control of these theaters now passes into the hands of Nathan T. Gordon, president, and Max Shoolman, treasurer, of the corporation. They own more than 80 per cent. of the stock through the new deal which has just been effected by the parties interested at a meeting of the Olympia Theaters, Inc., at the Olympia Building, 3 Tremont Row.

The new directorate of the corporation is George V. Crocker, Gerald G. E. Street, Attorney General Henry C. Attwill, Hiram E. Miller and Lee M. Friedman.

Dissensions within the past few months are said to have prompted mutual "buy or sell" demands among the former directorate of the Olympia Theaters ownership. Technically, the transferred holdings were acquired by the Puritan Trust Company and the Commonwealth Trust Company, of Boston, partly paid for in cash, the remainder in short-time notes. One note for $238,000, running to Lord, Horstmann and Howard, which has been filed in Salem, affects the theaters in Lynn and Gloucester. The new management is expected to add a new house to its string near Central Square, Cambridge.

Mr. Lord has been the manager of the Olympia theaters for some time, and under his direction they have prospered and become the leading theaters of Boston for combined vaudeville and moving pictures. Mr. Horstmann has been in general charge of the selection of films for the various theaters. Mr. Howard has been a powerful asset of the corporation through his pioneering of the moving picture industry in New England.

The story of Mr. Howard's rise in the moving picture business was told in the Convention Number of the Moving Picture World. Messrs. Lord and Horstmann are also pioneers of the business in this section. They started business in the Penny Arcade filled with coin-in-the-slot machines in Central avenue, Lynn, about ten years ago. They prospered and put in the nickel-in-the-slot moving pictures. About six years ago they got in touch with the Howard and Gordon interests, with the result that a chain of moving picture houses were built up. The two in Boston are the largest houses in the city devoted to vaudeville and moving pictures exclusively and are valued at over $1,000,000 apiece.

The change of interests will have no immediate effect upon the policy and business of the Olympia Theaters, Inc., as they now stand. W. H. F.

More Copyright Legislation Before Congress

New Amendment Provides for Registration of Film by Cuttings—Relief to Manufacturers

THE Senate Committee on Patents now has under consideration an amendment to the Copyright Law providing for the entry and registration of film by sample. The section reads to amend Section 12, of the Act of 1909 to read:

Provided, however, That in the case of any work referred to in this section wherein copyright has been secured by publication of the work with notice of copyright, which by reason of its character, bulk, fragility, or because of dangerous ingredients cannot expediently be filed, the register of copyrights may determine that there shall be deposited, in lieu of two complete copies of such work, such identifying photographs or prints, together with such written or printed descriptions of the work as he shall find sufficient to identify it: And provided further, That in the case of motion picture photoplays and motion pictures other than photoplays, whenever deposit has been made as required by the provisions of the act of Congress (Public, No. 303) approved August 24, 1912, and registration has been secured thereunder, such deposit and registration shall hereafter be held to be sufficient, and shall exempt the copyright proprietor from the deposit of two complete copies of such photoplay or motion picture if it is later reproduced in copies for sale, and the provisions of the amendatory act of August 24, 1912, are hereby made to apply to motion picture photoplays and motion pictures other than photoplays that have been reproduced in copies for sale or otherwise published.

Section 12 is that clause which provides that one or two copies of material intended for copyright shall be deposited with the Register of Copyrights and by him turned over to the Librarian of Congress for the Library of Congress or affiliations. This section has already been amended to provide that film not issued in copies for sale may be registered for identification by means of a typewritten or printed description and cuttings from the film, though two full copies of the reel must be sent where the prints are to be sold.

It is provided, however, that articles registered which are too bulky for storage and are not wanted for preservation may be returned to the owner of the copyright after being marked for identification, and this has been done in the case of most film releases entered for copyright. Some manufacturers, however, have entered under "copies not offered for sale," which forms an imperfect protection. Those who offer the two full copies for entry, to protect their registration, must preserve these copies, and their identifying marks. The purpose of the bill is to relieve the manufacturers of the necessity for sending prints to Washington only to have them returned in due course, and to give full and complete copyright protection on a description and photographs instead of requiring cuttings from the actual film or complete copies. It is merely a move in line with the general aim of the Register of Copyrights, Thorvald Solberg, to give the fullest and most complete service with the least expenditure of red tape. It will save the manufacturers much money in shipping charges, relieve the Copyright office of the menace of carelessly stored film and give a definite protection in the simplest form of entry. The bill also covers lithographic posters and similar material.

It is favorably considered by the Senate Committee and will doubtless become a law.

SELIG'S GENERAL FILM RELEASES.

"The Gold Ship" is the title of the Selig Special to be released through regular service of the General Film Company on Monday, August 7. "The Gold Ship" tells the story of the high seas, of a vessel laden with gold, of the desperate battle of the ship's master, a girl and a crippled boy to save the cargo and circumvent the plot of mutineers. In this beautiful production Harry Mestayer, Edith Johnson and Sidney Smith are featured. James Oliver Curwood wrote the story.

William N. Selig, continuing his policy of releasing only picture play dramas and comedies of highest worth, announces for regular release in General Film service on Monday, August 14, a gripping drama in three reels entitled "The Germ of Mystery." This drama is most unusual in plot, having to do with the mysterious death of a manufacturer of high explosives who succumbs to the bite of a poisonous spider. Fritzi Brunette, Frank Clark and Guy Oliver star in this production.

"A Bear of a Story" is another of the Selig western farce comedies, featuring Tom Mix. A real live bear is featured in an unusual way and the action will cause sincere merriment.

EMERSON GOES TO FAMOUS PLAYERS.

John Emerson, who has been directing Triangle films, has joined the Famous Players' staff, to direct a series of pictures starring Mary Pickford. The first, which goes into rehearsal Monday, is an East Indian story.

"The Same Old Thing"

It's a Wise Script Writer Who Can Recognize His Brain Child on the Screen

By Epes Winthrop Sargent.

"THE same old thing [illegible] deals with a familiar theme [illegible] so frequently in film criticisms that the readers are almost convinced that manufacturers are right when they say that they cannot get good stories. They seem to be willing to pay big money, but no matter what they pay, the screened result is strangely familiar.

It has been the constant claim of this writer that the studio staff edits the originality out of all stories in their reconstructions. This has largely been an unsupported statement, though any manufacturer has only to compare the screened results with the original scripts to see for himself that the statement is true, but to argue with fact, not merely statement, let us take a recent release, put out under the title of "She Won a Prize."

This story is chosen merely because this writer is named as the author and still has the original carbon. "Still has" is used advisedly, for the story was written three years ago and a check in payment was entered June 14, 1913. The original title was "Martha's Legacy."

The story of this release, as given by the company is as follows:

[illegible] makes a noise like an heiress and gets away with it. Her boss [illegible] When the boss' fiancee becomes infatuated with a count and re[illegible] waiter and he does as much for her by removing her wig and [illegible] she gladly accepts a second-hand engagement ring.

Here we have all of the familiar ingredients. There is the fictitious count, who proves to be a waiter, which has probably been used in nearly a thousand stories in the past ten years. There is the proud, title-hunting heiress, the blonde wig and all the rest of the stuff that has been done to death. Probability is fractured and the happy ending gained only through [illegible] a great deal more than three years ago.

But the story is so different from the original script that it is almost possible to collect damages for the use of the author's name on such rot. The story is not at all the one that was sold for [illegible] would make a half reel out of the twenty-two scene play. The original synopsis read:

The entire charm of the story, such as it was, rose from the unusualness of it. The girl did not win a scenario contest, but a literary contest of the sort then popular. She did not buy a blonde wig that would have gotten her into trouble the moment she put it on. Not being an idiot, she knew that a good hair-dresser was better than a wig maker. She did not, for that matter, try to disguise herself. She had no reason for assuming a disguise. She was not a fugitive from justice nor was she trying to leave behind her an unsavory past. She assumed the name of Montmorenci merely because the high-sounding name better accorded with her pretty dresses. The former employer did not recognize her clearly because he was deceived by the name and the changed appearance of the girl. There was [illegible] alone one masquerading as a French Count, nor was there any heiress to muss things up. It was a simple little story of a tired little stenographer who had a good time and was content to pay the price. It was human and convincing. The rewrite man simply didn't have sense enough to see that it was an unusual story. He slapped in the old "sure fire hokum," and thought he was improving the story. Instead, he merely made it like all the rest because he knew no better. He could have written as good a story himself because he made no use whatever of the originality given him.

This writer is not speaking in anger because his story has been mussed up. He is used to it. One reel turned out last summer led the Dramatic Mirror reviewer to remark that "probably the author knows what he wrote," wherein he erred, for not even the author knew what it was all about when three subjects were crowded into one reel. This discussion of this particular release is made merely because the carbon was at hand. What was done to this story has been done to 98 per cent. of releases from all companies. So deeply rooted is the manufacturer's belief in the need for reconstruction that it is seldom that stories are made from the author's script, even when a practical working script is supplied. They must be reconstructed or there would be no excuse for the reconstructors, and between the reconstructor, the director and the cutting man, the author's chance of getting over is represented by a minus sign. It is like hiring some famous mural artist to make a ceiling and then letting a house painter do it over with a large brush and the material left over from some other job. Until good stories are both bought and made, there is small hope that we shall emerge from the present Slough of Despond.

Linda A. Griffith.

LINDA A. GRIFFITH, now starring in the first feature photoplays of the Frank Powell Productions, was born in San Francisco. She established quite a reputation as a child actress, appearing in amateur theatricals and later joined the old Alcazar stock company of the city, which has produced many of the greatest legitimate stars of the stage.

Linda A. Griffith.

She appeared as ingenue for Florence Roberts and Margaret Anglin and shortly afterward came to New York as a refugee out of the disastrous San Francisco earthquake and fire, in which all her material possessions went up in smoke. After leaving the coast she joined Thomas Dixon's "The Only Woman," with whom she remained until her advent into the motion picture world, with the old Biograph Company.

In the summer of 1912 she played the female lead in "An Adventurous Dolly," the first picture produced by [illegible] for that company and through which she became known as one of the "Biograph Girls." After four years with Biograph she rested a year traveling in Europe and while there took part in the Gaumont film of the flight by areoplane of the late Harriet Quimby, from England to France. Upon her return to this country she joined the Kinemacolor Co. of America and was featured in such productions as "The Scarlet Letter," "Everyman," "As the Candle Burns" and many others. When Kinemacolor stopped producing she rejoined Biograph [illegible] and numerous other features.

She has written many scenarios and numerous articles for Leslie's Weekly and at present is writing a series of articles for "Film Fun" on early Biograph days, recounting the experiences of many of the moving picture stars of to-day who began their careers with the old Biograph.

News of Los Angeles and Vicinity

ELABORATE PRODUCTION STAGED BY UNIVERSAL

Georgeous Oriental City Being Built at Universal Pacific Coast Studios.

"TWENTY Thousand Leagues Under the Sea," a twelve-reel photo drama from the story of Jules Verne, is now being produced at Universal City. For more than a year Director Stuart Paton has been engaged in filming scenes for this elaborate film spectacle.

A number of the scenes were made several months ago at the Bahama Islands. There Director Paton invented a cinematographic submarine vessel and pictures were taken along the ocean bed where thrilling episodes among the coral caves in the vast seaweed gardens were enacted by players garbed as divers.

Director Paton is now producing at the West Coast studios of the big U organization the sequel to this marine story and for the scenes is building a most wonderful East Indian city. A magnificent Hindu temple with gorgeous minarets, domes and columns have been completed this week. This beautiful massive structure is part of the Oriental metropolis, the cost of which, it has been estimated, will exceed one hundred thousand dollars.

The Hindu city, where from two to three thousand supernumeraries will be used in many of the scenes, is really a wonderful creation of architectural art and has, besides the great temple, many two-story buildings and a massive gateway and adjoining battlements. Within the walls of this city many sanguinary engagements will be staged between the Hindus and British soldiery.

The work of constructing this elaborate set has been achieved under the supervision of H. H. Barter, technical director of the Pacific Coast studios of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, who, with Frank D. Ormston, art director, designed the Oriental buildings. Technical Director Barter has been ably aided by his assistant, James Milburn, who is well known as an artistic builder throughout the Pacific Coast.

In view of the fact that several of the larger buildings, during the filming of many spectacular scenes, will have to carry the weight of from five hundred to one thousand men, General Manager Davis instructed the builders to "put them up to stay," and, as orders have been carried out to the letter, these structures have been built as solidly as human hands could make them.

Jane Gail portrays the part of the heroine in this submarine drama, with Allen Holubar and Matt Moore as leading man, while other important roles are enacted by Joseph Girard, William Welsh and Lois Alexander.

Associated with Director Paton in the production of the Hindu scenes is G. F. E. Samuel, a native of India and an authority on Hindu lore, who supervised the sets and costumes so that all these accessories shall be strictly correct.

Eugene Gaudio, the chief camera man of the feature, risked his life many times at the Bahamas, while the assistant director, Martin Murphy, has also won much renown for his daring submarine exploits in aiding Director Paton.

DOROTHY GISH SAVES NATALIE TALMADGE FROM DROWNING.

Plucky Fine Arts Girl Plunges in Turbulent Waters to Rescue Sister of Constance and Norma Talmadge.

Dorothy Gish, the popular Fine Arts star, is quite a heroine this week. She rescued Natalie Talmadge from drowning.

Dorothy was working in a scene for "Gretchen Blunders In," directed by the Bronklin Brothers. The company was taking scenes in a steam launch about a mile from San Pedro Harbor. Dorothy was going through some antics near the bow of the boat with the cameraman catching the action. Natalie Talmadge was awaiting her cue to dash into the scene when the boat gave a lurch and she was precipitated into the water. Without a moment's hesitation, Dorothy Gish plunged headlong from the boat and struck out for Miss Talmadge. Miss Gish, upon receiving Miss Talmadge (who cannot swim) turned over on her back and, holding the helpless girl with one hand, struck out for the launch, which had been stopped. She was met by the masculine members of the company and the two young women were lifted back into the boat.

In a short time both the girls were completely recovered from their impromptu plunge and none the worse for their experience. "Gee, it spoiled my make-up" was the only comment offered by Miss Gish. The scene was retaken the following day.

LOS ANGELES AS "LEGITIMATE" THEATER CENTER WILL BE SECOND ONLY TO NEW YORK.

Cort-Morris Circuit to Open Offices Here for New Vaudeville Combine.

With the departure Sunday last week of John Cort and William Morris on a rapid tour of their newly-acquired theaters, which will form the new Cort-Morris vaudeville circuit, L·s Angeles became one of the most important vaudeville booking centers of the country.

Headquarters of the Cort-Morris circuit will be established in New York, Chicago and Los Angeles. Heretofore all vaudeville booking houses on the coast have been located in San Francisco.

Before leaving, Cort and Morris secured a suite of four rooms on the second floor of the Majestic Theater Building. These will be opened on the first of August as the western booking offices of the new circuit.

Cort and Morris stated that they had picked Los Angeles for their western headquarters because the producing activities of Oliver Morosco had placed Los Angeles second only to New York as a theatrical producing center, and, because of the pick of high-class professional people to be found here in moving pictures who will be selected for vaudeville as their contracts with the film makers run out.

In behalf of Cort and Morris, Oliver Morosco stated in an interview to the press that the policy of the new circuit will be three performances daily, one in the afternoon and two at eight; the next night [illegible] opening rather than the usual Sunday time and billing will be [illegible]

The style of performance will be as follows: A star will head each bill and there will be an entirely new show every week. Each bill will travel as a flash show, stopping for a full week in each city of the circuit.

It is stated that some of the biggest vaudeville stars in the country who will be announced here, have already signed contracts for the new circuit. The Cort houses in every city west of Chicago will be used for the new circuit and in Los Angeles an Oliver Morosco theatre will house the vaudeville.

In New York Walter Morris houses will be used and every big city in the east has already been covered by arrangements with one of the best known theatrical firms in the country.

UNIVERSAL MEN FORM REGIMENT

Sixty Braves From Big "U" Plant Organize a Regiment of Service Men—Ready to Go to Front if Needed

Considering the fact that the cops would be left practically without military protection should the troops be called out, a body of public spirited men all of whom have known active service organized a regiment of service men. The regiment numbers about 1,500 strong actual users of whom are from Universal City and are the organizers. While it is the intention to have as many as possible who have known active service the regiment will not be limited to such. Through the courtesy of the Hollywood Board of Trade the recruiting officers will be stationed there twice a week and will be open for any strong willing men between the ages of eighteen and twenty-five. The service men the age will be stretched.

Dr. Mace of Universal City is the examining physician, but at present the officers are busily engaged in "recruiting" or military tactics.

The entire regiment is prepared to leave on a minute's time should the call come and is prepared to do their work.

"The Daughter of the Dog" to Have Initial Presentation at Majestic Theatre.

"The Daughter of the Dog" the [illegible] drama of a [illegible] mongrel dog and owned by the Mutuscene Feature Film Company, will have its premiere in Los Angeles at the Majestic Theatre Sunday night, August 13. The story has been [illegible] and which led the initial presentation at the Columbia Theatre in San Francisco, June 18.

I have often wondered why the Lasky reception room was the most crowded—this explains.

In order to supply warm lunches to the companies on location they constructed a portable lunch wagon similar to the "soup cannons," used by the German army. This "soup cannon" is pulled by a horse and it is arranged that hot soup, coffee and sandwiches can be hauled over the rough ground without danger of spilling. With this arrangement, several hundred extras can be given a warm lunch between scenes, and hot coffee will be at their disposal continuously. This wagon was especially built for use at the Lasky ranch, where sometimes as many as five or six hundred people are employed at night.

In the new Sturgeon feature, in which George Holt is featured, Mr. Sturgeon required him as part of the character to smoke several cigarettes before the camera's eye. George never smokes, and it took several days to accustom himself to the taste of the weed so that he was able to keep up an appearance of enjoying his smoke for half a hundred feet or so. As soon as each scene was over, George would go to his dressing room to sterilize his mouth and rid it of the tobacco taste.

Adelaide Woods, because she offers so unusual a type, owing to her possession of youthful features and prematurely white hair, either is in great demand, or not at all. The former was instanced last week, when she was spoken for by three directors of one company at the same time. The controversy of possession still remains unsettled. Meanwhile Miss Woods vacations.

At the Lasky studio James Young has started on the production of "Unconquered," in which Blanche Sweet is to star, and Walter Long, who will be remembered as playing the negro "Gus" in "The Clansman," has been engaged by the Lasky company for the support of Blanche Sweet in "Unconquered."

Marshal Stedman throws the light on the employment question when he says that there are one hundred extras for every position open at Universal, and there are twenty applicants for every actor's job. Mr. Stedman believes that persons residing in nearby and other cities should be informed that they cannot come to Los Angeles and become rich or famous in motion pictures. There are plenty of people here now to more than fill every position open for many months to come, he says.

"There is about one chance in a thousand that anyone can get a job in pictures now-a-days," says Mr. Stedman. "A person would have to be physically constructed in a most unusual manner to get a hearing at all, unless it would be for only a day or two in a mob scene."

The same condition prevails at all the other studios, only on a smaller scale, according to the employment men.

"God's Country and the Woman," the eight-reel Sturgeon feature with William Duncan, George Holt and Nell Shipman in the leads, is playing this week at Quinn's Superba theater in Los Angeles to big business. This picture has aroused a great deal of interest locally, especially since the company nearly perished in the snows of Big Bear Valley last winter.

Gilbert E. Murdock, one of the most recent playwrights to turn his attention to writing for the screen, is author of a Persian Idyl in which Maud Allen, America's greatest dancer, expects to make her debut in spoken lines this autumn. A Murdock comedy, "To Catch a Thief," is being produced by the Universal.

Little Lena Baskette made evident the Universal Company's wise choice of her by a dancing exhibition, given by her at the recent dinner of the Directors' Association at the Alexandria Hotel in Los Angeles.

George L. Sargent is making good progress on "The Sable Curse," the first Richard Bennett five-reeler. In the cast are also Rhea Mitchell, George Periolat, Mrs. Bennett, Charles Newton and Mrs. Otto Kluge.

G. E. Jenks, Signal scenario scribbler for the Helen Holmes Company, left Los Angeles for the lumber country near Eureka, Cal., to familiarize himself with locations and conditions in that section for the better production of the Signal-Mutual feature to be staged there following the production of "The Manager of the B. & A."

Director William C. DeMille, of Laskys, will shortly start on the production of "Anton the Terrible," in which Theodore Roberts and Thomas Meighan will be co-starred. Charles Clary has been engaged to play a prominent role in support of Fannie Ward, the Lasky star, in her forthcoming production.

Rollin Sturgeon's vest-pocket Kodak turned detective the other day. He was snapping some odd pictures about the studio and had Mary Anderson pose on a little old chair in the prop. room. Getting adjusted in the pose, Mary unknowingly dropped her pocketbook. An hour or so later, Mary missed the pocketbook and was on the verge of tears as she vainly sought it. The pictures were developed and printed by the next morning, and Mary, looking over hers, was delighted to see the missing pocketbook on the floor under the chair, big as life. Whereupon she hurried to the prop. room and found it all safe. Her reward to the camera was a new roll of films—eagerly donated. Mr. Sturgeon claimed he should have had a reward also, but refused when Miss Anderson laughingly offered him half the contents—one powderpuff, a few hairpins, a receipt for cake, a receipted bill and six pennies.

Edward A. Kaufman is the name to be given screen credit upon the early release of a feature made by a prominent film company in New York. Though Mr. Kaufman, who is a free-lance photo-playwright of Santa Barbara, has had a number of west-coast releases, the above forthcoming feature will be his initial one to have a New York production.

Signs are multiplying that a new race of photoplay writers is arising, as the result of great demand for plays that adhere to the requirements of the screen. Some striking examples of this may be noted in the offerings scheduled for the present week at the various local picture houses. Nevertheless, that the screen is still dependent for many of the best pictures on dramatizations of novels and plays is also clear. It will take a decade, at the least, to perfect a thoroughly skillful school of photo-playwrights, but that the quality of picture stories now written is marveously in advance of that of the stories of only two years ago is also obvious.

"God's Country and the Woman" is at the Superba.

"The Abandonment" is at the Garrick with a Chaplin film.

"The Dupe" is at Woodleys.

"The Phanton" is playing at Tallys.

"The Valiants of Virginia" is at Clunes, while Millers shows "Caprice of the Mountains" and "The Man from Bitter Roots" is at the Alhambra.

The Varied Arts Building of Thomas H. Ince, Culver City plant was completed this week, and is now occupied by the working forces of the photographic and art departments under the supervision of Irvin Willat.

The building is a large two-story fire-proof structure, 31x90 feet, and is conveniently located near the main entrance of the studios. The cutting, assembling, titling and tinting rooms, as well as the "still" departments are on the upper floor, while the main floor is devoted to projecting rooms. All these departments heretofore have been housed in the theater building leased several months ago by Mr. Ince. This, in future will be used for the rehearsal of incidental music accompanying the Ince-Triangle productions.

Charles Giblyn, the Ince-Triangle director, is about to undertake his first visit to New York in eight years. He is going to Buffalo to represent the Los Angeles Shriners as special envoy at the imperial council meeting of the A. A. O. N. M. S., scheduled for July 10 to 17. Giblyn's duties will be to observe the ceremonials adopted by the imperial officers, in order that upon his return to Los Angeles he may be better able to occupy his responsible position of director-general of Al Malaikah Shrine.

Sheppard Buys "Fall of a Nation" for Southwest

Purchases Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas and Will Immediately Open Film Exchange at Dallas—New Jersey and W. Va. Sold Also

W. K. Sheppard, an oilman who has had great success operating theatres in Laredo and Brownsville, Tex., called into the National Drama corporation offices last week and plunked down a big check for "The Fall of a Nation" rights in Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas. "I've thanked many big men in all the great centers," he remarked to the Empire, "but am convinced that the Dixon-Herbert spectacle will leave them rather cold when the people down our way hear of the colossal offering. That's what the big booking agents are deeply interested in, the number who see the biggest spectacle they expect to see, namely the previous Dixon dramatic efforts like 'The Clansman,' 'The Sins of the Father,' 'The Leopard's Spots' and 'The Birth of a Nation' that the coming of a new patriotic spectacle by the same author will be a decidedly extraordinary event." Ed Gerow represented the theatre to general account, while W. K. Sheppard and Thomas Dixon signed the contract. It was one of the quickest sale transactions in the history of film marketing.

Mr. Sheppard is the leading type of Southern Alleghany folk that have made good in Texas. Born in Parkersburg, W. Va., where his family are prominent in commercial affairs, he went to the Lone Star state seven years ago. He operated successfully a small motion picture house in Laredo, then became proprietor of a large and modern theatre in Brownsville which he equipped with the latest conveniences and made extremely popular. An inviting city for theatrical enterprises and it was here that Mr. Sheppard, when he had a few hours were afforded to Mr. Sheppard when he had a few hours to spare, decided to buy "The Fall of a Nation." In fact, he has been especially desirous for several years of securing the exclusive film that would tell the story of the Southern Texas frontier campaigns and battles.

The first step in Mr. Sheppard's southwest campaign will be the establishment of a film exchange in Dallas, Tex. It will be in operation before the first of August. One of the most prominent exchanges over all the South will be in control, and this town, often will be plentifully supplied with guests and with many kind of publicity musical scores, etc. Exclusive runs of "The Fall of a Nation" are planned in Dallas, Little Rock, Oklahoma City, Fort Worth, Houston, Galveston and San Antonio, after which the spectacle will be shown in the smaller towns. As a graceful compliment to the noble men and women who stamped along the Mexican frontier, the management intends to give early showing of the picture in several of the important border ports and camps. Several hundred of the guardsmen, who are protecting Texas against Mexican bandit attack and mobile pictures have been taken at the mimic war scenes staged for "The Fall of a Nation."

A wise contractor in his day and generation is F. E. Parker of the Engineering Service Engineering, N. J., who bought the New Jersey State rights of the film the same morning that Sheppard secured the Southwest. Mr. Parker will take advantage of the extended August season at the beaches by showing the picture in Atlantic City, Cape May, Asbury Park, Long Branch and other resorters. He is also rapidly arranging options throughout the principal cities of the State. A third State rights buyer at the National Drama offices last week was R. R. Roberts, who had previously been identified with the purchase of many big features and who acquired the Dixon-Herbert offering for West Virginia. Besides the above transactions several other important deals for territory have been practically completed and the announcement of them will be made.

Monday, July 24, is the release date of the picture in New England and Greater New York. W. M. Pizzarro left the city July 17 to visit on the New England trade, many of whom have waited their interests on make early bookings. The offices of the National Drama Corporation at 1483 and 1485 Broadway were crowded all last week with New York and Eastern exhibitors arranging for dates. The Corporation is handling this territory direct, and there is a lively scramble to secure best runs.

The Country Theater, Its Past and Present

By Frank G. Andrews

How Conditions Have Changed and How to Successfully Cope With the New Conditions

IF I were considering opening up a new moving picture theater at the present time I would keep on considering—but I wouldn't open it. The industry is in uncertain shape just now—rather unsteady on its feet; but the clouds will clear presently, I believe, and the business will get down to a more definite basis. I am speaking now of the small town theater, dependent upon a population of 5,000 or less, and it may be that the same logic applies to the cities. The business is overdone. There are too many manufacturers and too many theaters. That's what's the matter with pictures just now—that's one of the things.

Experienced showmen who are familiar with conditions in the small towns tell me that 10 per cent. of the population is a liberal estimate in computing every-night picture-goers. Perhaps 90 per cent. attend pictures once in a while, but only 10 per cent., or less, can be counted on as steady business. That would mean in a town of 3,000 that 300 people can be counted on every night. An exhibitor might swim along on that patronage and make a living, but it is a fact that most towns of 3,000 have two theaters. So you see it is plain that one must close up if the other is to prosper. It doesn't mean that fewer people are patronizing pictures nor does it necessarily mean that interest lags. The only time that two shows paid in a small town was in the day when pictures were exhibited in twenty-dollar-a-month storerooms, under very light operating expenses and with the reels changed only twice a week. Larger rooms have since been provided and one theater in a small town is now enough.

It is remarkable how quickly this transition has been brought about. Only little more than a year ago I was interested with a friend in locating a good country stand. I was as enthusiastic as he. It wasn't a sudden hobby. I knew what I was doing. Today my opinion is far different. It would take a very alluring proposition to tempt me now in the exhibition field, particularly in the small town.

The only way to succeed and establish a permanent business in the smaller places is to build a regular theater that can fight its way against any opposition that might spring up. A small place that makes money is sure to attract attention and lead to competition. Then a newer and larger place opens up—and good night to you and your dump.

How often have I seen this illustrated in the years that I have been interested in pictures. I know a man who opened up a rather nice little place in a city of 40,000. He was practically the pioneer. He cleared $12,000 the first year, $11,000 the second and not less than $8,000 a year in the three following years. He was "in soft"—so he thought.

Along came a company. They leased a place three times as nice as the pioneer had. They raised the price to ten cents and gave pictures that were worth ten cents, while the other fellow stuck to his general program and five-cent admission fee.

You know what I am about to say. The new broom swept clean and I have been told that the new place paid 1,600 per cent. the first year. It is still doing an extensive business because it has kept up to the minute. The other fellow is offering his place for sale and nobody wants it because its future is behind it. There are more people going to pictures in the city referred to just now than ever before, although none of the theaters are making the money they made three or four years ago. Reason is that one theater now seats almost as many as all of them seated a while ago, while operating expenses have greatly increased.

Has the quality of pictures gone back? Are they standing still, as Jesse L. Lasky alleges? Are people tiring? Are pictures a passing fad that attracted for a while simply because of novelty? I can't say, but I'm sure that moving pictures will always be a popular form of entertainment for the masses, because no other form of entertainment can be shown so cheaply.

Let me cite the case of a theater in a Pennsylvania town of 4,000 people and then provide your own answer as to whether or not pictures have "gone back."

This town was lying dormant when the craze took hold of the country. A native with an eye on the main chance seized the old "opry" house at $30 or so a month, and took the General Film program. That was about eight or nine years ago. Today that fellow owns three fine properties in the town and has numerous investments. He's rich.

A year and a half ago he was at the zenith of his successful career. Only a year and a half ago! Today he is not making a cent. And he hasn't now and never has had any opposition. Can you beat that? Now study it out. What's the matter? He has made no change in his policies. He is still using General Film and he still has the awful piano-player that he started in business with. That patronage has fallen off certainly isn't his fault.

You don't have to agree with me, but I'll tell you what I think. I think the whole fault is in the service. Where your patronage depends upon all the people of a town you must have a variety program to satisfy, if not please, all your patrons, because you must satisfy all of them after a fashion if you would make a real success in the small town. You can take the best feature that was ever made and I question whether every person in the audience would be entirely satisfied. "Tess of the Storm Country" is no doubt one of the most pleasing, satisfying and successful stories ever filmed, but I personally have heard intelligent people say they didn't care for it. But show six reels of assorted singles and you are almost sure to please everybody to a degree. A man may find fault with five of the reels, but if he gets one that he likes he thinks the whole show is all right.

There are hundreds of exhibitors, I'm sure, who would go back to one-reelers, but it can't be done—not satisfactorily. There are no one-reel stories today that are worth one's time, compared with those that were manufactured a few years ago. We all know why. The manufacturers are feature-crazy. They have milked the general program of all the stars, all the directors and all the stories. Speaking in a broad way, all that is left for the general program are some ribbon counter boys and department store girls. They are not actors and there is no competent person to direct them. Even the stories are of no account. There used to be virile dramas shown in a single reel. Today you must sit through three, four or five reels to get the same story.

If you think the audiences, in the country as well as the city, don't notice these things you are mistaken. Some fans know almost enough to make pictures, I believe. Only the other night I sat in a theater in front of two women who were regular patrons. Fannie Ward had the center of the screen and was dividing interest with a pet dog—and it certainly was a cute dog. Presently one of the women behind me turned to the other and said: "See how that dog watches the camera!" It was so. Don't you think people in the audience are getting picture-wise? They are becoming almost technical.

I'm running away, though, from my subject. What the country theater needs to bring it back to its pristine glory is a variety program, and the organization that sees this phase in its true light will, I believe, enter a field that will net them more money than the overdone feature field. Features should be held by the country exhibitor as a treat—as a means of making an occasional cleanup. If you advertise features every night they cease to be features—they are just regular things. You advertise each one to the very limit and when you've got one that deserves the best that can be said, you have shot your string and the people fail to give heed.

Same way with manufacturers. Every feature is the most astounding thing known in the history of picture-making. Your attention is called to it in wonderful advertisements printed on colored pages and in inks of brightest hue. You are told not to use the slow-going mails in booking the wonderful production, but to order by telegraph—just as if it would get away before your order could be received.

Personally, such advertisements would steer me away from a feature rather than get me. Too much money is spent in the advertisements and not enough brains put into the picture.

What a smashing truth that was by Director Albert Capellani, printed in the Moving Picture World recently. He said, "If I were asked to make a percentage table on what makes a great picture I should say 50 per cent. story, 30 per cent. star and 20 per cent. director. Judging by the average picture we see today, the percentage table as compiled in the producing company's office would read: 50 per cent. advertising, 40 per cent. star, and 10 per cent. direction, with no story at all."

If I were a small town exhibitor today I'll tell you what I would do. I would show a general program of the best pictures I could get for four nights a week and features for two nights. I wouldn't show features every night, because people who go to theaters every night, as they do in the towns, get tired of them, or at the best fail to think they are getting a treat. And I would try and get good features, not simply five reels of something. I would be as careful as I could not to let any feature disappoint my patrons.

Country exhibitors, in towns of 2,000 up, have been showing nightly for several years. I think that is going to be a thing of the past. Most of them now showing every night are losing money at least three nights a week. Then why show on those three losing nights? You lose money and you detract from your three good nights. If you can make $50 showing three nights a week, why show six nights and make only $40? The good exhibitor is the man who will adjust himself to the changed conditions that arise as they arise, and conditions that confront the picture exhibitor are continually changing in this industry, both in the city and country.

That Universal Program for Week of July 24

A Good Showing, Calculated to Help the Exhibitor to Cash in During the Hot Weather

THE Universal Program for the week of July 24 is led off by the five-reel Red Feather, "Temptation and the Man," in which Hobart Henley, Sydell Dowling and Sydney Bracey are featured. On the same day Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Roberta Wilson will disport in "Art for Art's Sake," a Nestor one-reeler.

On Tuesday, July 25, Alice Howell and Fatty Voss will share comedy honors in the L-Ko three-reel howler, "Lizzie's Lingering Love." They will be followed by "Cross Purposes," a Rex drama, in which J. F. Connely and Jessie Arnold will play the principal roles.

Mary Fuller heads the program of Wednesday, July 28, appearing in the Gold Seal two-reel modern adventure drama, "A Splash of Color." On the same day the Victor comedy, "Just a Few Little Things," with Wallace Beery and Gretchen Lederer providing the fun, will be released. Animated Weekly, No. 30, containing the first views of the infantile plague in New York, will be released on the same date.

"Priscilla's Prisoner," a Big U two-reel rural drama, featuring Cleo Madison and E. V. Mong, will be released by the Universal on Thursday, July 27. On the same day "Won by Valor," an Imp drama, with Sydell Dowling and Sydney Bracey, and the Powers split reel, "Jitney Jack and Gasolena," a comedy cartoon, and "Creating Life from a Dead Leaf," an educational, will be released.

On Friday, July 28, Ben Wilson will head the day's program in "The Circular Room," an Imp two-reel mystery drama. Mr. Wilson will be supported by Edna Hunter and Joe Gerard. "The Circular Room" will be followed by the Big U drama, "A Great Love," in which Norbert Myles and Vola Smith will play the leading roles, and "The Unexpected Scoop," a Nestor comedy, featuring Myrtle Gonzalez.

Harry Carey, considered the most virile depictor of western roles, is featured with Olive Fuller Golden on Saturday, July 29, in the Bison two-reel western drama, "For the Love of a Girl." On the same day Malcolm Blevins and Marjorie Ellison will be seen in the Laemmle drama, "The Mask of Fortune," and Gale Henry and William Franey will do their worst in the Joker comedy, "I've Got Your Number."

On Sunday, July 30, Harry Myers and Rosemary Theby will appear in a Victor two-reel comedy, entitled "The Latest in Vampires." They will be followed by "Mutiny," a tale of life at sea, which will be released under the Imp brand, with Lucille Younge and Jack Nelson playing the leading roles.

During the week of July 24 the thirteenth two-reel episode of the Universal special feature, "The Adventures of Peg o' the Ring," with Grace Cunard and Francis Ford putting the punch across as usual, will be released.

Christening Children in Indian and White Tribes

Inceville Indian Baby and Minister's Child Christened at Same Ceremony.

LAST week a unique service was held on the camp ground at Inceville when a child of Thomas H. Ince's Thunder Bull was christened by an Episcopal minister. The unique feature was that the minister's own child was christened in the Indian style at the same time. The picture below shows the ceremony at the finish. Rev. Pierson is seen at the left while his wife is standing next to him holding their child, which received the Indian's blessing.

Christening of the Pale-face Baby and the Papoose.

Next to the minister's wife is Mrs. Thunder Bull, holding her papoose, which was christened in the white man's fashion, while her red brave, Thunder Bull, one of Ince's best Indian actors, is standing at the extreme right, his face illuminated with a smile of paternal pride.

Lillian Read

ALTHOUGH it is not generally known, Lillian Read, the two and a half year old Sarah Bernhardt, appearing in Thomas H. Ince's spectacle, "Civilization," in the Criterion theater, is the daughter of John Park Read, Jr., who is Mr. Ince's personal representative.

Lillian Read.

This is Lillian's debut in the pictures and she is said to be able to register more varied expressions despite her tender years, than many an adult actress. A series of pictures produced from "Civilization," showing her in the attitude of supplication, curiosity, shame, shyness and anger, are creating unusual interest throughout the country, but the most successful emotion that she registers, according to "Civilization's" press agent, is joy at the size of her Saturday check.

The many offers that have come for her exclusive services from different film producers since her success in "Civilization" would make the most seasoned motion picture star a bit envious.

MUTT AND JEFF TWO A WEEK.

Owing to the phenomenal success of Bud Fisher's Mutt & Jeff in animated form, exchanges throughout the country have requested that Mr. Fisher produce two weekly Mutt and Jeff cartoons instead of one, but Mr. Fisher's time is so taken us as to make it a physical impossibility.

Wharton's Making "The Black Stork"

The Two Brothers, Producers of "Mysteries of Myra," Have Begun Work on Another Feature.

AT Ithaca is a most unique motion picture studio. Here it is the Brothers Wharton hold forth. "The Wharton Boys," as they are known professionally, have had a hand in the development of many screen stars whose light has shown most brightly under their direction.

Francis X. Bushman was at one time and in Ithaca, too, under the direction of "Pop" Wharton. Beverly Bayne and Ruth Stonehouse also worked for Wharton. Gertrude McCoy, Sallie Crute and Gladys Hulette were at one time under Wharton's direction, as were also Lenore Ulrich, Billy Quirk, Paul Panzer, Thurlow Bergen, Rose Tapley, Bruce McRae and Ah Ling Foo.

A distinct triumph and one of the most popular and successful feature series of recent years was the "Elaine" series, featuring Pearl White, Arnold Daly and Edwin Arden. In this series also appeared Sheldon Lewis and Creighton Hale. The sensational feature series, "The Mysteries of Myra," the International production now running, is a Wharton production. In this series Howard Estabrook and Jean Sothern are doing some of the finest work of their lives. Allan Murnane, M. W. Rale and Mrs. Leopold Wharton also have important parts.

The Whartons are now at work on a feature entitled "The Black Stork," a picture which is bound to create a sensation. The cast includes Hamilton Revelle, Henry Bergman, Jane Fearnley, Elsie Esmond, Edgar Davenport and Allan Murnane.

WORLD FILM ACTIVITIES.

At the Peerless and Paragon studios, the production headquarters of the World Film Corporation, activities remain at high pressure.

Ethel Clayton and Carlyle Blackwell are beginning work under the direction of Robert Thornby, in a visualization of Burton E. Stevenson's book, "Little Comrade," which has been scenarioized by Frances Marion under the direction of William A. Brady.

Harley Knoles begins work shortly on "Her Majesty," which will be Alice Brady's next screen effort, following her return from the moving picture exposition at Chicago. In this picture Miss Brady will be supported by Arthur Ashley, Montagu Love, Irving Cummins, Clara Whipple and Alec B. Francis.

Emile Chautard is concluding work with Robert Warwick, Gail Kane and other well-known World players on "The Heart of a Hero," which is based on Clyde Fitch's stage conception of the historic character's episodic life.

The production required the entire Paragon studio equipment for several days, during which many of the famous big scenes were assembled. Five hundred people alone were used in the hanging scene which closes the picture.

Frank Crane is completing "The World Against Him" and will remain at Saranac Lake until the production is finished, while Maurice Tourneur, director general of Paragon, will begin work next on an elaborate five-act picture and Barry O'Neill, on completing "The Scorching Way," begins work on "The Revolt," in which Gail Kane will star.

Other prominent players, such as Muriel Ostriche, Robert Warwick, Frances Nelson, Gerda Holmes, June Elvidge and Johnny Hines, are all allotted to directors; scenes and casts are being assembled and the entire seven World companies will be busily engaged.

William A. Brady continues to enact supervisorial direction over all scripts, productions and casts.

RIALTO STAFF HAVE BANQUET.

Fifty members of the Rialto family enjoyed a banquet after the performance Sunday night, July 9, tendered by the Rialto orchestra to Managing Director S. L. Rothapfel of "the temple of the motion picture and shrine of music and allied arts." The occasion was Mr. Rothapfel's birthday and the affair was arranged by the musicians through a committee consisting of H. Hand and F. Cork as a surprise. It was held in the promenade at the rear of the orchestra, where a canvas was spread and the banquet table set.

The guests included the executive staff and the technical and mechanical staff. After a period of music and speeches Mr. Rothapfel was presented with a loving cup, the gift of the latter staff, a mahogany phonograph, the gift of Alfred de Manby, and a handsome pipe set, presented by the ushers.

The feature of the evening was the playing for the first time of a march, "Hello Sam," composed by Hermann Hand, the French horn soloist, in Mr. Rothapfel's honor and dedicated to him. The piano score of the march, bound in leather and encased in a mahogany casket, was presented to Mr. Rothapfel with an appropriate address.

JAMES YOUNG TO DIRECT BLANCHE SWEET.

James Young, one of the best known directors in the motion picture industry, has resumed work at the Lasky studios, Hollywood, Cal., and will devote himself exclusively in the future, it is said, on productions for Miss Blanche Sweet. Miss Sweet, early in the spring, appeared under Mr. Young's direction in "The Thousand-Dollar Husband," which is one of the successes of the Paramount Program. Her new picture is entitled "The Unconquered," and the star will be supported by a cast of well-known Lasky players.

IRENE FENWICK METRO STAR.

Irene Fenwick, the star of "The Child of Destiny," a five-part feature production which will be released July 24 on the Metro program, was born in Chicago. She made her professional debut in that city in George Ade's "Peggy from Paris" as a chorus girl. But she only remained in the chorus three weeks. Ambitious and determined to be a star in her own right from the very beginning, she studied the star's part in that production, and was given the role when the star became ill. Miss Fenwick leaped into fame with a single performance, and since then has rapidly come to the front as one of the most charming and gifted young stars in this country.

Miss Fenwick attracted the attention of Charles Frohman, who set his heart on making her a great dramatic star. Under his management she was seen in the stellar role in Sir Arthur Conan Doyle's "The Speckled Band," "The Brass Bottle" and in the revival of "The Importance of Being Earnest." Under Cohan & Harris' management Miss Fenwick was starred with Douglas Fairbanks in "Hawthorne, U. S. A." She was also the star of "The Zebra," with Hamilton Revelle as her leading man.

Scene from "The Child of Destiny" (Metro).

During her Broadway starring engagements a tempting offer to appear in feature motion picture productions was made to Miss Fenwick, and she made her debut in the silent drama under the direction of George Kleine. Among some of the features in which she was starred are "The Green Cloak" and "The Woman Next Door."

German Trade Notes

THE Interior Department's edict of February 25 prohibiting the importation of films and the recent amendment excepting Austrian films from this ruling are followed by the announcement that the Nordische Film Company who were mostly affected through this ruling, taking advantage of the clause by which the Reichskanzler retains the right to make exceptions to the rule, have secured permission to import 2800 kilo of films (approximately 1,700,000 feet), 1800 kilo till July 1st, and 1,000 kilo till September 1st. As the Nordische will probably import mostly negatives from which eight copies are usually printed for the German market, the amount of foreign films which the Danish concern will bring into Germany may be estimated at eight times the amount above quoted.

This new achievement of the Nordische Company is taken as quite a blow to the local industry. Immediately following the Reichskanzler's announcement of February 25, German manufacturers commenced producing with renewed activity, much new capital was invested and a great number of new producing firms were organized to take advantage of the opportunity presented through lack of the formerly strong foreign competition. Renters who estimated that the Nordische would now be unable to fill orders with the same degree of satisfaction made prolonged contracts with producers for increased quantities of film which will now be rather difficult to profitably dispose of with the Nordische in possession of its former strength.

The Nordische, being the only concern which has to date been able to secure permission to import films, will have another great advantage over the local renters as the Scandinavian and American films which the Danish firm imports will permit this concern to deliver a greatly varied program whereas the other firms will be in a position to rent only German and Austrian pictures.

The German firms have placed the matter in the hands of Director Mandl of the Messter Film Company, and Mr. Otto Schmidt, Vitagraph representative, who are now in communication with the Interior Department.

James Kettler has returned from Switzerland, where he was engaged in selling German films for the Swiss market. During his three weeks' trip Mr. Kettler visited Zurich, Basel, Geneva and St. Gaull. Mr. Kettler reports the cinema business as well as practically all industries in that country to be considerably lamed owning to the lack of tourists who formerly contributed so much toward Switzerland's prosperity and the present poor general economic condition of the country. Italian films seem to bear precedence in public esteem, while the German films are naturally most popular in the German part of the republic. Owing to the varied populations the one copy of a film purchased for Switzerland is subjected to a great deal of trimming, as two sets of titles (French and German) are constantly being changed about in the film.

Lieutenant Alexander Count Kolowrat-Krakowsky, Director of the Sascha Film, Vienna, who was sent by the Austrian army at the request of the Turkish War Ministry to Gallipoli during the Dardanelles fighting, had opportunity for the taking of some exceedingly interesting and vivid cinematographic pictures of the retreat of the Allied troops from the peninsula. The pictures which made a very deep impression in Vienna, were recently shown to the Berlin public by the Austrian naval association in the Mozart Saal on Nollendorf Place.

Manager Zeisske, who has been called in for army service, has withdrawn from the management of the Deutsche Bioscop. The well known author, Robert Reinert, who is responsible for a large number of film works, will assume the position formerly occupied by Mr. Zeisske. Activities have been renewed in the Bioscope studio in Neu-Babelsberg. Four regisseurs are occupied with films featuring Maria Carmi and Anna Mueller-Lincke, a Reinert film, "Homunculus," and two three-reel comedies from George Kaiser. "Eva contra Adam" and "Der Freund des Fursten" ("The Duke's Friend"). The author is playing the leading parts in these films, which are being directed by Emil Albes.

Paul Wolfram of the Dresden film renting concern of the same name has secured by purchase the Berlin film house, Engelke & Co. The former owner of the latter firm, Willy Hess, will now devote his time exclusively to film manufacture. Mr. Hess should be able to make a success in his new undertaking owing to the practical knowledge which he has gained through his many years' experience in the film business.

Chr. Muelleneisen, Sr., one of Germany's pioneer film men, has suffered a loss in the death of his twenty-six year old son, Fritz, who recently fell at the front. The bereaved is survived by his parents, Chr. Muelleneisen, Jr., manager of the Luna Film, and a younger brother, Toni, cameraman, at present also at the front. Word has also been received of the death in the field of Willi Hesse, owner of the Olympia theater in Dresden.

Dr. Viktor Mendel, a prominent student of natural science, has been engaged by the National Film Company to produce a series of scientific films including a number of medical studies which upon completion will be used as the basis of several dramas.

In an absorbing Polish-Jewish story, "Nebel und Sonne" ("Clouds and Sun") at the Tauentzien Palast, Joe May as director and Mia May in the main role, once more demonstrated their ability. This film is, in addition to the excellent playing of Mia May and her partner Max Landa, as well as the supporting cast, remarkable for the attention which Mr. May has bestowed even upon the smallest details, unlike most directors who have totally neglected many essential Ghetto points in the last few pictures of this class which have lately been seen.

As a sequel to "Das Tagebuch Collins," which appeared some months ago, the Union theaters are playing Richard Eichberg's "Leben Gegen Leben" ("Life Against Life"). Erich Kaiser-Titz, Louis Neher and Ellen Richter in the leading parts were received with much favor. A number of excellent mountain scenes add to the picture's charm.

A multi-reel farce, "Ein Toller Einfall" ("A Silly Idea") is having a prolonged run at the Kammerlichtspiele. Messrs. Bender, Berisch and Paulig, and the Misses Ellen Richter and Kaete Haack do not permit a let-up in the laughter.

A film romance featuring Friedrich Zelnick, "Der Einsiedler von St. Georg," and a screaming comedy, "Der Sekretar der Koenigin," are responsible for sold-out houses at the Mozart-Saal.

A new film actress, Ellen Kareen, earned very flattering criticisms in a Hans Einem drama, "Von Stamme der Afra" at the Marmorhaus.

EDISON PICTURE IN MILK CRUSADE.

The state of New York will conduct a crusade against impure milk by the use of motion pictures, and Thomas A. Edison, Inc., is now making a one-reel film entitled "The Trump Card" for the use of the New York State Board of Health in the proposed campaign. While the picture will show the process of pasteurization by which germ life in the lacteal fluid is completely destroyed and any danger of infection eliminated, it will not emphasize the technical process. It is designed to call attention to the danger of unpasteurized milk and to show the method by which milk can be purified, but it does this through the medium of a little human interest story of much intrinsic value. It will educate and entertain at the same time, and the state authorities are confident that this film, and others of a similar nature, can be used very effectively.

The script was written by Alan Crosland, casting director for Thomas A. Edison, Inc., and it was revised by T. Boynton Peck, a Chief of the Division of Exhibits for the State Department of Health. Among the members of the cast are Robert Conness, Adele Pratt, Herbert Prior, Leonie Flugrath, Andy Clark and Charles Sutton.

E. H. COOLLEY IN CHICAGO.

E. H. Colley, president and general manager of the Mudd & Colley Amusement Company of Birmingham, Ala., dropped into New York on his way to the Chicago convention. The Mudd & Colley company controls the Rialto, Trianon and Princess theaters.

Observations

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN

WITH the arrival of a hot season the departure of thousands of people from the cities and towns for their annual sojourn in the country and at the seaside resorts the motion picture exhibitors have experienced quite a falling off in business. The effect is especially felt by the houses located in districts comprising well-to-do residents, people who are of the 15-20-25 cent class of patrons. Up to about the first of July the exhibitors clung to the hope that the summer would be a cool one, or at least a very late one, but since then the heat has manifested itself to such an extent that the annual falling off in business is to be experienced. But this year the depression is to be more widespread than it has for several years. In addition to the usual causes for it we have the effects of the war movement. While every man who has been called to the Mexican border, or to camps for preparation, may not have been a moving picture fan, and the entire number called to arms (if all were regular attendants) do not form 25 per cent. of the number of daily patrons of the picture houses, still claim is made that the war situation has had a very noticeable effect upon the box office receipts of picture houses in places where those called to arms resided. The main effect is not due to the departure of the enlisted men, but to the contingencies that have arisen through their departure. Many exhibitors say that those left at home, the dependents upon the enlisted men and the people who were the real amusement patrons, find themselves obliged to curtail expenses. In former years the open-air shows have proved a relieving substitute in the summer depression, but many of these places report a falling off in business, which would seem to give some color to the statement that the preparations for war have affected the moving picture business. However, the exhibitors are not discouraged. In many quarters there is a confidence that there will be no war and within a few weeks the situation will settle down to the standard of regular summer seasons. Unfortunately the exhibitors of Greater New York and other parts of the Empire state are not in a position to entertain this hopeful view. The epidemic of infantile paralysis has hit them rather hard. The alarm created by the epidemic in the Greater City has caused the authorities to notify all moving picture houses not to admit children under sixteen years of age during the prevalence of the disease. This regulation applies whether or not the children are accompanied by parents or guardians and will necessarily impair the box office receipts. It is not alone the loss of children patrons that is figured upon, but the loss through adults remaining away on account of not being able to take the children with them.

There are about 850 moving picture theaters in Greater New York and the revenue derived by them each day from the women and children patrons is no small item; nevertheless, when License Commissioner Bell, in co-operation with the Health Department, decided that the picture houses were among the most prominent places of assembly for children and, therefore, among the most likely field for the spread of disease during an epidemic the exhibitors fell into line in utter disregard of a threat accompanying the order that a violation of it would be met with revocation of the exhibitor's license. Some exhibitors, in view of the fact that the disease was apparently prevalent among only children of tender age, endeavored to have the age limit in the order reduced to ten years, but readily acceded to the Health Commissioner's refusal to make the change. More than this the Exhibitors' Association offered to the Health Commissioner a suggestion which he gratefully adopted, in consequence of which the picture houses will flash upon their screens slides furnished by the city urging parents to take no chances if their children show illness, but communicate at once with a doctor, or the Health Department.

Thus we find another exemplification of the good use to which the moving pictures may be put and the willingness of the owners to take advantage of such opportunities. It is the result of a co-operative spirit existing between the exhibitors and the authorities of the city. It is true the exhibitors had no alternative but to comply with the order to not admit the children, but had the city authorities been as aggressive and oppressive as those in many other parts of the country it is quite likely many exhibitors would have been tempted to close their houses until the close of the summer season and the stamping out of the epidemic. The part of the city hit the hardest by the epidemic is Brooklyn and as nearly all the picture houses there are in the residential districts they feel the effects of the Commissioner's order the most. Thus far none of the exhibitors have signified an intention to close. If there should be a movement of that kind it will come principally from the small houses in the poorer quarters where the chief patrons are women and children. One of these managers said: "My business always falls off in the summer because I have no open air privileges and I cannot make my house a real summer one. As a rule I manage to keep abreast with expenses. If I can do that now I shall keep open, but if this epidemic continues to spread and parents are kept away as well as the children by illness in their own homes I naturally will lose too much to justify me in fighting the conditions." One of the large theater managers said: "The Commissioner's order will not interfere with us because our audiences are composed mainly of adults. Unlike the five and ten cent houses we can lose all our child patronage and yet wind up the season on an average summer basis. There is a possibility that some of our business may drop off through the epidemic striking the homes of some of our patrons. There is also a possibility that picture houses of all kinds may lose patronage through the exodus of parents from the city to get their children beyond the zone of the epidemic. The disease struck with such suddenness and severity that parents have become panic stricken. I know of several mothers who left the city with their children today. I think the order of the authorities a good one. It is not, as many suppose, issued to picture theaters alone. It applies to all theaters. Our screen is open to any use the authorities may wish to put it in order to stay and wipe out the epidemic. So long as the authorities are fair with us they can use us for any good purpose."

Talk of protection for scenario writers has been again revived by a proposition to form an organization for copyright purposes. The best protection such an organization can secure will come through co-operation with the amalgamated film industries. The scenario writer is just as much a branch of the motion picture business as the scenario buyer and one deserves as much protection as the other. The scenario writer should also be just as much interested in official censorship matters as the producer who takes the scenario off his hands. Their interests in this respect are identical. The trouble with most writers is that they feel they have a kingdom of their own, that their work is just what everybody wants and if anybody turns it down he is accused of being either an ignoramus or a purloiner. It is true that some writers have been victimized by irresponsible concerns, and it is equally true that many reputable producing concerns have been double-crossed by irresponsible writers. There have been more cases where writers have sold the same scenario to two or more producing companies than there have been of producers adopting ideas from rejected manuscripts. It is also a fact that reputable producing companies have been placed in a false position by writers submitting scenarios based upon ideas gleaned from fellow writers. Operation in unity by all interests in the motion picture sphere will thwart and stamp out all such evils. Should the amalgamated film organization become a reality there is nothing within observation to deter scenario writers in securing a representation in it. With sincere co-operation the evil doers in all branches of the business will eventually be wiped out and the interests of each unit will not only be amply protected, but materially advanced. One thing that will be accomplished is the education of the scenario writer. He may be a writer of exceptional merit and yet not be able to produce a scenario as it should be. The ablest of writers may be given many good points by picture producing companies and directors and thereby in time enhance the value of their work. There is one point many writers will not concede and that is, picture producers, directors and exhibitors are in a better position to judge what moving picture audiences want than authors are. The latter are generally guided by isolated observation while the former get the pulse of the people by experience. It is not infrequent that directors save a supposedly excellent story from failure and it frequently happens that exhibitors do a like service after a film has been placed on exhibition. There is a policy of give and take in the motion picture business that is not understood by most people and it is a policy that calls for intelligent co-operation by all concerned. Some scenario writers have said they are in no way interested in the official censorship question; that it is entirely with the producers and exhibitors; yet these writers will call for the heavens to fall upon the producers after seeing their stories that have passed through the chopping mills of some censor boards. This would seem to make the writers a party to the question. If it is the censors and not the producers that mutilate their stories they should array themselves with those who are opposed to censorship.

Appreciation vs. Criticism.

LATELY several managers of large houses have started to print criticism blanks in their programs, and in the main the custom is a good one. It makes the patron feel that a real interest is taken in his personal likes and dislikes and if he responds to the request for comment, he feels himself to be under a certain obligation to favor that house with his patronage. But since it would seem that the practice is gaining ground, it might be well to speak a word of caution against encouraging the critical habit in the patron. It is better to frame the appeal to encourage their appreciation rather than their criticism, though this does not mean that they should be urged to give decisions that are in violation of their personal opinion. The simplest way to dodge trouble is to ask them to tell what they do like, rather than to mention their dislikes. It brings practically the same results, but it brings it in a way that takes the curse off the scheme.

With Diagrams.

The Strand theater, Erie, Pa., sends in a booklet gotten out for the house. It is a small eight-pager, white paper and a deep blue ink. On the cover is merely the word "Why" with a large question mark below and lines for an address. Inside it deals with the many features of the house for comfort, health and safety. There is no fancy lying, but a straightforward talk about the house, the heating, ventilation, electric wiring, program, music and comforts. It is all plainly and sincerely written and there is something about the typography that matches the style of the writing. The headings are a severe gothic and the body type is set unleaded and in a small face with no attempt at ornamentation beyond a rule bottom line that encloses the page number and a house trade mark cut set into similar rule at the top. If the appearance of the job was planned to match the stuff, the effort has been successful. If it is merely an accident that they go so well together, it is a most fortunate accident. W. J. Haynes points out that the Pennsylvania law does not require the house diagram to the printed and adds that the house is so well provided that they do not fear to do so. The total of exits on the ground floor is nearly the full width of the house, and almost that in the balcony—which is something to brag about, even though we believe there is still a law requiring a certain proportion of exit space to the width. The folder is a good piece of work and should do the house real good. It pays as well to boom your house as your films—sometimes better, since anything done for the house is more lasting in its effect for good.

Too Full.

George W. Bennethum, of the Scenic, York, Pa., sends in a Hennegan program cover built up into a house program. It is almost too full of type. It is to be supposed that some of these programs will come into the hands of persons who are not so intensely interested that they will read every line they see, and these will not be reached by the program that is overloaded. The small type reads well, though a bit flippant at times, but it would pay to let some of this matter out to gain some white space with which to set off the heavy title lines. At present the black lines are almost buried in the masses of black type. The proofreading is not well done. We get "The Busted Honeyman" for Honeymoon, and the names of persons are not set in quotes, though the names of the characters they play may be so set. The printer should be talked to and told that Marian Sais and Ollie Kirkby are real people and not the names of photoplay characters.

Dated Throwaways.

The Star, Reedley, Cal., sends in a "tonight" throwaway and adds day and date, as is always best. It is a simple bill, and for that very reason a good one. We regret that the pink paper prevents reproduction as a model. There is a big "tonight" with day and date following, then "six reels," and in a little smaller type the three features including a local feature found in a news release. Then comes the full list of the reels, a repetition of the "six good reels" and the house name. The whole thing will be read at a glance where more type would prevent the assimilation of any part of the announcement.

Classy.

The Oak Park theater, Oak Park, Ill., gets out a very handsome announcement for Gloria's Romance. The first page is merely a cut of Miss Burke, so well done that you look twice to see whether it is a cut or an actual photograph. As the background is burnished down to a solid black, it makes a striking front. Inside is the announcement, partly set in gothic and partly in script. The gothic looks so much the better that it tells its own story, but gothic in the mass is bad because the letters are all the same height and therefore monotonous. The back page merely carries the trade mark cut. If the type faces had been better chosen, this would rank as an ideal job, but evidently the printer is stocked up with old-fashioned faces.

Took a Car.

To boom the Billie Burke serial Ralph de Bruler, of the Piedmont, Atlanta, Ga., dressed a trolley car and ran it around town. As can be seen, a false work provided space for a lavish announcement as well as room for lithograph work. This car was used to do the advance work and was kept on the street for several days prior to the opening. Details are lacking, but it is to be presumed that there was some noise attractor used inside. Where such a car is used for more than a day, provision should be made for wiring the frame to illuminate the car at night, when both the residential and business sections should be visited.

Wants Some Programs.

The Lyric, St. Genevieve, Mo., is going to have a house program and Manager John Koetting asks that brothers with small four-pagers send him samples. He is thinking of a four or eight-pager, about 4½x6, cream paper and sepia or green ink. He asks for an opinion and layout, though he suggests the layout we like best, with the program on page 3, house talk on 2 and underline or other matter on 4. The layout is good; next best to the South Bethlehem Lehigh Orpheum recently illustrated, or Joe Vion's Crescent program in a later issue. Both of these forms are good and the Vion style permits talk to be run in the margin. As to size, approximately 5x7 is good, but the only thing to do is to look up the paper sizes that can actually be had, figure how they will cut without loss and use that size. Cream laid paper is horribly expensive these days, and we think that a white paper of fair grade would be better, unless the house wants to waste money for the sake of putting up a front. We believe in doing a thing in the best possible manner, but we do not believe in being reckless, and if a program is started with laid tint and continued on cheap news after a few weeks, the effect is retroactive and suggests failure. It is better to start small and gradually grow better.

For color, sepia on cream is excellent; well marked and tasty, IF the printer can handle the brown ink; but green is a little too light, and it would be better to work green on green stock, and blue on blue stock. For white, green does not work well. Brown or blue or a good black would be better. Red is too vivid and pink too pale. Green on blue works well if the right shades are used, but unless well done is very poor. If a fair grade of white paper is used, with good type work and well-written announcement, it will be as good as is needed. Anything more than that is excess, like the gold foil on a cigar. It creates a good impression, but it does not affect the real value of the article. Perhaps a Hennegan colored cover, with space sold to local advertisers to help pay the cost, would work well. It usually does, though our personal preference is for a straight white with the added cost put into an extra four pages that can be made to talk to the patron.

Back in the Fold.

Clyde D. Kluger writes from Altoona, where he is now at the Pastime theater. He says:

> As it has been a few years since I last wrote you in regard to your department, I wish to say that I am still an active reader of the same, and find the World today far above all other trade papers. In the last five years I have missed only one copy and felt lost until the next one came. My last letter to you was written while I was manager of the Palace, Harrisburgh. Thinking that some other exhibitors will be interested, I am sending you a photograph of a splash I used for "The Mysteries of Myra." This was used for the third episode in which the magic mirror is shown. It helped me to turn a poor night into a good one and should be of use to others.

The photograph is self-explanatory. It can be faked with dead globes, with new bulbs, and can be connected up with the light circuit or shown dead. It can be run or merely permitted to stand idle where no motor is handy. It makes a good flash in the lobby and would be most effective if running, as was shown at the International booth in Madison Square Garden. Mr. Kluger has our thanks for the care he took to get the cut copy to us right. It was just the proper sort of glossy print, and came packed so well that there was no crease or scratch. We like copy not matter how it comes, but we do like to get good cuts.

Beating a Herald.

One of the thoughtful things the average publicity manager does is to mess the heralds for which exhibitors pay real money in such a fashion that nothing else may be advertised. Joe Vion had one the other day for a story he was running at the Crescent, and he wanted to add that he also had Chaplin in Police. The herald was all-black background where it was not type, save for a slit in the front page for the house name. Having a printer in his employ, Vion merely printed on the back with size, dusted it with bronze and got a better flash than the plain black on white would have been. Sometimes aluminum will do better than gold, but the principal point is that it is possible to overprint and beat the stingy press man.

Figures.

R. B. Wilby, of the Strand Amusement Company, Montgomery, Ala., usually has something to say when he says anything. His last remarks concern the kiddie matinees and he discusses the action of the recent General Federation of Women's Clubs, already reported. He adds:

> The Plaza theater presented children's programs with fair success last winter, and it will begin their presentation again in the coming fall, but those programs will not be highly successful—and in this case their success means something besides a financial profit for us—unless the mothers of the children for whom they are given actually want them, nor unless sufficient latitude is given in the selection of subjects to permit the exhibition of a program for which the first consideration is to interest.
> In this connection, the fact is worth stating that for three months children made up less than one-half of one per cent. of the Strand's attendance, .46 of one per cent to be exact.

Just figure that over a moment. With the pictures being censored "for the child," one house reports less than one-half of one per cent. of juvenile patrons. The figures are unusually low, but did you ever figure the percentage of attendants at your house for a reasonably extended period? It works two ways. You can run kiddie matinees to get them back for the special shows, and you can talk back on this censorship bunk.

Opposition.

A western house sends in some of its competitor's advertising. Much of the space is directed at the opposition house. The best line in the advertisement runs:

> The Proof that the Motion Picture Is An Art
> NOBBY PHOTOPLAYS.

Something must be wrong. Fancy James Huneker talking of that "nobby nocturne" of Chopin's or the "nobby" Angelus! That is worse than "movies," and one of the most dastardly blows yet struck. The house sending in the stuff adds that the attacks do not seem to have much effect. This is an error. They do. They make the reader realize that a man who is so badly worried about the other fellow, probably has cause to be. It is the best advertisement that a house can have that the other fellow is worried, for no one worries about ineffective competition.

Wholesale.

L. J. Burkitt of the Lyric, Morrison, Ill., gives a large order when he sends in a pack of advertising stuff for comment, but we like large orders, so there is no kick. There are three kinds of advertising. One is a picture postcard of players in tint with text on the back. One of the cards is printed up with an advertisement of the house; the other for a special picture. Of the two the former is the better, for on the post card the advertisement will last long beyond the day of the attraction, and if it can be made to work continuously, so much the better. Post cards can be used to advantage in advertising the transient attraction, but they are even better when they are made to work for the house alone. But in either case they should not carry much small type. The message must be caught as the card is looked at. It is seldom that it will be read in detail if there is much text. The newspaper advertising does not hold together well. In the advertisement shown here the use of a Paramount frame too small for the space gives the effect of two advertisements. This frame should be used only when the matter can all be laid inside the border. Another advertisement runs two tens. There are virtually two separate advertisements, each with its own heading and set absolutely without regard for the other. It would have been far better had the space been broken across for one heading to cover the two columns. One day is dated immediately below the heading and the other gives lines down with a couple of pieces of cut-off rule between. One carries two black lines and is set mostly solid matter and the other runs a lot of eight point that cannot be read save by study, though there is plenty of chance to set in display. The printer is probably the guilty person and he is a very poor printer indeed. A good printer could do better than that if he was drunk. A third example is a single column down the page. It is not an advertisement at all, but just one darned line after another. The third exhibit is a trio of booklet programs, twelve pages. Sometimes you can tell the program from the trade advertising. Here there is sometimes too much matter for the space in which it is to be set. Possibly it was this that drove the printer to drink. In writing the advertiser must remember that an inch of space cannot be stretched to two inches, and must write only enough for the inch if he wants to get a decent display. The booklet is handy size and good stock, but the arrangement is poor. It would be better to take the two middle pages (seven and eight) and print all of the program there, uniform style and in brief. Then use parts of the other pages for house talk and text stories about (not of) the films announced, with such proportion of the trade advertising as is proper; say not more than half, not counting the middle page. The back page is taken up by a political candidate, where a photoplayer would be better, and the candidate will never be mistaken for a leading man.

Operator and Pressman.

It's been some time since we heard from an operator and press man, but comes now Benjamin Silver, who runs the machine at the Windsor, here in town, and gets out the house program as well. Mr. Silver says he is a bit weak on English as he is foreign born, but he knows good lines when he sees them, and blends them well. The program is about 3x5½, tinted news stock, four pages. The colors of cheap stock are apt to be dull, but he has made a fairly good choice and we imagine that in his location the colored stock will help distribute the matter. He is inclined to use a little too much copy for his space. This is a common fault and he will do well to note how much he writes and then see how much space what he has written takes. In this way he can gradually correct this error. Outside of that he is doing well enough to be content, and he need not bother about his English. It is not the illiterate stuff his plea suggests. He seems to have a sense of advertising values, and with a little practice he can get out of Brother Richardson's jurisdiction entirely, if he wants to.

The Legrand Movie (an awful name for a house) of Wadley, Ga., sends in a program card of good white stock printed in color. On the back is printed:

I'M ON MY BACK;
TURN ME OVER.

Curiosity will lead most persons to comply with the request, so that the program will work best if presented upside down. The card is of small value, however, since it does not list the attractions, but merely gives the show nights (Wednesday and Friday) and announces that they will have "good plays." One line reads: "Always good first-class pictures." There is no conviction in a line like that. Probably the house is not certain of its program in advance, but instead of "Feature Night, Best Picture Plays," it would be better to say:

> Friday is feature night, when the program is selected from the best Broadway attractions.

Even at this it seldom pays to do vague advertising of this sort, and it would be better to wait until the film gets to town and then get out a throwaway.

Small but Hardworking.

The Dreamland, Galena, Ill., gets out a small but very industrious four-page folder, 2x7 inches. The folder opens up to show a two-months' program; merely the titles, dates and stars. The back page carries some simple but strong house talk and on the front is Quality Films for Entertainment.

> As time goes on, the light of understanding gradually breaks forth in the fact that Quality and not quantity is the main factor in productions that have real merit for an evening of pleasure.

There is nothing sensational about a line like that, but it means something. It means more than a lot of large words.

Sure Thing.

Arthur G. Stolte, of the Palace, Vinton, Ia., sends in a throw-away with the remark that we might be interested in what small-town exhibitors are doing to get business. We most certainly are, for the small-town manager is the one who hustles because he has to. As a rule he works harder for a dime than the city man does for his dollar, and three-fourths of the best stuff comes from the small towns. This particular display is a throwaway given out at a local election. It is folded so that all in sight reads:

Have you
Proposition?

From there it runs into an advertisement for the Palace; "the theater with the colored lights," which is an unusual house slogan. The stuff is all written by Mr. Stolte and he makes it work. For example, in speaking of the second instalment of "The Girl and the Game" he recalls her stunt in the opening chapter and adds: "Remember your friends were all talking about this picture last Monday. Now see the second chapter today." Then the thrills are listed. The slip is folded and then clipped with a paper clip so that it has the appearance of a bit of election work. For the first chapter of the serial there was a special free matinee for the school children and just that many personal press agents going home after the show. If you can get the kiddies talking, you do not have to worry much about the grown-ups. They can't help hearing.

North Laughs.

Even Tom North, dry as he says he is, had to laugh when a patron of the Seattle V-L-S-E. reported that he could not send back the photographs for a film as he had them on display in a soft drink place which had been raided and was closed up. And of all pictures, it was The White Sister that found itself in such disreputable company.

But the paper hands out a two-edged laugh in its stunt column when it suggests that for Into the Primitive the Exhibitor get some local store to run a fur sale in connection with the showing of the film. It has been a cool summer, but June and July fur sales are a bit out of season, are they not?

For Programs.

Here is a line from the Cameraphone, Pittsburgh, that might be copied into other programs. It reads simply and sincerely and that, after all, is the proper note.

> There is nothing that pleases the management of the Cameraphone theater more than to hear the patron's comments on the picture, orchestra, or the theater as a whole.
> We have, what we believe to be, a cool, clean, comfortable theater, presenting the best photoplays obtainable from the producers, in a live up-to-date manner.
> We will gladly accept your suggestion for the betterment of the theater or any part of the entertainment and test its merits.

Envy Emanuel.

Jay Emanuel, of the Ridge Avenue, Philadelphia, is a person to be envied. In these days of the high cost of paper stock he went and bought a whole carload of stuff from a bankrupt printer. There was pretty much everything in the load from plain news to some of the niftiest colored stock you ever saw and the Ridge patrons must think he is either rich or crazy to use two tone cards for throwaways and they do not know that these are cheaper than manila right at the moment. There is not much of any one kind, but generally enough; but if there is not the printer takes two lots of about the same size and with one change of guide makes the single make-ready suffice.

The Regent, Philadelphia, has been having an anniversary, and to mark the event it repeats the six features that found the greatest favor during the year. This is a capital idea where it can be worked and where it cannot be worked it can at least be announced as the six best.

The Victoria program is rather slovenly at times. It uses three panels and does not care if there are two display and one type or the reverse. A program such as this does not look as well as would one with a more orderly arrangement. Such a little thing as the layout of a piece of paper may attract or repel a patron and the program that is worth printing is worth the trouble of arranging.

Pegging Peg.

F. G. Wells, of the Alamo, Anniston, Ala., sends in a photograph of the street stunt he got up for Peg o' the Ring. He carried a snare and bass drummer, a little girl to represent Peg and a lot of boy clowns. The car covered all the streets passable by an auto and drew a big crowd to the house. After the performance the little girl, who represented Peg, gave out souvenirs. In a photograph the colors of the paper do not come out very clearly, but the effect is suggested. Evidently the wheel discs were home-made. It would pay, if the car is regularly used, to get a set that can easily be attached and detached, painting them over as occasion requires. Details have been given in this department and Popular Mechanics, some time ago, had a design for a false wheel that would remain upright, overcoming the drawback that a revolving sign cannot easily be read. Any device could probably be rigged up that would slip over the hub of the wheel with the greater weight at the bottom.

Charles H. Barron, of the Majestic, Ponca City, Okla., also went in heavily for display. He writes:

> I am sending you, under separate cover, a photo I had taken on last Saturday, the day I opened the Universal serial, "Peg O' the Ring." I had a circus parade. In the first place, I offered three prizes to the three boys who had the best turnout to represent a circus wagon. I had these in the parade. The parade was headed by a young lady to represent Grace Cunard as "Peg." The girl I chose had curly hair and she wore it dressed as Grace Cunard wears hers in this serial. She wore a black mask across her eyes, so she would not be easily recognized. I also hired a clown from the 101 Ranch who brought in two trick donkeys, whatever children in town who wanted to go in the parade, wore Indian costumes, etc. I used my Unaphone as a calliope, put it in my car, which was covered with banners. This display sure stacked them in. We paraded the main business blocks.

The photograph Mr. Barron speaks of does not seem to have arrived at the office. The idea of letting the kiddies in on the parade was distinctly good. They love to see parades, but they love better to be of them. A series of small prizes for costumes would have helped some and not have added greatly to the cost. A lot depends upon getting a serial started properly, and something must be done to get them to the first instalment.

As a Favor.

Exhibitors generally have been kind enough to recommend our Technique of the Photoplay to their patrons who ask about a book on play writing. Will they please note that a new edition is now out, replacing the second edition. This is a larger, better, and, we believe, a far more helpful book. Being more than double the size of the old, the price has been raised to three dollars. Please remember that the two dollar book is out of print. We do not recommend that exhibitors seek to interest their patrons in photoplay writing since failure is apt to react against the house, but where the aspirant is determined, we will appreciate a mention of the new work.

A NEW HELP FOR MANAGERS

Picture Theatre Advertising

By EPES WINTHROP SARGENT (Conductor of Advertising to Exhibitors in the Moving Picture World)

A TEXT BOOK AND A HAND BOOK, a compendium and a guide. It tells all about advertising, about type and type-setting, printing and paper, how to run a house program, how to frame your newspaper advertisements, how to write form letters, posters or throwaways, how to make your house an advertisement, how to get matinee business, special schemes for hot weather and rainy days. All practical because it has helped others. It will help you. By mail, postpaid, $2.00. Order from nearest office.

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticised, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is inclosed.

A Ritual of Form.

PROFESSOR Robert Wilson Neal, in a recent interview, is quoted as saying in part:

> The mere preparation of the script is easy, though you would not think so from the number of books that have been written about it. Of the lot, only two or three are worth having and but one of these puts the matter in a nutshell—E. W. Sargent's Technique of the Photoplay. For the motion picture student it is what the copy of the ritual is to the master of the lodge.

Nothing could more aptly express the relation of form and idea that this last sentence. It is to the student what the ritual is to the master of the lodge. But there are many masters of lodges who are nothing but ritual, just as there are many photoplay students who are nothing but writers of form. The real master of a lodge is not a slave to ritual. He is, or should be, a master of the ritualistic form, but this is only the mechanical side of his work. His real success—or failure— is determined not by his proficiency in ritual but by his executive and administrative ability. He must be perfect in his ritual if slovenly work is not to disgust the lodge, but perfect floor work alone will not make a lodge prosperous. There must be guidance, as well. Until authors are made to realize that both form and idea MUST be mastered, we shall have from them form only, and form commands no great admiration unless backed by brains.

Unconscious Plagiarism.

Every little while some correspondent asks a question that differs from the usual "how many scenes make a reel?" and "what is the average price of a play?" One nice little problem is presented in a recent inquiry. The author has written a story based upon an almost forgotten murder mystery. Since the completion of the script the mystery has been solved. The solution is unlike that of his story and unlike the attempted solutions of some years ago. Somehow the author is led to fear that perhaps his story is an unconscious plagiarism. It sounds too familiar and reminiscent to be original, he thinks. He asks advice.

It is difficult in the extreme to advise. It may be that the work on the story has made it seem as though it harked back of the inspiration. On the other hand it may be that he has remembered a story without recalling the original source. He does not like to throw the script away and is in doubt as to the propriety of trying to sell it.

Personally we should regard with suspicion an idea that seemed reminiscent whether the source was remembered or not. On the other hand it might hurt the reputation of the writer to send it out and sell only to have the original source uncovered. It is a nice problem, but it would be safer to retire the idea.

That Synopsis Only.

John William Kellette, continuing his observations on the story the synopsis of which has already been printed, contributes another phase of action as it was in the original and as it was reconstructed by John Adolfi and himself. He says:

Sending two constructions to you of the same situation. The reason for the change, most of all, was because most of our work is done from 9 (and in many cases 7) feet to 12 feet from the camera. To stage scene 82 as originally written would compel us to go back more than 20 feet. Figures would be rather small at that distance and much of the business would be lost. Another change was on account of building in the logical means for having Deane with something in his possession whereby he could write or print the word "where" so that the little fellow up in the gallery could see it written. As the "road to nowhere" plays an important part in the scenes that follow, it was necessary to bring this out plainly, hence the dead fire, the charcoal, closeup of hand picking it up, the closeup of Deane writing it, etc., and to advance the love theme, it was necessary to bring Jack and Caprice together alone. This is accomplished by a query with the bundle in evidence, a flash of the shack, both making an exit to the shack, and then leaving her on the scene to watch the auto go away—the sigh; "ain't he grand," and then letting her sit alone with her thoughts.

Writers are too prone to accept the first thing at hand to get over a bit of business. This point is brought out in No. 82—"Deane grabs chalk or pencil near at hand"—How on earth could Deane have chalk near at hand unless expressly for the purpose of writing that sign? Those looking for flaws in pictures would instantly say: "Why was the chalk there?" A pencil would not make a mark black enough to be read by anybody, and the camera at 20 feet could not catch the lines. Hence the closeup of Deane writing 'where" on the board. It took a little thought to get that dead fire under that signboard, but it was perfectly logical. Roadbuilders might have built the fire to warm the pot of coffee. A tramp might have built it to roast an ear of corn. It was perfectly logical, and, the strongest of all, entirely convincing.

This, from me, is not new. I have read it many times in your excellent department and have profited by it. But the error is being made every day, and I hope to see it driven in—Never write a thing in the script unless it is perfectly logical and because it belongs there. Don't be forever in the reach of the "long arm of coincidence."

I think if you take both constructions and run them on the "deadly parallel," the novice could get a better grasp on technique as employed by a writer and a producer.

I endeavored, in writing the synopsis and the scene continuity in my former letter to you, to show the reader that the synopsis did not carry that portion of the business, and had the synopsis carried the incident of the dog stealing the "drumstick," it would have given which ever director who read it, a chance to put in practically the same business we did, and it would have made more interesting reading. Don't be afraid to write all the good points the script contains. Give the scenario editor a generous sample, and if he wants to buy your synopsis send along a complete script, so that he may profit by your ideas, because there never was a construction so bad but what some good was gleaned from it. I'd advise the novice to study technique because it means that he will be able to get more from his idea than if he wrote only the synopsis, and it might lead him into paths that will develop a stronger story.

The scenario writer wrote his action this way:

76—Crossroads—Road, showing road straight and old road turning off of same—Guidepost on corner, leaning and weather-beaten. Post reads:

Road to No...

Balance of board broken off. Automobile party drives in—puzzled. Boys get out. Study the signboard.

77—Road, forsaken—Caprice walking along. Worried. Stops, turns back, face betrays purpose (looks at doll) alright—exits.

78—Back to party—All curious—Caprice walks up—Startled, nervous.

79—Closeup of Caprice, startled and pained. Face showing beauty.

80—Closeup of Jack looking intently.

81—Group of automobile party, showing girls with Deane looking with curious intent (note that boys get out of auto in 76).

82—Scene including the crowd, close as possible, with signpost one side. Jack speaks, pointing to sign post—Asks girl where road leads to—Slowly she speaks.

SUBTITLE—"It don't go nowheres, it's been throw'd up for years. It's a road to nowhere."

(Back to scene) Party amused, all laugh and jolly each other and Deane laughs to the girl. She embarrassed. Deane grabs chalk or piece of pencil, at hand (note this), climbs up and writes on the board, finishing out words, making it read "Road to Nowhere." All laugh, as Jack looks seriously to the girl. Jack steps to her politely, lifts head, inquires (Evidently for his grandfather).

83—Closeup of Caprice and Jack. She looks at him with admiration—he admires her. He looks at the doll, notices it for first time. She embarrassed, hides doll under arm—He speaks (as if asking her to take something to grandfather) Jack turns away hurriedly, as Deane steps up to her, she nervous—Deane sensuous.

84—View of automobile—Jack steps to automobile, gets a bundle, turns back, angered.

Inside Writing.

Free lances who are sufficiently well established with certain studios are now working a synopsis only scheme that makes for better scripts. The synopsis is sent with the request for suggestions before the continuity is made. The editor indicates desired changes and suggests improvement and the action is then written in full and sent in.

This is a scheme that is not practical yet, save for those who sell much to certain studios, but it will probably be found to be the real solution of the problem of writing to please the director and preventing him from making needless changes. If we are not mistaken Marc Edmund Jones was the first to try this scheme. Now several are doing it, including A. E. Blackman and this writer. It is recommended to all editors who have not yet tried it and we hope, in time, to see the scheme come into practically universal use.

The THIRD Edition of

Technique of the Photoplay

IS NOW READY

This is virtually a new book under the old title. More than double the text and with an arrangement especially adapting it for the student. The most complete book ever written on the subject of scenario or photoplay construction.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies, by mail, on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Question No. 147.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear on the Roll of Honor. Theater managers looking for high class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

What do you understand by emergency lights? Where should their switches and fuses be placed, and at what point should the emergency light circuits be attached to the supply? What, in your opinion, should be the limit of size in picture and why.

Roll of Honor on Question No. 140.

Those entitled to the Roll of Honor on Question 140 are: Joseph H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas; F. F. Bell, Palestine, Texas; Wilson Hays, Barton, Md.; W. B. Allen, Edmonton, Canada; Manuel Nosti, Tampa, Fla.; J. L. Arnold, Bellingham, Wash.; C. E. Linstruth, Carthage, N. Y.; L. Pagenhardt, Westernport, Md.; Thomas J. Maloney, New Bedford, Mass.; Charles A. Stuckey, Niagara Falls, Canada; W. E. Bryner, Springfield, Ill.; Walter Collins, Tiffin, Ohio; O. J. Bean, New Bedford, Mass.; G. A. Yager, Anadarko, Okla.; Merle Hoover, Franklin, Ind., and M. Capobianco, Roseto, Pa.

None of the Roll of Honor answers, however, were entirely complete, therefore I have concluded to answer Question 140 myself, the answer being really a conglomeration of points contained in the various Roll of Honor answers.

Reply to Question No. 140.

By F. H. Richardson, New York City.

The Question:

Tell how you think films ought to be cared for in the operating room. Tell us what tools you think an operator should own, and what the management ought to supply.

The Answer:

The film placed in the hands of the operator each day is worth from $500 to $1,000, or, in some cases, even more. Its comparative condition on leaving his hands will depend upon the intelligent care it has been given while in his possession, therefore, the care the film receives in the operating room is of very great importance. Upon unpacking the films the bands should not be thrown down any old place, but be placed either in the cans, or carefully hung up where they will receive no damage. While it should not be, and is not a part of the duty of the operator to examine films, which are presumed to reach him in mechanically perfect condition, still, in practice, particularly where films are on circuit, it really is essential that he make at least a reasonably careful examination as to the condition of the films before attempting to project them. If this is neglected there will be a decided chance that the show will be stopped, or the result upon the screen seriously injured by mechanical defects in the films. This work should, however, as a matter of justice and right, be paid for extra, as it most emphatically is not a legitimate part of the operator's duty.

After unpacking and inspection the films should be immediately placed in a fireproof container, in which each reel is separated from its neighbor by fireproof partitions, and under the whole should be a moisture tray containing sponges or absorbent felt, the sponges or felt to be kept continuously moist in order to prevent the films from being unduly dried out by the hot air of the operating room. Right here, however, there is room for considerable judgment on the part of the operator, because in a naturally moist climate it is quite possible that no artificial moisture will be either necessary or desirable, particularly in what is known as the "wet season" in a naturally moist climate. In a dry climate, however, such as, for instance, Arizona and Colorado, the presence of moisture is absolutely essential to the preservation of the film in good condition.

Rewinding should be done slowly, preferably by motor, with plenty of tension on the reel that is being rewound from, so that the film will be rewound snugly, with no necessity for "pulling down."

Every care should be exercised to avoid getting oil on the film, since it is highly injurious from any and every point of view, and this involves the careful oiling of the projector, using one, or at most, two drops of oil for each bearing. Right care of the film also involves careful adjustment of the tension of the projector, and of the take-up of the projector; moreover, it involves the renewal of the intermittent sprocket the moment there is any sign of undercut. It also involves the use of some sort of lubricant on the tension shoes when running first run, upon which the emulsion is still soft, and the maintenance of the fire valves of the magazines in good condition and free from deposit of emulsion or dust which may scratch the film. The film should never be wiped with a dirty cloth, particularly one upon which there is carbon dust. It should never be washed with alcohol, gasoline or benzine, since, while these liquids remove the oil, they tend to render the film hard and brittle by removing the natural oil from the emulsion. Operators should see to it that, aside from natural and unavoidable wear, the films leave his hands in as good condition as they reach him.

With regard to tools, a number of the Roll of Honor answerers say that the list on page 238, third edition of the Handbook, cannot be much improved upon, though it has been suggested that a test lamp and pair of opera glasses should be added. The list is as follows: One pair "button" pliers, 8 or 10 inch; one pair 8 or 10 inch lineman's side cutting pliers (I leave the matter of size open, as some prefer one and some the other); one pair 8 or 10 inch gas pliers; one large and one medium screw-driver; one screw-driver with good length of carefully tempered blade for small machine screws, to be heavily magnetized so as to hold small screws; one pair of pliers for notching film, see Fig. 76; one small riveting hammer; one claw hammer; one small cold chisel; one medium-sized punch; one very small punch for star and cam pins; one small pair tinner's snips; pair blunt-nose film shears (such as clerks use); one small gasoline torch for soldering wire joints; one hack-saw. With this kit you will be able to do almost any ordinary job, but you will have use for them all. In addition to the above the house manager should furnish such files as are necessary, say one 8 and one 10 inch flat file, one ⅝ round file, one 8 inch "rat tail" file, a small bench vise and anvil and some soldering flux and solder wire. In this list there is nothing which will not be found of use, and many operators will desire and acquire a much more elaborate kit.

Speeding the Film.

This is a subject which has already received much attention in this department, but it constitutes an evil so great that I feel it should receive continued attention until such time as managers have been brought to a realization of the manifold evils of their course in this particular.

Of late there has sprung into existence among a certain type of manager an idea that a certain amount of added speed above normal gives "pep" to the show. Surely this type of manager ought to receive a medal for his nerve. Stripped of all superfluous verbiage his "pep" idea simply amounts to this: I, a theater manager, know more about how the scenes ought to be acted than did the director, or the actor or actress, and am capable and competent to improve upon their work. I would suggest—most humbly suggest to theater managers that the director and the artists may be presumed to know how the various scenes ought to be enacted quite as well as the theater manager can possibly know, and that it borders closely upon presumption—to use no harsher term—for a theater manager to try to improve upon the work of those who have spent months and very often many years in learning the mastery of their art. The actors and actresses and directors will attend to that little matter of "pep," Mr. Manager, and the "pep" you try to put in usually results in working very real injury to the play.

Imagine, if you can, a theater manager trying to improve upon the work of Mary Pickford and Anita Stewart. Why this type of manager would not hesitate to put a little "pep" into the work of Geraldine Farrar, Southern, or even the immortal Bernhardt.

Passing by this phase of the matter, however, let us consider the more serious evil of over-speeding, meaning the running through of a film at 70, 80, or even 90 feet per minute. It is a well known fact that the pressure upon the edges of the sprocket holes of the film is sufficient to cause the delicate edge of the celluloid to cut away steel sprocket teeth which are as hard as glass. This action takes place even at normal speed, and takes place with a tolerable degree of rapidity too, let me tell you, which proves that, even at normal speed, the edge of the sprocket hole is performing some very real and very hard work, considering the fact that it is of celluloid and only 5½ thousandths of an inch in thickness. Now when we speed up it means two things: first that with the tension at the gate set for normal speed there would still be excessive strain on the sprocket holes, due to the increased inertia of the film, but as a matter of fact excessive speed absolutely compels the use of excessive tension at the aperture, and this very, very greatly increases the strain on the sprocket holes of the film, and may even, and actually does cause cracks to appear at the edge of the sprocket holes. In any event, however, while it may not actually cause rupture, it does strain the sprocket holes, and unduly wears their edges, thus gradually setting up unsteadiness of the picture on the screen.

The manager who compels or allows the speeding of the film above that which makes for naturalness of action is not only guilty of greatly impairing, or even utterly ruining the performance of a photoplay which has perhaps cost thousands of dollars, but he is also rendering absurd and ridiculous the work of the artists, who themselves have a reputation which is worth real money to them to sustain, but he is also straining the projection machine, and thus doing an injury to the projection machine manufacturer whose reputation depends upon the performance of the mechanism.

The really absurd part of this is, however, that many of these over-speeding managers will actually criticise the work of the actors, and comment on its mediocrity, when that mediocrity is due wholly and entirely to the ridiculous speed at which they are made to move by the over-speeding of his own projector. Nor is this all, for the manager who thus over-strains the projector is the very first one to raise a howl of protest when it will no longer deliver good results.

Over-speeding of the film is, as I before said, an outrage on the moving picture industry in all its branches, and, more than that, it comes pretty close to being downright dishonesty with the audience. The audience does not pay to see a jumping-jack performance; it pays to see a photoplay projected in the best possible manner. ARE YOU, MR. MANAGER, DEALING HONESTLY WITH YOUR PATRONS WHEN YOU OVER-SPEED THE FILM IN ORDER TO RUSH THE SHOW THROUGH, GET THE AUDIENCE OUT, AND GET ANOTHER ONE IN? ARE YOU DEALING HONESTLY WITH THE PRODUCERS, THE PERFORMANCE OF WHOSE PRODUCTIONS YOU ARE RUINING? ARE YOU DEALING HONESTLY WITH THE EXCHANGE WHOSE PROPERTY YOU ARE WANTONLY DAMAGING? ARE YOU DEALING HONESTLY WITH THE PROJECTION MACHINE MANUFACTURER, OR WITH THE OPERATOR WHO ALSO HAS A REPUTATION TO SUSTAIN? Think it over, Mr. Manager, and think it over very carefully. The "added speed for pep" manager is simply absurd; the other is something very much worse, and the fact that you may over-speed in order to crowd too many reels into a given space of time is just as bad and just as dishonest as rushing them through in order to shorten the show and get the audience out.

Punch Marks.

S. E. Barnes Wichita, Kan., sends in some clippings of films and says:

> Here are some pieces of film for your inspection. The two longer pieces were taken from a Vitagraph, V-L-S-E feature, and, as you see, some operator (??) wanted to mark the end of the reel, which he certainly did. I have seen some punched film in my time, but this is the worst. The small pieces are from "World" pictures, and are a good sample of the way the exchanges themselves mutilate their films. They punch the marks three and four times in each reel, which makes a very pretty (??) effect on the screen when they appear, usually at the very most dramatic part of the picture. I promptly amputate every one of them, but it just don't seem to do any good, for they keep coming. We get all our film from the Kansas City offices. I see by the department that you intend to take a trip out this way next fall. If so, I hope you will arrange to stop in Wichita. We have a new local here which was chartered in January of this year. We have about fifteen members, and I feel sure the boys would be glad to meet you. I have a copy of the new Handbook. It certainly is great. I have the first and second editions also, but there is no comparison between them and your last work.

The two V-L-S-E samples spoken of are 31 pictures long—that is to say, both of them together are that long, and in these 31 pictures are 36 large punch marks. Outrageous is no name for it. The Mutual Film Corporation has written the department as follows:

> We have noted with interest your favor of the 4th inst., regarding punch marks in film. This evil to which you call attention is getting to be a very serious matter, and we are looking for a practical method of eliminating same. In your second paragraph you suggest that the only way to check it is to incorporate some change-over sign. We have not been able so far to devise a practical change-over sign. If you can suggest something which will answer this purpose it would be greatly appreciated. The matter of manufacturers' punches, to which you refer, can be very readily regulated, as the perforations in question are made by the exchange. We expect to take up with our exchanges very shortly the matter of both classes of punches, and at the same time would like to incorporate some intelligent suggestions or instructions as to a substitute change-over sign; therefore, if you can give us a workable suggestion out of your valuable experience, it will be appreciated. To this communication the following reply has been sent:
> "Mutual Film Corporation, New York City. Gentlemen: With reference to yours of May 9th, answer to which has been delayed, partly in an endeavor to get ideas from different ones with regard to a practical change-over sign, and partly through my absence from the city, I would suggest tentatively some such scheme as the following: Instruct your directors to so arrange that the end of each reel will be a sub-title, if necessary, putting in some short sub-title, and let this sub-title be of some particular or peculiar form. For instance: Have the change-over sub-title for each frame surrounded by a row of stars, or a tolerably large star in each corner, or make it of some peculiar or particular form. Now half of this subtitle must be on the end of the first reel and half on the beginning of the second reel, or half on the end of the second and half on the beginning of the third, and so on. This sub-title of peculiar form would soon come to be recognized by the operator as meaning the end of the reel, and he would therefore have no reason to punch holes in the film. It seems to me the worst thing that could be said for this scheme is that it might compel the insertion of unnecessary sub-titles, but that would be far preferable, I think, to the present unsightly punch marks. There is no reason why all manufacturers should not adopt this or some other practical idea, and standardize the thing by making the change-over sub-title with an arrow in each corner, or, for that matter, in one corner. The arrow is only a suggestion. It could be any other plain, distinct mark, but I think the arrow would be a thing more likely to be universally accepted. Another, and perhaps even more readily workable plan, would be to insert into the printing machine a mask of peculiar form, or some sort of indicator during the printing of the last fifty feet of each multiple reel release. If these suggestions meet with your approval I should be glad to hear from you, whereupon I will take the matter up with other producers, and see if some such arrangement cannot be adopted.

I am very glad to hear the Mutual Film Corporation say that the punch marks put in by exchanges can be regulated. The matter certainly needs regulation. As Brother Barnes says, it is not a pleasant experience to have that thing flashed in one's eyes in the middle of the most dramatic part of the film; also, it does no good to put them in, because operators who are real operators will promptly proceed to cut them out again, and that unnecessarily injures the film. In fact, I have myself advised operators to eliminate these marks, and I will continue to so advise.

The Answers.

George P. Hartzes, Duluth, Minn., says:

> Received the question booklets and would like to get the answers at any cost.

Can't be did, Brother Hartzes. The only way you can secure them is to get the back copies of the Moving Picture World since the questions started. They are answered one each week in the projection department. Whether the questions and answers will finally be published in book form or not remains yet to be decided, but if it is done it will be some considerable time in the future.

High School Operating Room.

C. H. Carson, Pasadena, Cal., says:

> Enclosed find photograph which may be of interest. It shows one end of our high school motion picture operating room, immediately outside of which is located a G. E. motor generator set. The machines are supplied with Kino lenses, projecting a 17-foot picture at a distance of 108 feet. The auditorium seats 1,800. We have hopes that the operating room may be enlarged this summer, in order that it may accommodate a dissolver and spot light. We had only one machine when the room was constructed, and while it was pretty roomy then it is full enough now. You may be interested to note that we follow the system of port fire shutters suspended from a string in which is placed a piece of film held over the aperture plate as advocated in the Handbook. Immediately across the hall we have a room seating 200, where there is one Simplex machine. During the coming year we will probably have one or two portable projectors. There are about half a dozen stereopticons in the school, so that you see the 2,000 students in this Temple of Learning of the "wild and woolly west" handle quite some visual educational work.

Quite so, Friend Carson, quite so. And I think that will be the condition in practically all schools in the near future. I see you have swung one machine around sideways in order to show the other; at least that seems to be the case. I would suggest, Brother Carson, that merely as a matter of health, you ought to attach the pipes at the top of the lamphouses to a flue running to the open air. That is why they were placed there. Not only would this carry away a great amount of the heat of the arc, which now goes directly into the operating room, but it would carry away the gas which is formed by the volatilization of the carbons, and which is, I think, decidedly unhealthy.

Your 17-foot picture is, I believe, somewhat larger than is necessary. The 15-foot 4-inch picture I saw in Madison Square Garden during the Exposition has made me a tolerably ardent exponent of the smaller picture. That picture showed up well in Madison Square Garden, and a picture that will do that is sufficiently large for any ordinary auditorium. By reducing your picture even to 16 feet you would gain a considerable added screen brilliancy with the same amount of light, and would very considerably reduce eye strain from the front seats of the auditorium—those nearest the screen. The fuse-link is good.

Very Good.

The Paramount Washington Exchange has been sending out with its film shipments the following placard, designed to be placed in the operating room, or wherever it will do the most good.

BE CAREFUL with this film.

REMEMBER the house running it after you.

Keep your machine CLEAN; use wax where the film touches the machine.

OIL damages film. A charge will be made if film is returned with oil on it.

PUNCH HOLES will not be permitted. A charge for ten feet of film will be made if punched.

A DAMAGE charge for ten feet of film will be made if BAD PATCHES are put in film.

MOST IMPORTANT: See that your IDLERS are set properly so that the film will not be CREASED on the side through the sprocket holes.

CREASING means permanent injury and will be charged for.

REWINDING: Be careful; do not hold the film and turn the rewinder handle.

IN CLEANING FILM be careful no carbon or dust is on the cloth. It will scratch film.

HELP US to give you film in good condition.

SHIPPING: Place bands on the proper reels and ship according to instructions immediately after use.

The placard is all right as far as it goes. I was, however, somewhat amused at the comment on the danger of scratching the film by means of a cloth containing carbon dust and the very brief mention of the enormous amount of damage done by improper rewinding of the film in the process of which carbon and other dust not only scratches the film, but makes scratches large enough to cause rain marks. The instructions to use wax where the film touches the machine will bring a smile to the face of many operators. We can imagine an operator trying a stunt of that kind and placing wax on the upper gait idlers. What the promulgator of this particular piece of wisdom probably meant was: Place wax on the tension shoes when using first run film. There would be no earthly sense in using wax with anything else, and the film touches the machine at quite some several points where the placing of wax would be absurd. The charge for film damaged by oil is good, and the comment that punch holes will not be permitted should also be made to apply to the punch holes put in by the exchange, which are just as unnecessary and pernicious in their effect as those put in by the operator. When found in film I most emphatically advise operators to cut them out. A damage charge for ten feet of film for bad patches is excellent. Possibly if enforced it may induce theater managers to place the splicing of film in the hands of competent operators instead of ushers, and give them time to make a proper splice instead of expecting it to be done with one hand while the operator cranks the machine with the other. For the benefit of the Paramount Washington Exchange, I would say that it by no means follows that the creasing of film is due to improperly set idlers, though it certainly does mean permanent injury.

State Board of Health.

Warren H. Booker, chief of the Bureau of Engineering and Education of the North Carolina State Board of Health, Raleigh, N. C., writes:

> This board is working on a project of carrying out an educational motion picture health campaign in this state by means of equipping a motor delivery truck with a light engine generator set, a portable projection machine, such as the Edison Exhibition Model, which we have at present, or, preferably, a Powers road equipment, which we are arranging to secure in the very near future, together with a selection of health films, the latter to be supplemented with comic and dramatic subjects by means of which we hope to be able to give moving picture health lectures and entertainments in small communities not already provided with moving picture theaters or electric lighting plants.
> We are very anxious to get the most out of our outfit, and would like therefore to ask if you can refer us to any publication or small handbook which would be of assistance to our lecturer and aid him to secure better results with the projection machine and outfit. Thus far we have been using a plain muslin sheet for a screen. This is very satisfactory for small pictures, but we contemplate the securing of a better projection surface and would be glad to have your advice with regard to this matter. At present we have a 10-foot screen and a 16-foot one, using whichever one is best suited to the conditions we meet.

This, it seems to me, is a very sensible thing for a State Board of Health to do, nor do I see any reason why the lecture plan could not be carried out in the larger cities by making a proper arrangement with some theaters therein for a series of health lectures and films in conjunction with their regular program. The underlying idea is good. I think there can be no question about that. I would suggest, however, that the Powers road equipment would be decidedly superior to the Exhibition Model. The latter is a very old type of equipment, having a comparatively inefficient shutter, and an inefficient, by comparison with modern models, lamp and lamphouse. Please understand clearly that I am not, in this, referring to any type of Edison machine except the old Exhibition Model.

I would suggest to Mr. Booker that he correspond with the Wallace Golden Rule Road Shows at Red Oak, Iowa, as they have, so far as my knowledge goes, the most complete road show equipment in this country, producing their light by means of a plant installed in a motor-driven truck. As I remember the matter, they use the motor of the truck to run the generator. I would also suggest that others who have knowledge of equipment of this kind communicate with Mr. Booker, chief of the Bureau of Engineering and Education, North Carolina State Board of Health, Raleigh, N. C., giving him such information as they may be in possession of. I would further suggest to Mr. Booker that a metallic surface screen will be of distinct value for work of this kind, where the amperage is necessarily somewhat limited, and would further suggest that a type of screen having a pretty heavy supporting material be selected.

Where Lies the Trouble.

J. O. Sneva, Underwood, Minn., orders a Handbook, and says:

> What causes my carbons to burn in such a peculiar way? I use 5/8 cored plano positive and ½ inch cored negative. After burning for awhile a deep crater forms on the positive carbon and a long tit on the negative. When this long point extends into the crater of the positive the light becomes very poor; also it forms again a short time after I break it off. I use 25 to 40 amperes, 100 volt D. C. through a grid type rheostat. The illumination is good, but it is hard to keep the screen free from red edges, or a dark, bluish patch in the center. It is only when the arc is at its best that the screen is evenly illuminated all over. I have also tried a solid negative, but the result was the same. The wires from the main to the operating room are No. 10 rubber covered. Are they large enough?

Most decidedly no. Yank those No. 10 wires out and put at least No. 6 in their place. I would, however, advise the installation of No. 5, since the voltage drop will be less, hence there will be less loss. The deep crater you speak of may be due to carbon fault, but the tit is the direct result of carrying your arc too short. I suppose the reason which compels you to do this is that the resistance of these No. 10 wires is so great that you have to burn a very short arc, thus reducing its resistance to the least possible value in order to get the amperage you want, and this in turn prevents the arc from getting the amount of air necessary to volatilize the carbon. Under this condition graphite forms on the lower carbon tip, and, inasmuch as graphite has very high resistance, and will withstand tremendous temperatures for a long time, it of course sets up precisely the trouble you describe.

The first thing to do is to increase the size of those wires; put in No. 6 or No. 5 leads, and be sure that your asbestos cable is No. 6. Directions for measuring your asbestos cable will be found on pages 313 and 314 of the third edition of the Handbook. I would also direct your attention to the subject matter on pages 50, 233 and 271, as well as "Voltage Drop," page 45.

I would also recommend that you use a solid carbon below. The cored lower carbon supplies you much gas. It makes the arc easier to handle, but forms a curtain of gas in front of the creater, which, in addition to absorbing a portion of the light, also very greatly injures the tone of that which does pass.

To sum up: Get bigger wires; carry a longer arc, and use a solid carbon below.

Brother Hayes Criticised.

Elizabeth, N. J., (I omit the name of the writer so that no ill feeling will be stirred up) says:

> As an exhibir of this city, I was interested in the Manager's letter of appreciation of your May 6 Hoboken lecture because, as is proven by the attached printed program of his theater for the dates June 7, and 8, he is advertising sixteen reels as his program. Now this is contrary to your ideas, as expressed over and over again in the projection department. And this without a doubt one of the things which operate to injure our business, not only in this, but adjoining cities. As a matter of fact, this man's excessive program is doing much damage in surrounding towns, as is proven by occasional visitors, who cannot understand why if the "Garden" in Elizabeth can show sixteen reels, their local theaters cannot do likewise.

Yes, Elizabeth, I thoroughly agree with you, and am really surprised that friend manager would commit such an error in judgment as this, for he may take it from me it is an error in judgment, and a very great one, too. Sixteen reels of pictures is, laying all other considerations aside, an ill-advised endeavor to secure patronage which reacts directly upon your theater, and all other Elizabeth theaters, as well, by reason of the fact that it surfeits the patron with motion pictures. It gives him what we might call an over-dose of that particular form of amusement. Sixteen reels properly projected would require almost three hours for the program, and when one has witnessed a three-hour motion picture performance, unless it be something of absolutely extraordinary worth, one does not want any more pictures for at least that week. I would suggest that if instead of the sixteen-reel-method of securing added patronage, he concentrate upon high class presentation of the picture and high class projection. It will get him more patronage in the long run—a great deal more; also it will be better for the motion picture industry of Elizabeth.

Fine Work.

Recently by invitation of Francis A. Mangan, manager Cumberland Theater, Cumberland and Green avenues, Brooklyn, I visited that theater with deep laid intent to examine into its chronometer balance and cylinder escapement, and, as usual, praise that which appeared to be good and gently rap that which seemed to be bad, the rap being tempered by the nature of the sin committed.

The Cumberland has a beautiful auditorium, and an imposing "front." It seats 600, all on one floor, there being no balcony, though the installation of one is being considered. The auditorium is well lighted, and the lighting is well handled. Those responsible for the music and orchestra of seven pieces are deserving of distinct credit, because during my visit there seemed to be absolutely nothing to criticise in the matter of music. It was, I believe, as well, or better handled than any I have, up to date, heard in a theater of similar class.

The owner is Mr. Joseph Quinn, and, as I have said, the manager, Francis A, Mangan; both courteous and affable gentlemen, quite willing to listen to criticism as well as to praise. Arthur Bausch and James Howard are in charge of projection and, let me tell you, it's some projection, too. The screen is of plaster, coated with some sort of preparation, and in all my experience I don't think I have seen a picture projected with better, purer light tone. The whites were remarkably pure and the picture stood out clear cut and sharp. The screen was surrounded with a border of black which, at a guess, is five or six feet wide at top, bottom, and both sides. The operating room is, wonderful to relate, fairly well located. The lens is somewhat above the center of the screen, but not sufficiently so to produce noticeable distortion. The room was ample in size when it was built, but, as I have pointed out, increase in length of modern projection machines has made necessary an increased depth of two feet front and back. Two Baird machines are certainly delivering high class results on the screen, but there is barely room for the operator to pass between the lamp control handles and the rear wall of the room; also the observation ports, while ample in width (about 12 inches), are located too high, which acts as a severe handicap in the producing of perfect results on the screen. I advised Neighbors Quinn and Mangan to lower those ports at least 6 or 8 inches, and do it NOW

The projection was simply beautiful. I watched the picture for at least half an hour before the operators knew I was in the house, and the speed left absolutely nothing to be desired. True, there was some light trouble during that time, but it acted like Brother Bausch said it was, and I believe him, due to a faulty core in the carbon, which is, of course, something entirely beyond the control of the operators.

And a remarkably convincing proof of the value of correct speed in projection occurred while I was watching the picture. At one point a marching column of soldiers appeared. Now as soon as the soldiers appeared the orchestra swung into a march, but the soldiers were marching too fast for the music. This was undoubtedly due to the camera, as the previous scenes had been projected at proper speed, but in the second scene the operator either reduced the speed of the projector, or the camera man had changed his speed. Anyhow, the soldiers were marching in perfect time, just as they would march in real life. The music then kept time with the marching, and the effect was simply wonderful. It was positively inspiring and brought a round of applause from the audience. Now if the speed of those marching soldiers had continued as it was in the first short scene, the music could not possibly have kept time, and the whole effect would have been utterly ruined.

Barring the light trouble, which I think was simply unfortunate and unavoidable, I would pronounce the projection at the Cumberland as being practically perfect, and the illumination of the screen—brilliancy and light tone—as good as I have looked at anywhere. Some managers who think they are getting good results on their screens, and some operators, too, for that matter, ought to go over and take a rubber at the Cumberland picture.

My compliments to Brothers Quinn, Mangan, Bausch and Howard. May their tribe increase.

As a last word I would again say, however, that men who are delivering the splendid results I saw on the screen at the Cumberland are deserving of better working conditions. Cut that back wall out, gentlemen, thus making an operating room of ample dimensions. It won't cost much, and it is entirely practical to do it, but whatever you do, cut out the bottom of those observation ports not less than 6 and preferably 10 inches, and stand not upon the order of doing it. You owe it to yourself and to your operators.

It's a Wonder.

L. F. Guimond, president of the Monticello Amusement Company, Monticello, N. Y., says:

> The transverter is in, and if it will stand up it is a plumb wonder. There never was a worse current for fluctuation than we have, and it is not noticed appreciably on the screen, even with both arcs going. We have enlarged the operating room, which is now 15 feet wide; also we have inaugurated a few new ideas, or ideas which we think are new, concerning which you will be informed within a short time.

All of which is interesting reading. The transverter is a good machine, as I have already said; also I have an ingrowing notion that it is going to make a little bit of history in current rectification in moving picture theaters before the story is all told.

Send Stubs.

N. C. Cotabish, General Sales Manager National Carbon Company, Cleveland, Ohio, with whom I took up the matter of deep carbon craters, asks for samples of carbon stubs which show this fault. Will operators who have experienced this particular trouble with National carbons kindly send two or three typical deep crater stubs to the National Carbon Company, Cleveland, Ohio, attention Mr. N. C. Cotabish, together with a letter of explanation as to the effect on the screen?

I would also suggest that those using Speer or other carbons which develop this fault send samples to the manufacturers, because this particular fault is not confined to any one make of carbons.

Film Mender.

M. H. Granholt, Long Beach, Cal., sends in a rather crude sample of a film mender he is preparing to place on the market. The device is designed to be sold at $1.50, and seems to be a practical instrument. I could not, however, make any very intelligent comment on this particular piece of apparatus until I have seen the finished product.

Accurate Focussing of Cinematograph Lenses.

The first requisite for obtaining a sharply defined image on cine film is that the lens be accurately focussed. The poorest lens made will make a sharper image at its focus than the best lens made which is out of focus.

There is scarcely any other conclusion to be drawn than that the fuzzytype school of photography has no place in cinematography. One might enter into a lengthy discussion as to why this is, but that is aside from the theme of this article.

Most cinematographers are prone to focus each scene upon the ground glass or upon the film for every different set up of the camera and many even focus between scenes in the same set taken at the same distance. This is decidedly wrong and a grievous waste of valuable time when it often occurs that the camera man used up from five to fifteen minutes of the entire producing company's valuable time in obtaining an accurate focus.

This is not a criticism of the photographer who composes his picture on the film aperture, although many take an unnecessarily long time for this operation also.

The fact of the matter is that no man can focus as accurately every time as a well mounted lens can be calibrated for focus and the camera man who has not taken the time to accurately scale his lens must be very inefficient in his focussing. Many of them do not seem to know that the focal distance of the lens is always the same for any object at a given distance from the camera. Others are content to work with a camera so ramshackle that even if they were to calibrate their lens mount it would not work the same two days in succession. A tape line measurement from the front of the camera takes but a moment and with the lens properly scaled on a solid mount the photographer is always sure of a sharp focus. The scale is almost indispensable to the topical operator whose work must often be made on the jump and he can soon learn to estimate with his eyes within a few inches or feet of the distance of the principal figure that he is taking. A few feet away from the camera the depth of focus is so great that it is easy to set the lens quickly between fifteen or twenty feet and the infinity mark and be absolutely sure of a sharp focus and he must have very poor judgment indeed if he cannot soon learn to estimate distances under fifteen feet within a very few inches. The more careful studio worker can always verify his judgment with the tape measure and in many cases can, by a proper arrangement of his focussing device be able to change his focus as a figure advances or retreats in front of the camera.

In this day of multitudinous effects of moving cameras on trucks and wheels and slide ways and moving cranes, it is essential that the up-to-date worker be able to change his focus while taking pictures.

We shall soon have practical motor-driven cameras and gimbal panoramas which may be turned in any direction without the use of two panorama handles at cone, as is now necessary to produce a straight diagonal panorama. These are logical conclusions and even to-day many of the effects must be produced by two and even three or more working simultaneously with one camera; so that the simplification of manipulation should even be sought by the operator who wishes to keep in the front rank.

Here are a few simple directions for scaling or calibrating a lens mount.

Before starting to scale your mount give your camera a thorough looking over, making sure of the following points:

First.—That the film in its travel past the aperture plate or frame opening is always in flat contact with the opening; that there is no possibility of the pressure plate sliding askew in its seat on the gate and producing an uneven pressure against the film; that the side guides are not so close together that they will, by pressure against the edges of the film, cause it to belly or buckle; that the fingers, claws or pins that feed the film down for each frame are in perfect alignment and do not wrinkle the film by a diagonal downward pull, caused by some pin engaging and dragging the film down by a pull on one side only; that the gate tension is always sufficient to hold the film securely against the frame place, but not more firmly than necessary so as to cause needless friction.

It is well to mention here also that velvet lined tracks, pressure plates and gates are not only an abomination when trying to obtain accurate results in focussing, but are also great scratch and static breeders and should be replaced wherever possible with some hard, non-corrosive metal polished to a glass smoothness, as perfectly straight and flat as can be obtained, and with short tapers and rounded edges at all points where they receive the moving film.

Second.—That the parts of the camera which hold the flange of the lens mount should be so rigid as to eliminate any possibility of there being the minutest change in the distance between the frame aperture and the lens mount. Wood is far too liable to warp and bulge to be trusted for a lens front board and any camera with a wooden front board supporting the lens, should be changed to one of metal or other rigid material and firmly connected to the metal frame of the camera by metal struts or columns to which it may be firmly screwed or clamped. Bayonet joints are used for this purpose in many cameras and where they are used they should be frequently inspected to see that they have not worn and permitted play between the locking keys and the lens frame.

Third.—The back lash or play or lost motion in the focussing mount itself should be reduced to a minimum. In many cameras, especially those where the focussing is done from the back by a system of rods and connections, it is impossible to eliminate a considerable amount of this lost motion; in which case if it can be assured that this backlash is a constant factor, that is, always the same, it may be advisable to calibrate in both directions.

For example, suppose the camera was focussed upon an object fifteen feet away and one wished to change the focus to ten feet, if the backlash were considerable the pointer might be moved back to the scale mark for ten feet without moving the lens, in which case the camera would still be focussed at fifteen feet and to make the lens move to the right focus for ten feet, the points would have to be pushed on to the mark for eight feet, although the backlash now being in the opposite direction would allow it to be brought back to the ten mark without moving the lens. As this backlash is generally a constant factor, the error produced by it is avoided by making two scales, one for the pointer when being turned in one direction and another for it when turned in the opposite direction. Such a focussing device is, of course, more sensitive to wear than any others and should be carefully checked for error at least once a month.

Having thus checked up the sources of error in the camera, we are now ready to scale our lens mount. For this we need a piece of very fine ground glass the same width as the film, a good focussing or small magnifying glass, a tape line, and a test chart. Lens testing charts may be obtained from any good optician: Bausch & Lomb or Wollensack Optical Company, both of Rochester, N. Y., each publish good ones which they would probably be glad to send for ten cents postage. For our purpose, however, a newspaper with some bold headlines will serve perfectly as well.

Set the camera up rigidly on the tripod and pin the newspaper or test chart against a well lighted wall, or if you can improvise some sort of light easel for the chart it will be much easier to move it accurately to the different distances than to move the camera. Place a short strip of film in the gate of the camera, remove the front board and, with calipers, compasses, or a finely divided scale, make sure that the distance from the film to a steel straight edge held across the camera front is exactly the same as the distance from the straight edge to the ground surface of the ground glass when it is held at the aperture instead of the film. If there is any variation in this distance the film is either buckled or out of contact and the cause should be sought and remedied. After checking the film in this way for a second time, we may now feel reasonably safe in going ahead with our calibration.

First rack your lens out as far as it will go and with the ground glass in place and making sure of minute sharpness move the chart or the camera until the chart is in focus. Now with the tape line, measure the distance from the front board to the chart. This distance will be the closest that you can bring an object to your camera and have it remain in focus. This distance depends on the range of the focussing mount and is ordinarily one to three feet. If you wish to make closeups of small visiting cards or other small objects you can do so by using a supplementary lens like the kodak portrait lens or have a mechanic make you an extension ring one side of which fits the lens flange and the other side the lens mount. By the use of this you can extend the distance between the lens and the film and thereby the magnification which you can obtain.

With a sharp steel point mark this as the first point on your scale and the distance which it represents; then at successive greater distances, each carefully measured and recorded on your scale, complete your range of distances, 18 inches, 2 feet, 3, 4, 5, 6, 8, 10, 12, 15, 20, 35 and infinity being a good range. Distances between these can be easily estimated as being proportionately between the nearest known distances on the scale, although for objects closer than three feet, unless your scale is marked in differences of a few inches, it is safer to use the ground glass; as the nearer the object the greater the change in the focal distance of the lens.

If you have followed these directions closely you can now be sure, with the aid of your tape measure, of getting your pictures in focus every shot.

Music for the Picture

Conducted by CLARENCE E. SINN and S. M. BERG

Musical Setting for "Jaffrey." Released by the Frohman Amusement Corporation.

(Suggestions prepared by S. M. Berg, by special arrangements with G. Schirmer, Inc., music publishers, New York.)

THIS "Musical Suggestion Cue Sheet" is not designed to solve every possible musical requirement of the film, but is intended as a partial solution of the problem—what to play for the picture. It has proven to be of great assistance to the leader, not only by relieving to a degree the tedium of rehearsals, but by assisting materially in overcoming those conditions encountered when the film is not available until the hour of performance.

Musical Suggestion Cue Sheets can be obtained free of charge by managers from their local exchange in advance of the date of release. This will afford to the progressive leader an opportunity to acquaint himself with the general character of the film drama he is to portray with his orchestra.

Together with the suggested music at the title or descriptive cue where it is to be played, the tempo or characteristic is given so that the leader can select or substitute any or all of the numbers from his own library, thereby avoiding any financial outlay though still carrying out the interpretation.

The timing of the picture is based on a speed of 15 minutes to a thousand feet. The time indications will help the leader to anticipate the various cues which may consist of the printed sub-title marked T, or a described action marked D. For instance: 8½ T "Bad news" is a sub-title and is printed reading matter on the screen. But 42½ D "When Jaffrey sees Dora" is a description of action.

The scene of this story is laid in England with the exception of the opening, where two of the principal characters are in the Balkan States. The plot hinges about Jaffrey Chayne, a war correspondent, Doria, an English girl, and Liosha, a Balkan girl. Liosha is a wild product of the Balkan Mountains who marries Jaffrey's companion. Upon his death Jaffrey assumes protection of her and takes her to England. Doria marries Adrian Boldero, whom she believes to be a novelist of great genius. Jaffrey loves her and would do anything to please her. Liosha has come to have a great regard for her guardian, but it is not returned. Adrian dies and Jaffray discovers that the novel bearing his name was stolen. In order not to destroy Doria's illusions of her husband's greatness Jaffrey writes a novel which he publishes under Adrian's name. Later he proposes marriage but is flatly refused. He then takes an ocean journey with Liosha. Returning to England, he finds that Doria has discovered her husband's imposture and is willing to accept his proposal of marriage. He' however, has discovered the sterling worth of Liosha and the story closes with the assurance of their future happiness.

The musical interpretation depends upon the usage of the two themes as suggested:

THEME A is "The Old Mother," from Dvorak's "Gypsy Songs."

THEME B is "Love Song" by Flegier.

Time schedule: 84 minutes (six reels—about 5,600 feet).

The Organ.

By S. M. Berg and Norman Stuckey.

The organ is the largest and most powerful of musical instruments, and of great antiquity, trustworthy accounts reaching back to the 2nd Century B. C.

Up to the 10th Century A. D. the organ appears to have been a very primitive instrument, with a diatonic compass of two octaves at most; the pipes were all flue pipes, constructed in much the same manner as those at present. Reed pipes were not introduced until the fifteenth century.

As early as 980 we hear of an organ at Winchester, England, which had four hundred pipes and two manuals, each with a compass of twenty keys, and with ten pipes to each key.

The keys of the early organs were so broad, the whole action so clumsy, that in playing the plain-song melodies, the clenched fists or even the elbows were used to depress them.

Improvement has been steady, and chiefly due to German, English, French and American organ builders.

Formerly the wind of an organ was supplied by a blower and handle, the same as an ordinary pump, but in this advanced age, modern organs derive their wind supply from an electric motor.

The action of old organs—the tracker action—was extremely difficult to play, as much muscular power was required.

It would be impossible to play a tracker action organ an entire evening as some organists are expected to do now, who play for moving pictures.

The idea of applying electricity to the organ mechanism occured first to the English organist, Dr. H. J. Gauntlett and the first attempt at an electro action was patented by him in 1852. The idea was developed by the English organ builder Charles Spackman Baker, in collaboration with the French organist Dr. Peschard. The first Electro-pneumatic organ was created by them in 1867 in the church of St. Augustin, Paris. Hil-

Marguerite Courtot Joins Famous Players.

Popular Film Favorite to Co-star With Owen Moore in Adaptation of Edgar Selwyn's "Rolling Stones."

MARGUERITE COURTOT, one of the most popular of the younger motion picture favorites, has been engaged by the Famous Players Film Company, and will be starred by this concern in the Paramount program. Her first appearance under the new auspices will be as co-star with Owen Moore in an adaptation of Edgar Selwyn's great comedy-drama, "Rolling Stones."

Miss Courtot has been a motion picture star for four years and in these days of incessant changes has made an enviable record for herself by remaining with the Kalem Company for three of the four years. She later joined the Gaumont Company, which she left to join the Famous Players.

One of the unique features of Miss Courtot's remarkable success upon the screen lies in the fact that she had never been on the stage in her life. She was originally selected for motion picture work because of her striking beauty which manifested itself at such an early age that when she was but four years old she won the first prize offered by the New York Journal to settle the controversy as to whether American or English children were the more beautiful, thereby covering her British adversaries with confusion and envy.

Harrison Fisher, one of the most famous connoisseurs of feminine beauty among our celebrated illustrators, selected Miss Courtot as the model for his "Girlie" cover for the May number of Cosmopolitan Magazine in 1901.

Fortunately, Miss Courtot's very sensible mother realized that her daughter would require something more than mere beauty if she were to make her mark in this world and accordingly put her through a rigorous course of education, which included a year and a half of study in Switzerland. As a result Miss Courtot is a well-read, highly intelligent little miss, who enters upon her various roles with a complete understanding of their significance—a fact which is very apparent from the manner in which she develops them on the screen.

As her name indicates, Miss Courtot is of French parentage and it is one of the traditions of her home that only French shall be spoken there among the members of the household. This is one of the rules laid down by her mother in order to preserve her knowledge of the language. Miss Courtot, though she objects to the word "ardent," is nevertheless a devoted disciple of the outdoor life and is very fond of tennis. Motoring and dancing take up a great deal of her attention.

Miss Courtot does not aspire to play heavy dramatic roles, preferring simple stories of country life and light comedy-dramas to other vehicles. She does not object to playing the rustic lad, if necessary, as she proved by scoring a great success in "The Barefoot Boy."

In "Rolling Stones" Miss Courtot will be under the clever direction of Del Henderson, whose first production for the Famous Players will thus present as co-stars two screen favorites of long standing in Miss Courtot and Owen Moore.

A CORRECTION.

It was erroneously stated in a recent issue of The Moving Picture World that Edward Hines was now the owner of the Cozy, Lyric, and Princess theaters in Austin, Minn., and that F. F. Latta had purchased the Lyric. As a matter of fact the Lyric has been in the possession of the Cozy Company, Inc., of Austin, for the past two years. Mr. Latta is president and treasurer of that company. Mr. Hines does not own any of the theaters mentioned. They are all owned and operated by the Cozy Company, Inc., which is also building another moving picture theater to be known as the New Park, which is to be opened in October next. S. G. Latta is secretary of the Cozy Company.

Sixth Exhibitors' Convention

Thursday's Events—July 13.

The morning session was devoted entirely to routine work. A good deal of this routine work consisted of the report of the committee on the constitution and by-laws of which Chas. Phillips, of Wisconsin, was the chairman. The most material changes proposed by the report of the committee and accepted by the convention had reference to the national vice-presidents. Mr. Phillips said that the committee had carefully examined this matter, and had come to the conclusion that the national vice-presidents were superfluous and served no particular purpose. He proposed, on behalf of the committee, to substitute in place of the section dealing with national vice-presidents a new section giving all the duties and responsibilities that had heretofore devolved on the national vice-presidents to the respective State presidents. Another important change was the addition of a new proposal to article 3. The new proposal reads as follows:

> "There shall be a laws and legislative committee composed of five (5) members who shall be elected by the convention."

The per capita tax was reduced from $2 to $1. It was also provided in the report of the committee that the committee of credentials hereafter shall consist of one member from each State selected by the State delegation. This latter part of the report was rejected by the convention, while the other amendments were carried unanimously. The reading of the report, which was a lengthy one, took considerable time, and the discussion on the various proposed changes was often protracted and technical.

Afternoon Session.

The afternoon session was the star event of the convention. A committee consisting of Walter W. Irwin, Wm. M. Seabury, Paul H. Cromelin and L. L. Levine appeared before the convention to plead for the adoption of the proposals drafted by the Delmonico Conference. The first speaker to be heard in support of the plans outlined at the Delmonico Conference was Mr. Irwin. He said:

Gentlemen of the Convention: In behalf of the sub-committee appointed by the Committee at Large on the organization of an association embracing the entire motion picture industry, I desire to express our appreciation of your courtesy in extending to us the privilege of the floor of your convention.

On this occasion, I am not addressing you as an officer of a company, nor as a representative of any particular branch of the industry, nor as a committee of any clique or faction, but solely as a representative of upwards of 120 gentlemen, from all of the branches of the great art and business of motion pictures, who seek the welfare of the whole industry, and who believe that its protection and promotion can only be brought about by proper and equitable organization.

At a luncheon held in New York, June 8th, largely attended by representatives of all of the branches of the industry, including your National Secretary, Mr. Delves, and the officers of the various state and local exhibitor organizations, a resolution was unanimously passed in support of the principle of organization.

Remarks and discussions which preceded the passage of this resolution, clearly demonstrated that everyone connected with the industry is of one mind upon the proposition that the time has now arrived when an industry so important to the public, so large in the number of its employees, and with such extensive investments, can no longer afford to continue devoid of organization for protection and promotion; but on the contrary must organize for the purpose of permitting us to present a solid front to our common enemies, and to gain the benefit of our combined influence.

In fact, it was recognized that the industry not only owes this duty to itself, but to the public, in order that the chief means of public amusement and education shall not be hampered or stunted in its development.

No other industry has so advanced in leaps and bounds to prosperity and a hold upon the public, and at the same time been so utterly devoid of knowledge of itself, or acquaintance with its personnel, and of influence in its own behalf.

Until recently a barrier has existed between the various branches of the industry, particularly between the two great branches, producers and exchangemen on the one part, and the exhibitors on the other, by which, instead of doing business with mutual confidence and co-operation, most transactions were conducted with commercial enmity, and consequently, at an economic sacrifice, and the industry has been torn by jealousy, suspicion and misunderstanding.

Such a condition leaves any industry open to attack by those who would destroy; but these destructionists are a blessing in disguise, for every young industry must go through a period of uncertainty, of suspicion and of misunderstanding; only to become united by enemies, common to all.

Invariably a common enemy forces those who have dealt at arms length to become acquainted, and acquaintance, in a majority of instances, leads to an understanding, to a settlement of differences, to co-operation and to mutual confidence and respect.

I know that it is apparent to you gentlemen that the time has arrived in this industry when every branch must consider itself an important member of the motion picture family. It must be self-evident that our domestic disputes and trials ought to be settled within the family circle instead of being displayed to those who would take advantage of them. That wherever a question arises which affects the entire industry, our attitude towards it ought to be determined by a majority vote. When we appear as a house divided against itself, regardless of which side must be right or wrong, we weaken the entire industry. So it has seemed to a great many, that if each branch of the industry, and each organization in any branch of the industry could be brought into association by which we could present for discussion and deliberation all questions affecting the industry as a whole, that the minority in all instances, after a full and free discussion, ought to be willing, and would be willing, to abide by the rule of the majority.

Everyone of us, at times, has been in the minority, convinced that we were right, only to subsequently learn that the majority was right. As a matter of fact, the majority very seldom goes wrong.

It likewise must be self-evident to the exhibitors that neither their national association nor their state or local associations can be as effective in matters pertaining to the industry as a whole, as they would be if we were working in conjunction with all of the other members of the motion picture family. In any event it has become perfectly apparent to the other branches of the industry, that they cannot produce the desired results in behalf of the whole industry, except by the co-operation of every branch, including the exhibitors with their tremendous influence extending over the entire country. This has been proved time and again. So far no organization in any single branch of the industry, exhibitors or otherwise, has been effective enough in itself to produce the desired results, although in many instances good has come from their efforts.

For instance, we have just escaped the Cristman-Wheeler Bill by a narrow margin in New York, and we only made that escape through an appeal to the Governor by the whole industry. Had the industry been at work as a whole from the beginning, that bill never would have gotten out of the Assembly, and we would not have been forced to a desperate effort at the last moment. In fact, the bill was so absurd that, had the industry, as a whole, brought its provisions and explained its effect to a man of the intelligence of Speaker Sweet, it probably would not have been reported from the committee. The same remarks apply to Ohio, Kansas and Maryland.

And, if we get together as sensible business men, and bury the jealousies, suspicions and animosities of children, we will be able to cause the revocation of the censorship legislation in those states.

For these above reasons, those at the luncheon on June 8th constituted themselves a Committee at Large for bringing into association each branch of the industry for protection and promotion through concerted influence and effort. A Committee of Twelve was appointed to endeavor to work out a plan which would embody each branch of the industry, and which would be fair and equitable to all alike.

This sub-committee formulated a plan which was presented at a second luncheon last week and unanimously approved.

The plan, instead of attempting to destroy or weaken any existing organization, such as the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, has for its foundation the fostering and strengthening of your organization and of any similar organizations that may come into existence, for it was the belief of the committee that such an organization as yours ought to be aided and encouraged, so that it will attain its greatest effectiveness and have for its membership, all of the exhibitors of the country. In fact, it takes for its example, the national and state governments, by which each branch shall govern itself, shall determine all questions within itself, just as do the states, shall be encouraged and helped to strength and influence, and shall only be governed by a majority of the entire body in instances affecting the industry as a whole; just as the national government acts in behalf of all the people when all are affected or threatened; and at the same time the plan furnishes a channel through which each branch may become acquainted with the others and an amicable adjustment of internal differences effected; for it is felt that all reasonable men need is a means through which to understand the viewpoints and difficulties of each other, in order to arrive at a fair disposition of questions in controversy.

In fact, this plan proposes that no exhibitor shall become a member of the associated branches of the industry except by joining the Motion Picture League of America, and it is believed that if this association of the branches, this federation, is brought to its proper strength and influence, that there will be no exhibitor, big or little, who will not want to have a voice in the affairs of the whole industry, and who, therefore, will be compelled to join the Exhibitors' League of America in order to give expression to his views and exert his influence.

Mr. Irwin concluded amid applause. He had been listened to with utmost attention and it was clear that his plea was producing a great impression. He was followed by Mr. Seabury and Mr. Cromelin, who were rather brief in their remarks, pointing out that the previous speaker had covered the ground with much thoroughness. Mr. Levine of Brooklyn also spoke in support of the Delmonico proposals. Mr. Levine was the only exhibitor to do so. At this juncture, Mr. Rembusch of Indiana asked for the floor, but when the convention limited him to five minutes, he smiled and declared that in such a short time he could not do justice to his subject, and he therefore contented himself with a very brief comment on the situation. Carl H. Pierce was invited to the platform and introduced a number of prominent Paramount personages, among them the president, Hiram Abrams, who made a brief and pointed speech, and Wm. L. Sherry, John C. Flinn, who appeared as the personal representative of Mr. Lasky, and who was applauded. A large number of prominent Paramount exchange men were also introduced and one after another arose and bowed to the convention. Quite a commotion was caused by an incident which immediately followed these peaceful and perfunctory proceedings.

The redoubtable Louis J. Selznick, of the Clara Kimball Young Company, appeared on the platform and was greeted with applause and a volley of questions. The one question which arose above the din was this, "Tell us about the $100 a day proposition." Mr. Selznick smiled and professed his willingness to spend the time of the convention and his own time in illustrating. He proceeded to do so and presently found himself pronouncing a passionate eulogy upon the merits of his films. No one stopped him and he thoroughly enjoyed his task when at last it struck President Herrington that the convention was being used as a valuable advertising medium whereupon he requested Mr. Selznick to speak on topics of more general interest. Mr. Selznick smiled happily and absolutely cool and unruffled declined the opportunity to make a general speech and with a remarkable bow he descended from the platform. He was followed by Marcus Loew, who immediately went into an autobiographic recital. He spoke of the early days of the industry and of his own adventures, trials and tribulations. When he had concluded his reminences he assured the convention that he would be glad to do anything in his power, whereupon from every delegation on the floor came the cry "Join the organization."

This concluded the afternoon proceedings and after a committee of twenty had been appointed to report on the proposals of the Delmonico Conference an adjournment followed. The committee of twenty, whcih consisted of the six members of the committee on resolutions and fourteen special committeemen, immediately went into session and had a lively discussion for the rest of the afternoon and evening. At 6 o'clock the heat of the room and the excitement of the debate made an adjournment advisable and it was decided to hold a night session. The night session lasted until the early hours of the morning and resulted in a divided report, 15 of the members of the committee voting to accept the proposals of the Delmonico Conference and five voting against the acceptance.

Friday's Events—July 14.

The first order of business on Friday morning was the reading of reports from the national officers. The reports were approved and filed. The president's report was as follows:

Gentlemen: As president of our league, I wish to say, that when I was elected as the head of your league July, 1916, there was at that time states affiliated with our national league, and small prospects of securing any more members, and as disrupted as was our organization, the former secretary, W. R. Wilson, refused to turn over the books and accessories of his office, in that way making it impossible for the officers of your league to start out in any satisfactory way on the work of reconstruction; but I am pleased to say that our organization is better today and is built on a stronger foundation than at any time in its history, and I wish to thank the members of the executive board and the many exhibitors who have helped to make this possible.

Now during the past year there have been many things in the form of legislation detrimental to our industry that would work a hardship on us exhibitors, and your officers have never been found wanting, as when it was for them to be there, they were always on the firing line, and I am proud to say that on the Smith-Hughes Censor Bill before Congress, the exhibitors were united in the opposition to this bill. We cannot say the same for the manufacturers, and I am satisfied that if it were not for the action of the league, you would have had saddled upon you another foreign imposition, in the form of a tax on the gross receipts of your theater, and I am sorry to say that such legislation was put forth by an organization representing part of this industry.

The treasurer's report submitted by Peter Jeup showed a total receipt for the year up to July 13, 1916, of $1,812.90, which, with a balance from the previous year of $775.55, gave the league a total of $2,688.45 to work with. Of this sum $1,713.10 had been disbursed, which left a balance of $875.45.

The report of the secretary covered the same ground as that of the treasurer.

After the reports of the national officers had been accepted and filed, a resolution was passed thanking the four members of the committee on education at Washington, who had submitted a minority report opposing federal censorship. The members are: Frederick W. Dallinger, Massachusetts; Edmond Platt, New York; W. W. Rucker, Illinois, and Caleb Powers, Kentucky. A resolution was introduced by Mr. Megown, of Cleveland, for the oppointment of a general manager of the next national exposition, who is to furnish a bond of $10,000. The resolution was carried.

It was decided unanimously to send to Congress a protest against the proposed imposition of a new tax on motion picture theaters.

There was a revival of resolutions all around. One resolution provided for a protest against asking exhibitors to pay for a serial which might start out well and finish poorly. It was adopted. Another resolution denounced legalized censorship and condemned in very emphatic terms the attitude of certain producers who had publicly favored a legalized form of Federal censorship. Before the vote on this resolution was put, Max Stearn, of Columbus, Ohio, arose and claimed the floor. Upon inquiry the fact developed that Mr. Stearn was not a member of the organization and had not made any application for membership. Mr. Phillips, of Wisconsin, said that if Mr. Stearn would make application for membership the convention would be glad to hear from him, but the convention could not afford to be responsible to the public for utterances made on the floor of the convention by non-members. A point of order was made against Mr. Stearn and immediately sustained by the chair. Mr. Stearn declined to make application for membership.

Upon motion of Judge Tugwell, of California, the convention took up the election of a board of directors which is to represent the exhibiting interest in the new organization formed under the jurisdiction of the Delmonico conference. The following were elected: Thomas Furniss, M. A. Choynski, Frank Rembusch, Charles Phillips, Louis Blumenthal, L. L. Levine, A. P. Tugwell, Samuel Trigger, Peter Jeup and Frederick J. Herrington. These ten were elected out of about twenty-two candidates.

Friday Afternoon Session.

When the convention reassembled in the afternoon, every delegate sat expectantly in his seat. The usual buzz and murmur which defies the chairman's gavel at every convention were conspicuous by their absence. The sergeant-at-arms, the genial James Gilosky, of Minnesota, began to scrutinize every man who wanted to enter and the doors of the convention, which had stood wide open, were now closed and carefully guarded. It was plain that the big event of the convention was approaching—the election of national officers. The campaign managers of the various candidates fidgeted nervously in their seats while the candidates themselves could not entirely supress their emotions. There was a momentary relaxation when Mr. Choyński, of Chicago, arose and offered a motion to the effect that only one national exposition a year was to be held and that the national league would under no circumstances endorse or support any other exposition wherever held. Mr. Choynski made a telling speech in favor of this motion.

"The holding of so many expositions," he said, "is altogether unfair to the producers. They are asked to contribute both money and their stars to make these conventions or expositions successful. How can they make pictures if their stars are chased all over the country? The producers, of course, do not want to refuse and it puts them in a very delicate and difficult position. I think it is only right that this convention show its good faith to the producer by helping them out of his dilemma. We are going to provide them with an alibi if they are hereafter solicited either for money or for stars by expositions other than the national exposition."

Mr. Sweeney, of Chicago, spoke strongly in support of this motion. He said he hoped that such a thing as having three expositions, such as was the case this year, would never occur again, because it was obviously unfair to the producers. Mr. Phillips, of Wisconsin, was the only one who opposed the motion, which was carried unanimously.

In the meantime the expectancy of the delegates had risen to the point of impatience. Judge Tugwell applied the safety valve at the psychological moment when he announced that the convention would presently proceed to the election of national officers and that nominations were in order. The judge kept the platform after he had made this announcement and a brief pause followed. Everyone was eager to see and hear what the next step might be when the speaker told the convention that he had to make a preliminary announcement.

"I have been requested," he said, "to say on behalf of one man who has been prominently mentioned as a possible candidate, that he will under no circumstances accept the nomination. In fact, he has asked me to tell you that if you will nominate and elect him, he will resign immediately and leave the hotel and the city. No one more than I regrets this fact, for I am referring to Thomas Furniss, of Minnesota. (Applause.) His friends upon the floor of this convention are many and his fitness for the great office has impressed itself on all who have come in contact with him. I am, indeed, sorry that he has taken such an attitude, but I can do no more than announce it to you with expressions of regret in which, I am sure, all of you share."

Again the speaker paused. From the back rows came a subdued clamor and presently all over the hall there were cries of "Nominations!" (The speaker now took his seat and President Herrington turning to the alphabetical list of states before him called out: "California." Judge Tugwell immediately arose and in a brief but very effective speech nominated Frederick J. Herrington. There was much applause in which the entire convention took part. The references to Mr. Herrington's faith in organization and his spirit of unselfishness and sacrifice were warmly applauded.

Next came Florida, which passed. Profound silence followed the call of Illinois. Illinois had shown considerable political dexterity in marshalling its delegates, and no one really knew where Illinois stood. Mr. Choynski arose and said, "Illinois passes." This caused the first surprise of the convention, for it had been freely rumored that Illinois would give Rembusch at least a complimentary vote. Indiana followed and Dr. J. M. Rhodes nominated Frank Rembusch. The name of Rembusch was cheered. Iowa came next. Iowa, too, had been committed to a certain candidate by Dame Rumor. Many had believed that Iowa would either favor Rembusch or Herrington. Next followed Michigan, and the big chairman of that delegation, Mr. Kleist, announced the support of Herrington. Massachusetts passed, followed in rapid succession by Minnesota, Missouri and Mississippi.

The next great demonstration came when Lee A. Ochs, the president of the New York organization, was placed in nomination by Samuel Trigger. It had been felt that Ochs had been gathering strength with the passing of every hour. It had been common gossip that dozens of delegates had been converted to the Ochs candidacy after their arrival in Chicago. It goes without saying that his name was greeted by applause. The convention, however, was too intent upon the coming result of the election to lose much time in cheering, for it was felt all through the hall that with the naming of Ochs by New York a critical moment had been reached and that the next few minutes would decide the question which had been asked by everybody since the convention opened on Monday.

Trigger's speech was brief, dealing entirely with the practical qualifications of Mr. Ochs. When he sat down everybody knew that Lee Ochs was not a "hurrah candidate," but that he was taken very seriously and that his personality was the most interesting of any of the candidates. If there had been any betting it would at this moment surely have favored the chances of Ochs. Delegate Brophy, of Oklahoma, who looks as if he were ready to step into a cowboy picture without notice, and who is one of the most popular men on the floor, relieved the tension for a moment when he announced, "Oklahoma passes." For a second or two there seemed to be a revulsion in favor of Herrington as Ohio and Pennsylvania announced their support of his candidacy. Wisconsin passed. A motion was then passed to close the nominations for president and this motion was carried unanimously.

Before the balloting began it was evident that Rembusch would be eliminated at an early stage and that the contest lay between Ochs and Herrington, and that there was very little to choose between them. The suspense and uncertainty of the situation produced a good deal of subdued excitement in the hall.

And now came the great dramatic moment of the convention. Choynski, of Illinois, lean and tall, witty and forceful, took the floor. Everyone knew that upon the position of Illinois, as he would presently proclaim it, would depend the election. No man ever had a more attentive audience than Choynski and he seemed to thoroughly realize and relish the situation. He gazed about the hall with just a suspicion of a smile and then he set himself for his task. His face grew tense, once or twice he braced himself and then in his sharpest and most incisive manner he plunged into his work.

"Illinois," he said, "favors the man who has done things. I give all credit to Mr. Herrington for what he has done, but Lee A. Ochs is the man who has opened the doors that were shut and barred, and he has fought the battle which made it possible for us to be here. Illinois casts its vote for Lee A. Ochs, of New York."

A tempest of cheers swept through the hall. Everybody was glad that the tension was over and the gladness manifested itself in one noisy demonstration after another. Iowa then announced itself for Ochs; David G. Rogers, of Minnesota following suit, casting Minnesota's vote for Ochs. Isenberg, of Mississippi, did the same, and then came Massachusetts, which was pledged to Ochs by Horstman. Brophy added Oklahoma to the Ochs column. Wisconsin joined. Rembusch, of Indiana, now arose, announced his withdrawal from the race and the support of Indiana for Lee A. Ochs. All eyes were turned on Herrington. It was evident that he was defeated; it was known that he had made a strong campaign for re-election and that he had felt himself entitled to another term. That Herrington was laboring under a great strain was evident to every delegate, and it was likewise clear that he had the respect and sympathy of the entire convention. Some feared that in the bitterness of defeat he might force a protracted fight, engendering possible resentment California, Michigan, Ohio and Pennsylvania were known to be with Herrington to the last ditch. No doubt, there was a struggle in Herrington's mind, but however bitter it may have been, it was very brief. He relieved the general tension by announcing his withdrawal. After he had thanked the men who had stood by him, he paid a generous tribute to Lee Ochs and spoke feelingly of the battle they had fought shoulder to shoulder. Every sentence was punctuated with a cheer. When he finally announced his formal withdrawal and proclaimed his willingness to work as a private in the ranks, the convention went wild with enthusiasm. Three cheers and a tiger were given time and again, the demonstration lasting fully three minutes.

The rest of the national officers were elected by acclamation, as follows: First vice president, A. P. Tugwell, of California; second vice president, William Isenberg, of Mississippi; secretary, William J. Sweeney, of Illinois; treasurer, Peter J. Jeup, of Michigan. In response to persistent demands for a speech the president-elect mounted the platform and briefly announced that his policy would be one of action. He said he proposed to bring the league up to 100 per cent. efficiency. He said he was an advocate of open booking. He pleaded with the trade press for a fair deal to the exhibitor. He also asked for two more men on the executive committee, a request which the convention complied with at once. Mr. Ochs was listened to with great attention.

Saturday's Events—July 15.

Last day proceedings were brief. In the morning William A. Brady, by special invitation, addressed the convention at some length. His speech was well received and evoked considerable applause. He said:

Mr. President, President of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, Ladies and Gentlemen: In the first place, I want to thank you for paying me the honor of bringing me here. I deem it a great compliment. First, because it is an assemblage of men and women interested in probably the greatest movement that the theatrical business has ever known. I feel perhaps that too much importance is put on the value of what I might say here this morning, but, still, at the same time, I can say for myself that I have been in the theatrical business since the year 1888, and that, I believe, is something like 28 years. During that time I have held my own in any branch of the business that I have tackled. What I believe has been discussed at your convention during the past week is the question of organization, and I might look back a few years and still see the same things that have happened in the matter of theatrical organization during the past few years.

The first organization took place about 1890 in the Madison Square Garden theater in New York. At that time there was no theatrical man's note in the United States that was worth the paper it was written on.

We knew no club life, no home life, no position in any community in the United States. We were looked upon as vagabonds, strolling players. Since that time, the industry in the United States has grown until now I am told by expert people that it represents the fifth greatest industry in the United States. In 1890 it was ruined by a clique, a clique who at that moment was scheming to control all the theaters of the United States and to whip every producing manager in the United States to his knees and force him to stand by their dictation. It lived about three months. Eight years after that another organization was formed, known as the Theatrical Producing Managers' Association, and for a time it represented every branch of the theatrical industry in the United States.

People in the motion picture industry at that time had just attempted to have passed at Washington a bill which permitted them to appropriate any successful stage play without the formality of paying for it. The question of copyright came up. A bill was introduced in Congress with a joker in it. To turn any play into a picture and be forced to pay a fine of only $100 in order to use that play. Kalem wanted to film my stage play, "Way Down East." Right enough if they could have gotten away with it. It was simply a fight of two classes of people in the theatrical business and another. We found that this bill was to be sneaked through and a number of us went to Washington and met one of the strongest paid lobbies that has ever assembled in Washington. Every leading company in the motion picture business in America was represented. We were worked to death, and for a week we dealt with small people, people whom nobody knew, but on Friday, when it looked as if we were beaten and it would become a law, we sent to New York, and five or six prominent men, headed by Augustus Thomas, George Broadhurst and other men of national reputation, and in just an hour by the clock we licked that legislation to a finish and the Senate committee asked how we wanted the bill arranged. They said:

"Surely, you will allow that the motion picture business should be protected as well as yours."

We replied: "There is no reason why men writing motion picture scenarios should not have as much right to copyright them as we have for the stage."

Now, I am just bringing this thing up to show you the value of organization. Last week I was called into conference by Henry Morgenthau, President Wilson's campaign manager. Mr. Morgenthau said:

"Mr. Brady, you are well known as a supporter of Mr. Wilson. Would you suggest how we can use the field of motion pictures in this campaign?" I said, "Have you had any other suggestions?"

"Yes," he said, "we were told if we make pictures of Mexico, the President riding here, and there, etc., that perhaps the motion picture men would buy these pictures and exhibit them."

Buy them! Can you imagine us buying advertising from them when we are the one profession in the United States that is being persecuted to death by hostile legislation. I said to him: "I can suggest one scheme whereby motion pictures can be made to help you. Have President Wilson make a series of Kindergarten speeches; let him make them and we will illustrate what he is talking about and in one month you can have President Wilson in every water tank town and he can address all the people in every part of the United States personally."

Now, I am bringing this question to you so that you people will know that you possess in you the might of presenting any question or fight any question that is brought up to hurt you the same way as the President could address every man and woman in the United States by motion pictures. Nobody ever lost anything by being known as a fighter and fighting spirit can only be brought about by organizations. When I say organizations I not only refer to exhibitors, and I will go still further than this. I read in the paper about a producer who said that he believed that the actors and actresses should be put in a contract class with baseball players properly organized, they could wipe out the reserve clause in ten days. Therefore I suggest that actors and directors be admitted into this organization so that those men and women can be in touch with the industry and realize what they are doing to themselves, their industry, their act. I remember one director who, less than two years ago, worked for me for $40 a week and who is now getting $450 a week. The day will come, if I live, when I will see him with a dirty collar and unblackened shoes, standing in Long Acre Square, looking toward Heaven and he will say:

Don't let them come here, gentlemen. Send a committee to Washington. Demand a hearing. We are human beings, business men, and we deserve square treatment. Don't put anything on your screen that you don't want your own daughter or your own child, to see. I introduce into your organization a decree that any man who maliciously makes a dirty picture be ostracised. The other day in Long Branch I met a big man, a theatrical manager. He said to me, "Bill, we have got a picture in New York, the dirtiest thing I have ever seen—and if we can get it by the censor board we will clean up." For God's sake stand for cleanliness. Stand for decency. Never in the history of the theatrical business since 1880, and no man in the United States knows more about this than I do, can say with safer assurance that there never was any period in the theater business in the United States in which malicious plays were produced that lasted over two or three months and the producers suffered for it afterwards.

You may present a dirty picture on Tuesday night, but you will hurt your clean pictures for the rest of the week. You are not only disgracing yourself in your own community, but disgracing the organization. I came to Chicago with a little girl and I was amazed to see a couple of thousand people at the depot waiting to see her get off the train. What does she stand for? I refer to Miss Mary Pickford, and she stands for cleanliness. Now, gentlemen, I come to the most serious part of my talk. The business part of it. On my way out here I had opportunity to read the Chicago newspapers and in every large advertisement I read these words, "Death to the program."

What does the program represent? If you run six features a week, you are getting productions which cost at the minimum of $150,000. The actual cost of these features is not less than $25,000. The man in Peoria, Illinois, who plays Metro, Paramount, Triangle, World; plays them for the first time, is getting material which is costing somebody $150,000 a week, and lo and behold, here comes this Lochinvar who tells "Put the program out of business." Are you going to depend upon him? Put the program out of business! He did put one program out of business. I like the man. In one way he is one of the most brilliant men that in my thirty years I have ever met.

The best trader keeps his word, when he can, and when he wants to, but if you can't pay $30 or $40 a night now to the companies who are putting their business into your hands, what is the result? The product decreases 300 per cent., and therefore, by the natural law of averages, the price will increase 300 per cent. Therefore, I say to you gentlemen, that the program is the spine of the business. These reputable men who are working day and night and who are paying money out on a gamble are doing so to please you also. Stick to the ship that carried you over the danger points until the ship starts to sink, but don't get on another ship that may sink a damn sight faster than that one. I don't know whether anybody else has mentioned this thing in this convention. The motion picture business has been using up material so fast that an alarming condition is going to appear presently. In reading the criticisms of exhibitors I find one line constantly appearing: "We don't want romance, we want modern stories." There are just so many modern stories. So many things can happen between a woman and two men or two women and a man. Don't tell your branch man "We don't want romance." Get your public used to it so that you can put Dickens Shakespeare, Thackeray, Tolstoi, etc., before them, then you open up to the motion picture industry an enormous field of stories, once you bring them out of the hysteria of perils of divorce, the poor old shop girl and when Nellie left home. I remember when every murderer, divorce, shop-lifter and every girl who had done something sensational had a play written around them. Result: One Saturday night something hit the theater placing these things. Davis and Keogh had 21 companies on tour doing these plays and one Saturday night something hit them and the following March the 21 companies disappeared.

Therefore, I say to you gentlemen in conclusion, look up, don't look down. Don't let anybody walk on your toes. Fight to a finish. Fight for clean stories. Fight the crooked, grafting politicians through your screen. Then you will get attention. Then you will get the representation in Congress you are entitled to and which you ought to have. You will get more by fighting than by watchful waiting. We won't go for Mexico, because in Mexico we would be fighting a lot of half-starved greasers, but here we have to fight a lot of fat, greasy, miserable grafters, Judas Iscariots who hold the fat palms of friendship out while the other is hidden and holds a dirk with which to stab you to the very vitals.

Mr. Brady's speech was received with close attention and at its conclusion genuine appreciation was expressed by the delegates assembled.

The last moments of the convention were given over to a few routine matters. The delegates listened to the reading of the resolutions to be sent to Congress, the text of which sets forth the duty of constructive statesmanship to foster every educational and civilizing agency and therefore the screen ought to be as free from taxation as the book or the newspaper. The proposed tax amounts to one-half of one per cent. of the gross receipts of every motion picture theater. On Thursday a conference will be held in New York by all of the branches of the amusement world to take concerted action.

The next convention will be held in the first week of July, 1917, in Chicago. Ernest Horstman of Boston and Alfred Hamburger of Chicago were added to the executive committee, ex-President Herrington was appointed national organizer, at a salary of $2,000 per year, and A. H. Frank of Chicago appointed manager for the next convention.

PLAYERS ENGAGED AT UNIVERSAL CITY.

The Universal announces that it has engaged Harry M. C. Collins and J. H. Knowles Schenck, to play characters with the Paton Company at Universal City. A. E. Witting has been engaged to play characters in general stock, Priscilla Deane to play leads with Lyons-Moran Company and Thomas D. Moreno, comedian, has joined the Wallace Beery Company.

World Man Writes From Plattsburg

War Horse "Judso," Preparing for Eventualities, Describes How There's Something Doing Every Minute.

(Hanford C. Judson, of the Moving Picture World, is at the Military Training Camp at Plattsburg, N. Y. Mr. Judson is an advocate of Preparedness, and proves his sincerity by donning khaki and going "to it," man-fashion. The World man is not a "rookie"; he saw service in the Porto Rican campaign during the Spanish-American War. That the grilling he is undergoing up on the Canadian border has not dampened his enthusiasm, or materially altered the color of the glasses through which he looks on his surroundings may be judged from the following letter, written at the close of his fourth day of training.)

Dear B:—Hep! One, two, three, four—One, two, three, four—One, two—Hold your heads up; don't march like volunteers—two, three, four. Pay attention now, and get this: Right by squads. One, two, three, four, five, six, seven. Company halt! One, two, one, two, three!

One of my mates here says if I ever tell anybody in New York that I came up here for a vacation I'll be put in Matteawan and will never get out again; will be put in for attempted suicide—with intent to kill. I asked him who he intended to kill—Mexicans? "No," he said; "they never did anything to me—and if they did I forgive them right now. I'm a Christian. And in case there is any doubt about it I came up here to get as far away from the border as I could."

Such is life! Four and a half hours of drill in the morning; four hours of it in the afternoon; a short spell of drill just before supper and a short spell of physical exercise just before breakfast—that is, at 5:45 A. International Offices Move

Hearst's Motion Picture Company Takes Two Floors in Building at Seventh Avenue and Forty-ninth Street.

THE International Film Service, Inc., has grown with such tremendous strides that the quarters in the Journal Building at Fifty-ninth street and Columbus Circle have become inadequate. In order to find room for all of the many departments, two entire floors, the eighth and sixteenth, of the new building at 729 Seventh avenue, corner of Forty-ninth street, have been engaged and elaborately fitted up.

For more than a week past the offices have been gradually transferred into the Seventh avenue building. Saturday was "get-away day," and what remained of the equipment in the Journal Building was picked up bodily and moved to the new location.

The International now has quarters that are unexcelled for convenience and comfort. The entire sixteenth floor is devoted to the use of the executive offices. On the eighth floor are located the business departments, the New York exchange and the projecting rooms.

The International has three great films in rehearsal, two of which are serials that promise to be more elaborate and startling than any heretofore produced. Details concerning them will be announced shortly.

"HAM AND BUD" GET VALUABLE PUBLICITY.

Lloyd V. Hamilton, the "Ham" of Kalem's "Ham and Bud" team, last week received a marked copy of the Genbunsha, of Tokio, Japan, and found that this conservative Japanese theatrical journal had condescended to treat of "the movies" to the extent of a three-page article on the "Ham" comedies. "Ham" hasn't summoned up courage enough to engage a translator for fear the article may not be as full of praise as it appears, but he translated the illustrations readily enough and found no harm in them.

REPORT ON BERT WILLIAMS BOOKINGS.

Biograph's special representative has completed a tour of the General Film exchanges and is en route to New York. Everywhere he reports exhibitors have been very glad to make pre-release bookings on Bert Williams, his Ziegfeld Follies reputation making him a big box office possibility. Special advertising has made it possible to have every representative newspaper in the country with their hundreds of correspondents print announcements of Bert Williams' entrance in pictures which has resulted in the July 24 release of "A Natural Born Gambler" in two reels being booked solid. Announcement of the second Bert Williams comedy and the advertising in connection therewith will be made as rapidly as it can be prepared, a Biograph official states. He adds that exhibitors are looking forward to these comedies to bolster up their summer business.

Two Vitagraph Comedies

Will Be Released During Week of July 24 on the General Film Program.

PRETTY locations are one of the pleasing features of "A Cheap Vacation," a Vitagraph single-part comedy. The theme is very appropriate for hot weather audiences as it deals with the everlasting question, "Where will we spend our vacation?" Two meek husbands decide to summer at a hotel in the mountains, but their wives soon disillusion them and drag them along to camp. After lugging the equipment necessary to camp life for a distance of ten miles, the men, almost exhausted, hold a meeting to decide on a plan of action. They hire a tramp, instruct him to make life miserable for their wives and then sit back and wait developments. The women soon tire of the discomforts which the tramp furnishes and beg to be taken home, and, of course, their hubbies object most strenuously.

"A Jealous Guy," a one-part Vitagraph, is a speedy comedy of the slapstick type in which Hughie Mack, Vitagraph's heavyweight comedian, who has the leading role, certainly earns his money. He is knocked about and bruised up unmercifully and succeeds in keeping his audience in constant and continuous merriment. Lawrence Semon, in directing the picture, made capital of every comical situation. Interiors are entirely acceptable (until Hughie and his supporting wreckers get busy, but after they have finished very little remains intact). The photography throughout is excellent. The supporting cast, which includes Jewell Hunt and Edward Dunn, conducts itself creditably. Semon and C. Graham Baker prepared the scenario.

Universal Issues "Paralysis" Picture

Takes Scenes Under Direction of Physicians and Health Inspectors to Assist in Fighting Epidemic.

MOTION picture views which will be shown at special matinees to mothers in the districts of New York where infantile paralysis is raging were presented by the Universal Film Company to the Board of Health last week for public exhibition throughout the city. The pictures were taken by an Animated Weekly topical news cameraman at the expense of the Universal at the Rockefeller Institute at 66th street and Avenue A, under the direction of one of the aids of Dr. Simon Flexner, director of the laboratory for medical research.

Other views were taken with the assistance of two inspectors from the Board of Health in the South Brooklyn district, in the Erie Basin district of Brooklyn, on the lower East Side, in Richmond Borough and in the Bronx. Included in the film are scenes showing the affected districts, stricken children, sanitary precautions necessary to prevent the further spread of the disease, how mothers may detect the first symptoms of the disease in their children, "close-ups" of the medical treatment given the children, scenes showing the exodus of children from the city to the country to escape the plague, taken at the railroad and ferry terminals, and the activity of the quarantine, Board of Health and hospital authorities.

The "leaders" or titles on the film are written in English, Italian and Jewish so that all may understand. A representative of the Board of Health spent an afternoon at the office of the Universal Film Co., 1600 Broadway, assembling the picture, writing in the titles and preparing the film for exhibition at New York's 800 picture theaters.

The expense of making the picture will total $4,700 and this expense the Universal has shouldered in an effort to stop the spread of the disease. The fifteen prints made from the original negative for simultaneous projection in the picture theaters of Greater New York were presented outright to the Board of Health. No admission will be charged to the theaters where the pictures are shown.

SIDNEY MEYER A WINNER.

No. 1 of Volume 9 of World's Work, the weekly house organ of the World Film Corporation, announces that Sidney Meyer, one of the company's Omaha salesmen, is the winner of a contest for May. The company made no advance statement of its intention to award a prize to the salesman securing the largest number of contracts for May, so the "win" came to Mr. Meyer as a surprise indeed.

"I don't mind saying that keeping in close touch with conditions through reading your columns was a great assistance to me in winning," says Mr. Meyer in a letter to this office. We extend to Mr. Meyer our congratulations, and assure him that there are thousands of others in the film business who are keeping in touch with conditions through the same agency that he finds so helpful.

"The Selfish Woman."

A Lasky Feature in Which Cleo Ridgely and Wallace Reid Carry Off the Honors.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THERE is little depth to this production; the dramatic scaffolding is weak, but the strong personality of Cleo Ridgely and her clever handling of the principal part make ample amends for these shortcomings.

The plot is not only thin, but quite conventional. The story is built around the change of heart of a woman, who marries a man for selfish consideration and who, after marriage, is willing to sacrifice her husband's honor for the sake of money. Ambitious to the point of being unscrupulous, she makes common cause with her husbands' enemies and even descends to crime to accomplish her ends. The husband, whose part is well taken by Wallace Reid, opposes candor and manly dignity to all her plotting. He refuses to overcome her machinations by employing means similar to her own, but in a very subtle manner appeals to her sense of honor and loyalty. It will easily be seen under the circumstances that the success of the play must bring upon a skilful portrayal of the woman's psychology. It is in this that Cleo Ridgely comes to the rescue of the play. Her capable rendition of the part, her art in depicting the gradual change from blind, unscrupulousness to a recognition of her evil ways and an awakening of genuine wifely qualities are deserving of unstinted praise.

Nothing need be said in a Lasky production of the skill shown in the selection of types, in the creation of atmosphere and in the choice of splendid settings. One does not hear much of Art Director Wilfred Buckland, but his clever and conscientious work is very apparent in this as well as in all the other Lasky productions.

"The Grip of Evil."

New Balboa-Pathe Serial, by Louis Tracy, Dips Deeply Into the Tragedies That Beset Humanity.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THE first three chapters of "The Grip of Evil" give the observer an excellent idea of its strong sociological theme. Schopenhauer would have gloried in it and Ibsen would have been certain to applaud these opening instalments at least. It does not set out to deliberately prove that life is not worth living, but the hero, in his first adventures, runs only into the seamy side of things. Ingratitude, jealousy, treachery, murder and criminal carelessness—all these are met with in his search for the answer to the question: "Is humanity in the grip of evil?" We suspect that there may be a silver lining to the cloud later, but the opening reels are unsparing in their revelations of existing evils.

Roland Bottomley plays the part of John Burton, a factory hand in this country, who suddenly comes into possession of a title and a large inheritance in England. But he has already begun his humanitarian researches, having seen so much of the sadness of life. The first number, entitled "Fate," sets all these events before the observer. The hero himself has inherited his share of the weakness of humanity, his father having eloped with the maid thirty years previously and come to America. Jackie Saunders plays the feminine lead in each number, but her part is that of a different girl in each case. Only the hero retains his original identity.

"The Underworld" is the second chapter. In this John Burton catches a young porch-climber, known as Gentleman Joe, at work in his room. He feeds him and befriends him, trying to get him back upon the straight road. Gentleman Joe rewards him by the basest treachery. The action takes on a decidedly melodramatic turn in the second reel.

"The Upper Ten" is the third chapter. In this number the hero falls a victim to a society woman and her husband, who hear of his title and his fortune. They desire him for their daughter. The ball scenes are well staged. The tragic incidents occur in the second reel, where the old watchman and his wife kill themselves because of a failure of the stock in which they have invested all their savings. Then comes the injury of the girl by an approaching train, which is vividly pictured. Her lover, Ralph, deserts her after seeing that her facial injuries are permanent.

The serial thus far contains no humor and no romantic interest. In this respect it marks a strong departure from the prevailing type of serial and it will be interesting to see how the public will receive a continued narrative of this type.

"The Dream Girl."

Mae Murray Is Afforded Many Opportunities in Lasky Picture Made by Cecil B. DeMille from Jeanie MacPherson's Scenario.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

BECAUSE it is very well done, rather than because of any extraordinary quality in the story, "The Dream Girl" belongs among the good, if not the best of the Lasky pictures. If there were any doubts about the wisdom of starring Mae Murray after her performances in "To Have and to Hold" and "Sweet Kitty Bellairs," they are set at rest by her playing of a slum girl in this photoplay, from the pen of Jeanie MacPherson and produced by Cecil B. DeMille. That Miss Murray possesses a piquant charm is amply evidenced in her portrayal of the ill-used Meg, a pitiable waif, whose chosen place of refuge when her drunken father becomes unbearably brutal, is a barrel. In rags, or in costly gowns, the new Lasky star is a magnetic little creature, always spontaneously girlish. Her one mistake in this picture was in make-up—an all too obvious penciling of the eyebrows.

The perfection of Lasky photography, combined with ingenuity in achieving novel and striking effects, is revealed at the opening of "The Dream Girl" with the introduction of the characters in a manner suggesting their dominant traits. Very adroitly Director DeMille escapes a perfunctory exposition by making the first scenes as interesting as the initial paragraphs of a well-written novel. They contain the necessary information without presenting it in the bald manner, so unfortunately prevalent in less skillfully prepared pictures, and without conscious effort in memorizing names and relationships, the spectator comprehends the situation.

Of the plot prepared by Miss MacPherson little need be said, save that it is smoothly developed and plausible, according to the standard of romantic fiction. There are a few dramatic moments and some scenes of marked charm, usually due to clever bits of direction, or exceptionally expressive acting, such as that provided by Theodore Roberts in the role of Meg's dissipated father. In appearance and bearing Mr. Roberts gives a flawless impersonation of the uncouth product of the slums, besotted by drink. When Meg is about to be adopted by a millionaire, whose grandson has fallen in love with her, she explains that her father was a minister in Baltimore, and later, when the drunkard is confronted by this description of himself, Mr. Roberts meets the situation with a remarkable bit of subtle comedy acting.

Scenes pass from the slums to a girls' school, in which Meg is placed after her father is supposed to be dead, and then to the home of wealth where the girl is woed by her Sir Gallahad. All are well staged and effectivly acted by the players already mentioned, assisted by Charles West and Earle Foxe.

"The Fatal Wedding," a Three-Reel Adaptation of Popular Melodrama—"A Sailor's Heart," One-Reel Comedy.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

JUDGED by a high, artistic standard, "The Fatal Wedding," produced by Lawrence Marston several years ago and now reissued by the Biograph Company on the General Film program, has a number of shortcomings, but so has the play from which it is taken. As a stage melodrama of the old school, making direct appeals to the emotions of simple, unsophisticated audiences, "The Fatal Wedding" enjoyed long popularity, and still, no doubt, is being successfully presented in many parts of the country. The picture is a very fair reflection of the play. Neither one would be suitable for first-class theaters in the larger cities, but there are many other audiences ready to respond to the elementary pathos and heart interest of a production of this stamp.

Charles Mailes, Millicent Evans, Irene Howley and Walter Miller carry the principal roles, and if it seems that once in a while they act with unnecessary fervor, the tendency may be pardoned in consideration of the ultra-melodramatic nature of the story. Most of the exteriors were photographed in upper New York, the studio sets were adequate and the climax, showing the spectacular interruption of a wedding about to take place in a fashionable church was presented on an elaborate scale. "The Fatal Wedding" does very well for people who are easily moved to sorrow.

"A Sailor's Heart," a one-reel picture made in Quebec by Wilfred Lucas, is called a satirical comedy. It is a pretty production of mild comedy value, if one is prepared to be amused by the proverbial ficklesness of the susceptible sailor who has a girl in every port. Many times he declares: "You are the only girl I ever loved," leaves broken-hearted and bobs up in the next town with the same statement on his lips. Presently he is caught and the girls he deserts catch other men, so all is well. Mr. Lucas, playing the sailor, is assisted by Blanche Sweet.

"The Faded Flower."

Six-Reel Photoplay Written and Directed by Ivan Abramson —Rose Coghlan, Marguerite Snow and Alma Hanlon in the Cast.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

SYMBOLISM and sentimentality are the chief ingredients of "The Faded Flower," the latest photoplay written and directed by Ivan Abramson. The title gives the cue to the mood in which the author has approached his theme, a withered rose symbolizing the fate of a woman whose life is blasted by the unreasoning jealousy of the man to whom she is married. Every character in the play is touched by an excess of sentiment, and the subtitles have more than a generous share.

The story is not without interest, but lacks any big moments. Lillian Hill, a young stenographer, marries her employer, a man old enough to be her father, in order that everything possible may be done to restore her mother's eyesight. The girl is in love with a young playwright, who is yet to score his first success. Wilbur Mason, Lillian's husband, is a worthy man, but when his wife learns that her mother's blindness cannot be cured, and that her sacrifice has been in vain, she proceeds to treat Mason with coldness, although he is as loving and thoughtful as ever. The next move in the drama shows the playwright enjoying large royalities from one of his works. Mason has a daughter a few years younger than his wife, and when the playwright finds that he has lost Lillian he wisely concludes to console himself with Lillian's step-daughter. Mason mistakes the object of the young man's visits and charges him with winning his wife from him. The symbolic rose makes its first appearance during this scene. Mason's jealousy is of the most violent nature, and Lillian leaves her husband's home, returns to her mother, sickens and dies, and the deeply repentant Mason, who has been seized by a paralytic stroke at the bedside of his dead wife, consents to the marriage of his daughter to the playwright.

"A Faded Flower" is not a faultless example of the photo-playwright's art. Like all of Ivan Abramson's screen dramas, it is intensely human in theme and character drawing; but none of the men and women of the story are capable of big things, and their actions are "sicklied o'er with the pale cast," of a cloying sentimentality that will have no traffic with reason or common sense. The jealousy of Mason does little credit to his gray matter, and nothing but a want of mental vision could blind him to the purity of Lillian, as drawn by the author and embodied by Marguerite Snow. The wife, on her side, loses considerable sympathy by allowing her disappointment at the outcome of her mother's blindness to vent itself upon the man who is doing his best to make her happy. The playwright, in spite of the good sense he displays in marrying Anne Mason, is not a very forceful person, and seems sadly lacking in resentment when accused of trying to break up Mason's home. The tales with which Mary J. Holmes was wont to entertain a past generation possessed many of the qualities to be found in "The Faded Flower"; commonplace persons, devoid of the heroic, but drawn with many skilful strokes being thrown upon the screen by Mr. Abramson, accompanied by a background of carefully staged settings, during the action of his play.

The acting honors of the performance go to Marguerite Snow. In a role that offered every opportunity for excessive emotionalism, she displays a reserve power and ease of method that is highly commendable. When her scenes ring true, her acting strikes the same clear note, when the author grows

Scenes in which both the man and the maid claim credit for an heroic rescue contain whimsical comedy that blends very well with the vein of sentiment running through the picture. In regard to locations the production excels. Mr. Lockwood's boyish good looks make him ideal for the character of Kellogg, whereas Miss Allison possesses the grace and the freshness desirable in a society debutante.

"Davy Crockett"

Dustin Farnum in Pallas Subject Portrays on the Screen the Character Made Famous by the Late Frank Mayo.

THE portrayal on the screen of "Davy Crockett," a play made famous on the American stage more than a generation ago by Frank Mayo, results in a successful production from the pictorial viewpoint. Davy Crockett," as Pallas Pictures released it on July 13, is a pretty picture. Dustin Farnum in the role of the frontiersman is a factor in himself; and he is surrounded by a good cast. The subject measurably interests, but with one or two exceptions it reaches no particular dramatic heights.

Mr. Farnum makes a striking figure in his early eighteenth century border garb. He shows to no better advantage than when mounted on a spirited horse. His physique and his art combine to make an effective characterization. Winifred Kingston in the role of Eleanor Vaughn, the sweetheart of Davy, is convincing in her girlish simplicity. Herbert Standing as Hector Royston, the representative of Vaughn and the guardian of Eleanor, gives a strong performance. Lydia Yeamans Titus, the old favorite, is a motherly Mrs. Crockett. Page Peters is shown as Neil Crampton, and his impersonation of the "heavy" role takes on a pathetic and an unusual interest by reason of his recent accidental death by drowning.

The picture is staged by William Taylor. Mr. Taylor has selected beautiful spots for his backgrounds, the full quality of which Cameraman Scott has brought out. There are views of woods, mountains and landscape. One of the interesting features, especially for present showing, is a regular snowstorm, the ground being covered knee depth.

"Davy Crockett" will make good entertainment.

"The Girl and the Tenor"

One-Reel Kalem Comedy Which Introduces Ivy Close, the English Actress, to the Screen in This Country.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THERE is at least one rare feature about "The Girl and the Tenor," the one-reel comedy with which the Kalem company introduce Ivy Close to the American public: the lady's first entrance is made without the slightest "working up." All of "the pomp and circumstance" with which it is usually thought necessary to herald the coming of the star is dispensed with, and during the time Miss Close is before the camera she shows no desire to monopolize the center of the stage, but endeavors to work for the success of the picture to the best of her ability. Familiarity with her surroundings will give her an ease that she now lacks and her undoubted ability as an actress will then have full scope. Miss Close has much in her favor. She is a comely young woman, without any affectation of manner, and will be seen to the best advantage in parts that call for real feeling and a frank, wholesome personality. In "The Girl and the Tenor" she plays the daughter of an operatic manager who is trying to engage a celebrated tenor. The treatment of Charlie rescues her after a single-handed combat with the entire band of Gypsies and drives away with her in the van. Their vagabond joys are interrupted by a famous artist, who paints the girl so as to give prominence to the mark of a shamrock on one of her arms. The exposure of this picture in a gallery leads to the identification of the little girl and she is taken away from despairing Charlie, now madly in love with his companion in misery, but she refuses in the end to go without him.

The latter part of this story shows Chaplin in a new role, and he handles it well in spite of the necessity of being as funny as possible. "Caprice of the Mountains."

Fox Love Story with Backwoods Heroine Will Be Liked—Caprice and Harry Hillery in the Leads.

Reviewed by Hanford C. Judson.

THE first thing that one must say about "Caprice of the Mountains," the latest Fox feature, is that it is really emotional; it gets to where it sets out to go and carries the spectator along. This would not be true if it were not in a large measure artistic; but there is much in it that is easy to criticise. If art comes from knowing spectator-psychology, and if the artist wishes to appeal to a broad body of spectators, in intelligence somewhat below the critical, and knows just how far he can go with them, he can make a picture that will please mightily and still economize his mental effort. There is little doubt that the author and director (the latter is John Adolphi) have in this case willfully followed the cheap method of making a pleasing picture. Their picture was, we firmly believe, truly pleasing to the audience at the Academy of Music, where we saw the film, on July 11.

"Caprice of the Mountains"; we all know what kind of a story to expect from that title. Take any of them; they all have an element in common, with a backwoods heroine with straightforward simplicity and fervent affection, with smiles and tears carrying a somewhat elemental but clean love story and with a happy ending. In this case, June Caprice smiles and weeps through the scenes of the story, and is acceptable if not great. Harry Hillery is the manly hero. Several of the characters are better acted than the juvenile leads; but all do well enough. On the whole, the picture serves and we can recommend it to exhibitors as a film that will satisfy the young and simple-minded and everyone who comes in a reasonable spirit to be entertained. We cannot promise for the critic, but feel safe about the average spectator.

"Sally In Our Ally."

Famous Song Inspires Peerless-World Picture in Which Carlyle Blackwell and Murie Ostriche Are Starred.

WITH Muriel Ostriche appearing very winsome in the role of Sally McGill, and Carlyle Blackwell playing the Prince Charming character of Paul Taylor, "Sally in Our Alley," a five-part picture suggested by the popular song of a score of years ago, becomes a moderately entertaining photoplay. The story probably will be termed conventional; but at least it is wholesome and pleasantly romantic; moreover the production supplied by Travers Vale profits by a number of pretty scenes photographed on a large estate where Sally spends a brief summer vacation and meets the man of her dreams. Being inspired by a sentimental song it is natural that the photoplay should be exceedingly sentimental, also that it should depend largely upon simple pathos.

Sympathy is aroused for Sally by making her parents a most objectionable pair and giving her a miserable home on Pigtail Alley, where she may play in the street when she is not working in a factory along with other children under the legal age limit. A Lady Bountiful takes Sally and a number of her youthful companions to a beautiful estate in the country, and it is here that the poor girl, masquerading as a princess, meets a wealthy suitor for the hand of Mrs. Rockwell's snobbish niece. Of course, he is charmed by the fascinating and mysterious Sally, who refuses to explain who she is or where she came from, and when the girl is sent home in disgrace because she borrowod the finery in which to masquerade, Paul is suitably miserable.

The outcome of a story of this description is always a foregone conclusion. There is not much opportunity for uncertainty, save as to the nature of the happenings that will separate and then unite the predestined lovers. In this picture the incidents are varied, fairly interesting and not too wildly improbable for a frankly sentimental photoplay. Life in the tenements is depicted with sufficient realism and the director did not overlook the chances for appeal in presenting the unhappy condition of a number of factory children. Miss Ostriche and Mr. Blackwell are supported by Jean Shelby, Walter D. Greene, Pat Foy and Mrs. Foy.

IN this six-part offering, the Vitagraph company presents a drama of intense emotional appeal, written and produced by George D. Baker. The cast is large and evenly balanced. Edith Storey appears to advantage as Chonita Alvarado, a Cuban beauty. Harry Hollingsworth plays the role of Teddy Steele, the young fool from the States, who will not take advice and ventures too far with the native belle. Antonio Moreno plays the Cuban lover, Eulalie Jensen the faithful Donna Luz, L. Rogers Lytton the fiery Senor Alvarado, and Charles Kent the part of Van Allen, who narrates the story in a New York club.

There is a wealth of color and atmosphere in the production. The story has moments when it threatens to plunge into melodrama, but the natural development and forceful acting of the competent performers saves it from this fate. It maintains, as a result, a high level of intensity and moves on with attractive smoothness to the tragic climax in the last reel.

Briefly, the plot concerns a handsome young American who goes to Cuba with his uncle on business. He enters into a flirtation with Chonita and, despite warnings of her lover and his own friends, succeeds in bringing about her ruin. The girl, cast off by her proud sire, comes to New York as a cabaret dancer. She again meets the American and brings about his death by means of a deadly tarantula. The close is softened by a reconciliation with her father and her marriage to Pedro.

The production as a whole is one of exceptional strength.

"The River of Romance."

Youthful Sentiment Characterizes First of Director Henry Otto's Yorke-Metro Productions.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig.

IF PUBLISHERS of magazines deem it wise to give a light, sentimental tone to summer fiction there is no good reason why makers of photoplays should not be equally seasonable. No doubt "The River of Romance," written and directed by Henry Otto from a novel by E. J. Rath, will be good all the year round, but it is especially refreshing as a mid-July release. It is so delightfully suggestive of an ideal vacation in the Thousand Islands—the scene of the story—a vacation such as romantic youth dreams of experiencing, but never quite realizes because life is less kind than the creator of summer fiction. There is no problem here, nothing to puzzle one's brains about; rather a fresh, sweet story of an unspoiled pair of lovers, charmingly portrayed by Harold Lockwood and May Allison.

And it is not a hackneyed story at all—the meeting and romance of these two young people. William Kissam Kellogg, the heir to millions, does nothing more serious than break a valuable vase belonging to his uncle; yet, feeling in honor bound to pay for the ornament, he becomes the navigator of a one-cylinder motorboat for the conveyance of summer visitors to the islands. Rosalind chances to be one of his passengers and even with the seeming barrier of caste between them, the girl feels an interest in the handsome but inefficient owner of the decrepid craft. When the motor balks, she locates the trouble; they are forced to spend several hours together and by the time Rosalind reaches the island her friends are asleep. In attempting to enter the house she sets off the burglar alarm, and in preference to being discovered she braves the night and the river in a canoe. So the complications start and continue in merry succession, until the pseudo boatman carries off the heiress.

Scenes in which both the man and the maid claim credit for an heroic rescue contain whimsical comedy that blends very well with the vein of sentiment running through the picture. In regard to locations the production excels. Mr. Lockwood's boyish good looks make him ideal for the character of Kellogg, whereas Miss Allison possesses the grace and the freshness desirable in a society debutante.

THE portrayal on the screen of "Davy Crockett," a play made famous on the American stage more than a generation ago by Frank Mayo, results in a successful production from the pictorial viewpoint. and he is surrounded by a good cast. The subject measurably interests, but with one or two exceptions it reaches no particular dramatic heights.

Mr. Farnum makes a striking figure in his early eighteenth century border garb. He shows to no better advantage than when mounted on a spirited horse. His physique and his art combine to make an effective characterization. Winifred Kingston in the role of Eleanor Vaughn, the sweetheart of Davy, is convincing in her girlish simplicity. Herbert Standing as Hector Royston, the representative of Vaughn and the guardian of Eleanor, gives a strong performance. Lydia Yeamans Titus, the old favorite, is a motherly Mrs. Crockett. Page Peters is shown as Neil Crampton, and his impersonation of the "heavy" role takes on a pathetic and an unusual interest by reason of his recent accidental death by drowning.

The picture is staged by William Taylor. Mr. Taylor has selected beautiful spots for his backgrounds, the full quality of which Cameraman Scott has brought out. There are views of woods, mountains and landscape. One of the interesting features, especially for present showing, is a regular snowstorm, the ground being covered knee depth.

"Davy Crockett" will make good entertainment.

"The Girl and the Tenor"

One-Reel Kalem Comedy Which Introduces Ivy Close, the English Actress, to the Screen in This Country.

THERE is at least one rare feature about "The Girl and the Tenor," the one-reel comedy with which the Kalem company introduce Ivy Close to the American public: the lady's first entrance is made without the slightest "working up." All of "the pomp and circumstance" with which it is usually thought necessary to herald the coming of the star is dispensed with, and during the time Miss Close is before the camera she shows no desire to monopolize the center of the stage, but endeavors to work for the success of the picture to the best of her ability. Familiarity with her surroundings will give her an ease that she now lacks and her undoubted ability as an actress will then have full scope. Miss Close has much in her favor. She is a comely young woman, without any affectation of manner, and will be seen to the best advantage in parts that call for real feeling and a frank, wholesome personality. "An International Marriage" are, according to the description of a millionaire laundryman, of one fast color, and the color is yellow. Those who still cling to the idea of a United States monopoly of the manly virtues should be particularly appreciative of this production.

Under the direction of Frank Lloyd the Morosco Company assembled an able cast, headed by Rita Jolivet in the role of the daughter of a wealthy owner of a chain of laundries. Brent is the uncultured, honest, self-made father, ready to indulge his beautiful daughter though he may be ill at ease with her fashionable friends. Florence captivates Washington society with one toss of her pretty head. A duke and a count promptly fall under her spell while her life-long chum, an upright young congressman, looks on and bides his time.

In accordance with the regulations of the European court the duke does not marry a woman without a title, so Florence becomes the bride of the count, intending to get a divorce immediately. Meanwhile the congressman unearths a few unpleasant incidents in the lives of his foreign rivals, and at the point of a pistol demands the release of the girl that she may return to democratic America.

The most dramatic scenes are reserved for the concluding reel, in which Oglesby forces the issue with the count and wins Florence's freedom. For comedy, the picture depends chiefly upon the embarrassment of the self-made American—cleverly portrayed by Marc Robbins—when confronted by European formality. Courtenay Foote returns to the Morosco Company in the character of the duke, a role for which he is eminently suited. Other convincing performances are given by Elliott Dexter and Page Peters. The production was tastefully, even lavishly mounted at times, whereas the photographic work of James Van Trees was of the best.

"Purity"

A Seven Reel Mutual-American Feature Exploiting Audrey Munson, an Artist's Model.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

AUDREY MUNSON represents the perfection of womanly form, a distinguished model for painters and sculptors, a recognized type of physical symmetry, her poses are marvels of beauty without the faintest sign of suggestiveness. Her entire conduct in dress and out is that of a refined woman, and the role she is given enforces her native purity of mind. She is above all things artistic, entering into the spirit of her representations as one in love with what she has to accomplish with a winning sweetness that does much to disarm suspicion as to the motive for placing her grace and nobility of proportion on public exhibition in moving picture theaters. Whether or not her dignity and thoroughly professional attitude will convince local censors is quite another matter.

The chief added charm of the release lies in some splendid efforts at picture composition. Beauty is naturally the keynote of all the backgrounds, and this is as it should be, but the lovely views are not always appropriate. Where they are of the woodland they are in perfect harmony during the allegory, but such is not always the case when the grounds of some California estate are used. Where there is artificiality in an allegory of classic tendency, the backgrounds should be confined as far as possible to wild beauty, or to what resembles the classic in treatement. In general the beauty off scene is highly creditable to those concerned in its selection, a suitable frame for human loveliness. The story is a vehicle, but it is as lacking in true story interest, as are vehicles as a rule.

As to the motive for exposing the nude on the screen, it is obviously not that of pure artistry. It is rather that of appealing to morbid curiosity in the name of art, and it will react against itself and against the entire industry so far as family patronage of picture shows is concerned. If it was absolutely essential that Audrey Munson should appear in one of her poses to carry forward convincingly some strong story, it could be done consistently and without offense, but the very fact that the story is a mere vehicle, thrusting her into view at every conceivable opportunity, is in itself an argument against the general exhibition of such a play.

"The Secret of the Swamp"

Five-Reel Bluebird Comedy-Drama of Southern Life, With a Surprise Finish—Written and Produced by Lynn Reynolds.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

"THE Secret of the Swamp" turns out to be a joke on the sheriff and everyone else in the community—except Deacon Todd. For nearly two reels the spectator shares with the good folk of the little Southern town the conviction that a murder has been committed and that Chet Wells, who had threatened the Deacon, is the guilty party. But when the murdered man drives up in his new Ford, the tragic aspect of affairs is at once dispelled. It all comes about because the Deacon thought it clever to take down the bars between his property and Major Burke's cornfield, and let his cows feed at his neighbor's expense. The Major takes a shot at the herd, in the moonlight, and imagines he has hit the Deacon and that the old skinflint has crawled over to the swamp and died. The Major has a pretty daughter. She is loved by a penniless young chap who comes into the neighborhood with his mother and gets the worst of a business deal with the Deacon. Chet's mother is taken ill and the boy feels that her death is hastened by overhearing Deacon Todd threaten to have them evicted for non-payment of rent. The combination of circumstances by which young Wells is charged with the murder of the Deacon gives no intimation that matters are to end in a laugh, and, as the supposed tragedy permits the hero to sacrifice himself, in good faith, in order to shield the Major, thereby winning the love and gratitude of the Major's daughter, the spectator is treated to all the shocks and thrills of genuine melodrama and, in place of a murder trial or a deathbed scene, is handed an unexpected comedy bit for the finish.

In arranging the foregoing story for the screen, the author has not made the mistake of taking it too seriously. He has aimed to construct an entertaining photoplay peopled with easily recognized characters, and has paid no heed to the "deeper significance" and moral stress with which it is thought necessary to weight down so many screen dramas. Even the rival lover isn't half a bad chap, and the villain of the piece turns out to be a regular old joker. The plot is unfolded without the use of cutbacks, and much of the action keeps pace with the leasurely movement of life below the Mason and Dixon line. Aside from the fact that the Southern mansion used in the picture is much too modern and spacious for a gentleman in Major Burke's circumstances, the locations have been well chosen.

Val Paul and Myrtle Gonzalez are a sympathetic pair of lovers, and George Hernandez, who gives an excellent performance of the Major, is a living example of what has long been suspected by people up North: that all Southern gentlemen are not Colonels and exact counterparts of F. Hopkinson Smith's celebrated Son of Dixie, Colonel Carter of Cartersville. Frank McQuarrie's Deacon Todd smacks as strongly of New England as does his name. Fred Church, Mary De Cella, Lule Warrenton and Jack Curtis are competently cast.

TO AUDIENCES that have had their fill of society dramas and problem plays this undiluted western picture will be refreshing. It contains all of the elements that made western subjects popular a few years ago, and presents Lionel Barrymore in the type of character that he has portrayed with marked success ever since his debut as a picture actor in the early Biograph days. The story, written by Isola Forrester, might be condensed without sacrificing the plot, but because of the situations, humorous as well as dramatic, the clever characterizations of rough westerners, and the unfailing attractive locations, "The Quitter" justifies its length.

The situation with which the picture opens is familiar enough. The miners of Paradise Gulch feel that their paradise might be enlivened by the presence of a pretty woman, therefore Happy Jack Lewis is selected as a suitable husband, an advertisement is inserted in a newspaper and Glad Mason is drawn to the womanless Eden. Much is made of the preparations of the miners and the dismay of Happy Jack as the hour approaches for the arrival of his intended bride. Finally he boards a train for parts unknown and Glad is met at the station by a reception committee comprised of the elusive bridegroom's friends. As the girl more than fulfills the promise of her photograph the residents of Paradise Gulch become keen rivals for the place vacated by Happy Jack. Their efforts to win the favor of Glad give rise to a number of incidents that are humorous in an elementary way. How "The Quitter" returns, wins Glad and becomes the owner of a valuable claim is clearly set forth without disclosing the surprise reserved for the concluding reel.

Titles are well worded in the vein of western narrative, but some of them seem superfluous and might be eliminated. If the spectator has a taste for spirited fights it will be fully gratified, for fighting and drinking are the chief diversions of the men of Paradise Gulch. A clever touch in direction is the use made of a puppy that remains in Happy Jack's coat pocket throughout one of the most severe of his many encounters. Marguerite Skirvin appears very fresh and pleasing as Glad, whereas other characters are ably handled by Paul Everton, Edward Brennan and Charles Prince. Charles Horan directed.

Triangle Program

"Honor Thy Name," Starring Frank Keenan; "Marriage of Molly-O," Featuring Mae Marsh; "His Wild Oats," Keystone Farce.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THE fine old family spirit of Virginia, with its single code of morals, its high principles for womankind and its lax ones for men in all but the family relation, its struggle to maintain the outward semblance of honor at any cost—all these and much more pertaining to F. F. V. methods of surrounding the home with dignity and sweetness, in spite of the evil men do, are set forth in "Honor Thy Name," by Frank Keenan and a capable support. Prominent in that support, a star in herself, is Louise Glaum as the daring and skilful adventuress who wins the son and marries him while he is at college in New York in spite of his worldly father's clever expose of her character. Miss Glaum's skill and personal charm are so great that she wins sympathy for the character she impersonates while holding close to a consistent representation. Realizing that she is on the wrong side, that she stands very little chance of entering the old Virginia family as one of its members, she makes a daring attempt, one of extreme audacity under the circumstances.

Herein lies the continuity of interest—the foolish young son's wife is liable to do anything. The keen-visioned and worldly father, "Buck" Castleton in his early days, becomes aware that the family honor is really in danger. He tries desperate measures to rid his son of such an undesirable wife until, while out driving with her in a one-horse shay he resolves to go the limit. He whips his horse into a runaway and sends him over a cliff, destroying the family incubus and himself at the same time. The story is handled with exquisite taste.

"Marriage of Molly-O."

"Marriage of Molly-O" is a story of Irish life in Ireland, with much hard work in providing atmosphere, hard work with exterior flaws like the presence of gum trees, common enough in California, but unknown in Erin. An old Irishman makes a verbal will on his deathbed, giving his cow to Molly-O and the pig to his dear wife, intelligently impersonated by Kate Bruce. Molly-O is impersonated by Mae Marsh, and she is never anything else than Mae Marsh, in spite of poverty costumes. Of course there is a Prince Charming, Sir Larry O'Dea, playing car driver, and the usual villain, the landlord's son, who attempts a mock marriage when times are so hard that the rent can't be paid. He promises a silk dress for the mother, a bell for the cow and a ribbon for the pig as the price of Molly-O's hand. He leads her to an inn, but is foiled in his purpose by Larry O'Dea when all seems lost. Larry then provides all that the villain promised, and the poor girl marries her Prince Charming.

A large amount of space is given to a fairy story told by Larry, having no intrinsic interest and not impressively appropriate. This cut in the straight story has little other excuse than the absence of materials for a five-reel feature, and it operates to divert whatever interest was aroused in the opening scenes.

"His Wild Oats."

"His Wild Oats" is one of the dullest Keystones ever shown on the screen. It lacks the stirring melodrama and athletic feats which have often awakened admiration for the Sennet plays, and it has very little compensation of true humor. It is the story of a lady's tailor who attempted to elope with another man's wife and was diverted from his purpose in a picture show.

Three-Reel L-Ko. Comic Features Alice Howell in a Whirlwind of Acrobatic and Amusing Events.

IT IS difficult to classify this series of comics being released by the L-Ko company. They are something different from the ordinary slapstick performance, and yet belong to the same general type of fun. The events which take place in this three-reel number makes one think of an animated newspaper cartoon series. Certainly Alice Howell, who has already done good work in previous numbers, gets a firm hold on the risibles in this production and maintains it throughout the entire three reels.

She first appears as a young lady of the slums, who is overly popular with the police. She dashes up an alley, followed by three or four cops, and breaks into the stage door of the David Tobasco stock company's theater. Here events follow thick and fast. Having eluded the cops she proceeds to make friends with the manager and saves him from a clean-up on the part of the leading man and leading lady, about to depart with all the money in the place.

Alice gets a bad attack of stage fever and induces the manager to let her play leads. The burlesque scenes are extremely funny. She hangs from the chandelier, milks a fake cow, is tied down before an approaching train and goes through numerous other comic stunts. The snow scene, in which the paper snow gets on fire, is laughable. The whole number winds up with a rapid-fire chase.

chap coolly announces that he is the owner of a sea-going steam yacht and, unknowingly, lends his craft to further a plot by which a shipment of firearms are landed in the South American Republic of Santa Bana, to assist in overthrowing the Government, the author must be credited with introducing something new in situations. John Calkins, the father of the heroine, is a manufacturer of firearms, and is not averse to a little filibustering, provided it promises a large reward. His son is an officer in the United States Navy, and heads a landing party from his ship when the revolutionists threaten the lives of the Americans in Santa Bana. Lieutenant Calkins' father and sister have been made prisoners by the leader of the Insurgents, and the officer is shot down by a bullet from one of the elder Calkins' illegally imported weapons.

The "rough neck" takes his proper place in all the situations, a squad of real sailors from one of Uncle Sam's warships make short work of the revolution, and the melodrama proceeds to the finish of the third reel after unwinding an unusual amount of romantic adventure and winding up with the lovers embracing in the center of a crowd of admiring Jackies and the American flag streaming proudly above their heads. James Douglass, the author of the scenario, has not lacked for material, and has shown no bias in its selection. His craftsmanship is occasionally deficient in skill; but want of vigorous movement is not one of his faults. Melvin Mayo directed the picture. Portions of his work are excellent; several of the incidents demand an entirely different verdict.

The acting is competent, and is intrusted to George Routh, B. W. Hopkins, Evelyn Page, Wedgewood Howell, C. K. Van Auker and Adelaide Bronti.

"Paying the Price"

Gail Kane Heads a Strong Cast in a Well-Made Brady Subject with a Touch of the Sea.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

PARAGON'S release through the World Film on July 24, "Paying the Price," is worth while. It is a subject containing good situations and there are excellent players to interpret the roles, principal and subordinate. Gail Kane is at the top of the list, and with her are George Relph, Gladden James, George Majeroni and June Elvidge. The interest is well divided between all of these; in fact, the story has been told as a story, without any effort to build it around one to the exclusion of others.

Miss Kane is charming in the lighter passages—she has marked magnetic quality—but it is in the sterner moments when she is at her best. Her role is that of the woman who picks from two men the wrong one for a husband—and very soon discovers her error. The dramatic interest is intensified by the decision of the wife after a battle with herself that she will adhere to the right. Mr. Relph is the naval officer who sees the woman he loves married to the army man to whom he had introduced her. Mr. James is the successful suitor who through his habits of spending gets into difficulties and attempts to recoup by selling government secrets. Mr. Majeroni is the foreign agent who seeks to obtain the formula of the explosive invented by the navy man.

Director Frank Crane received from the Navy Department valuable assistance in the staging of his subject. He had at his disposal a torpedo boat, of which we have many intimate views. One of the more interesting of these is the loading, aiming and launching of a torpedo. There is a thrill in the denouement when in testing the new explosive the torpedo tube is trained on the hulk on which are hiding the army officer and the foreign agent, that they may the better observe the result of the test.

"Paying the Price" is well made. It is possible in these days of preparedness that many who witness the subject will note that the rank of lieutenant ascribed in the sub-titles to the army officer will not square with the captain's insignia on his uniforms. That, however, is not the main question, which is that the subject is well above the average.

War to the Front in Mutual Weekly No. 81.

The spirit of the day is reflected in Mutual Weekly No. 81, which has just reached the screen. Because of its foreign connections, since the Mutual Weekly is manufactured by the Gaumont company, the first views of the important European events may be depended upon to reach the screen promptly. This week "from somewhere in France" come pictures of big cannon at the front. Paris itself sends pictures of Russian troops passing through the metropolis and German shells on view at the Invalides. "Business as usual" has also become the Parisian's motto, for following scenes of war's grim trade are dainty fashions for women from the exclusive house of Jeanne Blanchot.

The American annex of the world war is pictured in the submarine which appeared at Newport News on its way to Baltimore with a commercial cargo. Our own difficulty on the Mexican border comes in for its due share of pictorial publicity. The governor of Washington is seen reviewing the state troops mobilized for war. At Provincetown, Mass., Uncle Sam's newest super-submarine has its first trial caught by the camera.

Summer is the great American season for sports. This is carefully taken into account by the editor of the Mutual Weekly. There are pictures of three record-breakers, the national woman swimmer at San Francisco, the winner of the world's champion motorcycle race at Dodge City, Kan., and the winner of the motor boat regatta at St. Paul, Minn. At San Francisco the Pacific League pennant is awarded to the "Seals"—the first for that city in seven years.

Tacoma, Wash., contributes a most unusual picture—the head-on collision of two locomotives. It was a premeditated affair, staged for the benefit of holiday-makers.

"The Lost Paradise" (Pathe).

Although she does not love him, Janet Gordon marries Marc Lander, a man much older than herself, to save her father from ruin. Tom Moore, the man with whom she is in love, leaves town to accept a position in another city. Some time later Janet and Lander quarrel because of Janet's dislike of her husband's friends. She goes to the town where Tom is working, and there is granted a divorce. Later she and Tom, the latter having secured a good position, are married. After several years of bliss, Lander comes to her and announces that the divorce she secured in another state does not hold in the one in which she is living. Tom weakened by over-work, dies when he learns of this. His sister then appears on the scene and claims the property. Tom having died without a will, and not having been legally married to Janet, the latter takes her two children and leaves the house.

Two New Dustin Farnum Subjects.

The New York office of Pallas Pictures has just received the information that "The Parson of Panamint," a new Dustin Farnum subject, has been completed and that the popular star has commenced work on his latest vehicle, "A Son of Erin."

General Film Company

THE SQUAW'S LOVE (Biograph), July 10.—A single-reel Indian subject reissued by Biograph. The story is dramatic and very well acted by Mabel Normand, Alfred Paget and Claire McDowell. Scenes photographed on a river flowing through a wilderness are particularly worth while.

OTTO, THE SLEUTH (Lubin), July 10.—It is doubtful if Sherlock Holmes would approve of some of Otto's deductions while on the trail of a crime, but, as played by D. L. Don, the German sleuth is good for a number of hearty laughs. For a burlesque comedian, Mr. Don is remarkably easy and restrained in his method. The plot of this one-reel farce has to do with the theft of a canary.

THE SELIG-TRIBUNE, NO. 55, 1916 (Selig), July 10.—Negro troopers surrendered by Mexico, arrive at El Paso; King George inspects troops, London, Eng.; Gen. Bell and staff meet Gen. Gonzales on International Bridge, El Paso; militiamen encamp in New York City streets; life saving drill on Norwegian steamer, Bergen, Norway; seals on Pigeon Island, Cal.; El Paso, Len Spillsbury, the Mormon scout; Chicago stock yards clearing house for army mules; Chas. E. Hughes and Wm. H. Taft confer at Bridgehamton, L. I.

WRONG BEDS (Vitagraph), July 10.—A country hotel is the scene of this one-reel comedy, a commercial traveller, a female temperance orator and a soubrette being concerned in a general mix-up of rooms. The complications are quite humorous, and Wm. Dangman is amusing as a lively bellhop. Lucille Crane, Florence Natol, Geo. O'Donnell and Harry Mayo are well cast. The picture was written by James A. Stiles and produced by Frank Currier.

THE BAGGAGE SMASHERS (Kalem), July 11.—Ham and Bud are the gentlemen who hustle the trunks in this one-reel farce. They hire out to assist a lady station agent and run against a country sleuth and several bad men. The reel takes rank among the better of the Ham comedies. Ellen Godsay plays the lady station agent.

THE QUACK QUAKERS (Kalem), July 12.—Not since the days of Kate Castleton has any one looked so fetching in a quaker costume as Ethel Teare, in this one-reel comedy. The plot is full of deft turns and is the work of Samuel J. Taylor. H. L. Davenport, Gus Leonard, Victor Rottman and G. Taylor take part in the proceedings.

THE SELIG-TRIBUNE, NO. 55, 1916 (Selig), July 13.—Race meeting in Vienna, Austria; on the eastern front, German reinforcements are rushed to aid Austrians; safe and sane Fourth, New York City; cowboys meet, Las Vegas, N. M.; German soldiers in Castle Belvedere Park, Warsaw, Russia; Ralph De Palma wins 150-mile race at Minneapolis; Indians of the Islette tribe, Las Vergas; on the western front, Germans evacuating trenches; motor boat regatta at St. Paul; Governor McDonald and Miss Hazel Gerard, Queen of the Cowgirls, Las Vergas, N. M.

SPAGHETTI (Vim), July 13.—It is, perhaps, too much to say that spaghetti plays the leading part in this one-reel comedy, but it is the star "prop." Plump and Runt, assisted by the entire cast consume, juggle and bombard each other with it, and, finally, bury one of their number under gallons of "Dagoes Delight." Persons who relish this brand of humor will have a feast.

THE WISHING RING (Kalem), July 14.—The village blacksmith makes Sis a present of a horseshoe ring and she manages to wish a choice variety of trouble upon herself and her friends. Frank Howard Clark is responsible for the scenario, which is fairly well stocked with fresh matter. Rose Melville and her support make the reel a cheery one.

THE BROKEN BRAKE (No. 88 of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series) (Kalem), July 15.—A review of this picture was printed in the issue of July 22, page 652. Helen Gibson does a job of expert switching during the action and boards a swiftly moving train, after overtaking it while mounted on a flying broncho.

HANG ON COWBOY (Lubin), July 15.—Romaine Fielding wrote, directed and played the principal part in this one-reel drama. And he is certainly a devil of a fellow all through it! He rescues a maiden in distress, turns a town upside down, and keeps on the broad grin all the time. As a hero of fiction, he is immense. June Daye, Jack Lawton, Eleanor Mason and Arthur Minium have a share in the general joy.

THE SQUAW'S LOVE (Biograph), July 10.—A reissue of one of the one-reel successes in which Mabel Normand, Alfred Paget and Claire McDowell had prominent parts. The vigorous touch of D. W. Griffiths gives life to the entire reel.

THE FABLE OF THE SMALL TOWN FAVORITE WHO WAS RUINED BY TOO MUCH COMPETITION (Essanay), July 12.—Rather a long title for a one-reel comedy, but George Ade has packed it with so much telling humor, and the moral, "Anybody can win unless there happens to be a second entry," is brought out with so much skill, that the picture justifies its lengthy name. The fable is another proof that an American girl can always land, no matter from where she starts.

THE GREAT SAFE TANGLE (Vim), July 14.—Pokes and Jabbs lead the fun-makers in this one-reel comedy. The material is original and gives the stars a chance to create a lot of laughs. Harry Naughton, Ethel Burton, Frank Hanson and Robin Williamson assist Burns and Stull.

LEGAL ADVICE (Selig), July 15.—This is a burlesque comedy, written and produced by Tom Mix. It gives a comic view of the havoc created among a crowd of cowboys by the arrival of a lady lawyer. They are all ready and willing to break any or all the laws, in order to hire the new attorney. Tom Mix, Pat Chrisman, Geo. Pankey, Joe Ryan and Victoria Forde romp and frolic through the reel.

POWER (Essanay), July 8.—This three-reel photoplay by Charles Mortimer Peck, is well named. It illustrates the power of nature and also the power of a political boss. The plot is vital, well handled and contains an interesting love motive. Nell Craig, Sydney Ainsworth, Carroll C. James and Ullrich Haupt are members of an efficient cast.

THE PRIVATE OFFICER (Essanay), July 11.—A two-reel reissue of one of the most successful dramas produced by the Essanay company, with Francis X. Bushman in a dual role. It is a story of army life and has a strong plot. Beverly Bayne and Thomas Commerford are Bushman's leading support.

THE HALF WIT (Lubin), July 11.—A half-witted young man who gets mixed up with a gang of crooks and the Mafia and is finally restored to reason, is the leading character in this two-reel drama, written by Arthur Peterman. There is variety of action in this picture and a love interest that has a happy ending. L. C. Shumway plays the half wit, and Helen Eddy his sweetheart. George Routh, Melvin Mayo, Robert Gray, Dorothy Barrett, Jay Morley and Adelaide Bronti have the remaining characters.

MEN AND WOMEN (Biograph), July 12.—Reviewed in the issue of June 24th, this three-part drama, reissue by Biograph, is classed as a safe attraction, because of an adequate story presented by a distinguished cast, including Blanche Sweet, Marshall Neilan and Lionel Barrymore.

EXPIATION (Lubin), July 13.—This three-reel photoplay was written by Frances Greene. It is a highly romantic story, the opening scenes taking place in Turkey during the Crimean War. There is strong interest throughout. Octavia Handworth, E. K. Lincoln, Clarence Jay Elmer, Herbert Fortier, Wm. H. Turner and Margaret Adair complete an excellent cast.

A MILK WHITE FLAG (Selig), July 10.—The positive genius which the late Charles Hoyt possessed for extracting merriment from a grave subject was shown in his satire of the militia, "A Milk White Flag." The three-reel screen version of this clever comedy retains much of the humor of the original, and visualizes the military funeral which is the big situation of the plot. Otis Harlan, so long identified with the Hoyt productions, is very amusing in the leading part, and is supported by Charlotte Minneaux, Grace Darmond, Leslie King and James Bradbury. T. N. Heffron directed the picture.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.

THE SILENT BATTLE (Bluebird), July 24.—J. Warren Kerrigan and Lois Wilson play the leading roles in a satisfactory adaptation of a novel by George Gibbs, dealing with the struggle of a man who inherits a taste for drink. The picture is well acted and staged. A review may be found on another page of this issue.

George Kleine.

GLORIA'S ROMANCE (Nos. 8 and 9) (July 10-17).—These two chapters, like the previous ones, are interesting, though the action is rather slow. An important factor is introduced which is bound to awaken renewed interest in future developments. The complications in the treatment and development of the plot still keep one guessing as the final outcome. The use of double exposure at the close of chapter nine is almost uncanny. This subject was reviewed in last week's issue.

International Film Service Inc.

HEARST-INTERNATIONAL NEWS PICTORIAL No. 55, 1916, July 11.—Zeppelin airship wrecked by British anti-aircraft guns at Salonika, Greece; sea-lions at Pigeon Point, Cal.; patrol of U. S. Regulars at Brownsville, Tex.; review of Oregon State Militia at Portland, Ore., City Hospital Ship, Boston, Mass.; Fashion Section; parade of striking garment makers, New York City; doctors from Washington fight infantile paralysis; bodies of Captain Boyd and his negro troopers are brought to El Paso; German submarine liner Deutschland arrives at Baltimore, Md.

HEARST-INTERNATIONAL NEWS PICTORIAL, No. 56, 1916, July 14.—Natives of French Indo-China in the trenches outside of Salonica; U. S. submarine M-1, under way; regatta at St. Paul, Minn.; Charles F. Hughes at the country home of Harry Payne Whitney, Roslyn, L. I.; the 14th Infantry, N. Y. N. G., arrive at Brownsville, Tex.; U. S. Regulars leave Fort Rosencrans, San Diego, Cal., for the Mexican border; teaching girls to swim, New York City; Ralph De Palma wins 150-mile auto race, Minneapolis, Minn.; arrival of U. S. Transport Buffalo at San Diego, Cal., with refugees from Mexico; fashion section; United States honor Captain Boyd at Washington, D. C.; health authorities endeavoring to stop the ravages of infantile paralysis at New York; explosion of refrigerating plant, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Metro Pictures Corporation.

THE RIVER OF ROMANCE (Yorke), July 17.—A light, very pretty story made in the Thousand Islands with Harold Lockwood and May Allison in the leading roles. It is a summer romance brightly acted in charming locations and may be relied upon as pleasing entertainment, demanding little concentration or thought. Henry Otto directed.

Mutual Film Corporation

THE HERO OF E. Z. RANCH (Cub), July 14.—George Ovey appears in this as the hero of a ranch episode. The plot is familiar, but handled in a lively, enjoyable way. He wins the hand of the heiress, who has exchanged places with her maid.

RUMMY ACT OF OMAR K. M. (Beauty), July 16.—Orral Humphrey is featured as the warm-blooded Persian philosopher in this burlesque number. His flirtations with a woodland nymph are interrupted at intervals by his angry sponse. This is an original effort and gets a broad smile occasionally from the observer, though it never becomes uproariously funny.

REEL LIFE, NO. 11 (Gaumont), July 16.—This is a splendidly diversified number. Marble quarrying in Italy makes the opening feature. Glimpses are shown of the way in which auto thieves spirit away machines. Physical training by means of sports in France follows, and then some animal studies from the Bronx zoo.

A DEEP SEA LIAR (Vogue), July 16.—A comic number, by Robert A. Dillon, featuring Ben Turpin, Arthur Moon and Rena Rogers. The scenes are short and jerky, giving much of the action a meaningless character. The plot, which might have shown up to better advantage, is lost in the abrupt change of scenes.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials

LOVE'S BITTER STRENGTH (American), July 10.—A two-reel number, by Anthony W. Coldeway, featuring Edward Coxen and Lizette Thorne. The young wife loses her memory after an accident and is separated from her husband. Jim, the hero, falls in love with her, but later events cause the husband to turn up and Jim makes a sacrifice of her love. An old theme handled entertainingly.

THE VAGABOND (Lone Star), July 10.—Charlie Chaplin as himself in one vivacious reel and as heroic lover in another. Chaplin is amusing in one and gives evidence in the other that he is capable of a higher grade of performance.

NUGGET JIM'S PARTNER (Mustang), July 14.—Frank Borzage is author, producer and leading player in this entertaining two-reel subject. Dick La Reno and Anna Little also play important parts. The story tells of a young Eastern sport who is cast off by his father and lands in Arizona, via a box car. He saves the girl from an unhappy fate and regenerates her father. The plot has an ordinary sound, but the picture is really above the ordinary. Much skill has been employed in presentation, particularly in avoiding trite and obvious business. A good Western subject.

THE FOOL'S GAME (Centaur), July 15.—A two-reel number, featuring Crane Wilbur, Mae Gaston and John Oaker. The plot concerns a wealthy man who finds his wife with another man, known as "The Parasite." He handcuffs them together and imprisons them in his mountain cabin until they learn to hate each other. Later they escape to the desert, still handcuffed. At the close the wife shoots the parasite in order to save her husband. This is melodramatic in tone, but handled with strength. The plot has unpleasant features, but holds the interest firmly.

SECRET OF THE SUBMARINE, NO. 9 (American), July 17.—This installment opens with the scenes immediately following the earthquake, from which all emerge alive. Cleo is kidnapped by Morton and taken in an aeroplane. She drops from this in a parachute and lands near Pattens' cabin. Morton imprisons her there. Hope gets on the trail and falls from the high tramway in attempting to reach the cabin. This number contains many thrills of a legitimate sort and winds up with Cleo's situation a doubtful one.

Paramount Pictures Corporation.

THE WILD AND WOOLY WEST (Bray), July 16.—In this cartoon burlesque on western melodramas, the method of constructing a photoplay story is followed even to the introduction of the characters—the heroine, the hero and the villain. A. D. Reed made the drawings, which are fairly amusing. The reel closes with a first rate Ditmars' animal picture, called "Wild Babies."

BEAUTIFUL BAVARIA (Burton Holmes), July 16.—Views photographed along the river Ache occupy a prominent place in this interesting travel subject. As usual, Mr. Holmes was fortunate in his choice of locations and in giving the picture a human appeal by introducing peasant types.

PARAMOUNT PICTOGRAPHS (Paramount), July 16.—Ice cutting and the making of artificial ice are fully illustrated in this issue of Pictographs, which includes two other subjects of a scientific nature—the use of chemicals in war and the running of an electric railroad over the Rockies. The Better Babies department deals with the development of a constructive imagination in children.

THE DREAM GIRL (Lasky), July 17.—The story of a waif of the slums, who, after many trying experiences, is given shelter by a wealthy man whose grandson has fallen in love with her. Mae Murray appears to decided advantage as the star of the picture and Theodore Roberts gives one of his flawless characterizations. A review of this finely produced photoplay may be found elsewhere in this issue.

DOWN THE DANUBE TO VIENNA (Burton Holmes), July 23.—The beauties of the Danube are finely pictured in this Burton Holmes release, which also gives the spectator a very fair idea of the appearance of Vienna. The choice of scenes was excellent and they were well photographed.

PARAMOUNT PICTOGRAPHS (Paramount), July 23.—In popular interest the chief feature of this issue of Pictographs will be the pictures of the catching and landing of a man-eating shark on the Jersey shore. The editor might have thought a long while without finding more timely material. Lessons in horsemanship, the Better Babies department and duck raising on a large scale are other numbers in this reel.

AN INTERNATIONAL MARRIAGE (Morosco), July 24.—A five-part drama based on George Broadhurst's play of the same name. Rita Jolivet carries the leading role, that of an American heiress, who becomes unpleasantly involved with titled foreigners. The picture was carefully produced by Frank Lloyd and is entertaining. A review may be found on another page.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

PATHE NEWS, NO. 54, 1916 (Pathe), July 5.—Good views of Hughes and Taft, state military organizations leaving for the Mexican front, and a general assortment of entertaining scenes are included in this.

PATHE NEWS, NO. 55, 1916 (Pathe), July 8.—The Fourth at Oyster Bay, American refugees returning from Mexico, English king and queen at Kitchener memorial, motor boat racing on the Mississippi, and other events of interest are pictured in this number.

UNFRIENDLY FRUIT (Pathe), July 17.—A light-running comic, featuring Heinie and Louie in various mixups. The runaway auto tire makes a good feature. This is quite amusing.

Pathe Exchange, Inc., Specials.

A TRIAL OF SOULS (Arrow), July 10.—No. 10 of "Who's Guilty?" series. Anna Nilsson and Tom Moore appear as a young couple who marry after an elopement. The parents object and seek to annul the marriage. This brings out some sad features as to the girl's unhappy origin and eventually leads to her suicide by drowning. The number is convincingly pictured and contains a pathetic touch.

BRANDING THE INNOCENT (Arrow), July 17.—No. 11 of "Who's Guilty?" This features Anna Nilsson and Tom Moore in one of the strongest of the series. It demonstrates the bad results that follow because divorces granted in one state are not good in certain others. The young wife in this case becomes guilty of bigamy without knowing it and her children by the second husband are branded as illegitimate. The number has an excellent motive and is well presented throughout.

THE TRIUMPH OF THE LAUGHING MASK (Feature), July 10.—No. 20, the final episode of "The Iron Claw." This brings the absorbing serial to a successful close and reveals the identity of the Laughing Mask in a way that will satisfy the average observer. Legar meets his end, after becoming inoculated with the germ of the colon bacilli, which causes him to age greatly in a few moments. The series has held the interest and the mystery has been well protected. All of the principals, Pearl White, Creighton Hale and Sheldon Lewis, have added to their laurels.

FATE (Balboa), July 17.—This is the first two-reel chapter of a new serial, "The Grip of Evil," by Louis Tracy. The young hero, John Burton, after meeting with hard luck in a factory strike, suddenly finds himself the heir to a fortune and a title in England. His heart has been touched by the sadness of life and he seeks an answer to the question, "Is humanity in the grip of evil?" The series promises to have a strong sociological trend and less of the romantic than the average serial. Roland Bottomley and Jackie Saunders play the leading roles.

THE UNDERWORLD (Balboa), July 24.—Chapter 2 of "The Grip of Evil." Roland Bottomley continues the part of John Burton, sudden heir to a fortune and a title. Jackie Saunders appears as Gertrude Brooks, a dancing teacher. Burton aids a young thief, known as "Gentleman Joe," only to have him turn traitor in the end. Once more the question arises in his mind, "Is humanity in the grip of evil?" No effort is being made in this series to gloss over the tragic incidents of life. Much of the action is of a decidedly melodramatic turn.

Triangle Film Corporation.

STRANDED (Triangle-Fine Arts), July 23.—A very humanizing story of the plight of an old actor, admirably interpreted by De Wolf Hopper.

THE HALF BREED (Triangle-Fine Arts), July 30.—A strong adaptation from one of Bret Harte's stories, with Douglas Fairbanks in one of the best roles he has ever created.

THE PAYMENT (Triangle-Ince), July 30.—A powerful story of an ambitious girl's realization of what it costs to succeed in an artistic career. Bessie Barriscale at her best.

Universal Film Manufacturing Company

SHE WAS SOME VAMPIRE (Joker), July 22.—A burlesque number, by Allen Curtis, featuring Gale Henry as a lady vampire. The scenes are laid on a beach and are laughable in places. The eccentric characterizations are very funny.

ART FOR ART'S SAKE (Nestor), July 24.—Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Roberta Wilson appear in this comedy number, by Ben Cohn. The girl crook lures the two young men into a scheme for obtaining some valuable paintings without paying for them. All wind up under arrest. Slight in plot, but breezy and amusing. Some of the photography is a little dim in places.

CROSS PURPOSES (Victor), July 25.—A story of diplomatic intrigue, by Bess Meredyth, featuring Jack Connelly and Jessie Arnold. The girl spy agrees to obtain certain papers, but her love leads her to save her victim from dishonor because she loves him. The situations on the whole are familiar, but contain a new twist of an entertaining sort.

JUST A FEW LITTLE THINGS (Victor), July 26.—A comedy number, by Wallace Beery, featuring Ruby Cox, Victor Potel and the author. Two parties to a romance quarrel. The girl then marries a man with six children and the man a widow with the same number. This develops considerable humor.

WON BY VALOR (Imp), July 27.—This number, by Catherine Carr, features Howard Crampton, Sidney Bracy and Sydell Dowling. The story tells of a handsome young groom who falls in love with the heroine. He wins her love and turns out to be a lord. This has a rather pleasing romantic touch and is nicely presented.

A GREAT LOVE (Big U), July 28.—This number, by Olga Printzlau, features Hayward Mack, Mina Cunard, Norbert A. Myles and Vola Smith. The plot is the conventional one of a young artist falling in love with a girl of the woods. He comes to his senses eventually and there is a happy ending. There is an idyllic charm about the picturesque scenery that makes the story attractive in spite of its familiarity.

I'VE GOT YER NUMBER (Joker), July 29.—A comedy of the knockabout type, by A. E. Bishop, featuring Wm. Franey, Gale Henry and others. The husband goes to a directors' meeting, drinks too much, and has a terrible dream. The automobile feature is a good one. This gets frequent laughs from the observer.

THE MASK OF FORTUNE (Laemmle), July 29.—An unusual subject, by Calder Johnstone, in which the daughter of a broker discovers that she has a gift for fortelling events. She becomes a professional seeress and her powers are tested by both her father and the man she loves. Marjorie Ellison, Malcolm Blevins and Jack Connelly appear. The settings are attractive and the plot unique.

Universal Film Mfg.Company Specials

BRANSCOMB'S PAL (Rex), July 23.—A two-reel story, by Banister Merwin, presented by a company of capable English actors. An intelligent dog plays a leading part and wins the sympathy of the observer. The plot has to do with a girl's weak brother and the personal sacrifices of her lover to save the youth's reputation at the expense of his own. The dog brings about an understanding at a crucial moment. This makes an entertaining release.

TEMPTATION AND THE MAN (Red Feather), July 24.—This five-reel subject, written by Catherine Carr and produced by Robert F. Hill, features Hobart Henley, Sydell Dowling, Sidney Bracy, Clara Beyers and Joseph Granby. It is the story of a reformed convict, a wealthy girl who organizes and finances a mission, and a gambler and his paramour. A weak husband also complicates matters. The story has some conventional qualities, but is not so obvious in plot as it threatens to be at the beginning. The later complications, while not always convincing, are new and different. The chief strength of the opening scenes is found in the mission quarters. This gets close to real life and contains considerable humor. The number as a whole is well up to the average.

PEG O' THE RING, NO. 13 (Universal Special Feature), July 24.—No big incidents occur in this installment. The action consists chiefly of hand-to-hand fighting and a repetition of much that has gone before. Peg is again spirited away by the Hindu and his pals, who disguise themselves as clowns for that purpose. The second reel closes with Frank Lund in pursuit. This is only fairly strong.

PRISCILLA'S PRISONER (Big U), July 27.—A two-reel number featuring Cleo Madison, Chas. Gunn, Ray Hanford and others. This has a rather weak plot. Two city youths plan to rob a country girl of her savings. One drops out of the scheme and tries to stop the other. The first is arrested and held for the theft. He is sentenced to work out his time on the girl's farm, which leads to a love affair. This feature is not very convincing. This is hardly up to the average in strength.

THE CIRCULAR ROOM (Imp), July 28.—A two-reel subject, by Wm. Addison Lathrop, featuring Ben Wilson, Edna Hunter and others. The plot deals with some foreign spies who blow up American munition plants. This is not extremely new in many respects, and the villainy is of an obvious type. At the same time considerable suspense is aroused in the second reel, where the girl is bound near an infernal machine. The hero saves her in the nick of time and the villains are blown up.

THE LATEST STYLE IN VAMPIRES (Victor), July 30.—A two-reel number, featuring Harry C. Myers, Rosemary Theby and Sidney Bracey. The former poses as a porch climber who breaks into the home of his former sweetheart, now married, or at least so the tramp alleges. His story afterward turns out to be a fake. The treatment in this wavers between the serious and burlesque, which weakens the effect decidedly. Some of the dark scenes do not come up quite clearly. The number as a whole is not very strong.

V-L-S-E, Inc.

THE TARANTULA (Vitagraph), July 17.—A strong six-part drama, featuring Edith Storey, Antonio Moreno, Harry Hollingsworth, L. Rogers Lytton and Charles Kent. The story concerns a young American who goes to Cuba. He meets a native belle, named Chonita, and accomplishes her ruin. Later, after being cast off by her father, the girl comes to New York as a dancer. She brings about the young American's death by means of a tarantula, of which he was in deadly fear. The production, in spite of its tragic nature, has a happy close and is beautifully presented. It makes on the whole a very strong emotional subject.

Bert Williams Comedies Successful.

No Question About the Success of the Two-Reel Comedies Featuring Famous Ziegfeld Follies Comedian.

SINCE the first announcement of the Biograph Company to the effect that they will release a series of two-reel comedies featuring Bert Williams, there has been quite a bit of discussion as to the possibilities of the big star of Ziegfeld Follies becoming the big king pin in the comedy field. There is no denying the fact that the public is eager for a big change in the comedy line, and while it is yet too early to predict anything for Williams, the chances are all in his favor. In a recent interview Gus Mohme of the Biograph Company said: "I have just returned from a three-weeks' trip around the various General Film Company exchanges in the interest of the Bert Williams comedies and if the enthusiasm both on the exhibitors' and exchange managers' parts may be used as a barometer to measure the success of these comedies, then they are due for big business. And why not? There isn't a more popular or clever comedian on the stage than Bert Williams and the fact that he has been chosen again as the star comedian with Ziegfeld Follies and is turning the people away at two-dollar prices in New York despite the hot weather, bespeaks his drawing power. That alone is one good reason why he should draw equally as well at various moving picture theaters throughout the country. Bert Williams' ability to make people laugh is by no means limited to the stage, as we have proved in our first release. He has always been a big factor with his droll pantomime and characteristic expressions which register exceedingly well before the camera.

While the bookings the various General Film Company Exchanges have obtained thus far have been influenced by the popularity of Bert Williams, I have been very careful to note in my talks with the various exhibitors and exchange managers that the exhibitors have every confidence that Bert Williams will become very popular to motion picture audiences. Just how the public will take to the new line of comedies we are giving them can only be determined after the first or second picture has been released.

IVY CLOSE WORKING ON "PEACHES AND PONIES."

"Peaches and Ponies" is the euphonious title given to the one reel comedy in which Ivy Close is now working at the Kalem Jacksonville studios. The story finds Ivy a troubled bride with a hubby who spends most of his time over the racing charts and the past performances of Molly S., Gay Widow, and such steeds. When Ivy's suspicions are aroused over these supposed home-breakers she engages a near-Sherlock, played in ludicrous fashion by Henry Murdoch, with disastrous results.

Arthur Albertson, Frances Nemoyer, William McKey, C. D. Peruchi and Mary Taylor-Ross are among others in the cast of "Peaches and Ponies." "The Girl and the Tenor," the first Ivy Close comedy, will be released next Friday, July 28th.

"FATE'S DECISION" (Horsley).

A great question which should appeal to many husbands and wives who have suddenly discovered that their bonds of matrimony are becoming slack and that stone after stone is being laid for purposes confined to the divorce court, and all through a misunderstanding or an occasional party of the tango tea variety, is thoroughly and capably handled by the co-stars, Margaret Gibson and William Clifford, in the forthcoming Centaur feature, "Fate's Decision," a David Horsley production, to be released on the Mutual program the week of August 5.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

"I'VE GOT YER NUMBER" (Universal).

Well, now; what have we here? A very unfortunate accident, it seems. These honest farmers were run down by the city chap, a loafer who has no regard for the proprieties of motor dress, as will be observed. Note his silk hat. What rotten bad form!

It must have disgruntled the honest farmers, moreover, to have the hussy in the machine with the city chap laughing at their discomfiture. However, they have the license number of the car, 113307 Cal., and there's a telegraph office in the Lankershim railroad station nearby and the city chap and his escort won't get far before the motorcycle cops get him, rest assured of that. Then will come a suit for damages which will enable the honest farmers to buy a new buckboard and a new horse, with perhaps enough left over for harness. Honest farmers on county juries generally impose stiff judgments against railroads and automobilists.

The smashup delineated herewith occurred in "I've Got Yer Number," a Joker comedy featuring Gale Henry and William Franey, which will be released on July 29. Supporting Henry and Franey are Charles Conklin, Lillian Peacock and Milburn Moranti.

"THE CRIMSON STAIN MYSTERY" ABOUT FINISHED.

The first episode of "The Crimson Stain Mystery" which is being produced by the Consolidated Film Corporation, at the Erbograph Studios will be completed within a few days. Those who are in a position to know, declare that this picture will be the strangest and the most unusual ever attempted in the way of a serial. President O. E. Goebel and Treasurer Ludwig G. B. Erb of the Consolidated Film Corporation are working day and night on the production. Maurice Costello and Ethel Grandin who are playing leading parts in this mysterious picture are given ample opportunity to present the best work in which they have ever been seen upon the screen.

During the past week Mr. Goebel has signed a contract with Olga Olonova, a young Russian "vampire" woman whose work thus far promises to be the most startling ever seen upon the screen either in America or elsewhere. Miss Olonova claims to possess the most wonderful figure of any "vampire" who has hitherto appeared in the motion picture world. It is doubtful if her claim will be disputed after the remarkable studio scenes that are to be in this serial are thrown upon the screen.

Eugene Strong, a favorite young matinee idol, has been engaged to play the part of the artist in the production.

The advertising campaign that is being mapped out and will shortly be put into effect by the Consolidated Film Corporation, will be of the most comprehensive. "The Crimson Stain Mystery" will be released through the Metro exchange.

ESSANAY'S "RETURN OF EVE" SOON READY.

Essanay is soon to offer as one of the most artistic productions of the year, "The Return of Eve," featuring Edna Mayo. It is an out-of-door play, most of the exteriors of which were filmed in the beautiful dells of Wisconsin. The best camera experts of the Essanay organization worked on the play, and President George K. Spoor considers it a photographic achievement.

The company, headed by Director Arthur Berthelet and Miss Mayo has returned to the studios. A final trip for exteriors will be made to Philadelphia, where an ideal location has been found in a nearby suburb. Sets for the few interiors are now being constructed and filming under the lights will soon begin.

At the Dells the company had many interesting experiences among which were those of being constantly photographed by tourists, arising at 1:30 in the morning and lunching daily on hard boiled eggs. Eugene O'Brien, playing the principal supporting part to Miss Mayo, could stand for the tourists, but his poise disappeared utterly under the stress of rising at what he called "early in the evening," and the everlasting monotony of hard boiled eggs.

Miss Mayo was the target for perhops 500 kodaks while working in the film. In no instance was the ambitious amateur photographer refused when pleading for a snapshot.

The costumes for the play, which deals with two orphan children brought up in a wilderness by an old tutor, are as original as the story. Miss Mayo herself made her own attire.

The play in five acts will soon be released through V-L-S-E.

"BEAUTY" BRAND ON TWO-REEL COMEDIES.

Motion picture exhibitors and patrons have become so exceedingly friendly to the "Beauty" comedies in which such well known character comedians as Orral Humphrey, John Sheehan, John Steppling, and comedians Lucille Ward and Carol Halloway have the important roles, that the management of the American Film Company, Inc., has found it desirable and advisable to star these people in comedies and comedy dramas from the country's best humorists.

"THE CONFLICT" (Selig).

It is seldom that a more heart-stirring drama is released through regular service than "The Conflict," a Selig Diamond Special, announced for General Film regular release by the Selig Polyscope Company, on Monday, July 24. "The Conflict" was produced by Wm. Robert Daly from the story written by Rosa Raymond, and features such popular screen stars as Jack Pickford, Fritzi Brunette, Vivian Reed, Frank Clark, Charles West and Harry Lonsdale.

"The Conflict" tells the story of the sacrifice of Paul Gilbert, a young minister who, offered the pastorate of a fashionable church, refuses the advancement, to become pastor of Seamen's Bethel, located in the slums of a great city. When he resolves to forego his ambition, he also loses the love of Alice Scene from "The Conflict" (Selig).

Morgan. The perils and pitfalls encountered by the young minister in the city's slums, the regeneration of Neil Gail, how the minister saves young Harold Morgan from state prison and finally again wins the love of Alice Morgan, are just a few of the incidents carried in this gripping drama. The picture contains clear-cut photography and a succession of beautiful scenic effects.

"REPENTANCE" (Essanay).

This a strong drama dealing with the fundamentals of life, bringing out the test of a man's endurance to his principles. The story deals with a young man of deep religious convictions who is deeply in love with a woman of no faith. He tries in every way to point out the truths of his belief, but fails. His faith is stronger than his love and he gives the girl up to do missionary work abroad. There he undergoes terrible hardships in a fever-ridden district and after fighting for his people until exhausted returns home to recuperate. There he finds that his home town had just suffered from an epidemic and that his mother's life was saved through the nursing by the girl he loved. He decides that she is one with his life in service if not in belief and tells her of his love. He is more than overjoyed to find that she has been won in his faith through the work she had done among the fever-stricken people. John Lorenz and Anne Leigh as the principals do exceptionally clever work.

Scene from "Repentance" (Essanay).

"HESPER OF THE MOUNTAINS" (Vitagraph).

Each characterization of Lillian Walker, Vitagraph's dainty dimpled star, seems to please more than its predecessor. Miss Walker's latest vehicle is "Hesper of the Mountains," a drama of the West, in which the excellent work of Evart Overton also stands out.

The exteriors in "Hesper of the Mountains" are magnificent, most of them being laid in a mountain range. The action of the picture is continuous, suspense is never lost and a few thrillers, such as the blowing up of a mining shaft by a gang of strikers, and a clash between the forces of the sheriff and the strikers, tend to give this picture a "punch" which will please any audience. In these scenes of disturbance Evart Overton has the opportunity of presenting a strong, dominating character to good advantage.

Scene from "Hesper of the Mountains" (Vitagraph).

Miss Walker is seen as a luxury loving and cultured Miss of the East, who, when forced to go West with her sickly brother, expresses a hearty dislike for the country, its customs, and its rough, uncultured men.

Others in a well chosen cast are: Donald Hall, Donald McBride, Denton Vane, Robert Gaillard, Rose Tapley, Templer Saxe, Lillian Burns and Josephine Earle. The picture is a five part picturization of the book by Hamlin Garland and was produced by Wilfrid North. It is a Blue Ribbon Feature, than which no better recommendation can be given any picture.

EMILE CHAUTARD DIRECTS "HEART OF A HERO."

Why did William A. Brady choose a French director to put on the Robert Warwick-Gail Kane picture of the American revolutionary period, "The Heart of a Hero," based on the life of Nathan Hale—when he has so many American directors at his disposal? This is the question that has been asked by many persons in close touch with the doings of the World Film Corporation, but none has yet ventured to ask Mr. Brady for a bill of particulars.

When it was decided to put on this picture, in which Clara Whipple, Alec. B. Francis, Frank Beamish, Mildred Havens and Clifford Gray, as well as a score of other well known players take part in support of Mr. Warwick and Miss Kane, Mr. Brady assigned Emile Chautard to produce the picture. If the stills taken to date and the first part of the picture, which has already been shown in the World film projection room, is any criterion of the success attending this play, it is a safe prediction to make that a standard will be set from which future military and costume plays will be judged.

Fully conversant with our American history, Director Chautard merely refreshed his memory on some of the more important roles played by Nathan Hale in our fight for independence against the oppressive yoke of British domination in 1776, and blending with this story of Hale's memorable heroic acts, the romance taken from Clyde Fitch's play of "Nathan Hale," he has succeeded in producing a technically correct play in all its artistic as well as historic details, while the delicate touch of romance running throughout the story makes it interesting and fascinating, a novel departure from the cut and dried variety of costume plays the public has been educated to expect. In this play, the costumes of the American revolutionists and the British soldiers were all made to order from designs and descriptions contained in reliable books, compiled by authorities on the subject, and not taken from any customers' stock.

Scene from "The Heart of a Hero" (World).

Mr. Brady is so pleased with the excellency of this picture that he may decide to release it in either seven or eight reels, instead of the regulation five, which has marked World Film productions in the past.

LICHTMAN GETS CONTRACTS.

Al. Litchman, the General Manager of the Patriot Film Corporation, which is selling state-rights to "How Britain Prepared," has been in Chicago and other cities of the middle-west, for the past week, closing contracts for the rights to several territories in the west.

During the Convention Week in Chicago, Mr. Lichtman gave a special showing of the film for exhibitors, at the Colonial theater, where the picture is now playing. It is said that a great number of immediate and future bookings were the result of this showing, as well as the commencing of negotiations for the rights to several states.

The booth of the Patriot Film Corporation was very well attended during the exposition, a large number of exhibitors being attracted by the tremendous amount of publicity the picture has received from the daily papers throughout the country.

CLEVELAND PASTORS LIKE "WHO'S GUILTY?"

Manager Johnson of Pathe's Cleveland office has already made a drive on the ministers in his territory in connection with "The Grip of Evil." He sends in three letters from John I. Wean, Pastor of the Lakewood Methodist Episcopal Church, Lakewood, Ohio, another from Dwight J. Bradley, the Highland Church, Cleveland, Ohio who recently delivered a sermon on "Who's Guilty?" and another from Dan. F. Bradley, Pilgrim Church, Cleveland, Ohio. Each of these letters show deep interest on the part of the writer in Pathe's shows masterplot in fourteen chapters.

Ivan's "The Faded Flower" in Great Demand.

Making history in film circles is what "The Faded Flower," the latest Ivan feature is doing. Although not yet released the excellence of the cast had prompted hundreds of exhibitors to request for early bookings on this play. "The Faded Flower" which inauguates the new Ivan policy of 100 per cent. stories enacted in photo dramatic form by an all-star cast has resulted in hundreds of exhibitors writing to that concern congratulating them and requesting that this policy be continued.

Realizing that a cast comprising such noted stars as Marguerite Snow, Alma Hanlon, Rose Coghlan, Arthur Donaldson and Edward Mackay, who would ordinarily be featured alone, cannot be gathered together at a moment's notice, plans have already been consummated to secure for the next Ivan production actors and actresses who have achieved reputations in both the legitimate and screen worlds.

So far as the story for the next feature is concerned, it is sufficient that it will be from the pen of that noted dramatist, Ivan Abramson author of "The Faded Flower" and the other notable Ivan successes.

"Bettina Loved a Soldier" (Bluebird).

When "Bettina Loved a Soldier" is released in the regular order of Bluebirds, on Aug. 14, two of the prettiest girls in photoplays will lend their charms and talents to the occasion. Both Louise Lovely and Francelia Billington have been stars in previous Bluebirds and they are drawn into service for "Bettina Loved a Soldier" because of their peculiar adaptibilities to impersonate the two principal female characters. Rupert Julian will be the leading man, adding this extra service to his duties as director of the production. The work is based on L'Abbe Constantine, a book by Ludivoc Halevy that opened the doors of the French Academy to its author. Elliott J. Clawson prepared the scenario and Steve Rounds accomplished the photography.

The French locations incident to the plot have been beautifully counterfeited in this American production and those who recall the scenic and photographic charms of "Naked Hearts," in the Bluebird series, will expect from Rupert Julian, the same director, a finished product of superlative merit. This promise the Bluebird people maintain will be amply fulfilled in "Bettina Loved a Soldier."

Scene from "Bettina Loved a Soldier" (Bluebird).

Despite the "soldier" in its title and action, there is no martial spirit in the photoplay. It is the cleverest sort of comedy-drama, with an appealing love story, and the fact that Bettina (Louise Lovely), is compelled by the modest military man to do most of the courting, leads a series of charming episodes to a highly satisfying termination.

"WEIGHED IN THE BALANCE" (Pathe).

Tom Clark, son of the president of a large mill, is compelled to take up the task of supporting his mother and sister when his father dies after being requested to hand in his resignation. Tom goes to work at the foot of the ladder, and falls in love with Edna Carr, daughter of the foreman of the plant; but she is fascinated by Graham, superintendent of the works, and rather tires of Tom. The latter and Graham have an encounter, the latter getting the worst of it, and Tom's discharge is ordered. But he is popular with the men and a sympathetic strike is ordered. Young Clark urges them to refrain from violence, but it becomes necessary to call out the state troops. So great is the riot that the soldiers are compelled to fire on the men. Tom, in the front rank, is shot down and dies. Edna rushes to him, but it is too late—he is dead.

V-L-S-E "WHO'S WHO" IN DEMAND.

Because of the tremendous demand for its brochure, "Who's Who in V-L-S-E Plays," in which is listed all information relative to its plays and players, fifteen thousand of which have been distributed throughout the country, the Big Four has planned a second edition of more than 25,000 copies.

"TEMPTATION AND THE MAN" (Universal).

Here's a picture of Robert F. Hill's "Temptation and the Man" company as the still camera caught them in the Adirondacks last winter. See the snow. Oh, the beautiful snow. What a nice, refreshing picture for mid-July exhibition!

Drivin' the hoss is Hobart Henley. Beside him with the goggles is Director Robert F. Hill. Below Hill is Sydell Dowling contemplating the warm summer days in store for her. Her arm rests on Sydney Bracy, he of the fur cap.

"Temptation and the Man" Company in the Adirondacks.

"Temptation and the Man," on which the Hill company was working at the time the picture was taken, is a Red Feather five-reeler written by Catherine Carr. Hobart Henley is featured in it, supported by Sydell Dowling, Bert Busby, Sydney Bracy, Joseph Granby and Clara Beyers. It will be released by the Universal on July 24.

EXHIBITORS MAY READ THE STORIES.

A novel step has been taken by the Kalem Company in connection with "The Girl From Frisco," by making it possible for exhibitors to read the stories of the first four episodes of this series featuring Marin Sais and True Boardman before they book the pictures.

"Go to the nearest newsstand," reads the Kalem announcement, "and buy a copy of the August issue of Short Stories Magazine. There you can read the stories of the first four episodes of this Western series by Robert Welles Ritchie."

"BOBBY BUMPS" (Paramount).

"Bobby Bumps and the Detective Story," Earl Hurd's drawing for the Paramount-Bray Animated Cartoons, depends for plot upon Bobby's experiences as a bookworm and the complications which his fondness for the literature of the dime libraries leads to. Father finds Bobby engrossed in a volume of Deadeye Dick's adventures and promptly confiscates his book. A short time later Bobby finds that Father is locked in his room reading the censored volume. With the aid of his pointer pup and the skylight Bobby recovers the detective story. Father gives chase and the novel falls into Mother's hands and she becomes the most interested reader of the family. By a ruse Bobby again recovers his book, only to be plunged into fresh difficulties, which make him vow to give up the dime libraries completely.

Kemble Says He Will Produce

Brooklyn Exhibitor and Exchange Man Promises Pictures of Vital Interest in Public Life.

WILLIAM H. KEMBLE, one of the best known showmen in the East, emerges in a new field of the motion picture industry, as a producer and distributor of film, with "The Zeppelin Raids on London and the Siege of Verdun," in five parts, and "America Preparing," a ten-part spectacle. Mr. Kemble acquired "The Zeppelin Raids on London" after a successful run at the Park theater, New York City.

Mr. Kemble enters the producing field after many successful years as an exhibitor and exchange man in and about New York. His most successful ventures are the Triangle theater, in Brooklyn, Big "T" Film Corporation and, later, the Kemble Film Corporation.

Kemble at the time of the formation of the Triangle Film Corporation saw the possibilities of Triangle service and secured the exclusive right for Brooklyn and Long Island. His success can be judged by the fact that he controlled twenty-five per cent. of the motion picture service in Brooklyn. At the time of acquiring Triangle took over the old Crescent theater, Brooklyn. In fourteen days he transformed it into one of the handsomest theaters in the country, at a cost exceeding $50,000.

Mr. Kemble says that his concern, in entering actively in the producing and distributing of film, would limit its effort to such films as would prove of vital interest in public life at the time. Associated with Mr. Kemble are J. C. Miller, as treasurer, and H. Clark Mooney, secretary and director of all advertising and the policies of all Kemble's interests.

CHANGE TITLE OF VIVIAN MARTIN SUBJECT.

In place of "Nell of Thunder Mountain," as originally announced by the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company as the name of its initial release, starring Vivian Martin, this subject will be entitled "The Stronger Love." This production has just been finished under the direction of Frank Lloyd and was staged, chiefly in the San Bernardino pine forests at the top of the mountains, where many scenes of rare beauty were filmed. Supporting Miss Martin in her first Morosco vehicle is an exceptional cast, including: Edward Peil, William W. Jefferson, Louise A. Emmons, Alice Knowland, Herbert Standing and John McKinnon. Jack Livington, although originally in the cast, met with an accident in the mountains with the result that Director Lloyd jumped in to continue the character. The photoplay will be released the middle of August on the Paramount Program.

Notes of the Trade

TUMBLING over a dam and shooting a rapids gave Lillian Drew, Essanay leading woman, her most thrilling experience in pictures recently when she performed the stunt at Starved Rock, Ill. It worked out far more thrilling than the picture required, which pleased everyone except Miss Drew. She admitted that she was a frightened young woman during the experience and that swimming between rocks and rapids is a sport she does not care to adopt.

Director Roy Clements is awaiting the completion of a second photoplay for his star, Pat Rooney, having completed "The Bell Hop," with Rooney in the title role. "The Bell Hop" was written by Charles E. Van Loan especially for the comedy work of Rooney. While it is not fully decided, the next production will probably place Rooney in an environment of the American Indian.

Director Lloyd Charleton has his production of "The Shepherd," a five-reel feature, nearing completion, with Dorothy Davenport and Emory Johnson playing the leads, supported by Richard Morris and Alfred Allen. The story is by Elwood Hemming, and the scenario by Eugene B. Lewis, head of the scenario department at Universal City, and is classed as a society drama.

J. Searle Dawley is delving deep into the subject of the Black Art, alchemy, necromancy, fairy lore, witchcraft and all other kindred subjects in preparation for the producing of "Little Lady Eileen" by the Famous Players. It is an Irish story starring Marguerite Clark in which the fairies play an important part.

Vernon Howe Bailey's sketches of Washington, D. C., and of Petrograd are soon to be released by Essanay.

The Blue Ribbon Feature, in which Anita Stewart plays the role of a newspaper reporter, is scheduled for release by the Vitagraph Company the latter part of July. Others in the cast are Charles Wellesley, Frank W. Mann, Anders Randolf, Julia Swayne Gordon, Doc Donohue, Donald MacBride and Mr. Johnson. The production was directed by S. Rankin Drew.

Martin Sabine, the Unity director, has in active preparation for the concern a new screen drama dealing with the exploits of the captivating "crook" Crochard, "The Invincible," who figured in Mr. Sabine's other Unity production, "The Pursuing Vengeance." Mr. Burton E. Stevenson, the author of the Crochard series, states that Mr. Sabine is to screen all of these works.

Art Acord, Mustang-Mutual cowboy actor, recently injured when his mount fell during the filming of a scene for "Sandy, Reformer," a forthcoming Western drama, will be able to return to work in about two weeks, his physician recently announced. Acord, at first, was thought to have been mortally injured.

The second picture in which Barney Bernard will appear was written especially for him by Senor Andres de Segurola, the celebrated baritone of the Metropolitan Opera Company. It will be produced for the Vitagraph by Paul Scardon. In this latest offering Bernard will play both the role of a grasping banker and that of a big-hearted pawnbroker.

Mutual has divided the Vogue comedy players into two companies. Rube Miller will direct one company with Roy McRay as assistant and with Ben Turpin and himself as chief funmakers. Lillian Hamilton, Harry Huckins and Evans make up the cast.

Henry Kernan and Jack Gaines will direct the other corps. Paddy McQuire, Arthur Moon, Ed. Laurie and Gypsy Abbott have the leads.

Marguerite Clayton is now working in another Essanay feature play in five acts. It is "Lost Twenty-Four Hours," and was taken from the famous stage hit. It will be her first venture in a comedy-drama of this length. In "Putting It Over," a recent two-act farce, she demonstrated her ability along these lines. In the feature play she will appear with Richard C. Travers and Warda Howard.

Valentine Grant, the Famous Players star, has returned to New York to make preparations for her next picture, which will be directed by Sidney Olcott. In her next picture she will play the role of a Scotch lassie.

"A Tin Soldier," a famous comedy by Charles Hoyt, is being produced in two acts by Essanay. None of the laughable situations of the stage play have been omitted. An admirable selection of types for this farce has been obtained and some beautiful settings—unusual in a picture of this length—constructed.

Juan de la Cruz is leading man to Edna Goodrich in "Body or Soul," the Morosco photoplay under construction. Like Geraldine Farrar, Juan de la Cruz has progressed from grand opera to the voiceless drama.

Roy McRay has joined the Mutual forces, and will assist Rube Miller in directing. He will also play important roles in these Vogue comedies. He has a keen sense of comedy situations and is as bright as a whip.

The return of Richard C. Travers to the Essanay studios after his three months in vaudeville, was marked by an immediate start in a new five-act feature play, "Lost Twenty-Four Hours," which was taken from the famous stage hit of the same name. He appeared in "My Country, 'Tis of Thee," a two-reeler on a patriotic topic, and then without delay filming of the feature was begun. With him in the play are Marguerite Clayton and Warda Howard. It is a fast moving comedy with numerous amusing situations.

Alan Hale, who recently completed a special engagement with the Famous Players, where he played opposite Pauline Frederick in "The Woman in the Case," has been engaged to play one of the leading roles in "Rolling Stones," another Famous Players production, under the direction of Dell Henderson. The engagement was arranged through the Amalgamated Photo Play Service.

Mutual has acquired some new faces, which will appear in Vogue comedies in the near future. Lillian Hamilton will be Rube Miller's new leading comedienne and will play in connection with Ben Turpin, Harry Huckins and O. Evans.

Margaret Gibson, the dainty little star of the David Horsley studios, and one of the most daring feminine actresses of the silent drama, which name she has justly earned through her fearless work in close contact with wild animals of many varieties, after a most trying season is enjoying a brief vacation for the first time in more than a year.

Children See Uncensored Pictures

Topeka Men and Women Uplifters Bring Along the Whole Blessed Family, Is the Charge Aimed at Kansas Censors—Some of the Hyperregulated but Ordinary Citizens Inclined to Be Peevish About It.

By Kansas City News Service.

TOPEKA, Kan.—A ludicrous situation has arisen in Topeka, Kan., with respect to the kinds of pictures that the board of censors believes the young people of Kansas should be allowed to see. For all the pictures that are censored have been, it is said, viewed before any eliminations are made by a bevy of girls and boys, among them the sixteen-year-old daughter of the Rev. Festus Foster, one of the censors.

The pictures are exhibited to the board in the basement of the State House. To these exhibitions it has been customary to invite various men and women who are interested in the uplift of the moving picture and the purging of the screen. It was perhaps natural that the women interested in welfare work should attend, for their suggestions doubtless were of value to the censors. But objection was made by somebody to the fact that the women frequently brought their daughters, and even their very young sons, boys five and six years old. It seemed, it was said, hardly proper that such small children should be allowed to see the uncensored films, which the parents were going to criticise for the benefit of the children of other citizens.

Mr. Foster was quoted as saying that he did not invite the young girls to the exhibitions, though he had not refused to allow them to remain.

When the report was spread that so many people, including the girls, were allowed to see the uncensored films, there was a division of opinion. Some were envious that these had been favored, while others were resentful that social workers considered the general public less able to control its emotions and regulate its own conduct than they were.

Kansas City Sorry to Lose Mills.

KANSAS CITY.—A piece of news that strikes the moving picture men of the Middle West with a sense of personal loss is the removal of E. C. Mills, not only from Kansas City, but from the moving picture business. Mr. Mills left the Kansas City Mutual office July 15, to become a special representative of the Interstate Amusement Company, with headquarters at Chicago. This company is the largest vaudeville booking house in the country, handling perhaps the best strings of theaters.

On second thought, the moving picture men of this section realize that Mr. Mills will keep right on working for things that will be for the benefit of the industry—just as, before he became identified with pictures, his enterprises reflected benefit upon pictures though immediately intended for the good of vaudeville and theatrical performances.

Mr. Mills joined the Mutual forces just a year ago. And his first work for pictures, even before he had taken up duties with the Mutual, was the organization of the Amusement Association of Kansas—for he had a very large part in that project. One of his particular ideas for that association was that it should include all branches of the industry—and include also the vaudeville and theatrical people, which it does. Mr. Mills at Kansas City was a prime mover for the Screen Club. And he has in this past year been called upon dozens of times for help in local troubles, where taxes or licenses or Sunday closing, or censorship or bickerings among exhibitors were interfering with proper development of business. He has given very largely of his time and spent much of his own money in such work.

Elliott Will Enlarge Sapphire.

Kansas City.—A. E. Elliott, manager of the Sapphire theater, noted as the smallest moving picture theater in Kansas City, is about to make radical changes in his house. Ultimately the improvement is to go to the extent of an entirely new building, which will increase the capacity from 185 to 660. Mr. Elliott has secured a lease on land adjoining his present house, and will probably build in the course of a year. The building itself will be designed for office purposes upstairs, and will have five stories.

New Rialto Winning on High Prices.

Kansas City.—The New Rialto is undoubtedly helping considerably to keep life in the picture business and maintain the pep of the downtown exhibitors. Here is a house that had been going slow at a nickel that has been turning 'em away now at 25 cents! "Driftwood" was put on for six days, with attendance of about 1,000 a day, in a house with a seating capacity of 240. It will be brought back for another engagement. "That Sort" will be brought also—it was shown at 15 cents. The New Rialto has proved that people would rather pay a little more, even in hot weather.

Wichita Wants to See 'Em Sundays.

Wichita, Kan.—A petition is being circulated calling for a special election to vote on the question of opening the moving picture theaters on Sunday. If the petitions receive sufficient signatures the election will be held on the same day as the August primaries, so that the cost will be inconsiderable. If this opportunity for an expression of public opinion in a formal way is lost it is not likely that a vote could be taken for perhaps a year, as the officials probably would not inject the Sunday closing question into the fall election.

Injunction Against Operators Dissolved.

Kansas City.—Judge Seehorn of the Court of Appeals has dissolved the injunction against union operators which temporarily had prevented them from picketing the Eastern theater. They are now free to picket the place, as they have been doing for several weeks. Their grievance is that the machine is operated by a non-union man. The operator is John E. Hughes, one of the owners, formerly a member of the union, whose membership automatically ceased when he bought an interest in the theater.

Swofford Takes Over the Garden.

Kansas City.—The Garden theater has been sold by J. J. Swofford to Samuel Davidson of Fort Worth, who has recently acquired large realty holdings in Kansas City, including a handsome residence. The theater is under lease to the International Attractions Company, which will put on theatrical entertainments.

K. C.'s Screen Club Getting Along.

The Screen Club of Kansas City is not letting any grass grow under its feet. Frank Newman, president, is pushing the enterprise through at a rapid rate. The first things to be done are the selection of quarters and equipment. Quarters probably will be arranged for immediately upon the return of the exhibitors from the Chicago convention. They will be centrally situated, downtown, probably on Main street. There will be reading rooms, amusements, a projecting room, probably equipment for refreshments, and every facility for enjoyment and for the entertainment of visiting members of the industry. The membership cards are now being sent around, signed by the new secretary, L. J. Scott.

Forty-four Houses Book Pathe Serial.

"The Grip of Evil" promises to be a worthy successor to "The Iron Claw" in Kansas City territory. The Pathe exchange now has the latter booked in forty-four theaters in Kansas City; one of the first contracts is now expiring, and one of the best suburban theaters, the Bancroft, is just now starting this serial.

Zueker Leases the New Center.

Kansas City.—Samuel Zueker, of Chicago, president of the New Center Amusement Co., has leased for ten years, at a total figure said to be $60,000, the New Center theater, now being erected at the southeast corner of Fifteenth street and Troose avenue, with a seating capacity of 1,200 on the ground floor. It will be opened about September 15. It is said that Mr. Zueker, who has many theaters in Chicago and nearby, will move the headquarters of his enterprises to Kansas City.

Glasser to Manage Denver Theater.

Kansas City.—W. B. Glasser, who has had charge of the "Girl and the Game" department of the Mutual at Kansas City, has removed to Denver, where he will be manager of the Paris theater. Mr. Glasser was secretary of the Screen Club of Kansas City. His place has been filled by the appointment of L. J. Scott, publicity man for the V-L-S-E at Kansas City, and everybody who knows the moving picture industry at Kansas City knows that the work will be well done.

Cincinnati Operators Ask Increase

In Return They Concede Under Certain Circumstances an Added Half Hour on the Day's Work—Receiver Asked for Highland Film Corporation—Dayton Exhibitors Trying to Organize in Effort to Better Conditions.

By Kenneth C. Crain, 610 First National Bank, Cincinnati.

CINCINNATI, O.—Negotiations are now on between moving picture exhibitors in and around Cincinnati and their operators with a view to adjusting the working agreement for the two years beginning with August 1, on which date the agreement under which the houses are now working expires. The operators want an increase of about 10 per cent. in their wages, on the one hand, and the exhibitors desire certain changes in their favor in the matter of overtime, matinees, etc., on the other. So far the discussions have been entirely amicable.

The operators have submitted a proposal in which their request for higher wages is included, but in which also they concede an extra half-hour of regular working time to houses running matinee and evening all the time, giving them seven and a half hours instead of seven as a day's work. They also change the overtime rate from 75 cents an hour or fraction thereof to 25 cents a reel. These changes were made at the suggestion of the exhibitors and will probably furnish a basis for getting at an agreement. It is understood that a number of houses have already signed the agreement on the basis of the proposal in question, and there is little prospect of trouble on this score.

Receiver Asked for Highland.

Cincinnati, O.—The Highland Film Corporation, organized in Cincinnati about a year ago with ambitious plans for the operation of a big moving picture producing plant in or near Cincinnati, has collapsed, judging by developments of the past week or so. Following a meeting of stockholders, principally Cincinnati people, at which former President James T. Ford, the principal promoter of the company, declared that he would personally assume responsibility to the stock holders for their investment in the company, suit was filed by William J. Spinner, holder of ninety shares, calling for a receivership. The suit alleges that the company is .. solvent, that its business has been misconducted by the officers, and that the company's assets are in danger of being dissipated. About $14,000 in stock was subscribed locally, it is reported. The company originally planned to establish a studio at Fort Thomas, the government military reservation on the Kentucky side of the river, and more recently made an offer to purchase the Zoo for use as a producing point and general amusement resort. Mr. Ford attributes the failure of the company to developments in the producing field looking toward the consolidation of various interests, which he declared meant that independent producers could not profitably do business in the future.

Screen Club Plans Big Doings.

Cincinnati.—The Cincinnati Screen Club, which numbers many of the leading film men and exhibitors as well as newspaper representatives in the city among its members, is planning a combined moving picture ball and musical comedy presentation for somo date in the fall which should be one of the most notable events of the sort ever held in Cincinnati. A meeting is to be held shortly at which plans for bringing in a large additional membership will be discussed, and at that time the club will take action in connection with the proposed screen celebration. The fact that Cincinnati is the home of numerous moving picture and stage celebrities, including such bright lights as Marguerite Clark, Theda Bara, Trixie Friganza and numerous others, and is a theatrical center of some importance, is relied upon as adding interest to the event, and it is believed that an attendance of screen players can be expected.

V-L-S-E Hunting New Quarters.

Cincinnati.—Manager C. E. Holah, of the V-L-S-E exchange, has been extremely busy of late with the string of big features which he is now handling and with other matters of importance pressing for his attention. Incidentally, it may be mentioned that he has again been forced to go on the hunt for new quarters, as the Seventh street location has already been outgrown. A location in Opera place, the theatrical and moving picture Rialto of Cincinnati, is under consideration. Local employees of the Big Four recently received their quarterly profit-sharing checks, which are stated to have been very satisfactory.

Daytonians Trying to Get Together.

Dayton.—Dayton moving picture exhibitors are again making an effort to get together and form a really effective local organization, under the direct auspices of the Greater Dayton Association, the big business body of the city. Most of the exhibitors are and for a long time have been in favor of getting together to remedy certain conditions which obtained a foothold in the city, and the present movement therefore has good chances of success. Val Rayburg was the last president of the Dayton organization, and Dr. J. Q. Alexander was secretary. One of the principal reforms aimed at will be the adoption of a standard size program for use by all houses, to eliminate the excessively large bargain programs which have been seen in Dayton for some time past.

Mr. Stueve Is Surprised; No Wonder.

Canton.—A bit of orange peel carelessly dropped by somebody in front of the Odeon theater, nearly two years ago, has resulted in a suit against the theater by Herbert H. Wingerter, who asks Owner Robert C. Stueve for $7,016 damages. He alleges that it was negligence on the part of the management to permit the bit of peel to remain near the entrance, and that he fell upon it, suffering various injuries. The suit came as a considerable surprise to Mr. Stueve.

MICHIGAN GLEANINGS.

Petroskey.—Norman J. Feldman, formerly manager of the Temple theater, is in charge of the new Palace theater, which opened here July 1. Charles Galster is the lessee. The equipment includes a $25,000 organ orchestra and two Power 6B machines.

Alma.—J. E. Miller has opened his new Idle Hour theater in the Rockwell block, which has been under construction since last fall.

St. Joseph.—The Caldwell theater had a camera man film the Fourth of July crowds. Naturally everybody wanted to see themselves on the screen and big business resulted.

Kansas City.—Fred Pickrell, formerly manager of the Mission theater, Ponca City, Okla., one of the best known exhibitors in Oklahoma, is now with the Pathe exchange, Kansas City, covering Southern Kansas and Northern Oklahoma territory. This was the territory formerly handled by Howard E. Jameyson, now in the office at Kansas City.

OREGON NEWS LETTER.

By Abraham Nelson, 601 Journal Building, Portland.

Portland Censors Report.

Portland.—The report of the censor board for June shows 852 reels, or 351 subjects, viewed. Eliminations were ordered in 25, and 2 subjects, comprising 10 reels, were condemned. The number of reels viewed is the largest in the history of the censor board, although not the greatest number of subjects. This indicates an increase of long features. The Reliable Film Service imported a great number of reels during the past month which helped make the above record.

The T. & D. Bumped by Censors.

Portland.—The T & D, Portland's largest photoplay theater, recently suffered more grief at the hands of the Portland censor board. The board's viewers refused to pass the World feature, "The Weakness of Man," the Saturday before the Sunday show, and Manager Leonhart had his hands full rustling a new program for the next day.

"Doc" Crews Calls.

Portland.—C. S. Crews, owner of the Liberty theater, Walla Walla, Wash., and familiarly known among the road men of the Northwest as "Doc," was a recent visitor in Portland. It is very seldom that "Doc" gets to Portland these days, since most of his booking is done at Seattle and Spokane, but this time he bought a ticket to the Rose City just to see his old friends. The boys on Film Row all have a kindly feeling toward "Doc" Crews.

Al Sather in Vaudeville.

Portland, Ore.—Al Sather has given up the management of the Ideal theater and has entered vaudeville as a member of the Washington Trio. He left recently for California, where his act is reported to have been booked over the Pantages Circuit. Charles Connell has taken his place as manager of the Ideal.

Ministerial Support for Pictures.

Salem.—The Rev. James Elvin, of the First Congregational Church, believes in motion pictures. Furthermore, he practices his preachings. Nearly every week he shows a film subject on the screen in his church, and his name is at nearly all of the exchanges in Portland for regular service. "The Horrors of War" was shown at his church recently, also the Portland Rose Festival films. Mr. Elvin usually lectures on the subject shown on the screen. An admission price is charged, and he always has capacity audiences. Arrangements are being made to show "Les Miserables" and "The Life of Our Saviour" soon. Mr. Elvin is an ardent photoplay "fan." He has been quoted as saying that the average photodrama of today is not unclean if seen through clean eyes.

Heard on Film Row.

Baker Ore.—Haish & Cotter, owners of the Grand and Orpheum theaters, have acquired the lease on the Empire, which recently closed. The house will be remodeled and opened.

Portland.—H. W. Wilson, road man for the General, recently returned from a successful trip to the eastern part of the territory.

Portland.—Indications are that the theatrical map of Portland is due for another change. A proposed vaudeville circuit in which John Cort is said to be interested has been negotiating for the Heilig theater, and a proposition to erect a theater building on Washington and Broadway has been talked of for some time. These rumors, together with the uncertainty of the Orpheum location, have been the cause of much conjecture on Theater Row.

LETTER FROM CAPITAL CITY.

Exchangemen Disturbed Over Practice of Returning Films on C O D Basis.

By Clarence L. Linz, 635 Tenth Street, Washington.

SEVERAL Washington exchange managers are up in arms over the practices of certain of the exhibitors in this territory who resort to unseemly means of settling disputes without the consent of the exchanges. Several instances of this kind has been brought to our attention of late, in each of which the exhibitor has returned films to the exchanges C O D. The sums thus deducted are usually too small to warrant securing the reels from the express companies under a writ of replevin, but it is understood one company is considering other means of dealing with offenders. It may be an effort will be made to have these men charged with some offense, possibly of securing money under false pretenses or of larceny. Several of the cases were where the amount of the C O D shipments were in the neighborhood of $15 each. One exhibitor had some sort of a grievance, just what he did not say, nor has he told the exchange manager what his kick is as yet; he sent his films back C O D.

Another case was where the exchange shipped out a show on Friday night to a southern exhibitor. Some time later a cancellation was received by telegraph, too late to stop the shipment, which had already gone. These films had been sent out as C O D, and upon arrival it is stated that the exhibitor lifted the C O D, used the show and then returned it to the exchange C O D. Still another case was where a C O D deduction was made for quite an amount because paper had not accompanied the films, yet this exhibitor sent the paper back to the exchange some time after the show had been returned.

These are declared to be schemes which no legitimate exhibitor would practice and the exchanges are up in arms.

Three Film Men for the Border.

Three more film exchange employees are noted among the men who are soon to be sent to the Mexican border with the Third Regiment of the National Guard of the District of Columbia. F. E. Taylor, formerly booker for the General Film Company, has resigned that position to take up his military duties. M. Weissberger has been sent to take his place from the New York office.

Pathe, Inc., loses two men from the poster department, John Cunningham and Milton Yudelevit.

Leo Garner Returns to Washington.

Leo Garner, who severed his connection with the United Film Service some months ago, is back on the job with the title of manager of the office. Since leaving Washington he has been employed in Petersburg, Va.

Glad Hand Out for Visiting Elks.

The Elks owned Baltimore last week. Incidentally, the Elks owned Washington also. The glad hand was out for all members of the B. P. O. E., not any more for the one than for the other, yet the exchangemen had a very cordial welcome for those of the trade who strayed over. Among these were many of the Southern exhibitors, including John W. Pryor, a member of the firm of Pryor Brothers, of Danville, Va. Mr. Pryor states that despite the heat, business is quite good, and he predicts a successful fall and winter season.

Others among the visitors were C. O. Moss, Pathe's representative in the State of Virginia, and Cliff Godsey, another old-timer, who formerly represented the United Film Service. Louis Weiss, of the Twentieth Century Film Company, of New York, who also is an Elk, visited a number of friends here among the exchanges.

VIRGINIA NOTES.

Danville.—Pryor Brothers have secured control of the Broadway theater here and now have all of the houses of Danville, including the Bijou, Strand, Empire and Majestic. The Empire was recently taken over and closed. Since then the Strand also has been closed. The Broadway was operated by the Piedmont Amusement Company and was managed by Richard Castelbery. In commenting upon their holdings, J. W. Pryor said: "We expect to reopen one of these houses when the season starts in September, and at that time we will switch our service around somewhat so as to give each house what it can best handle."

Petersburg.—The Strand theater, which was opened here a few months ago by a corporation of which Messrs. Korman and Gassenheimer, of Washington, D. C., were the leading members, has been taken over by the Schlossburg Amusement Company.

Lynchburg.—The Belvedere theater has been undergoing some very extensive changes and many new improvements have been made. The house has been enlarged and the seating arrangements have been changed with the result that each patron is given the benefit of additional space and comfort. The management is now installing one of the largest Wurlitzer organs in the South and has engaged Earl Ball, an expert, to handle it. C. M. Casey, an old time show man, is owner of the Belvedere. Guy Barrett, one of the best liked, most popular young managers in the South, is in charge.

Officials and Film Men Lock Horns

Spokane's Threatening Commissioners Meet from Moving Picture Men Threats of Recall—An Emergency Ordinance.

By S. Clark Patchin, Spokane.

SPOKANE, Wash.—Never in the history of Spokane has there been as much excitement in the amusement life of this city as in the present quarrel between the city officials and the theater managers, more especially moving picture men. The adoption of a strict censorship ordinance was closely followed by the exhibitors circulating a referendum petition, then cuts were ordered in "The Birth of a Nation" followed by a suit in court won by the city which decided that it could make such orders.

Despite this the publicity created an increased demand on the part of theater people to see the production. Therefore Spokane witnessed its first $2 moving picture production which included music by a 30 piece orchestra, the prices of seats ranging from 25 cents to $2. Local critics declared that the production was too great a work to be affected by a few eliminations and practically a full house greeted the opening performance of the rejuvenated Griffith production which was shown here a year ago at from 25 to 75 cents.

This court action angle of the fight brought forth a threat on the part of the commissioners to enforce Sunday closing and the exhibitors have retaliated with a threat of circulating a recall petition against all of the commissioners who vote to sustain such action. The presentation of an emergency ordinance to the commission, for adoption, is the latest move at the date of this writing.

The new ordinance was drafted by Commissioner of public affairs F. K. McBroom known as an emergency ordinance to supplant the one held up by a referendum petition. This petition contained 4,249 names, 67 of which were of non-residents, and the petition was criticised by Commissioner McBroom for that reason. As there cannot be another special election before December it is probable the franchise will be voted on then.

The emergency franchise just presented to the commissioners for adoption practically substitutes the one held up in that it provides a fine of $100 or 30 days in jail for violation of same and prohibits the exhibition of any picture or play tending to be obscene, immoral, licentious or improper.

The commission also established a rule that the production "Where Are My Children?" to be shown at the Casino, for a week, starting July 9, shall be shown only to persons over 18 years of age. Will T. Reid, manager of the Casino, announced that he had previously decided to exclude those under 18 years of age from seeing the picture.

Cotter and Haish Buy Empire at Baker.

Spokane, Wash.—About 18 months ago Joseph P. Cotter of Spokane, where he was for a time in the advertising department of the Spokesman-Review and later with the Home Telephone Company, went to Baker, Oregon, where he joined forces with M. B. Haish in taking over the Grand and the Orpheum theaters under the name of the Majestic Amusement Enterprises. Later Mr. Cotter took unto himself a wife, a pretty Miss Holzer, who had nursed him when he was ill in the Sacred Heart Hospital, Spokane. Still not satisfied with their success of the amusement venture which included some vaudeville attractions with their moving picture productions, word has just been received that Messrs. Cotter and Haish have closed a lease for the Empire theater giving them a monopoly on the business in the Oregon city. They will remodel the Empire and install motion picture machines. They contemplate opening the house soon.

The Baker paper says: "Cotter and Haish have given Baker good service in vaudeville and motion pictures and by securing the third theater will be in a better position than ever to secure the best concessions from the film companies, and can maintain a high standard of service. They have taken an interest in matters of public welfare in Baker and have always been willing to lend their services to any public enterprise. They have been liberal users of newspaper advertising."

Films to Teach Care with Fire in Woods

Spokane, Wash.—In co-operation with other national forestry reserve work throughout the Coeur d'Alene country the Coeur d'Alene Forestry department, of Idaho, and Forestry men of the Northwest have selected the moving picture film as an assistant educational feature of their work. They will show pictures in different houses of how carelessness and small fires lead to fires which destroy property valued at millions of dollars, also many lives in the great Northwest almost annually.

Meyer Wolfie, supervisor of the forestry, arranged for the release of these films in Wallace and Coeur d'Alene, Idaho; Newport, Wash.; Libby, Great Falls, Helena; Billing and Bozeman, Montana, July 7. Other sections throughout the country which are in forest sections will have the pictures exhibited.

The pictures show "What a Careless Hunter Can Do"; "The Work of the Forest Range"; "Recreation and Watershed Protection"; "In a Forest in Utah"; "Live Stock Grazing on National Forest Ranges"; "Yellow Pine Logging in National Forests"; "A Forest Fire in California"; "Lodge Pole Tie-Making in Utah," and "Lodge Pole Lumbering in Colorado."

Portland.—Among the out-of-town visitors at the exchanges were: Mrs. Henrietta Leiter, owner of the Arcade, La Grand, Ore.; E. Hettum, Majestic theater, Kalama, Wash., and Miss Verne Ross., owner of the Dime theater, Toledo, Ore.

Fights for Men, Finery for Women

That's the Kentucky Idea, Set Forth in a Philosophical Disquisition on What's What on the Screen by Our Louisville Correspondent—An Essay on the Infant Question.

By C. D. Crain, Jr., 1404 Starke Building, Louisville.

LOUISVILLE, Ky.—Leading exhibitors during the past few months have found that in advertising there is nothing that "gets over" to the public so much as playing to the personal, or making the appeal personal. While the public of today is many centuries removed from the cave man, at the same time there is an underlying streak in the nature of the average man as well as woman to which strength appeals. Fight pictures, not in the sense of boxing matches, but where the wronged man is returning to primitive means of settling his wrongs, appeal to hundreds and thousands of people the world over. The leading theater managers of Louisville have found out that attendances gained toward the end of runs of pictures in which there was a good fight or strong scene, showing that the public talked about what appealed to it, told its friends, and the result was that these same friends came to the house to see a few rounds of a good realistic scrap. Therefore it pays to make such scraps look realistic. They go especially well in such states as Kentucky, where boxing matches have been barred by law for many years. Many managers now make capital of a fight picture in their reading notices in the newspapers, and have found that it pays.

To the feminine mind nothing appeals quite so strongly as clothing, hats, or shoes—in fact finery of any kind. Exhibitors have also taken advantage of this characteristic of human nature in advertising and have found that it succeeds. In this connection the writer may refer to an advertisement in the form of a reading notice that recently appeared in a local paper, and which caught many eyes, "Fine Gowns Worn by Miss Burke."

While few women can afford such gowns as are seen in "Gloria's Romance," at the same time they all take keen interest in seeing them, especially when advanced styles are advertised in connection with the picture. So long as the style show is not overdone in the picture it is not likely to drive away any of the male trade, which has acquired an ingrown aversion to the word "clothes."

Infant Proposition No Small Affair.

Louisville—The infant proposition has for years been one that has bothered more than one exhibitor. The proprietor of a small theater out in the state recently advertised that the price of admission was 10 cents for adults and 5 cents for children, and that a ticket would be required for each seat occupied. Enforcing the regulation would probably be comparatively easy in a small theater, of 250 seats, in a country town, but in the larger city with a theater seating 1,000 or better it is a fairly hard proposition to spot the infants occupying seats not paid for. One of the local managers has left it with his doorman to decide whether or not an infant was of a size to occupy a seat. His judgment is final. If the infant is a babe in arms, and one that could not very well occupy a seat under any condition, it is passed through, but children of two or three years of age, heavy children who are going to occupy a seat shortly after passing the door, must have tickets before entering. Many parents will carry such a child into the theater in order that it may get a seat free, but the child will be noted walking out later. During rush hours a child at 5 cents is a poor investment for the house, and should not be countenanced at zero if it expects to occupy a seat. This house does not encourage bringing small children to the regular performances at all, and has found that hard and set rules have kept seats open for adults who were paying for the privilege.

Broadway Boosts Photoplay Contest.

Louisville—The Broadway Amusement Enterprises has started a new photoplay contest in connection with the Walnut, Broadway and Baxter theaters. The contest will run from July 15 to August 24. A cash offer was made for the best scenario and one was secured.

Rex Cuts Prices for First Time.

Louisville—The Rex theater, formerly the Novelty, went from 10 cents to 5 cents on Sunday, July 16. The theater is one of the oldest of the medium-sized downtown houses, and has played at 10 cents since its opening in the fall of 1911. Prices may be raised again next fall, when business picks up with cooler weather.

Small Town the Thing, Says Bradbury.

Louisville.—Harry W. Bradbury, of Louisville, formerly operator of the old Columbia, who for the past year or two has been operating a chain of small theaters in Southern Ohio and Indiana, was recently in the city visiting relatives and old friends. Mr. Bradbury stated that after trying his luck with many theaters he had found that the best paying investments he had made were in the smaller cities. In the larger cities the people have been spoiled and want too much for their money. In order to give them the class of films they desire it is necessary to have a big seating capacity and get large crowds at every show. Mr. Bradbury believes the ideal way to handle pictures is to get a string of good small houses where each can turn over a net profit of about $50 to $75 a week.

Winchester's Pastime to Extend.

Winchester.—Arthur Bloomfield has returned from New York, where he spent his vacation and made arrangements to book a few special films for the Pastime. A number of improvements are contemplated at this theater. It is proposed that the rear of the building be carried back in order to increase the seating capacity about 100, giving the theater a total seating capacity of 500.

Irvine Company to Build Theater.

Irvine.—The Irvine Amusement Company, according to President A. L. Corbett, is preparing to move its main office to Winchester, Ky., where the company is proposing to erect an opera house to cost from $50,000 to $75,000. J. E. Stivers, general manager of the company, recently took an option on a corner lot as the proposed site. F. A. Ogden is manager of the company's Queen theater, at Winchester. It is proposed to use the new building for pictures and regular stage productions.

Operator Rogers Loses an Eye.

Louisville.—Norman Rogers, an operator at the Olympic theater, lost his left eye a few days ago while hunting with a party of friends near South Park. He received a scattered charge of shot, one of which pierced the eyeball. He will recover.

Charles H. Porter Reported Missing.

Charles H. Porter, 25 years old, formerly connected with several of the local picture theaters, has been reported officially as missing on the European battle front, where he was fighting with the Canadian Mounted Rifles, with which troop he has been since June, 1915.

Star Recovers from Fire Damage.

Lagrange.—The Star theater has remedied the recent fire damage in the operating room, and is running again, having lost scarcely any time. The damage was fully covered. The main loss was to the machines and a few reels of film.

Pikeville's Royal Opens.

Pikeville.—The Royal theater has been opened under the management of Warren Beverly, of Elkins, West Va., who has considerable experience in moving picture exhibiting.

Mills Continues to Operate Gem.

Maysville.—Harry C. Mills, proprietor of the Gem theater, who recently filed a petition in bankruptcy, is continuing to operate the theater under orders from the court. The schedule shows liabilities of $5,883.60 and assets of $6,514. The largest creditors are Arn & Simons, from whom the theater was purchased for the sum of $2,100. The property will probably be sold at public auction by the receiver.

Kentucky News Notes.

Winchester.—The Queen theater has been leased by the Irvine Amusement Co., and was opened on July 1.

Henderson.—The Grand Opera House has been leased to the Hays & Ragan Company, and will be completely remodeled.

Beaver Dam.—The Opera House has been converted into a moving picture theater. It is now operated on Thursday and Saturday nights. Pathe service is being used.

Louisa.—D. J. Burchett has opened a new picture theater in Louisa. The house has a seating capacity of 250.

Campbellsville.—W. I. Meador has taken a three-year lease on a new theater, which will be equipped with heating and ventilating systems, a stage large enough for vaudeville, and all modern equipment throughout.

Paris.—Harry Mitchell, acting for himself and his partner, John Lechleiter, has closed a deal with John Eliott, president of the Colonial Amusement Company of Lexington, Ky., for the sale of the lease and good will of the Paris Grand Opera House.

Lagrange.—A small boy who recently lit a match at the Grand theater, Lagrange, accidentally set fire to a reel which was being inspected by the operator before being put on for the evening show. The film exploded, and the room was in flames in a second. The fire department with chemical extinguishers put the blaze out, the only damage being to the operating room, which was insured. There was no one in the theater at the time.

Maysville.—Harry C. Mills, proprietor of the Gem theater, has filed a voluntary petition in bankruptcy and has asked that a receiver be appointed.

Louisville, Ky.—The Idlehour Amusement Co., of Louisville, was recently incorporated with a capital stock of $1,800 to operate picture shows. The incorporators are Floyd Whitehead, Henry T. Kraft and F. L. Wilhoit. Through a typographical error it was stated that the capital stock of the company was $1,500,000.

ITEMS FROM OMAHA.

Howard Grebe and Louis Rachman, cameramen, made 5,000 feet of film of the mobilization of the Nebraska National Guard at Lincoln.

Guy Clements has sold the It theater to Mrs. Shreve.

Features only will be shown by the Airdome, at Thirtieth and Farnam streets, during its fifth season. All benches have been white enameled, the entrance is green, in harmony with big trees, and the walks are of white crushed rock.

ITEMS FROM LONE STAR STATE.

By A. B. Harrison, Box 389, Dallas, Tex.

Dallas Man Takes Border Pictures.

Dallas.—W. M. Bird, manager of the Fox Film Corporation at Dallas, recently visited the Mexican border for the purpose of taking motion pictures of the troop movements for his company. The pictures taken in El Paso and along the border will be shown at the Hippodrome theater in Dallas.

United Program Has New Location.

Dallas.—The United Program Film Service of Texas has moved into its new quarters at 1911½ Commerce street. It was formerly situated at 1919½ Main street. D. E. Boswell, general manager, spent the week of July 3 in Dallas and assisted E. T. Peter, manager of the Texas office, in getting straightened out in the new quarters.

Plans for New Theaters in Houston.

Houston.—It is rumored that Houston is to have another hundred-thousand-dollar house this winter. There is also to be a new theater in the Fifth Ward. It is being built by Tony LaMotta. This will make three shows for this part of Houston.

Theater Burns at Laredo.

Laredo.—The Strand theater was burned on July 2, the fire starting in the building next door. This house was one of the finest on the Mexican border, and was owned by the Royal Amusement Company of San Antonio. The house will be rebuilt at once.

Pharr's National Totally Destroyed.

Pharr.—When half of Pharr was burned on July 3, the National theater, belonging to W. E. Gage of that city, was burned to the ground. The house will be rebuilt at once.

Another Producing Company in Houston.

Houston.—Houston is to have another new producing company. This is known as the Fickes Film Company, which started its first picture July 3. The picture features Miss Bessie Daniels and E. S. Legarde.

Poster Mounting Plant for Houston.

Houston.—Morris Schulman and H. E. Boswell have opened a new poster mounting plant in Houston. Mr. Boswell is well known in this part of the State, having managed the Houston office of the United Film Company for about eight months. Mr. Schulman was formerly house manager of the Pastime theater of Houston.

Bell Enterprises Handling Only Cartoons.

Galveston.—The Bell Enterprises, Inc., of Galveston, Texas, is having success with the Mutt and Jeff Cartoon pictures. Mr. Bell has sold his features to the Fidelity Film Company of Houston, retaining the cartoons.

Among Texas Exhibitors.

Sherman.—W. B. LaNicca, who has been managing the Topic theater, has gone out of the picture business and is now a knight of the grip. It is not known at present whether or not the Topic will be continued.

Houston.—T. O. Tuttle, manager of the General Film Company, is taking a well-earned vacation. Mr. Tuttle has been in bad health for some time and says he expects to spend his time on the gulf coast off of a railroad where they never heard of moving pictures.

Humbel.—J. R. Williams has succeeded J. R. Hess as manager of the Moonshine auditorium at Humbel. Mr. Williams was formerly connected with the Washington theater at Dallas. Mr. Hess owns a theater in Edna, and will return there to look after his interests in that city. J. R. McChesney is owner of the Moonshine auditorium.

Houston.—The Houston Heights Natatorium is the first small summer park in Houston to take up pictures.

Taylor.—"Candy" Jim Athas, who recently owned and managed the Candy theater at Taylor, but sold out and went to Mineral Wells, has returned to Taylor, having reopened the airdome in that city.

Fort Worth.—The Strand theater at Fort Worth has suffered a total loss by fire. This is one of the J. D. Wheelan theaters.

Mineral Wells—George W. Parks has sold his interest in the Lyric theater at Kingsville, and has purchased the Dreamland theater at Mineral Wells.

Houston.—W. F. McFadden, formerly of the Lincoln theater at Galveston and the Beacon theater at Houston, is now connected with the Texas-Louisiana Film & Supply Company of Houston.

Moulton.—Fred Marburger of the Gem theater at Shiner has opened a new show at Moulton. This is Moulton's first picture theater.

Houston.—The Key theater at Houston is being remodeled and reseated. Miss Johnson, the popular manager of the Key, has selected some very attractive chairs for her theater.

Houston.—Clarence H. Schippe, leading man and director for the Fox Players, Inc., of Houston, is putting on the production of "Baby Mine" at the Majestic theater of Houston, using the Fox Stock Co. It is being put on as a benefit for the Central High School Association.

FROM OKLAHOMA.

El Reno.—H. C. Bradford has recently taken over the Jewel theater at El Reno and closed the Cozy theater, which he has previously been managing.

Chickasha.—Ben Johnson, owner of the Sugg and Kozy theaters here, has purchased the Empress theater here, and closed it. W. C. Blackstone, former manager of the Empress, has been retained by Mr. Johnson as manager of the Kozy, and J. L. Oliver, who has been connected with Mr. Johnson for some time, will continue as manager of the Sugg.

NEWS FROM PINE TREE STATE.

By John P. Flanagan, Bangor.

BANGOR, ME.—Manager Thomas Williams, of the Nickel theater, which has just opened on Union street in Bangor, has purchased a 6A Power machine.

The Bijou theater in Bangor has discontinued for the summer and is now showing Triangle pictures at 5 and 10 cents admission.

Manager H. P. Smith of the General Film Bangor office has sold a Power 6B to Ross & Armstrong of the new theater at Vanceboro, Me. There is a show every Saturday.

Messrs. Stern of the Universal, Smith of the General and Borroto of the Mutual exchange, all located in Bangor, report that business is better than ever before in eastern Maine.

Portland.—George Appleby, former manager of the Jefferson theater, now connected with the Mutual Exchange in Boston, has been assigned to temporary work in the southern Maine territory.

Seal Harbor.—Odd Fellows hall is now showing Mutual pictures under the management of Joseph Emery of the Star, Bar Harbor, who recently opened this little summer house.

Rockland.—Oakland Park, a summer place under the management of the Rockland, Camden & Thomaston electric railway, is open for the summer and is showing Mutual pictures, secured through Manager Borrotto at Bangor.

Bangor.—S. Schultz, a former Aroostook County exhibitor, now on the road for George Kleine, reports a big demand all through Maine for "Gloria's Romance," which he has leased to theaters in Portland, Augusta, Gardiner, Bar Harbor and Northeast Harbor.

Millinocket.—Edmund Breese and Ormi Hawley are at Millinocket with Director Revier and a company of sixteen filming scenes for "The Iron Hand," a five-reel production, the feature of which will be a blow up of a log jam and a fight between the hero and the heavy in midstream. Scenes will be taken at Orono, Costigan and Bangor on the Penobscot River.

Alhambra Adding 500 Seats.

Cleveland, O.—The Alhambra theater, one of the largest East Side houses, is soon to close for a four-week period in order to permit the installation of a balcony. This will give the house more than 500 additional seats. Other houses which have announced closing for a few weeks during the hot weather are the Manhattan and the Marvel theaters.

Boise Wins Sunday Opening Battle

Idaho's Supreme Court Declares Theaters May Legally Open on Sabbath—As Result of Year-Long Fight Mayor Is Recalled and Retires to Private Life.

BOISE, Idaho.—After a fight lasting over a year the Supreme Court of the state declared that Boise's theaters could legally open their doors on Sunday. The first Sunday show after the decision was put on on July 2, and all the theaters arranged special feature programs for the occasion.

The history of the Sunday closing, or rather Sunday opening fight, shows it to have been a factional one between the so-called reform element on one side and the liberal-minded citizens on the other, rather than a political fight. A majority of the councilmen favored the opening of Boise's theaters on Sunday and an ordinance was passed toward this end. It was vetoed by the Mayor. As a sequel to the controversy the Mayor and one councilman, both of the so-called reform element, were recalled by a special election.

While exhibitors expressed themselves in joyful terms when the outcome of the fight became known, their attitude was not vindictive. They have offered to cooperate with the city's churches wherever possible and have signified their intention to run appropriate Sabbath day programs.

General Film Closes Butte Office.

Butte, Mont.—The General Film Company withdrew its office from Butte and will handle the business in this territory from Spokane and Salt Lake City. The company felt that the distribution of service could be handled more effectively from these two points. Fred C. Aiken was in Butte arranging the closing of the office. The change went into operation on July 9.

Censorship Dead in San Francisco

Believing the Bay City Public Is Against It, the Police Committee of Board of Supervisors Pass Up Whole Question—Dan Markowitz Installed as Manager of General Film Branch—Other News.

By T. A. Church, 1607 North Street, Berkeley, Cal.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.—The censorship question, which was discussed at such length a short time ago, and which for a time occupied almost the exclusive attention of the police committee of the Board of Supervisors, has been allowed to lapse, and no further action will be taken on the proposition of establishing a legal board. Discussions that were to have been held on this question have been postponed from time to time by the police committee, and a member of this body recently stated that there was no intention of bringing the matter up again, as it was clear a board of censorship was not wanted.

The admission made several weeks ago by one of the members of the committee in a public hearing that he favored the censorship of moving picture films because he feared that the screen would be used to favor prohibition in the coming campaign has been a strong factor in bringing the discussion on this question to a close. The liquor interests did not relish the prospects of any controversy in which they would be involved and at once made overtures for peace, virtually securing from exhibitors and exchange men an agreement that nothing would be used in moving picture houses either favoring or opposing prohibition, and at the same time agreeing to keep out of the censorship fight. Exhibitors have nothing to fear from the present censorship ordinance, as the board is not a legally appointed body and has dwindled down in active membership until what work is done is handled by two or three. The recent attempts to supervise a showing of "Twilight Sleep" and the stinging rebuke it received from a local judge illustrates how its influence has waned.

Charles Klopot.

San Francsico.—Charles Klopot, of Los Angeles, was a recent visitor here and has made arrangements for the opening of a branch of the California Comedy and Feature Film Company in this city. Quarters have been taken over at 120 Golden Gate avenue, in the heart of Film Row, and the new exchange will be opened for business as soon as a stock of films can be brought from the South. In addition to conducting a film exchange at Los Angeles Mr. Klopot has a branch at Phoenix, Ariz., but states that the latter may be moved to another State.

Maurice Levison Leaves for Seattle.

San Francisco.—Maurice Levison has severed his connections with the Apex film exchange on Golden Gave avenue and has left for Seattle, where he will take charge of a branch of the New Film Corporation, to be opened at 1216 Third avenue. Marion H. Kohn, of the Apex exchange, is still away on a trip to the southern part of the State and the local business is being looked after by Ernest Bru.

Books First Release at Portola Theater.

San Francisco.—J. L. Warner, of the Warner Film Attractions, recently gave a private review at the Tivoli theater of the first release of this concern, "The Prima Donna's Husband," produced by the Triumph Film Corporation and featuring Holbrook Blinn. Mr. Warner has booked this for the first run at the Portola theater for the week of July 23. He plans to leave shortly for Los Angeles on a brief business visit.

New Manager for General Film.

San Francisco.—Dan Markowitz, well known in the California field as a film exchange manager, but more recently engaged in this business in New York, has been appointed manager of the local branch of the General Film Company and arrived here early in July to take over this position, succeeding H. H. Hicks. Mr. Markowitz at one time had charge of the Universal exchange at Los Angeles and is especially well known there.

Film Representatives Visit Coast.

San Francisco.—Ben S. Cohen and Ned H. Spitzer, representing the Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation, were recent visitors here to make arrangements for the release of the productions of this concern.

Dave Bershon Visits Old Home.

San Francisco.—Dave Bershon, formerly of this city, but now manager of the Universal exchange at Los Angeles, where he succeeded J. V. Bryson, was here a short time ago renewing acquaintances.

Charles I. Luntz, Bluebird Manager.

San Francisco.—When Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., opened a branch at 125 Golden Gate avenue early in January of the present year a stranger in the San Francisco field was placed in charge in the person of Charles I. Luntz. That he has met with marked success here may be judged by the splendid manner in which Bluebird productions have been placed in this territory and the large number that have been shown in the finest photoplay houses in the city.

The success achieved by Mr. Luntz is due in a large measure to the thorough preparation he has had for work of this kind and to his experience in film exchange activities in other parts of the coast territory. He was formerly engaged in the mercantile business in New York city, but came to the Pacific coast and started with the California Film Exchange at Los Angeles in 1913, filling positions as shipper, booker and road man. After being with this concern for two years he was placed in charge of the branch of the Universal at Phoenix, Ariz., a position he filled for six months. He covered Arizona with the Williamson Submarine Pictures and then took charge of all special features in the Southern California territory for the Universal. Last October he joined the forces of the World Film Corporation at Los Angeles and left there to take charge of the Bluebird interests at San Francisco. A fine business has been enjoyed here during the past six months and Mr. Luntz is very enthusiastic over the outlook, stating that conditions are improving all the time.

Charles I. Luntz.

Secretary of Screen Club Resigns.

San Francisco.—Joe Huff has resigned as secretary of the Screen Club of San Francisco, owing to the press of business duties, and this position is being filled temporarily by R. F. Cohen. Plans have been under way for some time for some special events at the Screen Club, but the holding of these will probably be postponed until after the vacation season.

Rialto Shows Mobilization Films.

San Francisco.—The Rialto theater on Market street has been featuring a news film during the past week showing the mobilization of the National Guard at Sacramento, these pictures having been taken by the Fox Film Corporation and are the first of the kind to be shown here. As San Francisco has sent a large quota of troops the pictures are of great interest locally.

Animal Comedies in Demand.

San Francisco.—The animal comedies made by the E. & R. Jungle Film Company and handled through the Peerless Feature Film Company are in good demand here and are showing at some of the largest houses.

Big Business with Chaplin Feature.

San Francisco.—Vivian Preston, representing the Independent Film Exchange, 122 Golden Gate avenue, returned recently from a trip by automobile through the territory south of San Francisco as far south as Santa Maria with a four-reel Chaplin production, "Charlie's Stormy Romance." In a number of theaters all former records for attendance were broken, due to the manner in which the attraction was advertised.

San Francisco News.

Ray Duhem, who conducts a large finishing plant at 700 Hayes street, made a trip through the San Joaquin Valley early in July and made a number of interesting pictures.

Work is progressing rapidly on the Royal theater, at Polk and California streets, and it is anticipated that this will be opened early in August. This will be one of the finest suburban houses in the city.

The Winters theater, at Mission street and Templeton avenue, on the site of the old Peninsula theater, has been sold by Charles Moser to Mrs. Pendergast.

Mr. Calmy has returned from a trip as far south as Los Angeles. While away he made a number of bookings for the Independent Film exchange.

Northern California Jottings.

Richmond.—Davis Brothers, who until recently conducted a poster exchange in San Francisco, have taken over the Regent theater on Macdonald avenue, between Eleventh and Twelfth streets, and are so well pleased with the outlook there that negotiations are pending for the erection of a new house for their use.

Lodi.—Ed. Stark, for several years in charge of the Grand theater at San Francisco, is now conducting the Tokay theater with Walter Hoges.

Porterville.—The Monarch theater will be ready for occupancy early in August, construction work having progressed rapidly of late.

Redwood City.—The new theater of Ellis Arkush, who now conducts the Sequoia theater, will be opened early in August. Mr. Arkush recently purchased a Westinghouse motor-generator set and Caille ticket selling machines as a part of the equipment of the new house.

Louis Hyman With Sol L. Lesser.

San Francisco, Calif.—Although comparatively a newcomer in the film exchange field, Louis Hyman, with Sol L. Lesser, is already rated as being one of the best exchange men in this territory. About two years ago he joined the staff of the Golden Gate Film exchange and a few months later was transferred to the All Star Feature Attractions, Inc., with which he has been ever since. He had charge of the booking of "The Spoilers" and assisted with "Cabiria" and "The Christian," some of the great successes handled by this firm. When the Kleine-Edison releases were secured he had full charge of the booking of these.

Since taking up film exchange work he has made it a point to make frequent trips through the northern California territory to make the personal acquaintance of exhibitors and to learn their needs. When Leon Netter left for the East some time ago he became assistant manager of the All Star Feature Attractions, Inc., and has full charge of the bookings. He is but twenty-two years of age, but in this instance youth has not proved a handicap to success. He enjoys the full confidence of those with whom he is connected, as well as the exhibitors with whom he does business, a combination that augurs well for his future.

MINNEAPOLIS NEWS LETTER.

By Perry S. Williams, Minneapolis Tribune.

Two Houses Hit by Fire.

Minneapolis.—Fire has visited two moving picture theaters in this city. The Crystal suffered a loss of about $500. The Eagle theater was damaged $1,000. Neither theater had been in use for several weeks.

Unicorn Helps Managerless Houses.

Minneapolis.—The Unicorn exchanges have offered to furnish their services free each week to any picture house which is lacking a manager due to his call to the border. Manager Woolf is doing his best to get in touch with every exhibitor in this territory whose business is to be affected as a result of his call to the colors.

Hodupp Visiting Pathe Exchanges.

Minneapolis is playing host to Victor H. Hodupp of New York city, assistant to Mr. Seeley at the Pathe home offices. Mr. Hodupp is making the rounds of the Pathe exchanges in the interests of his chief in order to give the home office a first hand knowledge of the film situation throughout the country and especially in their own exchanges. Mr. Hodupp formerly was the manager of the Pathe Chicago branch. He came to Minneapolis after visiting Chicago and Pittsburgh.

"The Iron Claw" Wins.

Minneapolis.—At a recent contest conducted by J. A. Booth, manager of the Ha Ha theater here, the public was given an opportunity to vote on their favorite serial with the understanding that the most popular story should be brought back for a return engagement. "The Iron Claw" was the favorite.

Manager Blaisdell Goes with Guard.

Canby, Minn.—The Iris theater here is without its popular manager, C. M. Blaisdell, and is likely to have to go without him for some time to come. Mr. Blaisdell is a member of the Minnesota National Guard and is in camp at Fort Snelling (Camp Bobleter), near Minneapolis, with his regiment.

General Covering Big Territory.

Minneapolis.—The General Film Exchange here now has one of the largest territories to serve of any exchange in the country or any service. The recent closing of the Butte (Mont.) office and its merging with the Minneapolis exchange gives this office a district extending practically from Milwaukee to Seattle, half way across the continent.

Glasgow.—The new theater in this city will be known as the Lyric theater. It will be devoted entirely to pictures. Coughlin & Rouse will be in charge.

Crosby, Mont.—Ralph Saller of Westby, Mont., has taken over the Photoplay theater.

Lemmon, S. D.—This city is soon to boast of a thoroughly modern and up-to-date picture theater, the Marcus. Lew Fein is to be manager.

Jordan, Minn.—Work has been started on a new picture theater in this place.

Shakopee, Minn.—The Gem theater here is now controlled by Frank Viegel, of St. James, Minn.

Caledonia, Minn.—Frank Maher has bought control of the Empire theater at Chippewa Falls, Wis., from R. J. Neumann, who expects to go on the road selling pictures.

Marion, S. D.—A moving picture theater is to be opened here by John Heintz.

Minneapolis.—Henry Friedman is the new manager of the Minneapolis Pathe exchange. He formerly was in the exchange at Washington, D. C. He takes the place of S. B. Sampson, resigned. Mr. Sampson may go to Indianapolis.

Fargo, N. D.—W. L. Hester has been promoted to the managership of the Laemmle offices at this place to succeed Lee A. Horn. Mr. Horn resigned to become associated with the Northwestern Motion Picture Equipment Company at Minneapolis.

Marshall, Minn.—The theater at this place has been turned into a film house. Mrs. C. M. Mast is proprietor.

Kirkhoven, Minn.—A new theater is being constructed here. Alfred M. Jacobson is behind the venture.

Winona, Minn. — The Schlingerman building here has been made over into a moving picture theater and will be called the Strand. Harry Rolbicki is manager.

Jackson, Minn.—The formation of a $100,000 company, known as the Minnesota Historical Film Corporation, has been announced here.

Conclave Aids Buffalo Exhibitors

Two Hundred Thousand Shriners Make Things Busy for Downtown Houses, but Residential Theaters Suffer—Batavia Operator Probably Fatally Burned—New Road Men for Mutual—Other News from Eastern Lake District.

By Joseph A. McGuire, 5 Lewis Block, Buffalo.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—More than 200,000 visitors were in this city the week of July 10 to attend the Shriners' national conclave. The downtown moving picture theaters profited by the convention, but the houses in the residential districts suffered from poor business because thousands of their patrons visited the business section to enjoy the parades and other outdoor amusements that were a feature of the entire week. Shea's Hippodrome, the Strand, Palace, Olympic, Lyric, Family, Happy Hour and Keith's, all downtown houses, were brilliantly decorated with the Shriners' emblems and colors and American flags. Manager Franklin of the Lyric featured "the smallest Shriner in the world." J. H. Michaels, manager of the Academy theater, furnished a special program of amusements at a banquet at which 24,000 Shriners were present. Al Kader Temple of Shriners, of Portland, Ore., brought to Buffalo 5,000 feet of moving pictures showing the beauties of Portland and vicinity and boosting for the 1919 convention for that city. The film was shown at a special exhibition at the Strand theater, Buffalo, July 13, and was accompanied by appropriate talks by Portland Shriners.

Batavia Operator Badly Burned.

Batavia, N. Y.—As the result of an explosion in an operating booth of the Grand theater recently, Lamont D. Gillons, operator, was probably fatally injured. Beyond the fact that a film ignited there are only theories as to the cause of the explosion. Gillons has been unable to give a clear account of what happened. He was removed to the Batavia hospital, where, it was said, his body was badly burned. George Plock, employed at the theater as an assistant in the office, was slightly burned. There were about fifty persons in the house at the time. They made their way through the fire doors with little confusion. The booth was of fire-proof construction, and the flames which followed the explosion were kept within the steel walls. All the film was quickly consumed and the machine and other contents were ruined. The theater is owned by T. G. Thompson, Jr., of Rochester, and managed by George F. Flaherty of Batavia.

Rosing Takes Over Fillmore.

Buffalo.—George Rosing, former manager of the Fillmore theater, Buffalo, has taken over the house, which will be closed in August, to be completely remodeled. The Fillmore, which seats 1,200, will play features.

New Home for Ridgeway Orpheum.

Ridgeway, Pa.—The Orpheum moving picture theater will move into more commodious quarters near the former site. The new house will have a complete equipment.

Buffalo Capital Revives Arcade.

Buffalo.—Jim Wallingford, Daniel N. Hyman and Merritt N. Baker, who have been in the moving picture business in Buffalo for some time, have organized C. B. Keith's Arcade, with a capital of $5,000. The concern has revived the penny-in-the-slot business, featuring pictures and other amusements, which were popularized in Buffalo by Mitchel H. Mark about ten years ago.

Filkins Books Pathe Serial.

Buffalo.—N. I. Filkins, representing the Pathe Exchange, has booked "The Grip of Evil" at the Strand theater, Buffalo. Mr. Filkins was delighted with the booking, inasmuch as a serial at the Strand is an innovation.

New Road Men for Mutual.

Buffalo.—William Leyser, who was recently appointed a road representative of the Buffalo offices of the Mutual Film Corporation, has managed the Marlowe, Rialto and Family moving picture theaters in this city. His three years' experience as an exhibitor is an asset for him in handling his customers intelligently. As manager of houses he booked the Mutual pictures extensively and his familiarity with them is another advantage he has in soliciting business for that company.

Herman Lorence is another new road representative for the Mutual in this territory. He has been connected with the company in New Orleans, Kansas City, Dallas, Toronto and Montreal. He formerly conducted the Lee Avenue theater of Brooklyn.

Guntrup of Salamanca Doing Well.

Salamanca.—L. F. Guntrup of the Bijou theater, Salamanca, has moved across the street to his new house, which bears the same name. He is holding his own, despite the opposition of two larger houses. Mr. Guntrup projects from the rear of his translucent glass screen, using a 25-foot throw. This shorter throw gives him more seating capacity and saves him current. He is featuring "The Girl and the Game" and "The Secret of the Submarine." One reason for Mr. Guntrup's success is his use of up-to-date advertising and his courteous treatment of his customers.

Elmira to Make Local Picture.

Elmira.—The Mozart theater of Elmira and The Herald will have a moving picture production arranged with Elmira girls only in the cast. A voting contest to select the person taking the leading character is a feature.

Joseph Prady succeeds John O'Reilly as the proprietor of the Peerless theater of Bradford, Pa.

Edward Connelly has taken over the Majestic theater, Brooklyn Square, Jamestown, N. Y., formerly owned by J. Sutcliffe.

Fell Trees to Build Tommy's Theater

Canada's Sturdy Soldiers Clear Wilderness That They May Have a Picture Show—Temporary Tent Bears Name of Strand—"Where Are My Children?" Evades Ontario Censors but Is Destroyed in Express Car Fire.

By W. M. Gladish, 1263 Gerrard Street East, Toronto.

TORONTO, Ontario.—One of the most remarkable moving picture theaters ever established in Canada is the Strand theater at Camp Borden, Ontario, the military encampment for 40,000 of Ontario's overseas troops. Three months ago the area which has become the center of military activities for this province was a barren wilderness except for large expanses of primeval forests. A huge tented city has grown up overnight, however. The camp is miles from the nearest town of fair size and about seventy-five miles from Toronto. Entertainment was to have been supplied to the soldiers in two moving picture theaters under the control of the military authorities. The manager of one of these "houses," as announced last week, is M. S. Marvin, manager of the Strand theater, Toronto.

Marvin's Strand Theater, Camp Borden, Ontario.

Owing to a congestion of freight lines to the camp, Mr. Marvin was unable to have his theater ready before the big rush of troops to encampment began. He managed to secure a large marquee, with a seating capacity for 500, however, and he was given a temporary site for this big tent near one of the forests on the government ground. The accompanying photograph shows the tent-showhouse ready on July 10 for the first performance at night. In the foreground are the trunks of trees which were felled by the soldiers to make space for their theater.

The main attraction on opening night was the Fox feature, "Blue Blood and Red."

Canada Watching Its War Tax.

Toronto.—J. W. McGarry, Provincial Treasurer for Ontario, has issued the warning that Government officials have discovered a tendency among moving picture theater managers to become careless in connection with the reports and returns for the sale of war tax amusement tickets each week. He does not believe that the carelessness is intentional in many cases, he declares, but he hopes the exhibitors will take heed of his warning. It is also pointed out again that even a person who enters a theater for the purpose of witnessing a performance without paying the required tax is liable to a fine of the same amount as that imposed against theater owners.

Out of the Censors Into the Fire.

Toronto.—After the Ontario Board of Censors had refused to pass it for the Province of Ontario, the feature film, "Where Are My Children?" which is being handled in Canada by Clair Hague, general manager of the Canadian Universal, was sent to St. John, N. B. On the way the print was destroyed by fire when the express car was burned. Another print was immediately ordered by wire.

Mr. Hague is making arrangements for the screening of "The Dumb Girl of Portici" in the larger theaters all over Canada from the Toronto headquarters of the Universal. The minimum admission to any Canadian theater where the Pavlowa feature is being shown will be 25 cents, it is announced here.

The house organ of the Canadian Universal Company, known as The Bulletin, has been increased to an eight-page publication. One of several new departments is a column for "fans."

V-L-S-E Expands in Canada.

Toronto.—W. C. Gookin, Canadian general manager for V-L-S-E, has announced that as a result of the recent visit of Walter W. Irwin, the Montreal branch would be moved to more commodious quarters at 401 Bleury street. The premises measure 50 by 120 feet and there are various facilities, including a film vault, private offices, general display room and other essential features. The Toronto headquarters of the company will also be moved to a larger office shortly while plans are also being made for the opening of several more branches in Canada.

A. M. Wilbur Now Mutual Road Man.

Toronto.—Mr. Barrett, Toronto manager for the Mutual, announces that A. M. Wilbur, formerly associated with the General and World companies, has been engaged as a road man for the Mutual to work from the Toronto office. Mr. Wilbur is widely known throughout Ontario film circles.

Price Says the West Looks Good.

Toronto.—C. B. Price, Canadian general manager for the Mutual, recently returned from a seven weeks tour of the Canadian West. He found satisfactory conditions at each Mutual branch and made changes in the staff at only one office, that at Vancouver. Immediately after returning to Toronto Mr. Price proceeded to Montreal for an inspection of Eastern Canadian conditions.

Toronto's Strand Fussing Up.

Toronto.—The operating room of the Strand theater has been equipped with two motor-driven double-reel capacity Baird machines. A new feature of this house is a private theater for private exhibitions. The whole front has been given a summery appearance through the use of large window boxes containing flowering plants and also large hanging baskets.

Items of Toronto Interest.

S. H. Howard, formerly of the Toronto Daily Star, has been appointed publicity manager for the Paramount Pictures Corporation, whose Canadian head office is at 12 Queen street east.

Leon Brick, until recently manager of the Auditorium, London, Ontario, has received the appointment as manager of the new Regent theater, a Toronto downtown house which will open in about one month. Mr. Brick is a former Toronto theater exhibitor. His son, F. L. Brick, has succeeded him as the director of the Auditorium in London.

Mrs. Wainwright has become the owner of the Criterion theater, Queen street and Northcote avenue.

E. A. Langley has been taken from the Toronto office of the Specialty Film Import Company, Limited, Pathe distributors, leaving J. Travis in sole charge of the local branch. L. E. Ouimet of Montreal, general manager for Pathe in the Dominion, paid an official visit to the Toronto office during the week of July 10.

Charles Hill, the new owner of the Rosedale theater, Yonge and Collier streets, has changed the name of this house to the Dorothy theater. This is one of the oldest theaters in Toronto.

MIDLAND MAKING AD PICTURES.

New Cleveland Concern Featuring J. A. Fitzgerald in Combination Comedies.

By Hubert Persons, 410 Standard Theater Building, Cleveland.

CLEVELAND.—Preliminary to the construction of a studio on a tract of 150 acres near Rocky River, a suburb of this city, the Midland Film Manufacturing Company is making a novel series of advertising moving pictures. The pictures have a definite plot woven around the activities of one Weary Waggles, impersonated by J. A. Fitzgerald, former director of the Reserve Photoplay Company and now producing manager of the Midland organization. The pictures are being shown in many Cleveland houses and in other northern Ohio towns.

Officers of the Midland Company are George W. Scribner, of the Scribner-Loehr Jewelry Company, president; M. B. Fisher, of the American Can Company, vice-president; Thomas H. Nash, of the Cleveland Provision Company, second vice-president; R. W. MacDiarmid, candy dealer, third vice-president; H. P. Angel, secretary, and W. T. Findley, treasurer. Benjamin J. Sawyer, president of the Northeastern Ohio Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, and John H. Price are attorneys for the Midland Company.

Cleveland Screen Club Holds Picnic.

Cleveland.—The first annual picnic of the newly organized Cleveland Screen Club was held at Cedar Point, July 19. More than fifty members and their friends and relatives attended the affair. A baseball game between exchange men and exhibitors was a feature of the entertainment program. The score was not made public, but it is declared to have resembled a street number rather than a baseball tally.

The club is holding its regular weekly meetings in the new Hotel Olmsted. Permanent quarters may be secured there.

Exhibitors Postpone July Meeting.

Cleveland.—Hot weather and the Chicago convention have temporarily slowed up activities of the Northeastern Ohio Motion Picture Exhibitors' League. The meeting to have been held July 11 was postponed because many members and almost all the officers were attending the convention. Some of the members are planning vacation trips and it is likely that meetings will be held only twice a month until cooler weather. Arrangements for an outing of the league probably will be completed at the next regular meeting.

Reserve Photoplay in New Quarters.

Cleveland.—The work of remodeling the roof and upper floor of the Wilshire Building, West Superior avenue, has been completed and the Reserve Photoplay Company is now making its first two-reel comedy there. The picture, entitled "Casey in Mexico," stars Johnny Ray, and is a burlesque on the Mexican situation.

The new studio will accommodate four sets and in addition has equipment for outdoor work on the roof. The first studio was too small for the broadening scope of the work the company is doing.

Pathe's "Grip of Evil" Booking Well.

Cleveland.—J. R. Johnson, manager of the Pathe exchange in Cleveland, has just announced that in Cleveland alone "The Grip of Evil," released July 17, had 33 bookings a week before the release date.

ILLINOIS NEWS LETTER.

By Frank H. Madison, 623 South Wabash Avenue, Chicago.

CHARLESTON, ILL.—The Bankers-Merchants Theater Company of Chicago, which operates theaters in Chicago, the Maywood at Maywood, Majestic at Kankakee and the Garden at Harvey, has taken a ten-year lease on the theater which C. D. Mitchell will erect on Sixth street, near Jackson. The house, which is expected to open about October 1, will seat 720, and will be thoroughly equipped, including a pipe organ. The lessees will run high-class features and hope to open with "The Birth of a Nation." F. H. Gruneberg, president; O. H. Olston, secretary; W. O. Setcliffe, representative, and E. B. Herring were here to make the deal.

Peoria.—Dee Robinson of the Apollo theater has begun a series of Saturday morning shows for children. He started with "The Patchwork Girl of Oz." Mary Pickford in "Cinderella" was the second attraction.

Alton.—William M. Sauvage, the local impresario, is having his troubles furnishing a film program for the Piasa Chautauqua, where he has a two months' exhibition contract. Two films which are declared taboo are Vitagraph's "The Island of Regeneration" and Mayor Beall's vice film, "The Little Girl Next Door."

Decatur.—Charles and Edward Dorgan, owners of the Strand theater, are having plans made for a new 1,200-1,500 capacity moving picture theater to be erected down town at a cost of $25,000 or $30,000. It will be a ten-cent house and after its completion the Strand may become a five-cent theater.

Morris.—J. D. McKeen, owner and manager of the Empire theater, has leased the Primrose theater from J. B. Dawson, the owner, and has taken charge. Mr. McKeen will conduct both theaters. An outside balcony, electrically lighted, will be placed along the front of the building.

Rockford.—The Airdome on Charles street has been opened by Johnson Brothers, proprietors of the Royal theater. The Royal will be used for the shows when the weather is bad. Triangle programs will be offered Wednesdays and Sundays.

Rockford.—Moving Picture shows will be given Saturdays and Sundays in the Auditorium at Harlem Park.

Quincy.—The Bijou theater has discontinued musical comedy and is now confining itself to moving pictures and vaudeville.

MISSISSIPPI NEWS LETTER.

By Delta News and Publicity Service, Greenwood, Miss.

Happenings in the Delta.

GREENWOOD, Miss.—The Majestic theater, Greenwood, just installed a new $5,000 pipe organ, put in an excellent iced air cooling system and added fifteen fans, making it one of the coolest theaters in the South.

The coming of summer has been signalized by the opening of many airdomes throughout the South, especially in the Delta, and hardly a town can be found but what boasts of at least one airdome.

Under the direction of Mr. Brown of Jackson, Miss., a large open air theater, catering to negro patronage, has been opened in Greenwood.

That the people of the Delta prefer serials and series pictures is conclusively shown by the fact that the Majestic is now running three serials, viz., "The Secret of the Submarine," "The Social Pirates," and Gloria's Romance," while the Greenwood is running the "Iron Claw," and "Peg 'o the Ring."

Messrs. Richardson and Priestley of Rosedale, Miss. have opened one of the most up-to-date airdomes in the state at that city. The theater is floored, with a steady incline toward the front, ventilated at the sides, as well as the "blue sky" covering, thus giving its patrons benefit of the breezes.

P. E. Schilling, proprietor of the Greenwood theater, is out of the city on a business trip.

The Metro feature "The Wall Between" featuring Bushman and Bayne, attracted a large crowd at Coldwater, Miss., to the Majestic.

The first appearance of "Gloria's Romance" in Yazoo City, Miss., resulted in a packed house at both performances, and still all were unable to see the show.

Billie Burke in "Peggy" proved to be such an attraction in Greenwood that the Majestic theater was forced to run the same two days.

Manitoba Unkind to Traveling Shows

Under the Public Amusements Act "Cabiria" Is Set Back $874 for the Privilege of Showing at National of Winnipeg—Censorship in Abstract, Matter of Dollars and Cents.

By E. C. Thomas, 821 Rogers Building, Vancouver.

WINNIPEG, Man.—An illuminating example of the way the New Public Amusement act affects traveling companies presenting moving pictures in Manitoba and Saskatchewan theaters was furnished during the recent engagement of "Cabiria" at the National theater, in this city. Although those in charge of the picture expected to pay only a local license, it was discovered that before they could show the film a total of $874 must be paid, made up as follows: General license, $250; additional license on the subject, $600; censoring, $24. The largest item was collected through the provision in the act calling for a special tax of $50 per reel of film imported into the province, unless those handling the picture bring in at least one hundred subjects during the year, and is especially aimed at traveling attractions. This will give prospective purchasers of Canadian rights for pictures something to think about.

Censorship As It Is: Dollars and Cents.

Winnipeg, Man.—Winnipeg papers are commenting on the fact that Alberta is taking the cream off the moving picture work of Manitoba and Saskachewan, because that province refused to enter the joint censoring board recently established, but is now accepting the rulings of this board and charging the usual Alberta fee of $1 a reel.

It does not appear, however, that this is any hardship on the provinces maintaining the joint board, unless they object to having the citizens of Alberta re-receive the benefit of their wisdom without paying for it. The fact that Alberta refused to enter into the agreement simply means that the profit from the work of censoring is divided between two provinces instead of three, and Manitoba and Saskatchewan are now receiving half as much again as they would have had Alberta become a party to the inter-provincial arrangement.

Censorship and Politics Twins.

Victoria, B. C.—It is announced that the long-awaited provincial election will be held early in September, and the exhibitors of the province have already begun to figure on the changes which may be brought about after the votes are counted. While it is generally thought the present Conservative government will be defeated, it is realized the safest plan is to assume that an aggressive fight must be made, and although matters have not yet taken definite shape, it is thought some definite campaign will be organized.

The fact that the election of the Liberal candidates will mean that there will be a new censor and a new policy of censorship in British Columbia is enough to spur all moving picture men to energetic action in assisting to bring about the change. The film men of the province are almost a unit in declaring their belief that the present comparative leniency is nothing more than a "death-bed repentance," and that if the Conservatives are continued in power the cast-iron lid will be clamped down even tighter than formerly. Aside from the other aspects of the situation, to the picture man the question is a plain matter of dollars and cents.

Vancouver Pantages to be Fine House.

Vancouver, B. C.—B. M. Priteca, architect of the Pantages theater, which is to be erected on Hastings street, in this city, has awarded the contract for the structural steel. The Strand theater has been closed, as well as the hotel adjoining, and actual work of wrecking the buildings to make way for the new house will be started within a few days.

It is stated that the Vancouver Pantages will be the finest theater in the circuit. Mr. Priteca, in addition to designing several Pantages houses in the Northwest, was the architect of the magnificent new Coliseum theater in Seattle.

Nichols Directing National.

Vancouver, B. C.—President Tulk of the National Amusement Company, who has been actively managing the affairs of the company for the past month, has again turned over the reins to W. P. Nichols, managing director, who will hereafter be in active charge.

Kean Goes to Selig-Tribune.

Vancouver, B. C.—As the result of the recent visit to this city by E. B. Lockwood, Northwest representative of the Selig-Tribune weekly, A. D. Kean has been appointed the company's cinematographer for British Columbia, and has just sent in his first subject.

Where Six Isn't a Half Dozen.

Calgary, Alberta.—A fine question came up in the city council a short time ago regarding the requirements necessary to procure a theater license for certain premises. Promoters of a proposed Chinese theater had applied for a license, but as their building did not comply with the fire regulations the council had refused to issue the desired permit. City Solicitor Ford stated that as the building (an old garage), was not fire-proofed as required by law, a "theater" could not be conducted on the premises, but there would be no objection to issuing a license for conducting the place as a "concert hall." In this he was supported by Building Inspector Craig.

The promoters thereupon said that they had all along intended to use it as a "Chinese concert hall," and the license was accordingly granted.

Most councils are funny, but some are much funnier than others.

Vancouver, B. C.—C. B. Price, Canadian general manager of the Mutual Film Corporation, has terminated his visit to Vancouver and returned east.

The work of altering and renovating the local exchange quarters has been completed under the supervision of C. R. Dippie, the Vancouver manager.

Rossland, B. C.—E. J. Cann, formerly musical director at the Regent theater in Calgary, has taken over the Star theater here, opening with Mutual service July 23.

Bay State's Outdoor Films a Success

Societies Behind the Showing of Health and Sanitation Subjects Appeal to Producers for Help—Difficulties to Be Overcome by Non-Professionals in the Way of Screens and Accommodations for Throngs.

By William M. Flynn, 80 Summer Street, Boston.

BOSTON and Massachusetts have had its first trial of the Out-of-Door Health and Sanitation moving picture shows as a medium of education in public health. It is the second year of public pictures in the metropolitan parks. The demonstrations have been a success in their way, but they have also proved that to be a permanent success some new features must be introduced. Already an appeal through the press has gone out for the professional motion picture producer to give his attention to the subject of the out-of-door pictures and solve the problems which now confront the amateurs in this line.

The first criticism made of the out-of-door pictures is the fact that the screens are too small and the pictures consequently too minute for an out-door gathering of 5,000 persons to view with good results. Something huge must be evolved to meet the requirements of the great assemblages in the public parks.

The first three demonstrations of the health films given at Franklin Field, Boston, drew crowds of over 5,000 each. Two and three night stands will be the rule in the various parks of the urban park system for the rest of the season.

Behind this enterprise are the Women's Municipal League, Massachusetts Child Labor Committee, Immigration Department of the State Executive Committee of the Young Men's Christian Association Boston Young Men's Christian Association, Boston Association for the Relief and Control of Tuberculosis, Instructive District Nursing Association, State Department of Health, Massachusetts Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, Baby Hygiene Association, Boston Dispensary, Boston Young Men's Christion Union, Massachusetts Commission for the Blind, Boston Nursery for Blind Babies, Perkins Institute and Massachusetts Institute for the Blind, and the Poster Campaign of the Associated Charities. The cooperation of the Boston Park and Recreation Department, the licensing division of the Mayor's office and the Boston Wire Commissioner have helped to make the shows possible.

The shows were planned by a committee representing the various constituent associations. The predominating note of the free shows is hygiene and sanitation.

Convention Number Makes a Hit.

Most of the leading lights of the Boston moving picture industry are in Chicago this week. A tour of the big exchanges found a good percentage of familiar faces gone. One of the liveliest bits of comment of the exchanges and picture houses this week is the flattering comment on the Convention Number of the Moving Picture World. Everywhere the Moving Picture World man went he heard the comment: "Well, that convention number of the World was certainly a hummer." H. I. Wasserman, secretary of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of Massachusetts, when seen at the Eagle theater, said: "That number is the best thing that has ever been done in the news-gathering end of the moving picture business. I am going to read it from cover to cover, but it's going to take me a long time to do it. It is full of invaluable facts for the picture house manager and I don't mean to lose a word of it. The Moving Picture World is to be congratulated on its fine efforts in behalf of the great picture industry."

Fred Murphy Returns from Tour.

Fred B. Murphy, eastern division manager of the Unicorn Film Service, has just returned from a complete tour of his exchanges. He maintains the one and two reel films are bound to keep a leading place in the moving picture programs and said that the cancellations that usually come at this time of the year are all missing. He said business could not be better and looks for a big rush when the regular season reopens in September. The summer parks, he says, are all using the one and two reel pictures as features of their programs.

Hot Wave Hits New England.

The hot wave that swept over New England this week caused a slump in attendance at the picture houses for the summer. Up to this time there had been reported the best business ever known during the hot months. The managers say they can now stand some summer weather after looking over their cash balances for June and the early part of July.

Bill Haddock to Make Local Picture.

Miss Alva Peterson, who is famed locally for her resemblance to Miss Blanche Sweet, won the "Who Will Be Flo?" contest conducted by a morning pape. She received 305,470 votes and will be the star of the moving picture, "Flo's Millions," which is to be produced locally and shown at the Tremont Temple. Miss Peterson lives in Somerville and is an unusually attractive girl. She hopes to make good in pictures and be able to leave her regular work as a stenographer to become a player. The photoplay will be produced under the direction of William F. Haddock, known to fame as "Silent Bill" and of wide experience as a picturemaker. He has been looking around Boston for several days selecting locations.

KENT FOR YOUNG EXCHANGE.

Former Detroit World Film Manager Now Looking for Quarters—Other News from Vehicle City.

By Jacob Smith, 503 Free Press Building.

J. O. Kent.

DETROIT, Mich.—J. O. Kent, for the past three years associated with the Detroit office of the World Film Corporation, and manager for nearly two years, has tendered his resignation to become manager of the Detroit exchange shortly to be opened for the distribution in Michigan of the Clara Kimball Young productions. Mr. Kent is now looking for suitable quarters. The officers of the company controlling the Michigan rights are David E. Stott, president; Harry I. Garson, vice-president and general manager; Thomas Danahey, treasurer, and Bert Fenwick, secretary. The board of directors comprises Messrs. Stott, Garson and Danahey and Mrs. Martha L. Garson. The first Clara Kimball Young release will be in October; it will be shown at least one week, possibly two weeks, at the Broadway-Strand theater, with special settings, special music and special interior decorations. Mr. Kent is well known and well liked in Michigan filmdom. He formerly operated a theater in Saginaw, so has had both theater and exchange experience. As a member of the Detroit Screen Club he was active in the success of the ball given last May.

J. O. Kent.

Samuel Sembow, Jr., is temporarily in charge of the Detroit-World office pending the appointment of a permanent manager. Mr. Dembow has done special work for the World at Chicago and in the south for the past four months, and previously for a period of three years was a division manager for the Fox Film Corporation.

Harry Goldstein, Theater Man.

This is Harry Goldstein, vice-president of the Oakland Theater Company, which is building a motion picture house, amphitheater style, in Pontiac. Mr. Goldstein was one of the men responsible for the construction of the Majestic theater, Detroit. It was Mr. Goldstein who held the first option on the property at Woodward and Willis avenues, and then interested the late Arthur Caille in the site for theater purposes.

Harry Goldstein.

Alfred Weiss Visits Detroit.

Alfred Weiss, district superintendent, with headquarters in New York for the Triangle Film Corporation, was a visitor in Detroit for four days ending July 9 Mr. Weiss came on to install a new system in the local exchange and incidentally to look things over. "We have an ideal exchange in Detroit," said Mr. Weiss, "and we are getting a lot of splendid business from Detroit and Michigan exhibitors." From here Mr. Weiss went to Chicago.

Shapiro Signs Up Contracts.

Abe Shapiro, whose appointment as manager of the Triangle Film Exchange in Detroit has definitely been announced, has signed up a $15,000 contract with A. J. Gilligham for theaters which he controls both in Detroit and Grand Rapids; also a contract to supply Triangle service to the Bijou theater in Mt. Clemens, and the New Family in Adrian.

Lew Foster is special representative for the Triangle Films in Detroit.

Detroit Opera to Show British Film.

Al Lichtman, controlling the United States rights to "How Britain Prepared" was in Detroit on July 11 on his way to Chicago. While here he screened this wonderful film, and as a result it will shortly make its appearance on the screen of the Detroit Opera House for an indefinite run.

Regent Will Open About August 1.

The latest on the New Regent theater, Woodward and Horton avenues, which will seat about 3,000 people, is that the house will open around the first of August. This information was given by William F. Klatt, owner of the enterprise. Mr. Klatt is confident that the Regent will be one of the most beautiful playhouses in the country.

P. G. Courtney, New Empire, Old Timer.

One of the oldest motion picture theater managers in Detroit in point of years associated with the business is P. G. Courtney, now in charge of the New Empire, 189 Woodward avenue. Mr. Courtney came to Detroit from Columbus, O., about ten years ago. He immediately landed a position with William F. Klatt to manage the Vaudeville theater on Randolph street, now discontinued. Later he went to the Bijou theater on Monroe avenue, where he remained for nearly nine years, resigning to operate a theater for himself at Russell and Leland, and which he later sold. He started at the Empire four months ago. Mr. Courtney recalls with much interest his connection at the Bijou. He says that this theater, although upstairs and only seating 360 people, has played to as many as 6,000 persons in a single day.

Margaret Anglin Corp. Opens Offices.

Detroit, Mich.—James D. Barton, president of the Margaret Anglin Picture Corporation, which recently incorporated in New York for $750,000, was recently in Detroit and opened offices in the Dime Bank building. While here he announced that it was the intention of his company to erect a $100,000 studio in Detroit. A feature of the building will be a restaurant capable of feeding hundreds of people.

Casino Film Gets Ray Comedies.

Detroit, Mich.—The Casino Feature Film Co., 2206 Dime Bank building, Detroit, of which John H. Kunsky is the principal stockholder, has taken the John and Emma Ray comedies for the state of Michigan. They are being shown at the Washington theater, first run. The Rays at one time lived in Detroit.

In and About Detroit.

The opening of the Drury Lane takes place July 21 under the management of Frank Drew.

Jack Mowitt has signed a year's contract to manage the Globe theater, Grand River and Trumbull avenues.

The demolishing of the old church building at Woodward and Sibley streets has been started to make way for the new Colonial theater, which the Hoffman Brothers will have erected on the property.

Wesley Schram, owner of the Monroe theater, has leased the building at 36 Monroe avenue, and is remodeling the first floor into a theater which will be known as the Bijou. It will seat about 300.

Helmar George, now proprietor of the Central theater in Pontiac, has purchased a Wurlitzer organ equipped with a complete set of traps, bells, chimes and xylophones. Mr. George has made many improvements to the Century, and his new policy of playing all the big features that come along—advancing prices for some of them—is proving successful.

The Strand theater, the newest theater in Owosso, Mich., opened July 5. It is situated on North Washington street and cost $10,000. G. N. Finch is president of the company, E. S. Brewer vice-president and general manager; Frank Ryan, treasurer, and Major M. J. Phillips, secretary.

The various Butterfield theater managers will hold their annual convention at Battle Creek some time in August. At that time plans for the coming season will be announced. Work will start very shortly on Colonel Butterfield's new house to be erected in Flint and which is to be ready by the first of the year. This will give Colonel Butterfield three houses in the Vehicle City.

Bill Newkirk, manager of the new Palace Hippodrome, in Saginaw, announces that motion pictures will be the summer policy. In fact pictures may remain as a permanent policy if business holds up. This house opened originally with vaudeville and pictures.

Manager Wuerth, of the Orpheum theater, Ann Arbor, is erecting another theater adjoining, thus giving him two distinct auditoriums. In one the price will be 10 cents, while 15 cents will be charged in the other.

The Robin Hood, Grand Haven's newest motion picture theater, opened for business July 1. It is equipped with a $4,000 Barcola orchestra and the theater is one of the prettiest in Western Michigan. The lighting system is indirect, and there is good ventilation. The building is fireproof.

"How Britain Prepared" Drawing Crowd to Big Pittsburgh House.

From Pittsburgh News Service, 6016 Jenkins Arcade, Pittsburgh, Pa.

PITTSBURGH.—The Pitt theater, Penn avenue and Seventh street, Pittsburgh, has been reopened after remaining dark during the week of July 10 to 15, and is now drawing big crowds afternoon and evening with the war film "How Britain Prepared." The picture is being shown with the greatest care and attention to detail that has characterized all of Manager Patch's offerings since the Pitt went into pictures. A symphony orchestra of twenty pieces is furnishing the musical accompaniment in a very effective manner.

Remodeling Roaring Springs Theater.

The Roaring Springs theater, Roaring Springs, Pa., has been purchased from A. R. Hamilton by W. H. Wood, of State College, Pa. The house is to be handsomely remodeled throughout during the coming month and new equipment and machines of the latest type are to be installed. Mr. Wood has made arrangements for showing Triangle and Paramount features, the very highest standard to be maintained in the attractions as well as in the theater itself. The reopening will take place about September 1.

New Incorporations.

Two concerns have been incorporated recently at Charleston, West Va., for the purpose of owning and operating motion picture theaters and other places of amusement. The Rialto Amusement Company was granted a charter through the following petitioners: F. H. Land, R. P. Devan, M. M. Wear, Alton M. Davis, W. B. Geary, Earnest Howell and W. S. Robertson, all of Charleston. The capital stock is stated at $10,000.

The Burlew Amusement Company was incorporated by S. A. Moore, W. S. Mason, P. J. Crowley, Samuel Stephenson and George O. Weeden, all of Charleston. The authorized capital is $5,000.

Jones Will Lecture on Industrial Films.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—An address on "The Industrial Application of Motion Pictures" will be delivered shortly before the Pittsburgh Publicity Association, a prominent organization of business men, by W. B. Jones, of the I. & D. Film Company, Pittsburgh.

Curdy Writes Prize Scenario.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—Lenore M. Curdy of Pittsburgh, Pa., wrote the prize-winning script of the scenario contest which was held recently by the Pittsburgh Press. The title of the scenario is "The Man and Millionaire."

Georgia Sabbath Bill Pending

Representative Neill Introduces into State Legislature a Bill That Would Stop All Kinds of Shows Sundays.

By A. M. Beatty, 43 Copenhill Avenue, Atlanta.

ATLANTA, GA—Representative W. C. Neill, of Muscogee county, would clamp down tightly the lid upon Sunday moving pictures.

Under a bill he has introduced in the house, Georgia on the Sabbath would be devoid of visible merriment.

A former legislature enacted a law under which all theaters, moving pictures and kindred amusement places can be run on Sunday, provided no admission fee is charged. Under it, many picture show houses are, at present, given over to charitable institutions and organizations during Sunday of each week, with the understanding that no patron will be compelled to pay a fixed admittance fee, but is expected to voluntarily give according to his fancy in the name of charity for the privilege of enjoying the film performance. The money thus paid is not paid to any representative of the theater, but to a doorkeeper representing the club, society, guild or whatever charitable organization may be the beneficiary of the theater management.

This Neill bill, though, would stop even that, for it specifically stipulates against thus keeping motion picture theaters open on Sunday, and includes with them all theaters, concert halls, circuses, race courses and all other popular forms of amusement.

V-L-S-E Men Get Bonuses.

Employes of the Atlanta branch of the V-L-S-E corporation are in the happiest of moods. Each has been given a check, amounting to several weeks' salary, as his share of the company's profits. The home office decrees that any employe who has been with the company for longer than six months shall receive two weeks' vacation with pay.

Film Writer Gets Real Assignment.

Britt Creig, secretary of the Screen Club, has been assigned by his paper, "The Constitution," to gather the news from the Fifth Georgia Regiment, and is now at Camp Harris. The Fifth is indeed fortunate in having this able newspaper man assigned it. Mr. Creig is well known among exchangemen and exhibitors over the South, being editor of the Constitution's moving picture section.

Theater Benefit for Georgia Soldiers.

The Piedmont theater was crowded all day Sunday at a special benefit given by William Oldknow for Atlanta's own, the Fifth Georgia Regiment. A special collection was taken at the door, which will go to the fund being raised to look after the comfort of the privates of the regiment.

As if Joe Ever Was Unhappy!

Joe Marientette, manager of the World Film Corporation here, is the happiest manager in Georgia, giving as his reason that Kitty Gordon has signed with his company for three more years, and will appear exclusively in its features.

"Bill" Oldknow Again on the Job.

When it comes to getting the film men together, William Oldknow, president of the Screen Club, is the man to do it. It is estimated that fully 98 per cent. of the film men of Atlanta were in the parade July 4, and this large attendance was due in a great measure to the efforts of Mr. Oldknow.

Atlanta News Miscellany.

Eugene Wilder, president of the Automatic Player Piano Company, has returned from Chicago, where he attended the national piano convention.

A. C. Bromberg, of the Triangle, has returned from a trip to Florida, which he made in his automobile.

C. E. Daffin, proprietor of the Daffin theaters in Tallahassee and other Florida cities, is in Atlanta for a short stay. He is one of the most successful exhibitors in the South, and is a general favorite with motion picture men.

William Sharp, of the Consolidated Film and Supply Company, is in Tennessee for a short business trip.

L. S. Levine, district manager of the Fox Film Corporation, is in Atlanta for a stay of several weeks.

Carl W. Rountree, president of the Scenic Film Company, has returned from a trip east, where he went with the Ad Men. He visited the studios in New York and New Jersey while on the trip.

EXHIBITORS DENY CHARGES.

Three Indicted New Jersey Owners in Kearny Deny Disregard of Minor Laws —Newspapers Color Stories.

By Jacob J. Kalter, 142 Market Street, Newark.

THE ire of all well-thinking men and women in Kearny, N. J., has been aroused by stories printed in Newark newspapers regarding alleged disregard of the laws relating to the admission of minors in the moving picture houses of the town. True enough is the statement that three Kearny residents are implicated in the indictment proceedings brought by the Hudson County grand jury, but when the papers began to print a lot of "rot" concerning alleged crimes that were said to have occurred in the show houses, the exhibitors naturally were aroused. The three indicted picture owners are Mrs. Augusta C. Treat, lessee of the Grand theater; John Wilson, lessee of the Casino theater, and James Durkin, who holds the lease of the Regent theater. Neither of the men has any connection with the latter two theaters expect to hold the licenses.

So colorful were the published reports of the conditions existing in West Hudson that the Newark representative could not forbear to make a special investigation to find out what the real conditions in Kearny were. Speaking of suggestive films, a Newark Sunday paper had written: "The films which attracted most attention in this respect were 'Where Are My Children?' and 'Damaged Goods.' The Moving Picture World's correspondent found out direct from the three implicated exhibitors that they had never exhibited either of the alleged objectionable pictures, and moreover they had not even booked them for some future date.

But listen to this: "Early this year County Judges Mark M. Sullivan and George G. Tenant were forced to listen to revolting stories told by little girls who had been lured into the 'movies' by men. The crimes which were committed in some of the theaters were so serious that the convicted men are now serving from twenty to thirty years in State's prison." Eugene E. Couquet, manager of the Regent theater, said: "I do not cater to that class of people. So far as I am concerned no crimes of any nature were ever committed in my house." Frank L. Doyle, manager of the Casino, also denied the charges that men and women of ill-repute patronized his place. Both Mrs. Treat, the lessee, and Charles Hedberg, the manager, also vehemently denied the charges. "On the contrary," said Mrs. Treat in the interview with the representative of the Moving Picture World, "we cater especially to the high-class people of Kearny. Our patrons are refined and well behaved. We have fought for years to keep the children out of the playhouses, but what can we do? A child stands on the corner and finally some passer-by takes him in. I cannot ask each person individually whether the child with him is his own. It is not reasonable, not fair and not to be expected from theater owners."

As far as cleanliness, exits and equipment are concerned the Kearny theaters are thoroughly equipped. Only recently the owners of the various playhouses had to install fire escapes leading from the balconies. As another precaution it was deemed necessary to have two special policemen, not one, at each theater. So now we see Messrs. Hedberg, Couquet and Doyle polishing up their "tin" badges. Other precautions making it absolutely safe in the theaters have been taken.

The hearing takes place July 24.

IOWA NEWS LETTER.

Des Moines.—There was no state fund for the purpose, but it was decided to make 6,000 feet of film showing the mobilization of the Iowa troops for preservation in historical records. The project was financed by renting the film until the expenses were paid. Curator Harlan of the State Historical Society has had requests for booking from all over the state.

Davenport.—An appropriate feature was "Martyrs of the Alamo," which Manager Rosenholz of the American theater selected for a two-day run to help the dependents of the members of Battery B, Iowa National Guard.

Muscatine.—Charles W. Kemble, first manager of the Grand Opera House when it was opened fifteen years ago, has taken a lease on that theater.

Waverly.—Arthur Earl, formerly of the Palace theater here, has accepted a position at the Crystal theater in Waterloo.

Griswold.—R. W. Black, of Dexter, has purchased the moving picture theater here from C. H. Kramer.

Exira.—George McNary, of this place, has purchased a moving picture theater in Griswold, Ia.

NOTES FROM PENNSYLVANIA.

From Philadelphia News Service, 326 Real Estate Trust Bldg., Philadelphia.

CARR & SCHAD, well-known exhibitors of Reading, Pa., have recently announced their intention of devoting the entire receipts of one afternoon's performance in the Princess theater for the clubhouse fund of the Women's Club. This performance will be given during the last week in July.

Alfred Kohl, 238 West Erie avenue, Philadelphia, well known in local moving picture circles as a former machine operator for the State Board of Censors, was recently appointed a State factory inspector at a salary of $1,500 per year.

A building permit has been granted by Inspector Minner, of Allentown, to S. S. Horn, contractor, calling for the erection of a three-story brick addition to the Orpheum theater at Sixth and Linden streets. The addition will be 37 by 66 feet and will cost approximately $15,000.

The France Films Company, Inc., has recently been granted a charter under the laws of the state of New Jersey for the purpose of conducting a general moving picture film exchange. The new concern has been capitalized at $125,000, James M. Burke, E. S. Quay and C. B. Collins, all of Chicago, being the principal incorporators.

The Kansas City Feature Film Company, of Kansas City, Mo., has recently been incorporated under the laws of the state of New Jersey for the purpose of producing film plays. The company has been capitalized at $100,000.

NORTH CAROLINA NOTES.

Asheville.—When the delegates to the Southern Forestry Congress were in town recently they were the guests of S. A. Lynch at a number of exhibitions of motion picture films of subjects in which they were interested. The reels were furnished by the United States Department of Agriculture. The foresters deeply appreciated the courtesy of Mr. Lynch.

Charlotte.—An agreement has recently been reached between R. D. Craver and H. L. and C. E. Morrow whereby the partnership heretofore existing between them in the management and operation of the Piedmont and Broadway theaters has been dissolved. Hereafter, Mr. Craver will control the Broadway theater exclusively, while the Morrow Brothers will own and operate the Piedmont theater.

Asheville.—H. L. Vreeland, who has been staying at the Battery Park Hotel in this city, is announcing that the Viking Film Company, of New York, will, in the near future, open a studio in Asheville and is advertising the sale of stock in the organization. He says local talent will be given an opportunity to appear in Viking productions, once the organization is established in Asheville. According to Mr. Vreeland, who is the business manager, a company of twenty-eight players are at work on a five-reel film. Frank Lea Short will be assistant director and Eustace H. Ball literary director. Clarence Schottenfels will be in charge of the releasing and distribution of their productions.

Wilmington.—A new $4,000 Seeburg pipe organ and orchestra, embodying the very latest improvements in organs of this type, has just been installed at the Bijou theater, where it is proving a great attraction.

NEW THEATER FOR MARBLEHEAD.

Company Has Been Incorporated in Massachusetts Coast Town to Build the Warwick, with 1,000 Seats.

MARBLEHEAD, the well-known Massachusetts coast town, is to have another motion picture show house. It is to be named the Warwick Theater. The company that will build it took out incorporation papers under Massachusetts laws last week. The incorporators were W. L. Terhune, Everit B. Terhune, W. M. Bunting, Clarence H. Holloway, Greely S. Curtis, Herbert Humphrey, Nathaniel C. Lyon, W. C. Gregory, B. W. Hobart, H. J. Adams, Samuel Schuman, Calvin Tilden, Arthur W. Huguley, Mrs. Nellie C. Huguley, D. B. H. Power, Charles W. Conklin and Richard W. Drown.

All but two of these live in Marblehead and the Phillips Beach section. The officers of the corporation are Greely S. Curtis, president; W. L. Terhune, treasurer; Calvin Tilden, clerk, with W. L. Terhune, Greely S. Curtis, Samuel Shuman, B. W. Hobart, Nathaniel C. Lyon, Herbert Humphrey and W. M. Bunting as directors. The business management of the enterprise will be intrusted to W. L. Terhune, who will bring into the combination his long experience as an executive, while the producing management will be in the hands of R. W. Drown, who will give the organization the benefit of his wide connection with a chain of successful houses of which he is part owner.

The site of the theater is on Pleasant street, on a lot containing 13,698 square feet. It will be built of stucco with possibly a brick front. The foyer will be about twenty feet square, the street or sidewalk front covered with a marquise. Each side of the foyer will be an attractive store, modern in style with full up-to-date plate glass fronts.

The auditorium will be about 49x100, and 23 feet high, with a seating capacity of nearly 1,000. The walls will be rough plastered with pilasters and the whole neatly decorated with a combination of colors that will be quiet in tone yet artistic. The heating, ventilating and plumbing will be modern and scientific and has already been approved by the state board of inspection. The stage will have an opening of 26 feet, depth 15 feet, and 17 feet high, all inclosed with a handsome plush curtain.

The stage setting will be similiar in type to the latest New York houses of this character, but not on so large a scale.

The pit in front of the stage will be built so an organ can be installed at any time, and this is the present intention of the management. The exits are so arranged that the entire house can be emptied in three minutes. Modern up-to-date folding chairs will be installed.

Brady Pictures Strong in Cleveland.

Cleveland. — "Brady-made productions have stimulated business in this territory to an unbelievable extent," P. A. Bloch, manager of the World Film Company exchange here, says. "Business has made phenomenal strides for us," Bloch adds, "greater than we had ever dreamed of."

Mrs. Jones Subleases Unique.

Waukesha, Wis.—Mrs. H. A. Jones, manager of the Colonial theater and former manager of the Park theater, has subleased the Unique theater on Main street and will operate both houses.

BALTIMORE NEWS LETTER.

By J. M. Shellman, 1902 Mount Royal Terrace, Baltimore.

Child Labor Law to Be Enforced.

BALTIMORE, MD.—Among the number of important orders which have been issued by Marshall John C. Cockey of the Baltimore county police force, to his men, is one concerning the Maryland Child Labor Law, which might affect the vaudeville and moving picture theaters in this section of the state.

In regard to this law, Marshall Cockey will see to it that parties will be prohibited from the employment of children under 16 years of age on the stage or in pool and billiard rooms; also prohibiting children under 18 years of age from appearing in any theater, concert hall, club or other place of amusement where intoxicating liquors are sold.

Pictures Again at Ford's.

Ford's Opera House again opened its doors with moving pictures on Monday, July 10. The feature was "How England Prepared." It is also announced that the W. H. Clune production of "Ramona" will be shown at this theater in the early part of August. A special orchestra has been engaged.

Pearl White Visits Theaters.

Last week was visiting week for Pearl White, the star of the Pathe company which visited Baltimore for about ten days in order to secure suitable atmosphere for a production now in the making. On Monday night, July 10, Miss White, accompanied by Hal Forde, Lila Leslie, Ethel Temple, John Coleman, Del Boone and the Misses Abbott and Day, were guests of Dr. F. W. Schanze at his large theater at Pennsylvania and North avenues. Thousands were there to welcome the players. This is of double interest to the people of Baltimore inasmuch as Dr. Schanze gave a percentage of the receipts which he took in last week for several charity funds and institutions. On Tuesday night the players were guests of Thomas F. Goldberg, at the Goldberg theater, 3117-19 West North avenue.

Comedy to Sell Clothes—Perhaps.

Harry Lewy, the Baltimore cameraman, is now preparing a one-reel comedy for a Baltimore clothing manufacturer which will be used for advertising purposes. Arrangements will be made, it is said, with the largest theater manager in a town to run the film as part of his program and then invitations will be sent out to all prospective customers to attend. The film is made in such a way as to introduce the line of fabrics and styles being sold. After the screening the salesman will state his proposition.

"Shoes" Scores Hit.

J. Blechman, manager of the Picture Garden theater, 31 West Lexington street, says the Bluebird feature "Shoes" had such pulling powers that he decided to run it on Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of this week.

"Secret of the Submarine" Liked.

Since the arrival in Baltimore of the merchant submarine Deutschland from Germany, it is reported at the Mutual exchange that "The Secret of the Submarine" is being clamored for by many exhibitors.

G. L. Wonders on Elks Committee.

Guy L. Wonders, President of the Maryland Exhibitors League and manager of the Wilson theater, 418 East Baltimore street, was a busy man during the Elks' convention. Wonders was chairman of the committee on entertainment of the women visitors.

In the State of Maryland.

Frederick—F. Lester Smith, manager and part owner of the Empire theater of this city, has answered the call to the colors and is now on the Mexican border.

Lonaconing—It is reported by Evans Brothers, who operate the San Toy theater and the Opera House, that they expect to remain open throughout the summer.

Ground Broken for Milo Studio.

Ground was broken for the new outdoor studio of the Milo Pictures Corporation, at the corner of Frederick road and Van Bibber avenue, July 10 on the lot 50 by 400 feet, beautifully located near Gwynns Falls Park. A large stage measuring 50 by 75 feet is to be erected first. The present executive of the company are now located at 356 North Gay street.

START WORK ON BUTTE HOUSE.

Grombacher & Bailey Will Have 1,200-Seat Theater in Montana City.

BUTTE, Mont.—Grombacher & Bailey have commenced excavation for their new theater to be erected on West Park street, near Main. The house will seat 1,200 and will be first class in every respect. It is within a few doors of the site of the proposed Jensen & Von Herberg theater. Construction on the latter house has not yet commenced.

Indications are that Montana will go dry this coming election. This sentiment comes from people who would be the least expected to advocate prohibition. They claim that since several of the western states have gone dry many undesirables who follow in the wake of demon rum have flocked to Montana as the last frontier and its reliable citizens are compelled to favor prohibition for their own protection.

Chattanooga Threatens Censorship

By J. L. Ray, 1014 Stahlman Building, Louisville.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn.—Stating that a number of motion pictures have recently been exhibited here of a decidedly immoral character, that children of all ages are permitted to see them without restrictions of any kind, and that such pictures are demoralizing in their nature and injurious to the public welfare, Mayor Jesse M. Littleton has stated that immediate action will probably be taken by the City Commission to maintain a more rigid censorship of moving pictures.

Mayor Littleton stated that he had received a great many letters protesting against some of the films recently exhibited in Chattanooga, and a short time ago a communication from the Women's Council was read before the commission requesting that some action be taken.

In the event of the establishment of the board, as advocated by the Mayor, it is the intention of Chattanooga film men to appeal to the Commission with a view of having such board consist of men who are used to judging matters from an all-around standpoint, and who take a liberal minded vision of an important question.

Motion Pictures Supplant Vaudeville.

Nashville.—Effective July 10, the Princess theater of this city was converted from a vaudeville house into one of the largest and most beautifully appointed photoplay houses in the entire South. A thorough renovation was under gone throughout, the stage decorations being especially noteworthy. New projection machinery has been installed, and the stage transformed into an Italian garden, from the center of which springs an electric fountain. Softly shaded lamps have been placed at advantageous points throughout the auditorium, and the ventilating system is practically perfect.

The Princess has been a vaudeville house for a number of years and has a seating capacity of fifteen hundred. Only the best pictures will be exhibited, the eight-reel Vitagraph, "God's Country and the Woman," having been selected for the opening program. The house does not open until 1 p. m., prices for all seats being 10 cents for matinees and 15 cents for evening performances.

Manager Harry Sudekum has seen to it that the musical feature is well taken care of, an orchestra of fifteen pieces having been provided under the new arrangement.

Pictures at Mountain Resort.

Monteagle.—Moving pictures were shown for the first time on July 6 at the assembly grounds, the opening program featuring the Selig Red Seal special, "The Rosary." This marks the beginning of a series of exhibitions to be given during the two months' Chautauqua season.

Exchange Men Accompany Feature.

Memphis.—Three representatives of the People's Feature Film Company of this city, Julian Rothschild, A. J. Hiller and A. H. Gross, are out on a nine months' trip with the California Motion Picture Corporation's seven-reel Beatriz Michelena feature, "The Unwritten Law." The picture was shown at Nashville during Fourth of July week, at which place the Strand theater engaged a special orchestra to furnish the musical accompaniment. From there it was carried to Franklin, Columbia and other points in the state.

Raise Prices for War Feature.

Memphis.—Prices at the Lyceum were raised to 25 and 50 cents for night performances and 25 cents for matinees during the run of the big Urban war picture, "How Britain Prepared." The management booked the picture for a solid week and the attendance held up throughout the entire run with advanced admission. All seats were reserved.

Open Air Pictures at Zoo.

Nashville.—The open-air pictures at Glendale Zoo are drawing large crowds, which are entertained with music from a thirty-piece band. The Casino theater, formerly used as the Glendale motion picture house, has been converted into a minstrel show during the run of the open-air films.

Soldiers Have Big Night.

Nashville.—A picked squad of men from the First Tennessee Field Hospital Corps, encamped at the mobilization grounds, enjoyed a free trip to Nashville on the evening of July 5, and were entertained by Harry Sudekum of the Princess.

Tennessee Topics.

Nashville.—W. H. Wassman, Nashville's pioneer exhibitor, known throughout the South as "The Man Who Made the Nickel Famous," is back in the city after a several days' trip.

It is rumored that the Orpheum, which has been dark for some time, will reopen shortly as a picture house.

Knoxville.—Moving pictures are being shown at Chilhowee Park.

Nashville.—Manager Ira Lusky is putting on second run Triangle features at the Star theater, a negro house.

THE MOST "TIMELY" FILM EVER PRODUCED!

Scenes never before allowed to be shown. Exactly what every American wants to see. How do we build an Army? Why do we need one? Where do we get the men and equipment? Is preparedness up to the Army or to Congress? What have we done with the millions of dollars? What happens to a man after he enlists? How can a private soldier get to West Point? If War was declared tomorrow would you have to enlist? All these questions clearly pictured.

ESSANAY.

A BROTHER'S LOYALTY—(Two Parts—July 25).—The cast: Paul, the minister (Francis X. Bushman); Hal's wife (Beverly Bayne); the detective (E. H. Calvert).

Hal neglects his wife and small child, having fallen in with an idle crowd in a cheap pool hall. Counterfeit bills are prevalent around the pool room and Hal gets one and unwittingly passes it. The detective finds him at the home of his brother, Paul. The minister before the detective arrives persuades the brother to change identities for the sake of his family. Thus Paul is sent to prison. Hal takes his place as the preacher and goes into the pool hall distributing religious leaflets. By accident he discovers the counterfeiting plant in the basement and the detective and several policemen raid it. Hal reveals his identity and his brother is pardoned. Thereafter Hal and his wife are among Paul's most devout parishioners.

CANIMATED NOOZ PICTORIAL NO. 13 (July 26). Canimated Nooz is able to announce with this issue that it has obtained the services of Mr. and Mrs. Vernon Shanty to demonstrate the new dances on the screen. "Walking the bow-wows" is the dance offered an anxious public. "Get a hammerlock on your partner, a little wicked music and the rest is simple," Mr. Vernon Shanty declares. Dreamy Dud takes his boss, Carlson, into his confidence this time and permits him to share honors on the screen. The cartoonist appears drawing his famous figures, who perform on his drawing board instead of full screen. Canimated Nooz shares a reel with Western scenic.

REPENTANCE—(Three Parts—July 29).—The cast: Arthur Bennett (John Lorenz); Helen Neal (Anne Leigh).

Helen Neal will not believe in God. Arthur Bennett, studying for missionary work, is a boarder at the Neal home. He loves the girl and she loves him. But he gives her up when she refuses to believe. He gets an assignment to India. The girl realizes that her disbelief has caused her to lose him. After many months an epidemic of disease breaks out in her home town. Instead of fleeing she stays and nurses the sick. Exhausted by her constant labor she is called upon to nurse Arthur Bennett's mother.

In the meantime Bennett has been through just such experiences in India. He catches the disease himself and after recovering returns home to rest. Just as the girl has nursed his mother back to health he arrives. He finds that through all the suffering she has witnessed she has returned to his faith and no further obstacles confront the two.

KALEM.

BLACK MAGIC (No. 15 of "The Social Pirates"—Two Parts—July 31).—The cast: Mona (Marin Sais); Mary (Ollie Kirkby); Carson (E. Forrest Taylor); Grant (Ronald Bradbury); Rulu, the mystic (Rupert Dell); Wallace (Frank Jonasson); Mrs. Wallace (Helen Selbie); the detective (Edward Clisbee).

Rulu, a crafty mystic, holds the banker's wife, Mrs. Wallace, under the spell of his hypnotic power. While in this unknowing state she aids him to rob her husband's safe. Mona and Mary learn of her plight and determine to aid her. Mona attends one of Rulu's seances, and seems deeply impressed. Later she tells Rulu that she is a ward of Mr. Wallace, and that she fears she is being defrauded of her inheritance.

With the aid of Carson and Grant, the admirers of Mona and Mary, who have helped them in the past, a trap is laid for Rulu into which he walks eagerly. By skillfully arranging events the girls succeed in securing the return of the stolen money and the exposure of Rulu. The closing scene finds, two happy couples looking forward to a more serene future than has been the lot of Mona and Mary in their crusade against social vultures.

THE PEACH PICKERS (July 4).—The cast: Ham (Lloyd V. Hamilton); Bud (Bud Duncan); "Big Bill" (A. Edmondson); his wife (Eileen Godsey); the fly cop (Freddie Fraelick).

"If you fellows are caught flirting once more I'll give you ten years making little ones out of big ones," the judge tells Ham and Bud as the picture starts. But no sooner do the doors of the jail open than the two start on their career again. In the park they run afoul of "Big Bill," as husky as his name, when they grow too attentive to his wife, Eileen. "Big Bill," after wreaking his vengeance on them, reports to the police and, Freddie, disguised as a very attractive maiden, is sent on the trail of Ham and Bud. Events work up to as lively a finish as any Ham comedy has ever boasted with a rapid-fire chase by boat in which Ham and Bud succeed in eluding their pursuers.

THE PSYCHIC PHENOMENON (July 7).—The cast: Sis Hopkins (Rose Melville); Nobody Home, the butler (Henry Murdock); Prof. Spark Plug (C. D. Peruchi); I. B. Overwork (Richard Purdon); his wife (Olive West); Miss Overwork (Mary Kennedy); Overwork's clerk (Arthur Albertson). Produced by Robert Ellis.

Sis is deeply impressed by the lecture of Prof. Spark Plug, the hypnotist, and she prevails on her butler admirer to purchase a copy of the professor's book, "The Power of the Eye." Sis practices before her mirror in the Overwork home, where she is maid, until she decides that she is some "hipponotist." Her employer, I. B. Overwork, has finally given way under the strain and returns home at mid-day to rest. He mixes a much-needed sleep potion for himself and after sipping of it sits down to rest.

Sis enters and tries out her hypnotic ability. The sleeping potion gets in its work about the same time and Overwork goes off to the land of dreams. The overcurious butler sips a little of the sleep potion as he listens to Sis's boasting of her ability and when she shows how she did it he too falls in a trance. It's a great day for Sis until she discovers that she can't wake the pair up and then there is a great commotion before matters are straightened out.

TO SAVE THE ROAD (No 87 of the "Hazards of Helen"—July 8).—The cast: Helen (Helen Gibson); Senator Brown (G. A. Williams); road superintendent (P. S. Pembroke). Written by Homer Eon Flindt. Produced by James Davis.

The vote stands a tie on the railroad bill that will mean ruin to the Western line should it pass the State Legislature. By getting Senator Brown, who is aboard a liner quarantined in the bay, to the Capitol the day will be saved. The road superintendent takes a daring chance and aboard a motor boat succeeds in smuggling the Senator ashore and to a Western special which speeds off towards the Capitol of the neighboring State. The rival corporation wires ahead to the sheriff to stop the train at Lone Point and arrest the Senator for breaking quarantine.

Helen foils the plan and the special shoots ahead, but the sheriff and his deputy climb aboard another engine in pursuit. By taking a short cut across the hills in an auto Helen succeeds in getting aboard the Senator's special with an important message telling of the relay special that is waiting for him just across the State line. As they near the line of safety the sheriff overtakes them. With his deputy the officer climbs down on the cowcatcher to jump aboard the Senator's special.

Helen conceives a daring plan and quickly puts it into execution. She climbs to the top of the engine cap and jumps to the guide ropes swung across the track, a second later dropping to the cab of the pursuing engine. In another minute she is at the throttle backing the engine up while the sheriff sees his quarry speeding across the State line to safety.

THE BAGGAGE SMASHERS (July 11).—The cast: Ham (Lloyd V. Hamilton); Bud (Bud Duncan); the telegrapher (Eileen Godsey); the flagman (Freddie Fraelick); Bad Bill (A. Edmondson).

The wild romance of Ham and Bud, hardened men of the road who arrive in the frontier village, and, touched by the beauty of the telegrapher, actually consent to take a job. They become official baggage smashers at the station. It isn't a cinch of a job with a gun-toting mad man roaring around and a pesty sheriff who has received word that there is a large reward out for the capture of Ham and Bud. They lead an exciting life with one mishap after another until they finally climb aboard another freight and leave town by the same means they entered.

THE QUACK QUAKERS (July 12).—The cast: Flo (Ethel Teare); Peter Pinkham (H. L. Davenport); Ezra Pinkham (Gus Leonard); Tom (Victor Rottman); Bennet (G. Hopkins). Written by Samuel J. Taylor. Directed by Harry Millarde.

Peter Pinkham and his daughter, Flo, are a gay pair, living a frolicsome life. Tom, of the Peaches and Cream Musical Comedy Company, sees Flo at the beach and decides then and there that she would be a wonderful acquisition for the stage. He learns her address and by his glowing description induces the manager of the show to accompany him to her house. Before he arrives, however, Peter, and his daughter have received word that Ezra, their wealthy Quaker uncle, is coming to visit them and "hopes to see you living the peaceful Quaker life."

Peter and Flo immediately don the sombre garb and daring statuary and playing cards are hidden from view. When Tom and the manager enter they find, not the pretty and gay Flo of the beach, but a sombre unattractive maiden. The manager voices his vigorous disappointment and leaves in a rush. Ezra arrives to find the personal appearance of his cousins satisfactory, though he is a bit uneasy over finding of a playing card, a liquor decanter, and the discovery of the daring art objects.

Tom, smitten with Flo's charms, returns in Quaker costume, determined to go the limit to win her. But he is surprised to meet Flo once more in gay array, for when the elder men temporarily left the room she determined to visit the manager herself. More complications follow, and life from then on is a quick change of clothes and temperament back and forth for Flo before Tom and Ezra prevail on father to allow Tom to marry her that he might teach her to mend her ways and be more dignified and sedate.

THE WISHING RING (July 14).—The cast: Sis Hopkins (Rose Melville); Uncle Jerry (Richard Purdon); T. Jeremiah Spinach (Henry Murdock); Detective Slick (Arthur Albertson); Widow Simpson (Olive West); her daughter (Francis Nemoyer); the village smithy (C. D. Peruchi). Written by Frank Howard Clark. Directed by Robert Ellis.

Reading romantic novels has Sis dreaming of soul mates and dauntless heroes. So, when the village smithy makes her a nail ring and says that she shall have three wishes, she turns down his proffered love and wanders off in the fields to read her novel. "Gee," she sighs, "I wish I had a soul mate!" And, lo and behold, T. Jeremiah Spinach drops from the air at her knees. Sis does not know that T. Jeremiah, otherwise known as Rogue's Gallery No. 1, was escaping from a detective and had involuntarily fallen down the embankment. The pursuing detective and the rivalry of the village smithy bring on complications galore before T. Jeremiah is finally walked off to justice and Sis finds consolation in the huge reward given her for his capture and the love of the smithy.

THE BROKEN BRAKE (No. 88 of the "Hazards of Helen"—July 15).—The cast: Helen, the operator at Lone Point (Helen Gibson); Johnson, construction foreman (George Routh); his assistant (P. S. Pembroke); the doctor (G. A. Wiliams). Written by E. W. Matlack. Produced by James Davis.

In a scuffle between the assistant foreman and a discharged employee at the mountain construction camp the latter's revolver is fired, bringing about a dynamite explosion that severely injures many of the men. The crude medical aid of the camp will not suffice so the foreman and his assistant determine on the dangerous expedient of loading the men on a freight car and coasting down the grade to the Lone Point station. After word is sent ahead to Helen to secure surgeons from headquarters the start is made. When the car is hurtling along at great speed the foreman and assistant suddenly discover that the brakes will not work.

The assistant leaps to the ground, and, though badly hurt, succeeds in getting word ahead by tapping a wire. With the special bearing the medical staff rushing towards the station Helen's bravery and quick wit are put to a stern test in averting almost certain disaster. An audacious leap from horseback to a freight train and back again, and the manipulation of flying switches that shows the trains missing collision by a matter of inches form the thrilling climax of this "Hazard."

LUBIN.

OTTO, THE SALESMAN (July 24).—The cast: Otto (Davy Don); Mary (Patsy De Forest); foreman (Bernard Siegel); floorwalker (George Egan). Written by Mark Jonak. Adapted and directed by Edwin McKim.

He was only a hard-working ribbon clerk, but he had a heart. Each morning after taking his exercise at an open window in his attic room (which consisted of twelve deep breaths) he would go to toil in a department store. He gazed at Mary, a shop girl, and for many days he loved her devotedly. But a villainous foreman comes into the plot. The foreman asks Mary to come to his office after six o'clock. Otto overhears and decides to disguise himself as a bunch of ribbon behind the counter. The working people are leaving for their homes. Mary is in the foreman's office; he is telling her of the pretty future there would be for her if she would only care for him. She refuses and leaves. Otto rushes out to the front door, tells Mary he has heard all, begs her to become his other half. She remarks, "When you have proven to me that you are really a man, I will marry you. Until then, suffer." With this remark Otto faints.

Next morning Otto is all dressed up. When she gets a look at him, Mary is thrilled. The foreman after many attempts finally plans to meet Mary at the bridge near the river at twelve. He tells her it is important and means everything. Mary is seen on the bridge. The villainous foreman walks up to her; they speak for awhile. He offers her large diamonds of all descriptions, but she refuses them. Then he plans to carry her off. He suddenly blows a whistle and on come his confederates. They are about to take her away when Otto makes his appearance; he stops them with a huge gun. He gives Mary the gun, tells her to hold the assistants at bay while he goes over to the foreman, slaps him in the face, and offers him a choice of swords. They start fighting the duel while Mary is keeping back the thugs. Otto backs the foreman right into the river, then he goes to the thugs, and throws them into the river, too. Mary holds her arms out and makes Otto her hero.

BY RIGHT OF LOVE (Two Parts—July 25).—The cast: Muriel Fulton (Velma Whitman); Dan Moulton (Jay Morely); Manager Farrel (Robert Gray); Mr. Fulton (Melvin Mayo); Katie (Marcia Moore). Written by C. J. Harris. Directed by Leon D. Kent.

Muriel, daughter of Fulton, a wealthy manufacturer, imagines herself in love with Farrel, manager of the works, though in reality she is more dominated than attracted by him. Farrel has usurped authority at the plant, and insists upon a cut in wages of the men. Dan Moulton, one of the workmen, living with his invalid sister, Katie, incurs Farrel's enmity but, nevertheless, takes the part of the men in opposing the cut. During a ball at Fulton's home, Dan presents his plea to the manufacturer, pointing out that the wages of the poor should not be reduced so long as Fulton has money to spend on entertainments. His arrival interrupts Farrel in a proposal to Muriel just as she is about to accept him. When the girl hears Dan's masterly plea, and listens to his accusations of Farrel, she sees the vast difference between the two men, and delays her acceptance of the superintendent. She takes Dan's part, and wins the cause of the men.

Katie, Dan's sister, wins a prize at the state fair for needle work, and when Muriel at length yields to Farrel's pleading and consent to marriage, she goes to Katie with her wedding dress to have the girl embroider it. Katie's eyesight is failing, and Dan has forbidden her to work, but at the sight of the money which Muriel offers, Katie consents, and works on the dress in secret. Farrel, to make good his hold on Fulton, bribes a city official, but contrives to make it appear that Fulton is the briber. As the wedding day approaches, Muriel wavers in her decision to wed, but Farrel threatens exposure of her father in the matter of the bribe, and she again consents. Katie is finishing her work, but is discovered by Dan, who takes away her lamp. She gets a candle and continues her sewing. The dress is finished just as the candle fades, but when Dan enters he finds the girl blind. He learns that the dress is for Muriel, and is fierce in his realization that again the wealthy have taken toll from the poor.

The next day Muriel and Farrel go to Katie for the dress. There they meet Dan, and Muriel is heartbroken when she learns of the girl's misfortune. She pleads to be allowed to aid her, but Dan hands her the dress and the money she has paid his sister, and drives both Muriel and Farrel from the house. As a result of Dan's acting in ejecting Farrel, he is arrested for assault, and Fulton is arrested on the discovery of the bribe. It seems to Farrel that his triumph is complete. He is about to marry Muriel, and with the father in prison, he will be in complete charge of the factory. The shock is too great for the feeble Fulton, and he dies.

Dan, released on bail, meets Muriel, but refuses her request to be allowed to help Katie. Muriel has become distrustful of Farrel and declares that she will take a trip to Europe before the wedding. She carefully gives the appearance of going, but sends her maid instead, and disguised as her own maid, she keeps close watch on Farrel. Feigning interest in charity, she visits his office, veiled, and learns his true character. She succeeds in getting Katie into a hospital, also engages Dan to work on the Fulton place, posing before him as the maid. Believing her to be in as lowly a position as himself, Dan does not hesitate to show his love for her. Katie is brought home, and when the bandages are removed, it is she who tells Dan the real identity of the supposed maid. Muriel returns home with Dan, and finds Farrel. When he asks by what right the discharged worker is permitted on the place, she replies: "By right of love. He is the new superintendent of the factory and my prospective husband."

IN THE HOUR OF DISASTER (Three Parts—July 27).—The cast: James Gordon (Romaine Fielding); Mrs. Jordon (Mildred Gregory); Nell Rudge (Flora Lea); Nell's father (Bernard Siegel). Written and directed by Romaine Fielding.

James Gordon, a physician and surgeon, adopts Nell Rudge, the daughter of a shiftless laborer. The girl is sent to a boarding school and at the close of her last term, Gordon marries a society girl. Upon Nell's return from school, Gordon's fatherly interest in the girl is misconstrued by the wife, who is insanely jealous. Danby, an artist, who has rented from Gordon the adjoining country house, meets Nell and falls in love with her. Gordon's many attentions to Nell kindle the flame of jealousy in his wife and she orders Nell from the house. Nell's shiftless father, now a railroad employe, is discharged for drunkenness, and on the day Nell leaves home he and another discharged laborer rob the switch tower guard after having bound and gagged him. The train upon which Nell leaves meets with a head-on collision with a freight train, due to the tower guard. Gordon's wife, remorseful for her action in driving Nell away, seeks to intercept the train in an automobile, but she is too late to prevent the accident. Searching the ruins for Nell's body, she is frightfully burned. Nell is taken to the hospital and Gordon saves her life as well as that of his wife's. A reconciliation is effected, and wedding bells ring for Nell and Danby.

IT HAPPENED IN PIKERSVILLE (July 29). The cast: Exhausted Eddy (Raymond McKee); Spent Spencer (C. W. Ritchie); Vimless Victor (Billy Bowers); chief of police (Harry Loraine); Jiggs (Babe Hardy); Julia (Mabel Paige); janitor (Ben Walker); a policeman (Burt Bucher). Written by Fred H. Hayn. Directed by Jerod T. Hevener.

Sunday morning, Spent Spencer, Exhausted Eddy and Vimless Victor, three tramps, steal a bottle of whiskey from the box on the window sill of the home of Jiggs, owner of a distillery. But the box is knocked off and the other bottles are broken. Julia, Jiggs' wife, hears the crash and goes after the tramps with the broom. She calls Jiggs, but when he arrives the tramps have escaped. The tramps celebrate, but they attract the attention of a cop, who blows his whistle for assistance. The cops give chase and Victor and Spencer are caught, but Eddy, after being shot in the back, escapes by hiding in an ash barrel. The two are locked up and Eddy finds his way to Jiggs' distillery, next door to the police station.

In the distillery Eddy comes on a find, but desirous of letting his pals in, he calls to them to look out of the window, over the roof and down in front of the cell window, then, after he has filled himself up, he lies down for a nap. Unfortunately Jiggs and Julia come in to get some papers Jiggs has forgotten. Jiggs investigates as Julia guards Eddy with a pistol. Understanding the situation, Jiggs attaches the hose to the slops vat. In the cell the tramps become hilarious and the police captain sends to learn the cause. The police goes into the cell a moment after Victor has imbibed a generous amount of the slops. He spies the hose and takes a good drink himself.

When Eddy is awakened, Julia recognizes him. She gives him a pummeling and kicks him downstairs, after which the two march him to the police station, where he is thrust in the cell with the others. Angered at the slops the police attacks the tramps, but Eddy locks the cell door and they beat him up. The police calls for help, but the other policeman cannot get in, so they turn the hose on the men to subdue them, but the "cops" get most of the water.

OTTO, THE GARDENER (July 31).—The cast: Otto (Davy Don); Lady Dora (Patsy De Forest); Wm. Kent (George Egan); James Gordon (James Cassady). Written and directed by Edwin McKim.

Otto is a gardener working in the gardens of the lovely and accomplished Lady Dora. Otto is in love with her, but, of course, his station in life forbids him to even speak to her. He sends her flowers, signing "Your Adorer." The Lady is anxious to know who her unknown admirer is.

Lady Dora is much courted, but she will have none of the millionaires who pay her such ardent attention and dismisses their love offerings saying that when she marries she will marry a prince. James Gordon and William Kent, two of her latest admirers, who have been rejected, plan revenge. On being told of the gardener's love for the Lady Dora, they go to him and tell him how easy it is to realize his dreams. They tell him they will furnish him with funds to dress, to buy her presents and then he can marry her.

Otto falls for this, and they dress him as a prince. He is taken into the mansion where he is introduced to Lady Dora. She falls in love with him, and he tells her of his castles, etc.

Then Otto regrets his bargain and goes to the men, saying he is through, but they urge him on by filling his pockets with money. They only await until she finds out he is not a prince. A great reception is held in honor of the prince. He, of course, is funny and he is only found out when his mother, who has learned of his acts, enters the mansion and lets the "cat out of the bag." Otto is kicked out and loses his job.

BIOGRAPH.

A NATURAL BORN GAMBLER—(Two Parts—July 24).

It is the meeting night of "The Amalgamated Calcimine Artists of America" and Hostetter Johnson is busily occupied refilling the gin bottles for the evening rush. The meeting is all ready to proceed when the president notes the absence of an important member—Bert Williams—the walking delegate. Presently Williams makes his entrance in high hat and frock coat. The fact that the meeting is waiting for him does not prevent him from taking his usual "five fingers" at the bar, nor does the fact that he has no money to pay for it make any difference when one can simply call for the slate and chalk it down.

Being duly "oiled up," Williams enters the meeting room and is called to account for back dues. These he pays. After the regular business of the meeting, he consents to carry Limpy Jones, a sufferer of the gout, home. On their way home it is necessary to pass through a graveyard. They hear a couple of chicken thieves dividing their haul say: "Thar's one for you—and one for me," and think it is the devil and the Lord dividing their souls. Limpy Jones is dropped off Williams' back, and both run for life. Despite his gout Limpy Jones passes Williams on the road, while the chicken thieves follow later. Williams explains his experience in the graveyard to the thieves, and they tell him of dividing their haul, whereupon Williams explains that he knew it all the time. They all go back to the meeting room, where Limpy Jones is relating his story of the graveyard episode. Williams then suggests that they confiscate the birds in lieu of the fright received.

Still peeved over the money he had to pay as dues, Williams suggests that he and the secretary "roll the bones," and they are well under way when the president comes in and puts an end to it. Later a poker game is started. That, too, is well under way when a guard outside brings the news that a detective is coming in. Chips, cards, money and all other implements of the game are thrown into a drawer, and Williams starts preaching to the meeting on the evils of gambling. He forgets, however, that he had an ace of spades up his sleeve and while emphasizing an important passage in his lecture the card falls to the floor. This is evidence enough for the detective, and he goes for the reserves.

In the meantime the game is again resumed. Luck being against Williams he suggests that Limpy Jones take off the one shoe and have his foot bare—to pass along the aces when needed. They are betting on a big pot, watches, all the chips, money, in fact, everything being in it when the game is raided. The next morning the Judge hands him a ten day sentence.

A SAILOR'S HEART—(Reissue—July 24).—The cast: The sailor (Wilfred Lucas); his first sweetheart (Bess Meredith); his second sweetheart (Blanche Sweet); his third sweetheart (Claire McDowell); notary (Charles H. Mailes); priest (W. Chrystie Miller).

A sweetheart at every port has ever characterized the sailor, but it is believed that the sailor in this comedy carries the tradition a trifle further. Perhaps he was sincere for the moment in his declaration that each girl he met was the first and only, but with a sweetheart at home and one in another port and a wife in still another, fate dealt very kindly with him. He was the victim of his own impulse and paid back in his own coin, went his merry way.

THE BILLIONAIRE (Reissue—3 Parts—July 26).—The cast: Pansy Good (Gertrude Bambrick); John Doe (Charles H. Mailes); Bantiste (Dave Morris); Mr. Peppercorn (William Sloane); Mrs. Peppercorn (Laura La Varnie); Flora (Isabel Rea); Ping Pong (Bud Ross).

John Doe, "The Billionaire," decides to spend the week-end in Gay Paree and Monte Carlo, and leaves, taking with him Ping Pong, his valet, and a retinue of servants. Mr. and Mrs. Hotspur Peppercorn, newly rich and ambitious to marry their daughter, Flora, to a nobleman, sail on the same ship with Doe. Doe startles Paris with his lavish spending and is eagerly sought. The Peppercorns go to Nice in hopes of mingling with nobility, and Doe takes a trip to Monte Carlo.

Pansy Good, a cabaret singer in Nice, gets in bad and loses her position. At the same time Signor Baptiste, the frappe tenor, finds a photo in his wife's possession, and, determined to find the original, leaves his wife, pleading poverty as an excuse, telling her he cannot see her share his misery. Doe breaks the bank at Monte Carlo and becomes a philanthropist, giving all his winnings to a pretty woman who has lost heavily and is about to take poison. She gives Doe a card written in French. Curious to know what it means, he asks the waiter to read it. The waiter refers it to the manager, who orders Doe and Ping thrown out. Determined to know what is on the card, Doe saves a life, when he hands it to a stranger who is about to shoot himself. The mysterious card breeds wholesale duelling. The stranger challenges Doe to a duel and leads him to the field of honor.

Doe changes his mind about duelling when he sees the size of the crowd awaiting him, and decides to "beat it." He and Ping make their escape in an airship, and when Ping throws a bomb at his pursuers he loses his balance and falls out. Pansy Good is having a heated argument with the manager of the hotel about her bill when Doe arives. Upon learning of her misfortune he pays her bill. Pansy is grateful and Doe loses his heart.

The Peppercorns meet Lieut. Ladislas, a distinguished Hungarian officer, who takes Mrs. Peppercorn and Flora on a sight seeing tour. Peppercorn plans to entertain the telephone operator that night, and feigns a headache to get away from Mrs. Peppercorn. Doe and Pansy decide to do the town, and in Cafe Chantant Doe is recognized by Baptiste as the American whose picture he found in his wife's possession. Baptiste vows vengeance and challenges Doe to a duel. Pansy is introduced by Doe as the great American Song Bird and her singing makes a decided hit. Baptiste meets his old friend Lieut. Ladislas, who introduces him to Flora and Mrs. Peppercorn. Mrs. Peppercorn is delighted to meet nobility at last and plans to capture "The Count" for her daughter.

Doe sees the mysterious blonde who gave him the card, but she disappears before he is able to reach her. Doe, Pansy and the Peppercorns attend a contest—Feet vs. Fists, between Mons. Achille Petipas, Savatist (kicker), and Tim Rafferty, an American pugilist. Doe places a big bet on Rafferty and wins. Baptiste pursues Doe. Doe accepts his challenge and engages Tim Rafferty as his bodyguard. Rafferty and Ping, arrayed in armor, meet Baptiste in Doe's apartment. The duel creates a panic in the hotel, and Doe's apartment is demolished. Doe decides to get back to Broadway, and Baptiste, revengeful, plans to follow.

Doe leaves for home with Pansy and Rafferty. Baptiste pays ardent court to Flora, and Mrs. Peppercorn, eager to exhibit the Count, sails for home. Doe announces he will build a theater for his protege and cables his architects in New York to start building a theater at once, and have it ready for him when he arrives. All records for theater building are broken by Doe, and when he reaches New York he announces the opening night. Pansy is billed as the main attraction, and Doe assures her of success. Mrs. Peppercorn, Flora and Baptiste occupy a box, but Peppercorn eludes Mrs. Peppercorn and escorts Fluffy Flash, a show girl.

The Billionaire Theater is opened with pomp and ceremony; Tim Rafferty as head usher is kept busy straightening out arguments with his fists. Mrs. Peppercorn creates a scene when she sees Peppercorn with Fluffy and pulls him out by the ear. Doe's troubles begin when the company refuses to work with a non-union actor. The audience becomes impatient and threatens Doe if he does not open the show. Doe announces to the audience that he will continue the performance and play the leading part himself. He is wildly applauded and with the aid of volunteers the performance is continued.

Doe introduces his latest discovery, Pansy, but she proves a failure, and when a new moon effect he has invented refuses to work, Doe and Pansy are left singing to an audience of two, Rafferty and Ping. Doe, disgusted with his new venture, concludes the performance by inviting Rafferty and Ping to accompany him to the minister's. Doe again becomes a philanthropist, gives his theater away to a newsboy and marries his "star."

VITAGRAPH.

THE MUSICAL BARBER (July 17).—The cast: Barber De Goat (S. Rankin Drew); Grand Daddy (Edward Elkas); Mother (Louise Beaudet. Written by Frederic Chapin. Directed by Edmond Stratton.

De Goat only barbers to earn enough to keep supplied with musical instruments and he certainly keeps a goodly stock of them. Between (also during) shaves he amuses himself by playing solos on the violin or whatever instrument happens to be near at hand. Even when he is running the "scythe" over the chin whiskers of an unfortunate victim, he cannot resist the temptation to play a one handed seranade to himself on the flute.

Intent on his music, he allows the weapons of his trade to wander aimlessly over the countenances of his customers with tragic results. When a Chink finds that his queue is among the missing, a fond mother sees her Percy shorn of his curly locks, and Wild Bill from out Nevada way misses half his hirsute adornment, bedlam is cut loose and the barber shop is ransacked. De Goat manages to escape his pursuers by hiding in a lunatic asylum, but when the superintendent sees him, he extends a cordial invitation to sojourn for a while in a padded cell.

AT THE HEADWATERS OF THE DELALVEN (RIVER OF THE VALLEY).—On same reel as foregoing.—This subject shows the wonderful water falls of this river in Sweden, rivaling our own Niagara, which are harnessed and utilized in running sawmills.

THE FUR COAT (July 21).—The cast: Harold (William Dangman); Owner of Grocery (George O'Donnell); Village Belle (Shirley Moore); The Tramp (Ralph Whiting). Written by Edward J. Montague. Directed by Frank Currier.

Harold, on the strength of a letter telling him of a large legacy left to him, wrecks the grocery store in which he is employed, then dates up the village belle for a swell dinner. A second letter informs Harold that the money cannot be found, and that his legacy consists of one fur coat. Determined to make a splash in the village, he dons the coat and keeps his appointment with the belle, although it leaves him broke when she is done satisfying her Broadway appetite. Uncle Ben, the pawn broker, comes in handy and after much haggling over the price, he relieves Harold of the legacy. When Harold learns that his uncle's fortune was sewed up in the lining of the coat he has some job getting the "benny" back, but he finally succeeds and recovers the cash.

A CHEAP VACATION (July 24). Camp life doesn't agree with Harry and Ralph, two henpecked husbands, but when their wives decide on this style of vacation in order to save expenses, they are forced to go along, and incidentally take all the cumbersome paraphernalia necessary to this enjoyable (?) pastime. The unfortunate hubbys soon see that their lives will not be worth much if they continue camping, so they resort to strategy.

The tramp they hire to make camp life miserable for their wives does his work thoroughly, and after they find themselves in many embarrassing situations, the women decide that camp life is not what its "cracked up" to be.

A JEALOUS GUY (July 28).—The cast: Brother (Hughey Mack); Wifey (Jewell Hunt); Husband (Billy Baxter); Maid (Yida Ramona); Butler (Ed Dunn). Directed by Lawrence Semon. Written by Lawrence Semon and Graham Baker.

Who said he's dead? The bullet hasn't been invented yet that could pierce the hide of Hughey. While calling on the wife of the most jealous man on earth, Hughey is made the target for a volley of shots from that worthy's revolver. Hubby shoots with telling effect—he has no regard for the high cost of trousers. In the midst of the battle Hughey drops, apparently dead, but as the police nab the murderer the "corpse" starts rolling down stairs carrying all before it. It then gets up, rushes to wifey's room, and nabs a couple of burglars who were stealing a priceless necklace. After the rumpus is over he explains to hubby that he is his brother-in-law, a detective by trade, and hubby requests him to kindly refrain from kissing his wife, as he woud rather have that pleasure reserved for himself.

Universal Film Mfg. Co.

L-KO.

LIZZIE'S LINGERING LOVE (Three Parts—July 25).—The cast: Jailbird (Alice Howell); Opium Fiend (Phil Dunham); Manager Underworld Den (Fatty Voss); Assistant Manager (Bill Bevan).

Her term was over and she stood on the outside of the prison grasping the few dollars the institution had provided her. She had determined to go straight, but the underworld folks with whom, before her going up, she had rendered service not easily replaced, wanted her back. Her day of release was chalked by the boss of the den which had been her hangout, and his crooks were there to extend the glad hand. These worthies, posing as friends to the newly liberated, lifted the precious dollars needed for the new start, and the late jailbird found herself under their guidance among her old cronies. The "go straight notion" wasn't entirely killed and they found she had lost her former congeniality. Over strenuous efforts on the part of the boss to revive the old spirit drove her to an attempt to end it all.

At this point the hero entered, saved her, persuaded her to live a little longer, and won her heart. She stepped blithely forth to start anew, but met up with the underworld folks again and strong arm methods convinced her of the good policy of joining their operations.

She served as an outpost to their burglar jobs with good success, until at a millionaire's home where the haul of the season was due for a gathering, she met up with a mouse. This drove her unceremoniously into the privacy of the home, where she found she was aiding in the sacking of the house of her hero.

She turned on her pals, protected the sick mother, returned the family jewels, and then stepped out of his life forever—but being the last one out ran into the lately aroused cops, her exit being badly marred by her efforts to gain headway on the flatfoot hot step of the protectors of peace.

WON BY VALOR (July 27).—The cast: Bertram Marshall (Howard Crampton); Ellen, his daughter (Sydell Dowling); The Groom (Sidney Bracey). Written by Catherine Carr. Produced by Robert F. Hill.

A new groom is engaged by Marshall as an instructor for his daughter, Ellen. Her horse runs away and she falls off, whereupon the groom, in picking her up, kisses her. She resents this, but does not tell her father. She is not so averse to being in love with the groom, however, as he is very handsome and distinguished looking.

The next week the Marshalls give a ball. Two crooks gain entrance and are robbing the ladies' dressing room when the groom discovers them and tries to stop them. Ellen enters and fires her tiny revolver at the crowd, wounding the groom. When she sees who it is she accuses him of being an accomplice.

But the groom is recognized as Lord Deering. He says he came disguised as a groom to win Ellen's hand, knowing that she despised titled fortune-hunters. So there is no further obstacle to a happy marriage.

THE CIRCULAR ROOM (Two Parts—July 28).—The cast: Stuart Travers (Ben Wilson); Maida (Edna Hunter); Count Orloff (Charles Ogle); Von Tahn (Joseph W. Girard). Written by William Addison Lathrop. Produced by Ben Wilson.

Stuart Travers, the son of an American steel magnate, falls in love with Maida, the ward of Count Orloff. The count is the head of a league plotting the destruction of American munition plants. They hold their meetings in a secret circular room which can be entered only by way of a secret panel. At a meeting of the league there is produced a new type of infernal machine with which they hope to destroy the Travers steel plant.

A certain Von Thahn, one of the league, is also in love with Maida. He proposes and is furious when she refuses him. Maida then follows Von Than to the secret room and while looking for the spring to open the panel she overhears them plotting the ruin of the Travers steel works.

When the plotters leave Maida hides in a closet to escape discovery. Just as Von Tahn, the last to leave, is passing the closet Maida drops something and is discovered. Von Tahn binds her in the circular room and sets the machine for five minutes past nine. He then leaves and overtakes his confederates. When he tells them what he has done they upbraid him and all return.

Meanwhile, Maida has managed to knock the receiver off the telephone and phones Stuart to come at once. He rushes to the scene with a policeman and just succeeds in getting Maida out in time. He himself is a trifle too late and is knocked unconscious by the explosion. However, Maida finds him still alive, and as the conspirators are arrested there is no obstacle to their happiness.

MUTINY (July 30).—The cast: Capt. Gant (Albert MacQuarrie); Warren Gillcrest (Jack Holt); Grace (Lucille Younge). Written by Ben Cohn. Produced by Jay Hunt.

Captain Gant is a hard man. The closest he had ever come to having a friend was in the person of his mate, Warren Gillcrest. The captain was hated by his men. A few hours out of port, the men's dissatisfaction over their treatment comes to a head and they are on the point of attacking the captain when the leader counsels the men to wait until the ship is further away from land. The captain sees the signs of dissatisfaction among his men and returns to his cabin to prepare for it. As he starts down the gangway his attention is suddenly attracted to one of the hatchways and, watching unobserved, he sees a slight figure, dressed as a boy, emerge. When the captain confronts the stowaway the shock causes the stranger to stagger backward. Gant, seeing that it is a girl, takes her into his cabin and then attacks her.

Gillcrest has overheard the scuffle and realizes what is going on. He is unable to stand the thought of the girl being in the captain's power, and in spite of consequences, goes to her assistance. He and Gant have a fight, in which the captain is knocked out. Gillcrest takes the girl to the deck, and is on the point of lowering her to one of the boats when he looks back and sees the crew sneaking towards the captain's cabin.

The captain, meanwhile, has rushed on deck and finds himself in the midst of the men. They have a fierce fight and the captain is about overpowered from numbers when the leader is knocked out. The others hesitate, and at this moment Gillcrest rushes in and the crew all quit fighting. Gant is down. The girl rushes up and they find that he is seriously hurt. Gillcrest and the girl take him to his cabin and try to ease the last moments, but it is all in vain and the captain slowly sinks. He gradually loses his strength and begs forgiveness of both Gillcrest and the girl and tells them that he has always been among hard people and that is what had caused him to become so hard. As they forgive him the captain sinks back and his life slowly leaves.

FOR THE LOVE OF A GIRL (Two Parts—July 29).—The cast: Black La Rue (Harry Caey); His Mother (Bessie Arnold); Cliff Buckley (Joe Rickson); Jane (Olive Fuller Golden); Sheriff (Neal Hart). Written by Harvey Gates. Produced by Harry Carey.

Black La Rue was born on the Mexican border in times of raids and fights. His father was killed in one of the fights. The circumstances of his birth have in some strange way affected his character so that he can never see a fight without having an irresistible desire to join the fray. Cliff Buckley and his daughter, Jane, arrive in town. Black gets into a fight in front of their house and Jane makes him stop. He is attracted by the interest the girl has taken in him and later asks her father's consent to their marraige. When her father refuses Black is resentful and returns home in a gloomy mood.

That night he decides to come to town to drown his sorrows. Jane sees him and detains him, knowing that he is bent on some mischief. Meanwhile Cliff Buckley gets into a fight over a card game and is arrested by the sheriff. As they go out of the building Buckley struggles and accidentally kills the sheriff. Jane has been standing near with Black and they both hear the shot. They are the first to reach Buckley and, seeing the sheriff on the ground, quickly take in the situation. Black, realizing the position the girl will be in, confesses that he killed the sheriff.

The whole crowd has been drinking and a feeling against Black arises. He is taken in charge by a crowd who leave with him for the hills where they expect to hang him. He is taken to a tree overhanging the river, but just as they are about to hang him he manages to break away by making a wild leap for the river, far below. The men try to stop him but, by the time they can get to the river, Black has escaped. Black makes his way home and his mother looks after his bruises. Just before dawn, when he is preparing to leave the country, Jane comes in. She says that she has learned of his sacrifice and intends to wait for him. Black tells her that he is going away until he can master his strange obsession for fighting, and that he will then return. She promises to wait.

CREATING LIFE FROM A DEAD LEAF (July 27).—Produced by the Educational and Scientific Film Co. of New York City. This picture shows how a dried lettuce leaf, crumbled in a glass of water, can furnish nourishment for the growth of a whole colony of bacteria of various species. Also water fleas and fresh water devil fish (hydra) are shown in various stages of sexual reproduction or budding. Also Mexican sword fish, Japanese gold fish, etc., are shown.

JITNEY JACK AND GASOLINA (On same reel as foregoing).—Jack has a mule with a rubber tail. When he tries to stretch it so as to have more tail or more mule, Gasolina objects. She said it was not in the contract. So she kicked Jack way into the middle of next week. He landed on a train bound for the coast. So Gasolina is in New York, her tail in San Francisco and a flea was biting her in Kansas. So she joined her master. He shot the flea and they meandered home right merrily.

JOKER.

I'VE GOT YER NUMBER (July 29).—The cast: Mr. Binks (Wm. Franey) Mrs. Binks (Gale Henry); Village Constable (Chas. Conklin); Flo, cabaret dancer (Lillian [illegible]); Mr. Spinner (Milburn Morantl). Written by A. E. Bishop. Produced by Allen Curtis.

Mr. Binks, the henpecked husband of the stern Mrs. Binks, goes to a banquet at the Cafe Salome, but it is only because the occasion is one of the gravest business importance that she permits him to go. Being somewhat late, he drives his car to the cafe and there proceeds to drown his sorrows. Now comes along Mr. Spinner, who after speeding things up in the cafe, takes Flo, the cabaret girl, out for a spin. Being pretty tipsy he can't make his own car go so he swipes the nearest other one, which, unfortunately, belongs to Binks. During his joy ride Spinner does much damage in certain rural sections, ending up by smashing Slowton's monument, but Hank, the village constable at Slowton, gets the number of the car. Spinner returns Binks' car undamaged long before Binks is ready for it.

Well, things might not have been so bad for Binks the next morning when the charges were preferred against him for manslaughter, joy riding with pretty cabaret girls and destruction of valuable property, if a strange coincident had not occurred. During the most vital transaction of business affairs at the cafe, Binks, lying snoozing on a divan, dreams of the pretty cabaret girls; of his taking them out spinning in his car, of numerous smashups to the other parties, of getting away from the constable of Slowtown and of the very destruction of the monument of Slowtown.

So when Binks sees the warrant for his arrest, he actually believes himself guilty. He tips Hank, the constable, to give him time to make good the damages before his wife learns all. Mrs. Binks discovers Binks in the act of buying the girls hats and gowns to make amends. But Spinner arrives and explains all, so everybody is once more happy.

NESTOR.

Fresh from Hicktown's leading emporium, Lee and Eddie arrive at the beach for a week's outing. "Fadeway" Ann, a notable crook, and her pal have learned that the house of a millionaire containing some valuable painting is left in the care of a drunken caretaker. To carry out their plan they decide to get a "sucker" to do the dangerous work. In search of the easy mark, Ann strolls along the beach and meets Eddie. She makes an appointment to see him that night.

Eddie proves a willing accomplice until the girl tells him that she is being plotted against and wants him to rob a house of some paintings that belong to her. Here he balks and Ann leaves him. Left alone, Eddie meditates over the matter and indulges free in wine. His courage receiving this impetus, he at last decides to aid the lady in distress.

Disgusted, Ann returns to the hotel and sees Lee hanging around. She again tries her sympathy "gag" and Lee falls for it at once. Learning she needs a protector he gladly agrees to get her "rightful possessions" and securing an outfit suitable to open an arsenal, he sets out. Eddie, meanwhile, fired with his new courage, knocks out the waiter when he demands his pay and, securing a wagon and tools, puts on a mask and hurries to the house.

The watchman is sleeping off a drunk, and after many trials Eddie at last gets in through the cellar door. Lee, too, arrives and after several attempts, manages to get in the house. He goes to some of the rooms and starts to overhaul the house, not knowing that Eddie is at work. The caretaker awakens and, seeing lights in the house, calls a policeman and investigates. They succeed in capturing the intruders.

A detective, however, has been following the crooks and at last hears them confessing the prearranged robbery of the paintings. He takes them in charge and hurries them to the police station. All the parties come together here and Ann, seeing "the police have the goods on her," states that she never saw the two rubes before. They are freed after a lecture by the judge to let "chickens" alone.

AN UNEXPECTED SCOOP (July 28).—The cast: Bert Allen (Richard Stanton); Jim Baker (Jack Wilson); Lesley Hartman (Myrtle Gonzalez). Scenario by Malcolm Strong. Produced by Richard Stanton.

The "Herald's" city editor gives Bert Allen, cub reporter, an opportunity to scoop the "Express" by detailing him to interview Lesley Hartman, the mysterious country architect of Barlow, who has just won the ten thousand dollar prize in the court house design contest. At about the same time, Jim Baker, veteran reporter of the "Express," sets out to scoop on the same story.

When Bert arrives at the Barlow station he looks about, wondering how he is to get out to the Hartman ranch. Spying the blacksmith shop across the street, and seeing a horse tied nearby, it seems likely that he can hire a rig without going further. Walking over to the "smithy," Bert is tempted to turn back when he sees a pretty girl drive past him to the station. But duty demands that he make haste and, besides, the girl holds a baby in her lap, which is discouraging.

Bert persuades the blacksmith to rent him a rig, but must wait until the smith has finished mending the wagon. While this is going on, Bert hears a scream from the pretty girl, whose purse has been snatched by a thief. Bert gives chase to the tramp and after a battle recovers the purse and hurries back with it. He then consents to take charge of the child for a few seconds. In the meanwhile, Jim Baker has arrived at Barlow, and has bribed the blacksmith to hire him the rig.

Bert sees his rival, Jim Baker, driving away with his rig, to steal the story. Bert gives chase with the baby clinging to his neck, and the girl, thinking the child about to be kidnapped, runs wildly after. Baker escapes, and Bert, too angry to explain to the girl, thrusts the baby in her arms and dashes away to whip the traitorous blacksmith. As they are about to fight, the girl comes up and learns what they are in search of. Thereupon she bursts into laughter, announces that she is Lesley Hartman, the architect, and that Baker will have his trip for nothing. Also, she is not married.

LAEMMLE.

THE MASK OF FORTUNE (July 29).—The cast: Fayette Durand (Marjorie Ellison); Edgar Pearson (Jack Connolly); Henry Durand (Malcolm Blevins); Gaston Du Valle (Bert Law. Scenario by Calder Johnstone, Directed by George Cochrane.

Fayette Durand has had since childhood a mysterious ability to foretell the future. Her father scoffs at her power, and an irksome antagonism arises between them. Henry Durand, the father, also objects to Gaston Du Valle as a suitor for his daughter's hand. So Gaston, wishing to exploit Fayette's power, induces her to leave home and establishes her as a professional medium.

A young man called Edgar Pearson calls on her several times to ask her advice about investments and finds that the advice is always sound. One day he asks her about a certain stock and she advises him to buy. Her father, not knowing who she is, asks her advice about the same stock. It is a choice between Edgar and her father. At last she decides to favor Edgar and advises her father to sell.

Later, Fayette's conscience hurts her and she reverses her decision. She rushes to the floor of the exchange and reverses her advice. As a result her father wins a fortune and Edgar loses all he has. When he rebukes Fayette for willfully ruining him, she takes pity on him and takes him to her father to try to make him return some of the money. Durand is immovable until Fayette lifts her veil. Then he relents and Fayette and Edgar are happily married.

PRISCILLA'S PRISONER (Two parts—July 27).—The cast: Priscilla Graves (Cleo Madison); Gerrard Maxime (Charles Gunn); Town Marshal (Ray Hanford); Mrs. Maxime (Mrs. Grassby); Mr. Maxime (Wadsworth Harris); The Judge (Frank McQuarrie). Written by Harvey Gates. Produced by Cleo Madison.

Gerrard Maxime leaves home with a friend because of a quarrel with his father. After tramping around the country for some time they arrive one day, hungry and tired, at the farm of Priscilla Graves, a girl who is working her own farm. Priscilla is saving up to pay off the mortgage on the farm and Gerrard arrives just as she is putting away her savings. She refuses to give them anything to eat, as they look so terrible.

Gerrard tells his friend of the refusal and also of the money and the two go to pick out a rock for a bed. Gerrard awakes in the night to find his friend gone. Guessing that he has gone to steal the money, Maxime follows and tries to prevent the robbery. Priscilla arrives just in time to capture Gerrard, the friend making his escape.

As punishment Gerrard is sentenced to work out his imprisonment on the farm. He is very happy, as he has fallen in love with Priscilla, until one day he is accused of stealing a horse and without being given a chance to clear himself is beaten by some farmers.

In the meantime his friend has gone home and told the Maxims of their son's plight. They come after him and find him in bed from his beating. Priscilla is, of course, astonished when she learns that Gerrard comes from a prominent family. When Priscilla next goes to her lawyer's to see about the mortgage she finds that it is paid. Gerrard then steps out and offers to be her prisoner for life. Does she accept? She does.

A GREAT LOVE (July 28).—The cast: Harold du Vane (Hayward Mack); Lillian (Mina Cunard); Neil (Vola Smith); Jim (Nobert Myles); Dave (Edward Brown). Scenario written by Fred Myton. Produced by Clifford S. Elfelt.

Harold du Vane and his wife have a misunderstanding, caused by Harold's attentiveness to his paintings. He and his wife quarrel and Harold tells her that he is going to some quiet place where he can work without interruption. A short time later, Harold arrives in the heart of the wilderness. Nearby there is a camp of an old woodcutter, Dave Woodward, and his daughter, Nell. Jim Smith, a young man, assists old Dave with his wood cutting. He has long loved Nell, but she has refused to take his love seriously. She and Harold meet and he recognizes her as a type he is desirous of painting. She is easily persuaded to pose for him. One day Harold realizes that Nell loves him and he feels a pang of regret for leading her on and neglecting his wife. He falls asleep beside a tree.

Nell's father is mortally wounded by a falling tree and Jim brings him to the cabin. Before dying, the old man places the care of his daughter in Jim's hands and tells him he hopes that they will marry. This thought is too much for Nell, and in an outburst she tells Jim that she could never marry him, as the artist has her love. She rushes out and hurries to the artist's camp. She throws herself in Harold's arms and declares her love. He tells her that he is married and that he must return to his wife. She begs him to meet her that night under the fourth tree. Harold goes to the appointed place and finds the fourth tree to be in the midst of a lake. On looking closer, he finds Nell beneath the water. Jim has crept to the place and accused Harold of murdering the girl, and just as Harold is about to be killed he is awakened by Nell playfully shaking him.

He can hardly believe Nell is real. He tells her that he is returning to his wife and that as a wedding present to Jim and herself he is leaving the picture. He returns home and hurrying to his wife room, finds that in his absence a little stranger has arrived. There is a happy reconciliation between husband and wife.

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL FEATURE.

ADVENTURES OF PEG O' THE RING No. 11, "The Stampede" (Two parts—July 10).—The cast: Peg (Grace Cunard); Doctor Lund, Junior (Francis Ford); Doctor Lund, Senior (Marc Fenton); Mrs. Lund (Jean Hathaway); Flip, the Clown (Pete Gerald); Marcus, the Hindoo (Irving Lippner).

Just as Peg is being rushed from the racetrack in an automobile, young Doctor Lund springs on the running board and grapples with the ruffians. He succeeds in rescuing her from their clutches. Marcus then reports to Mrs. Lund that he has again failed to get the letter. Mrs. Lund is furious. A few minutes later the doctor comes in and, seeing the two men there, gives them a thrashing and throws them out of the house. Mrs. Lund meets them outside and tells them to try once more to "get" Peg.

The Doctor now goes to Peg's tent at the circus to give her the letter which he has been keeping for her. But she overhears the ruffians planning to get it, so gives it back to him for safe keeping. Marcus and his man attack him, but he cleverly escapes.

Marcus now plans to shoot Peg while she is performing in the ring and has procured a Maxim silencer for the purpose. He shoots through a hole in the tent and succeeds in causing her to fall from her horse. Every one rushes to her assistance and in the general excitement an elephant gets loose. The elephant picks up Peg's prostrate body and runs off.

The elephant drops Peg in a lumber yard, where Flip and Dr. Lund go to look for her. But Peg is seen by a couple of harbor pirates, who decide to capture her. A young rowdy tries to save her, but is knocked aside. Dr. Lund finds the young man and learns that Peg has been taken away in a boat. He hires a launch and follows with the rowdy.

On the boat the pirates draw lots for the possession of Peg. When she regains consciousness she struggles for her freedom and finally succeeds in defending herself in a room. Here the pirate who has won her comes for her. But the doctor has boarded the boat with his friend. He looks for Peg while his friend holds the pirates at bay. After finding Peg and knocking out the man who was forcing his attentions on her, the doctor and Peg are cornered in the stern of the ship by the pirates, who have overcome the young man holding them at bay.

RED FEATHER.

TEMPTATION AND THE MAN (Five Parts—July 24).—The cast: Jim Crosby (Hobart Henley); John Payton, a banker (Bert Bushy); Ann Payton, his daughter (Sydell Dowling); Temple Vaughn (Sydney Bracey); Phil Johnson (Joseph Cranby); Mamma Costelle (Clara Beyers). Written by Catherine Carr. Produced by Robert F. Hill.

Jim Crosby has shifted for himself since his early childhood. He has become a gangster, feared by all his companions because of his strength. In a fight, which he enters for his sister's sake, he is arrested and sent to jail for a term of months.

In the meantime Ann Payton, a society girl, has rented a saloon which she has turned into a mission. She is engaged to be married to Temple Vaughn, her father's young secretary, but decides to wait a year before marrying. The day that Jim is released from prison he gets mixed up in a brawl and, knowing that the police are just waiting a chance to arrest him again, he seeks refuge in the old saloon, a former hangout. Ann takes him in and shelters him from the police.

Vaughn has been leading a fast life and has become involved with a woman by the name of Costello and a gambler called Johnson. He loses heavily, and to pay the debt forges a check. Jim, who has been given a position in the bank, recognizes Johnson when he comes to cash the check. He discovers that Vaughn is not able to meet the check, and in lieu of settlement Johnson forces Vaughn to invite a number of his wealthy friends to his house for a game of cards. Jim overhears the two planning the card party and, knowing Ann's love for Vaughn, he decides to get the check and so prevent any further blackmail.

At the party Vaughn stands seeing his friends fleeced as long as he can and then accuses Johnson of cheating. Then a figure appears at the door, holding a pistol. He rifles all their pockets, taking the money on the table and the forged check. But in robbing Vaughn, Jim slips in his pocket the forged check. Jim is caught while trying to make his escape and is sentenced to a term in prison. Some time later Vaughn finds in his pocket the forged check and realizes that Jim has committed the crime only to save him. He offers to take all the blame, but Jim will not listen.

After his marriage Vaughn again gets connected with Johnson and his mistress. There is a quarrel and Johnson is arrested for running a gambling house. In prison he meets Jim and tells him that the first thing he does upon his release from prison will be to kill Vaughn. Later they are both released on the same day. Jim goes at once to warn Vaughn who arrives a few moments after and who accuses Jim of paying attention to his wife. Jim tries to warn him, but Johnson steps out from behind a screen and shoots him through the heart. In the last scene Jim and Ann are seen together, establishing another mission in the Bowery. It is left to the spectator whether or not Jim will ever succeed in overcoming the great social gap which lies between them.

GOLD SEAL.

A SPLASH OF LOCAL COLOR (Two parts—July 26).—The cast: Bessie Lee (Mary Fuller); Thomas Harvey (Joseph W. Girard); Jake, a Gangster (Charles Slattery); Bill, another Gangster (Ed. Murphy). Adapted by Catherine Carr from the story of Clifford F. Ivins. Produced by Lucius Henderson.

Bessie Lee, a writer, is rooming in a cheap New York lodging house, an uncle in the country forwarding her an allowance each month. One morning with a rejected manuscript Bessie receives a sarcastic note from Thomas Harvey, editor of "Modern Life," a monthly magazine, informing her that she will never sell a story until she has had actual experience. Her uncle dies, leaving her a heritage of debts. Reduced to poverty, Bessie accosts a pedestrian and asks for money. The man happens to be a detective and he arrests her. The judge, after hearing her story, sentences her to the Home of the Good Shepherd.

As the detective is about to lead her away a man seated in the rear of the court room, who has been an interested listener, rises, tells the judge that he is a Western ranch owner, that he likes Bessie's looks, believes her story and will marry her and give her a good home. Bessie agrees to marry the stranger. Bessie, giving the name of Alice Kale, and the man, giving the name of Tom Moore, are married in the Night Court. Tom takes Bessie to a dilapidated furnished room in another part of the city. There they find food, which Bessie ravenously devours. Two gangsters indulge in a quarrel in a nearby saloon. One gangster strikes the other and flees; the other gangster, pistol in hand, pursues.

Bessie finishes her meal. Tom tells her that he is a burglar, that he lied in the court, and warns her not to leave the room until he returns. As Tom steps out in the upper hallway the fleeing gangster, who has dodged into the door below, arrives at the head of the stairs and hides behind a barrel. The pursuing gangster enters the lower hall, sees Tom at the head of the stairs, mistakes him for the enemy and fires at him. Tom sinks to the floor wounded. By a clever ruse Bessie makes them believe she was the victim of the shot and sends them on a wild goose chase. The gangster, who hid behind the barrel, appears, congratulates the terrified Bessie on the clever way she "stalled" the "bulls" and helps her lay Tom on the bed in the room. As the days go by Bessie nurses Tom and works as a scrub woman in a nearby drug store. Evenings and in spare moments she writes a story based on her recent experience.

One morning Tom, much improved, leaves a note for Bessie and disappears. Bessie sends her story, "A Splash of Local Color," to "Modern Life," giving her address as general delivery, so that Tom will not know what she is doing. She returns to the room, finds Tom gone and discovers the note. In the note Tom informs Bessie that he is not a burglar, and says he is worse than that, a masquerader, who married her for selfish reasons with the deliberate intention of deserting her, but instead of carrying out his plans he fell madly in love with her and could not stand living platonically with her any longer. The note concludes: "If you love me, wait for my return one week from today, when you shall know me as my true self." Bessie is delighted, for she has grown to love Tom. One morning she gets a letter from "Modern Life." Editor Harvey writes that he accepts "A Splash of Local Color" and adds that he recently took great pains and jeopardized his life to obtain local color for a story which he himself intended to write along the same lines, but that Bessie's story is better and he wishes she would call personally at the office so that he may congratulate her and hand her the check. Bessie is greatly surprised to learn that "Tom Moore" is Editor Harvey. Having learned each other's identity, Harvey takes Bessie into his arms.

JUST A FEW LITTLE THINGS (July 26).—The cast: Archie (Victor Potel); Mildred (Ruby Cox); Fred (Wallace Beery); Nurse (Gretchen Lederer). Written and produced by Wallace Beery.

Archie, a man well past the age of forty-five, proposes to Mildred, a young and pretty girl, and is rejected. Fred, her youthful lover, then enters and does the same thing, and is accepted. As Fred leaves the house, it is very windy and a young lady passing by gets some dust in her eyes. He tries to assist and from Mildred's window it appears that he is embracing the young lady. Mildred's temper quickly rises, and she writes to Fred, calling off their engagement.

She then telephones Archie, and they marry immediately. Arriving at Archie's home, Mildred is dumfounded to find that she has suddenly become the mother of six children. Fred becomes sick, and the tender sympathies of the nurse at the hospital so plays on his heart that he proposes marriage. After the ceremony, he goes to his bride's house and finds he has married a widow with seven children.

One year elapses. Mildred is dressed in mourning; Fred is without a wife. They meet by accident one day and after explanations have straightened matters out, they decide to get married at once. After the marriage they find they have a family of thirteen children; but in the final scene they are both happy, as they send the thirteen off to school.

THE LATEST IN VAMPIRES (Two Parts—July 30).—The cast: "Mug" Leavy (Harry C. Myers); Elbert Diggs (Sidney Bracey); Loretta, his wife (Rosemary Theby). Written by Harry Ditmar. Produced by Harry C. Myers.

The scene opens upon a family squabble between Diggs and his wife. Then enters "Mugs" Leavy on robbery intent. But "Mug" is discovered by Elbert. "Mug," however, has the presence of mind to seize a picture of Mrs. Diggs and cry in a tragic manner, "My God, who is that woman?" "Mug" then sinks into a chair and tells his story.

In the opening picture we see "Mug" taking a fond farewell of his mother. In the city "Mug" struggles to make his way as an artist. With the help of some wealthy patrons "Mug" succeeds in his profession. One night, in search of inspiration, he meets the vampire, Loretta. "Mug's" prosperity increases, but Loretta develops into a regular vampire. His sweetheart in the country comes to rescue her lover from the wiles of temptation, but after one look at his old sweetheart "Mug" decides that he prefers the vampire. Then Loretta deserts him for one of his wealthy patrons and "Mug" goes to the dogs. And while Elbert is trying to get an explanation out of his hysterical wife, "Mug" silently makes his departure.

When "Mug" arrives at the saloon where he and his pals are accustomed to hang out, he is so elated that he orders drinks for the whole house and proceeds to tell the story of his clever getaway. At that he might have gotten away with the job had not a couple of plain-clothes men been lurking in the back of the saloon and heard the story. In the station house the lieutenant has a great laugh over the whole affair. But when Diggs hears how he has misjudged his wife he implores forgiveness and Loretta is overjoyed at the fact that she could be a dangerous vampire if she wanted to. "Mug" is seen languishing in a cell as the picture fades out.

WAR-RIDDEN MEXICO (Special Release)—(July 11).—Views of the sections where the fighting is going on, Chihuahua, Carranza, Obregon and Villa are shown. Views of American troops as they are to-day and as they were several years ago, a view of the bridge at Columbus, after Villa's raid. Other tense scenes.

CROSS PURPOSES (July 25).—The cast: John Standing (Jack Connolly); Lisa (Jessie Arnold); the Grand Duke (Wm. Canfield). Written by Bess Meredyth. Produced by Wm. Worthington.

Lisa, a popular actress, is in the power of the Grand Duke. There is a young man in the war office desperately in love with her and she is also infatuated with him. The Grand Duke orders her to procure some papers for him from young Whitley and she hesitatingly is forced to obey.

Whitley arrives and she notices some papers in his coat pocket. Thinking these are the required documents, she proceeds to drug young Whitley. The Grand Duke, being in the next room, there is no way out. But Whitley sees her drug the wine and, instead of drinking it, pours it out and feigns to be in a stupor. When she starts to take the papers her love for the man overcomes her fear for the duke, and she locks the door to the room where the duke is and tries to waken Whitley. But the duke breaks down the door.

There ensues a terrific struggle, which ends in the overthrow of the duke. Whitley then says that he is John Standing of the secret service, on detail to find out who it is that wants to steal the plans. Standing then tells Lisa that she is his prisoner. She offers to be led away, but he tells her that if she is willing he will be her jailer for life.

VOGUE.

JEALOUSY A LA CARTE (July 25).——The cast: The Waiter (Rube Miller); The Cook (Arthur Tavares); The Songbird (Alice Neice); The Cashier (Madge Kirby). Directed by Rube Miller.

Art and Rube are both employed in the same cafe, Rube as a waiter and Art as a chef. They are both in love with Alice, a Spanish dancer, who is an entertainer in the cafe. They are bitter rivals for her favor and come to blows about her, much to the detriment of the service of the cafe. The proprietor settles this, and as he likes them both, allows them to continue in the service of the place.

Madge comes to the cafe as a cashier. Art and Rube see her and fall for her. Madge being a flirt, encourages them both. They have a bitter quarrel about her, which winds up in a duel between them with meat cleavers as the weapons. As a climax to their struggles to win her favor, Madge is attracted by the brass buttons of a policeman, and falls in love with him. Alice, too, is charmed with brass buttons, so Madge and Alice leave Art and Rube and go with a couple of strange policemen who happen to come on the scene. Art is so disgusted that he polishes a frying pan, hands it to Rube. Rube then hits Art and himself on the head and they both pass away.

FOR TEN THOUSAND BUCKS—(Two Parts—July 23).—The cast: Bungling Bill (Paddy McQuire); Bloggie (Ben Turpin); Braveheart (Arthur Moon); His Sweetheart (Gypsy Abbott); Valentine (Jack Gaines); Carmen (Nell Farrin); Ignatz Daschundsky (Ed. Laurie). Directed by Jack Dillon.

Bungling Bill and Bloggie steal a letter and a Ford machine, and the owner and the police chase them. After a series of adventures these two bungling men take refuge in the apartment of Carmen Sapho, an adventuress, who holds them up at the point of a gun and searches them. Finding the stolen letter on their person, she reads the contents and learns therefrom that ten thousand dollars is to be shipped from Canarsie station on the limited train that afternoon. She hires them to go to the station and steal the shipment. Arriving in Canarie, they are arrested for illegal train riding and are forced to act as strike breakers during the strike which is then in progress on the road. This strike has been fomented by Malcolm Valentine, a villain, who revenges himself in this way upon the superintendent, who, with Jack Braveheart, a railroad detective, rescued Rena, an operator, from his clutches. Inciting the men to strike, Valentine defies the road, and it was this fact that caused Bungling Bill and Bloggie to choose between six months in jail or brave the anger of the strikers. They choose the latter.

Dressed in brakemen attire, they go to take the tickets of the passengers boarding the limited with disastrous results. In the meantime Carmen has come, and learning the address of Daschundsky, the man who is making the shipment, she trails him from his house and sees him enter the bank with a bag. Duplicating the bag, she comes back and follows him into the office of the superintendent, where she switches the bags and is about to make off with the money when Valentine comes into the office. He, too, has learned about the shipment, and knocking the superintendent unconscious, he is about to leave the office with the worthless bag when he sees Carmen. He recognizes her as a woman he deserted and at a refusal to a reconciliation, she allows him to go with a bag filled with newspapers.

At the station Valentine realizes he has been tricked and he has two tools board the train to steal the bag from Carmen. She has lost the bag that contained the money by absent mindedly taking the bag Valentine rid himself of when he found the contents were worthless. The events that follow are fast and furious. The fights on the train with Bungling Bill and Bloggie finally obtaining the bag, the kidnapping of Rena, the race between a train and automobile, the mail bag snapped off the mail crane with two human beings inside, the final roundup of the culprits with the money bag finding its way back to the owner through the ingenuity of Jack Braveheart and his sweetheart, make this a snappy comedy.

THE HAUNTED SYMPHONY (Two Parts—July 29).—The cast: Norman Brice (Crane Wilbur); Dr. Barstow (Claude Mortenson); Dr. Andrew Smiley (Frederick Montague); Sarah Kayton (Jessie Burnett); Paul Kayton (John Oaker); Wilfred Redmond (Lloyd Holton); Marcia Redmond (Mae Gaston). Directed by Robert B. Broadwell.

Dr. Andrew Smiley, a brain specialist and a hypnotist, is the guardian of Wilfred and Marcie Redmond, brother and sister, and both rich in their own right. Smiley wishes to marry Marcia, as he is badly in need of money, but when he proposes she rejects him. Smiley has a secret mistress in Sarah Kayton, the head nurse of his sanitarium, and she has borne him a son, Paul Kayton, who is Smiley's secretary, without knowledge of the fact that his employer is his father. Wilfred Redmond, a musical genius, writes a musical composition which his sister Marcia calls "The Haunted Symphony." Wilfred incurs the enmity of Paul, who loves Marcia also.

That same night Norman Brice, a student of mental science and a musician, is injured in his laboratory by a chemical explosion and on his way home he is overcome by temporary blindness. He is forced to appeal to a drunken passerby for assistance and the intoxicated man leads him to the wrong house, which proves to be Dr. Smiley's sanitarium. His key fits the door and he feels his way up the stairs to the second floor, thinking he is in his own home and intending to 'phone his physician, Dr. Barstow. At this instant Wilfred is murdered in a mysterious manner, and Marcia, coming upon his body, loses her reason and her memory. Brice, the blinded man, hears her screams and bursts into the room. He stumbles over the body of Wilfred and in groping about finds a photo on the table which he clutches in his hand as he rushes from the house in an agony of horror.

When Brice recovers his sight and reason several days later he finds himself in a hospital under the care of his friend, Dr. Barstow, and in the papers he reads of the murder of Wilfred Redmond and the confession of his sister, Marcia, who seems to have lost her reason and memory. Comparing the newspaper cut of Marcia with the photo in his possession Brice knows that he was in the room just after the murder was committed and he realizes that this Marcia Redmond was the girl whose screams he heard. He falls in love with the photo, and feeling that she is innocent of the crime he determines to solve the mystery and clear her name.

The coroner has adjudged Marcia insane and committed her to the care of her guardian in his sanitarium. Brice has Dr. Barstow commit him to the sanitarium as a patient suffering with melancholia. There he finds a copy of "The Haunted Symphony" and with the aid of the melody he recalls Marcia's memory and proves Dr. Smiley to be the real murderer.

THE MASQUE BALL (July 28).—The cast: Jerry (George Ovey); Count (George George); Marie (Claire Alexander); Mother (Janet Sully); Father (Louis FitzRoy); First Waiter (Ray Lincoln); Second Waiter (Robert Kenyon); Footman (Gordon MacGregor); Joe (Arthur Mund); Sergeant (Jefferson Osborne); Cop (Harry Jackson). Directed by Milton H. Fahrney.

Jerry's courtship of a little heiress is again interrupted by a French Count. Unable to gain his point because of the presence of the Count, Jerry decides to dispose of the intruder and he is successful with the aid of a brick. Jerry then escorts his lady love to her home, while the foreigner is arrested by two policemen who believe he is demented. Arriving at the girl's house Jerry is at once ousted by the father, and as he is attempting to escape the old man's wrath, he upsets a butler who is carrying a number of invitations to a masque ball to the mail box. The invitations are strewn all over the sidewalk and in picking them up for the butler Jerry places three of them in his pocket.

The night of the ball Jerry ventures near the house. He is watching the festivities from outside, when he is attracted by two burglars, who are attempting to gain an entrance to the place by jimmying a window. A second glance reveals the fact that the crooks are old friends of Jerry's. Jerry calls to them and they recognize him. He tells them that he has invitations to the ball and that it will be an easy way for them to gain an entrance to the place. He offers them his assistance if they will furnish him with a mask. They agree.

The trio go to the entrance of the house and Jerry presents the invitations and the butlers admit them. Announced as three distinguished guests, they attract considerable attention. Jerry soon discovers his sweetheart, and while he is dancing with her the Count learns who the diminutive one behind the mustache is. He rips Jerry's mask from his face and likewise the mustache and an uproar follows.

While Jerry and the Count are racing through the house, the crooks discover the safe and decide to blow it. Jerry runs to the balcony on the second floor and the Count follows him. The two struggle and Jerry throws the Count over the railing and down into a big fountain in the center of the ballroom. The police arrive, simultaneously with the exploding of the safe and as they give chase after the two crooks they come across Jerry. He throws one of them over the railing and into the fountain and when he rushes down stairs he is confronted by others. The crooks are captured and taken away, and as Jerry is about to be arrested the girl pleads for him. As the policeman considers and attempts a flirtation with the girl, Jerry pushes him into the fountain and makes his escape.

BEAUTY.

IN THE LAND OF THE TORTILLA (July 19): The cast: Emerson Howe (John Gough); Karl Kerner (John Sheehan); Veeha (Jerry); Caperanza (John Steppling); Francisca (Carol Halloway); Tortura (Dick Rosson).

Emerson Howe was consul to Mexico and he wasn't safe by any means. Suddenly his front door was opened and in rushed an American followed by a band of Mexicans. Howe quieted the turmoil and asked the newcomer his antecedents. The answer was a card which revealed the fact that the man was Karl Kerner, cameraman for the Associated Press Dispatch. The confab was interrupted by a message from Washington which informed Howe that Veeha was captured by Caperanza and was about to be executed by him. Photographic proofs were necessary. Karl offered to get them. Caperanza was angry because Veeha had beat him to the generalship of the Tortillian army. Caperanza had decreed that no one should see the execution unless personally invited. Karl Kerner tried to get in with the Consul's credentials, but when the Mexican general saw the funny little box with the crank on it he thought dire things and refused the camera entry.

Karl wandered on the outside of the fort and came upon Francisca, who was gazing at some cards she held in her hand. They exchanged greetings and Karl saw that the cards were pictures of all the famous movie actresses. Francisca was a movie fan. Karl told her that he would put her name in "bright lights" on Broadway, providing she would let him photograph Veeha's execution from her boudoir window. Francisca agreed.

To make an interesting story Francisca must be loved by some one—say, for instance, the Corporal in her daddy's corps. And Tortura must see Francisca with the Gringo, and he must immediately suspect something. But Karl impresses Francisca that if he does not get the picture there will be no Caperanza on Broadway. Francisca hides the camera, and Veeha stands by the wall at sundown.

Karl cranked off the execution and was about finished when he was discovered from the courtyard by Tortura. He made his way to the street. The whole Mexican army started chase. Karl mounted his mule and started for the desert. Tortura impressed Francisca with the proof that the American was going away without fulfilling his promise. Francisca grabbed a rifle and joined the army that was chasing Karl. Out into the desert went the fighters. Karl's mule was shot under him and using it as a shield he pumped his puny automatic in an endeavor to stop the oncoming host. But they were closing in on him.

A detachment of Uncle Sammy's cavalry with their supply truck stops for rations. The lookout through his glass sees Karl being cornered by the mob of Mexicans. Orders to the cavalry and they ride into action! Karl was reinforced and the fighting was on in earnest. But the Americans were far outnumbered and the Mexicans kept coming. Karl, not wise to the danger, thought it would be a great idea to "shoot" some of the battle stuff with his camera. He planted it and cranked with one hand while he shot Mexicans with the other. Then the peons got a glimpse of the camera. Terror overtook them and they retreated. And when the smoke of the battle blew away the soldiers mounted Karl upon their shoulders, gave him the "hip-hip-hurrar," and started back for little old U. S. A.—with the proofs of Veeha's demise.

It's not often that stories "happen" in a studio, but such is the case. The story was a terror for the actors who were to take part in it and when they heard that there was to be a lot of "thrill stuff" that would surely end in some one being hurt they resolved to avert it if possible. One of the characters strolled in with a peculiar purchase he had just made. The purchase consisted of a box of "Dreamo Pills," every color advertised to produce a different dream. Yellow was for the vampire stuff, and thinking that perhaps a vampire was not quite as dangerous as a thrill one of the actors dropped a yellow pill into each of the glasses of grape juice which the director and the author was sipping. And while Morpheus took a hand in it the bunch departed for the beach for a dip into the surf.

It was a funny dream that the director and his author had, all about a vampire who captured the director in the face of her lover. And naturally the spurned lover followed her to her apartments, where he saw her play for the passions of the poor director. The "Vamp's" servant stood watch while the Vamp and her quarry partook of sparkling beverage. But the servant didn't watch keenly, as was evidenced when the spurned lover took a shot at the glass the director was holding and knocked it out of his hand. Then there was turmoil, as the spurned one and the new one struggled in the room. The servant drew a curved knife and proceeded to puncture the spurned lover who was causing the most noise. But the director could not see a defenceless life taken and came to the rescue of the spurned one. Then the villain had a revulsion of feeling and wept on the shoulder of the man who had saved his life. He was forgiving the vampire to the director for life, but the director's experience was sufficient, so he joined the vampire's hands with those of the man she had spurned and left the scene as a good hero should.

Then the bunch returned from their dip in the surf and found the director and author still sleeping. They shook them into the light and they awakened with a start. The question of a story was again broached and the director and his author found that they had dreamed fairly good ones. They swapped dreams and the writer started banging his typewriter, while the director went out to cast his people and get the story under way.

MUTUAL SPECIAL FEATURE.

THE SECRET OF THE SUBMARINE—(No. 10—Two Parts—July 24).—The cast: Cleo Burke (Juanita Hansen); Lieut. Jarvis Hope, U. S. N. (Thomas Chatterton); Olga Ivanoff (Hylda Hollis); Gerald Morton (Lamar Johnstone); Hook Barnacle (George Clancy); Satusma (William Tedmarsh); Mahlin (George Webb).

Hook Barnacle arrives on the scene and prevents Mahlin from chopping cable on which Hope was crossing the chasm. Mahlin is suddenly hurled over the cliff by Hook. Hope reaches Cleo and an affectionate reunion takes place.

Suddenly an aeroplane appears. Morton and Olga are the occupants. Hope and Cleo attempt an escape in the cable basket, but Morton, not to be foiled, opens fire at the couple. However, Hope returns fire by expert marksmanship, send a shot through the gasoline tank of the aeroplane and Morton and Olga are surrounded by fire. Morton attempts to land, but looking down sees the posse of motorcycle policemen pursuing him for the theft of the aeroplane. Suddenly the aircraft swerves and hits straight for the ground.

Mahlin, luckily, escapes injury by his fall and later joins Satsuma in time to see the aeroplane disappear behind a jutting rock. The aeroplane explodes, but Aviator Smith arrives on the scene quickly and is fired upon by Morton, who is uninjured, as is Olga. Smith returns the fire, but finally gets wounded and tumbles off from the motorcycle. The police dash forward, but Morton quickly climbs on the machine, and with Olga makes a race for the town.

Hope and Cleo join Hook and are examining the books, when they are suddenly attacked by Mahlin and Satsuma. Hope and Hook are injured, while Cleo flees for the hills, with the spies in pursuit. Hope and Hook recover and search the mountains in all directions for Cleo. Hope finally discovers Cleo, apparently exhausted. Hope also sees Satsuma about to kill Cleo. He shouts a warning and starts to cross a small stream to aid her. Half way across he is caught in quicksand and is unable to extricate himself. Cleo sees Hope struggling.

Cleo, looking over the cliff, spies a long grapevine and climbing down the tough vine she reaches the end and thrusts her foot towards Hope, who instantly grasps her ankle and draws himself up. Mahlin appears at the top of the cliff, having witnessed Satsuma's discomfiture, and suddenly cuts the vine—the thin thread on which hung the lives of Hope and Cleo.

MUSTANG.

THE DYSPEPTIC—(Two Parts—July 21).—The cast: Tom (Ashton Dearholt); Agnes (Nita Davis); James Connell (George Gebhart); Pedro (Edward Moraga); Maria (Maria Van Tassell). Directed by William Bertram.

Tom is told by Connell, an elderly millionaire, that he will have to quit hanging around Agnes until he proves that he is worthy of her. Connell is a self-made made, and he insists that Tom prove that he is a capable business man. He tells him that if he is really clever to get some of his money from him.

A trick of fate brings Tom to the West, and there he learns that Connell, who suffers severely from chronic dyspepsia, is on his way West in his private car. A little later, when the Pacific Limited stops at a watering tank in the mountains, Tom, wearing a mask, enters Connell's private car and forces Connell and Agnes to accompany him into the mountains.

He takes them to a locality where there is but one way of escape, and this is guarded by a Mexican. Connell is allowed his freedom and makes desperate endeavors to climb the rugged cliffs, but always in vain. Agnes chances to learn that the masked kidnapper is Tom, and when he tells her his scheme she joins in with him.

A month has passed, and constant climbing, wholesome food and hard work had worked wonders with Connell, and he finds himself thoroughly cured. Tom now discloses his identity to him and recalls to him a statement that Connell had made to the effect that he would give any one a million dollars who would cure him of his dyspepsia. Connell, cured and happy, makes good the promise, and finding that Tom has been clever enough to get some of his money, consents to his engagement to Agnes.

AMERICAN.

THE DANCER—(Two Parts—July 17).—The cast: Capella (Vivian Rich); John Madden (King Clark); His Father (George Periolat); His Mother (Louise Lester); Daisy Brown (Margaret Nichols). Directed by Carl M. Le Viness.

Johnny Madden, the ambitious son of a prosperous farmer, tires of the dullness of country life, and much against his mother's wishes, goes to the city to seek his fortune. He leaves behind him a little, vain, foolish country girl, Daisy Brown, who loves him with all her shallow heart, and whom his mother expected him to marry.

In the city he meets and loves Capella, a popular dancer. At first he sees her only in her spangles and stage finery, and worships her at a distance, but as he gets acquainted with her and sees her in ordinary street garments he loses his awe of her, proposes, is accepted, and they are married. They are ideally happy; but Johnny's mother and Daisy Brown are not satisfied. They beg the wife to give up Johnny and let him return to his home.

Yielding at last to their importunities Capella leads Johnny to believe she has voluntarily deserted him, and advises him to go back to his mother, which he does. Months pass and at last, noting his continued despondency, the mother reveals the plot. They find Capella in a hospital with a little baby, the image of Johnny, and in their new joys the past is forgotten.

MUTUAL STAR PRODUCTION.

DOORSTEPS (Turner—Five parts—July 20).—George Newlands, a young playwright in reduced circumstances, is forced to take lodgings with Mrs. Skipps, mistress of a badly kept furnished-room house. Doorsteps is the maid of all work and is so unaccustomed to kindness that she appreciates every word and thought of the newcomer, who is tolerant with her. She is an interesting character and her eccentric amusing personality creeps into George's play, which he is writing. He submits his play to a theatrical agency, and shortly after receives a check for five hundred dollars. Boyishly enthusiastic at the acceptance of his work, George leaves the shabby lodgings, with but a hasty good-bye to Doorsteps.

Doorsteps is discharged that same day for a minor offense, and she is soon reduced to selling laces for a living. Tozer, a slum thief, is attracted to the girl and offers to marry her if she will help him in his stealing. Doorsteps, loyal to the memory of George, refuses. George, realizing what an inspiration the little servant was to him, tries to seek her out, but to no avail. Doorsteps tries her luck as an entertainer at the gallery entrance to a theater one evening. A theatrical manager sees her and offers her a position in a new revue that he is rehearsing. She scores a success in the revue and the following season is cast for the role of "Pierrot," sharing honors with the leading woman. The star is jealous of Doorsteps, and after an open break between the two women, Doorsteps is asked to go in order that the manager may keep the good will of the star.

Despondent, she goes back to selling laces, and again Tozer sees her and annoys her. She turns him over to the police. About this time Doorsteps again sees George and overhears a conversation between him and the producer of his new play, Edmund Wade. They are having trouble selecting a girl for the role of the picketpocket and a plan forms in Doorsteps' mind. She goes to the home of Wade and by a clever ruse obtains admission. She steals Wade's watch and then asks him if she may have the part of the pickpocket, as she believes she can qualify, pulling out the watch. Believing she is a thief, Wade turns her over to the police. George enters and explains that she is a friend of his and frees her. Doorsteps is cast for the leading role in the new play and scores another triumph.

Tozer, now out of prison, reads about the opening performance in the newspaper and plans revenge. He goes to the theater and comes upon the stage, revolver in hand, to attack Doorsteps, who was responsible for his imprisonment. The audience consider the struggle a realistic scene and applaud. But the author, George, knows differently and springs from his box to save the girl. He is wounded himself. During his illness he calls for Doorsteps and she comes to him after every performance to comfort and care for him. Finally Wade sends her to America to appear in a new production and she is forced to leave George before he has recovered from his delirium. She leaves a note, however, which he treasures. Two years later Doorsteps returns to England to find George in Mrs. Skipps' lodging house, poverty stricken and discouraged. Wade promises to put on George's latest play if Doorsteps will star in it, which means prosperity and happiness for the reunited lovers.

THE MOST REMARKABLE WAR PICTURE YET OFFERED TO THE PUBLIC

Four Reels of Absorbing Realism

Photographed by the French Government and Presented to the American Ambulance Hospital in Paris in Appreciation of the Heroic Service Rendered to the French Armies in the Field.

"OUR AMERICAN BOYS IN

The films are unique among the many pictorial descriptions of the war that have come to this country.
—Morning Telegraph.

The pictures are doubly interesting because they show more clearly than has previously been done America's contribution to the great war, in addition to some stirring scenes of the conflict itself.—N. Y. Times.

For the first time the public will have an opportunity to witness the stirring heroism which is being displayed by Americans in the European War. Now it will get a chance to see for itself just exactly what this country is doing to relieve the suffering in the great conflict abroad—how foreign relief work is carried on.

This is a picture of tense action—taken sometimes within twenty yards of the German trenches—a picture of stirring realism and brave deeds. You can almost hear the roar of the guns and the explosion of shells as they burst on all sides.

Stirring Portrayals of American Bravery Abroad

"THE EUROPEAN WAR"

Stirring chronicles of the brave deeds of the American ambulance drivers who risk death.—Evening Sun.

Paris, June 18th, 1916.

Triangle Film Corporation,
1457 Broadway, New York City.

Gentlemen:—

On behalf of the American Ambulance Hospital I desire to thank you for your offer to distribute for exhibition the motion pictures taken by the French Government and dealing with the Field Service of this Hospital at the Front, at actual cost to you.

We regard this generous offer as fortuitous at this time when it is so necessary to reach the greatest possible number of motion picture theatres and patrons with the least expenditure of time, in order that the people may be made acquainted with the heroic work our American boys are doing in aiding the wounded soldiers.

We are arranging for the formation of local committees of influential men and women who will work with the local theatres to stimulate interest in the pictures and increase patronage where they may be shown. I believe by this means we will be able to largely increase the attendance, by attracting people who may not heretofore have attended motion picture theatres.

Again assuring you of our appreciation of your efforts in our behalf, I am,

Very sincerely,

(Signed) ROBERT BACON, President,
American Ambulance Hospital in Paris.

It is no exaggeration to say that this is one of the greatest opportunities exhibitors have yet been offered to increase their box office returns. You cannot afford to overlook this chance to identify your theatre with a feature that will unfailingly attract the best patronage—with a feature that the best people in your town are trying to make a success. Write, or better yet wire your nearest Triangle Branch Office for information regarding its presentation.

WHO'S GUILTY? NO. 11, "The Lost Paradise" (Arrow Film Corp.—Two Parts—July 17).—Janet Gordon marries a man much older than herself to save her father from financial ruin. She loves Tom Mercer. Her life with her husband finally becomes unendurable, and she follows Tom to a distant town where she is granted a divorce, and marries the man she loves. There are years of happiness, and husband number one turns up and tells her that her divorce wasn't legal. This furnishes the ground-work for a drama that builds up remarkably in two reels.

GRIP OF EVIL, NO. 1, "Fate" (Balboa—Two Parts—July 17).—This episode tells of an English nobleman banished from home because of his attachment to a girl "not of his class." He marries the girl, comes to America with her, and a child, John Burton, subsequently the hero of each chapter of this serial, is born to them.

John grows up, a poor man, working in the steel mills, his only heritage that of "good blood" and its consequent effect on his mental attitude, which, instead of being inert as that of his fellows, is keen and questioning. He is in a way a crude philosopher, seeking answers rather than giving them.

He is a leader among his fellows, and persuades them to strike for more money. Mary Temple, his employer's daughter, has been promised a diamond necklace by her father, who now tells her that because of labor conditions, she will have to forgo her present.

And Mary thinks of the possible effect of her charm of John, with whom she has a slight acquaintance. She goes to him, and "in the name of suffering humanity," persuades him to send the strikers back to work. John later discovers her selfish motive, is repudiated by his fellow-workers, and is about to end it all when he finds he is heir to a title and $10,000,000 and decides to spend his life in an attempt to solve the question "Is Humanity in the Grip of Evil?"

UNFRIENDLY FRUIT (Mittenthal Film Co.—July 17).—Heinie and Louie rescue a fair dame who tells them her life's history. She is hooked up with a John who thinks women an inferior sex, and she resents it. In fact, she resents it so much that she tells our heroes that she'll give them $5,000 to do away with him, to which the gallant Heinie, always ready to help a lady in distress (for a consideration) answers: "Consider yourself a widow!" The boys write a decoy note to the caveman and get him to their rooms, where they truss him up. They then go and tell friend wife that they come to officially announce that they will kill her husband at midnight, as per specifications. Then they go back, and the surprise that awaits them—well, better see the picture.

HOME SWEET HOME (Pathe—July 17).—This Goldberg cartoon begins with friend wife's admonition to her meal-ticket, thus: "Herman, you stay at home and mind Sylvester. I must attend a suffragette meeting in Rough-house Hall." Then she leaves. Herman gets a hurry call from his pasteboard pals and answers, "All right, Joe, save a stack of chips for me—I'll be right over"; and adds to himself, "I might win enough to buy the little boob something nice like a bottle of medicine."

At the suffrage meeting friend wife argues that "the only thing we will allow the men to keep for themselves is the right to shave."

Herman, a loser at the greatest indoor sport, is about to end it all and delivers himself thus, a la Goldberg: "Little Sylvester can keep from starving by selling the flowers the members of the lodge place on my grave."

At home, little Sylvester, who has been deposited in the wastepaper basket, wherein he finds a bottle of hair tonic. Thus Goldberg: "The hair tonic, with the help of old age, causes Sylvester to look like a dish of spinach." Sylvester's hair grows so rapidly that it becomes cramped for space in the room and trails out of the window, piling itself up in the form of a haystack, and a passing farmer with an eye to business sticks his pitchfork into it and, unwittingly, takes up hair, Sylvester, and everything else attached.

THE CATERPILLAR (Pathe—On the same reel as foregoing).—This subject shows the caterpillar, whose insatiable hunger is responsible for the destruction of so many gardens.

THE SHADOW OF HER PAST (Gold Rooster Play—Five Parts—July 17).—Elayne Chalmers goes to Italy to finish her musical education, and there meets and falls in love with Peter Marsant, an artist. The girl's head is turned by the reception she gets from Italian nobility, and she casts Peter lightly aside to carry on a flirtation with a duke. The affair gets serious, and Elayne asks the duke to marry her, and he, laughing, says that wasn't at all what he meant.

Peter and the duke fight a duel in which Peter is seriously wounded. Elayne, realizing her love for him, goes to the room where he lies unconscious, and nurses him back to health. Thus far the story runs along conventional lines; but it ends in a realistic manner; for these twain do not, as usual, "marry and live happily ever after," but are sundered by a sentiment forcibly and artistically depicted.

WHO'S GUILTY? NO. 12, "Weighed in the Balance" (Arrow—Two Parts—July 24).—A rich man's son grows up in idleness and luxury, knowing no responsibility. His father suddenly loses all his wealth, dies, and the son has his mother and sister to support. He gets a job in the mills his father owned, and falls in love with the foreman's daughter, who seems to return his affection. But the girl's head is light, and she drops the boy for the superintendent of the mills, known to be a high-flyer. The boy objects to this, and because of his objection is fired. But he has the sympathy of his fellow-workers, who go out on strike in protest, and furnish the action for a drama the end of which is startling.

THE GRIP OF EVIL, NO. 2, "The Underworld" (Balboa—Two Parts—July 24).—"The Underworld" tells of "Gentleman Joe," an ex-convict who has tried to regenerate, but who has met nothing but cruelty at the hands of his fellow-creatures. Joe tries to burglarize the home of John Burton, now a titled millionaire, but is caught. Burton hears his story, sympathizes with him and offers him, in exchange for some tips on the "correct society thing," a position as secretary. Burton takes dancing lessons at Professor Morietti's academy, where Gertrude Brooks, Joe's former sweetheart, is an instructress.

Joe is recognized by an old pal who "gets something on him," and forces Joe to assist him in looting Burton's safe. Joe accidentally kills the crook, and confesses all to Burton, who shields him from the police. But Joe has betrayed his master's confidence, and Burton sends him away, still debating in his mind the urgent question of his life: "Is Humanity in the Grip of Evil?"

LUKE—CRYSTAL GAZER (Rolin—July 24).—Four "chicken" fanciers, looking over the metropolitan farm, come upon a dame who would have looked better had they been cross-eyed, and they elect poor Snub to "feed" her while they go their merry ways. Luke stumbles into an occult shop, where he gets a job. The chief spiritualist is the mother of the nicest girl Luke has ever seen, and Luke decides to stick around.

The four "chicken" fanciers float in and the old lady "goes into the silences" while the daughter, behind a screen, plays the departed spirit for any one who has the price. She gets Luke to substitute for her while she goes outside, and one of the boys, who has seen her behind the curtain, comes up and grabs a hand—Luke's hand. Of course there is a riot that ends with the crystal ball doing duty for shrapnel.

PAPER PARASOLS (Java—Pathe—July 24).—This film shows the manufacture of the hundreds of thousands of parasols, the ornamental, Oriental effect of which give the proper atmosphere to so many of our lawn parties and costume affairs.

The natives of Java, where these parasols are made, are very adept at this work, as is shown on the screen. The pieces of stout bamboo are cut to a uniform length with one stroke of the heavy, sharp-bladed knife used. Then the frames are shown being made by turning or machining a small block of bamboo on a crude lathe to form the center piece. Sticks of bamboo are then split into thin strips to form the ribs. The covering of the umbrella is more difficult than it appears to be. Four sheets of triangiar-shaped paper are pasted onto the frame. Great care must be taken to see that the wet sheets do not tear and that they are evenly placed together. The films show the making of a paper parasol from the use of the crude materials to the assembling of finished product.

ORNATE PAGODAS (Picturesque China—On the same reel as foregoing)—China is a land of shrines, temples and pagodas, almost endless in number and variety, as is shown in this picture. The following subtitles will give an idea of the pictures which they accompany: "Bad roads predominate, most of the traveling being done in palanquins. The carriers relieve each other at various stages of the journey and the passenger proceeds without any perceptible delay." "Passing under fantastically-shaped gateways, up rough-hewn stairways, and on through tropically-verdured paths, their tireless strides soon bring the journey to its end."

"Embowered in blossoming trees and covered with clustering vines, the queer-shaped buildings form beauty spots that delight the eye," etc., etc.

THE MYSTERY OF THE LEAPING FISH (Keystone—June 11).—The cast: Coke Anneyday (Douglas Fairbanks); the Little Fish Blower (Bessie Love); Gent Rolling in Wealth (A. D. Sears); His Female Accomplice (Alma Reubens); the two Jap Accomplices (Charlie Stevens and George Hall).

I. M. Keene, the chief of police, receives a letter informing him of a mysterious gentleman about the neighborhood who is rolling in wealth. Unable to solve the mystery, he sends for the celebrated detective, Coke Anneyday, and he agrees to undertake the job.

In locating the gentleman of wealth, Coke unearths a great opium plot. Two Japs ride leaping fish, which are swimming machines, out to a bell-buoy, where they get opium which has been left there by a smuggler's ship. The plot thickens rapidly. The villains discover they are being watched, and try to make their getaway, observed by the little girl whose duty it is to inflate the fish. Coke, meanwhile, in eating some of the opium acquires an opium jag.

He recovers, however, and takes up the trail with thrilling results in which he has a terrible duel in the dark with the gentleman of wealth, overcomes his enemies with a mysterious drug, and claims the little fish-blower for his own.

LOVE'S GETAWAY (Keystone—June 11).—The cast: Lulu Hardbrow (Fay Tincher); Harry Hurry (Harry Fisher); Deacon Wetherson (Max Davidson); Martha (Kate Toncray); William Hardbrow (Fred Warren).

Harry and Lulu are much in love with each other, but Lulu's father disapproves, and to break off the attachment, sends her to a boarding-school. Arriving at the school, she encourages the attention of the principal as a means of getting more freedom to meet Harry, who is hanging about the grounds, and so arouses the jealousy of Martha, the old lady assistant who loves the principal. A course of lively incidents take place in which the principal tries to drive Harry away, and Martha greatly annoys Lulu. Toward the end, Harry smuggles a set of his own clothes into the dormitory, and in them Lulu manages to make her escape.

THE CAPTIVE GOD (Ince—Five Parts—July 23).—The cast: Chiapa (William S. Hart); Lolomi (Enid Markey); Mexitli (P. D. Tabler); Tecolote (Dorothy Dalton); Montezuma (Robert McKim); Maya (Dorcas Matthews); Cacama (Herbert Farjean); Tuyos (Robert Kortman).

The picture tells the story of a little Spanish boy who is cast upon the shore of the east coast of Mexico early in the sixteenth century, when Mexico was dominated by the Aztec Indians. Never having seen a white person before, the local natives, a tribe called Tehuans, bring him up as a god and call him Chiapa.

When he reaches manhood, Chiapa is given authority over his entire tribe. He falls in love with the priestess, Tecolote, and she yields to his advances although she is quite unworthy of him, and encourages other suitors.

Then the Aztecs hear that under the white god the Tehuans are very prosperous, and start forth to conquer them. The Aztec army is under command of Mexitli, the chief general of Montezuma, the Emperor; and having conquered the Tehuans, he carried off Tecolote as his personal slave.

Chiapa follows as a spy. In the garden of Montezuma, he is wounded by a guard; but Lolomi, the beautiful daughter of the Emperor, saves him. They fall in love. Meanwhile Mexitli has tired of Tecolote, and now seeks the hand of the Princess Lolomi, who would rather die than have him. As the Emperor gives Mexitli his consent, he tries to get the princess by force, and in doing so discovers Chiapa.

Chiapa is sentenced to die at the end of the year on the sacrificial stone. But Lolomi, finding her pleas to her father of no avail, sends word to the Tehuans that their god is captive. An avenging army sweeps down, and there is brought about a sequence of thrilling scenes with a smashing finish.

STRANDED (Fine Arts—Five Parts—July 23).—The cast: H. Ulysses Watts (De Wolf Hopper); Stoner, the manager (Carl Stockdale); the hotel proprietor (Frank Bennett) his mother (Loyola O'Connor); the girl (Bessie Love).

H. Ulysses Watts is an old actor whose particular style of work has so far gone out of fashion that managers no longer have much use for him. At last Watts falls in the company of the Parisian Belles Variety Company, where he gives impersonations. His fellow-players have no particular sympathy with him, save one young girl, an acrobat, and a great friendship springs up between them.

The manager of the company, Stoner, has taken a fancy to the girl and has decided to take the night's receipts at a certain town and flee, taking the girl with him. She refuses to go. During the performance that night she is so nervous that she falls from her trapeze and is injured. So Stoner flees alone, leaving the company stranded.

Old Watts and the girl face the world together. At a nearby town they are giving a Shakespearian revival, and Watts takes her there in hope of getting work. He introduces her as his daughter. He finds plenty to do; and soon is living prosperously, while the little girl gets her first taste of a life of refinement. The young man who runs the local hotel falls in love with her and she with him. But just as things are running smoothly, Stoner turns up.

He tries to blackmail Watts, telling him that unless he gives him money he will reveal the fact that Watts is not the girl's father, and also show up the girl to the staid townsfolk as a former acrobat who wore tights. The wedding guests are waiting. As Ulysses turns to enter the church, Stoner shoots him. Ulysses goes in and reassures the guests—and then comes a thrilling finish.

"Big Bill" (Charles Prince); Seth Moore (Julius D. Cowles); "Glad" Mason (Marguerite Skirvin). Written by Isola Forrester. Produced by Charles Horan.

The miners at Paradise Gulch are bored. In a session at the "Three Cheers" saloon, owned by Seth Moore, they decide that the trouble with their existence is the fact that there are no women in the place. The verdict is that one of them must marry, and they choose "Happy Jack" Lewis, because he is not present. They go to "Happy Jack" Lewis, make him write out an advertisement for a wife, and sent it to neighboring towns. They stipulate that she must be blonde and pretty. At Gold City, Glad Mason, who answers every requirement, is working in the office of Willet and Condon, mining promoters. Since her father's death she has been obliged to shift for herself. Willet's attentions have become so obnoxious that she is at her wits' end to know what to do, when Lewis' advertisement is pointed out to her. In desperation she answers it, enclosing a photograph.

Lewis lines the boys up against the bar and holds them up. Since they have got him into the trouble of getting married, he makes them furnish his shack. He gives a whoop of joy when he sees Glad's photograph among all the ugly ones he receives in answer to his advertisement, but Ben, the bartender, discourages him by saying that probably some old hag sent the picture. "Happy Jack" leaves in haste, first making over his house and his mine to her in recompense for her disappointment. He goes to the junction as Glad is changing trains for Paradise Gulch, and sees for himself what a beauty she is. But one of the boys with whom he has been fighting sees her, too, and without a word the miner gives "Happy Jack" a knock-out blow, and then puts him on the train, bound in the opposite direction. Each of the boys tries to win Glad. They tell her that Lewis is a quitter.

Jumping off at a small station, Lewis is arrested as a suspicious character and thrown into jail. His wire to the boys for identification results in the answer that he is a cardsharp and crook. He escapes, and meets Willet, who offers to buy his mine. He accepts, taking the money, forgetting that he has made over the property to Glad, but robbers soon relieve him of his cash and he reaches Paradise Gulch penniless.

Willet goes to take charge of the property, which he is anxious to claim because "Sid," the assayer, has told him it is of immense value. He finds Glad in possession and has "Happy Jack" arrested for obtaining money under false pretenses. Glad turns over her claim to Willet and Condon on the condition that they will free Lewis, although he implores her not to do so. But "Sid," the assayer, has made a discovery. He whispers something to Glad, and the last cloud is dispelled. He has made a mistake. The sample ore he has thought Lewis' belonged to Glad's father, who had brought it in to be assayed the day before he died. Glad and "Happy Jack" have lost control of the worthless mine, but they begin life together as owners of the magnificent Mason property.

THE RIVER OF ROMANCE (Yorke Film Corp.—Five parts—July 17).—The cast: William Pissam Kellogg, alias "Sam" (Harold Lockwood); Reginald Williams (Lester Cuneo); Henry Davidson (Bert Busby); Stephen Witherbee (Lee Walker); Mrs. Stephen Witherbee (Mrs. Mathilde Brundage); Polly Witherbee (Lillian Halpern); Tom Witherbee (Phil Masi); Butler (Dan Hanlon); Rosalind Chalmers (May Allison). Written and directed by Henry Otto from the book by E. J. Rath.

Rosalind Chalmers, a New York society girl, goes on an unannounced visit to her friends, the Witherbees, at the Thousand Islands, primarily for the purpose of escaping the unwelcome attention of Reginald Williams. She misses the last boat to their island, and is taken over in the decrepit motorboat of an interesting young man known as Sam. Sam is really William Kellogg, heir to the Davidson millions. During the absence of his uncle, Henry Davidson, Kellogg has broken a handsome vase, and decides to earn the money himself to pay for it. So as One-Cylinder Sam he begins to carry passengers between the islands.

On the way to the Witherbee island Kellogg's motor goes dead. Rosalind's hobby is motors, and she puts the engine in working order in no time. When they reach the island the family has retired for the night. Rosalind tries to climb in a window, but sets off a burglar alarm, and runs to escape the people who come to investigate. Startled by shots, she takes a small boat, and goes out into the river. She hears more shots, this time for Davidson Island. From angry voices she learns that the supposed burglars are there, too. Two motor boats set out. Soon the engine of one goes dead, and Rosalind goes to help. Kellogg, whom she knows as Sam, and whom she things is a burglar, is in the boat. But in spite of this she starts his engine for him, on account of the strange attraction he has for her, and aids his escape from the pursuing boat.

Rosalind and Kellogg thereafter see a great deal of each other in the simple life of the islands. At a hotel dance he appears in his evening clothes, and after getting Rosalind to dance with him, induces her to go for a short walk in the moonlight. He tells her he is madly in love with her, and that he is going to marry her, with her consent or without it. She still thinks he is a burglar, and is frightened. He picks her up and carries her to his boat, but in mid-stream the boat strikes a submerged rock and sinks. Kellogg swims ashore with Rosalind to his uncle's island. He offers to break into the house and get some dry clothes for her and though still thinking he is a burglar she consents. Kellogg arrays himself in fresh clothes, and is greeted joyfully by his uncle. Kellogg hands him a purse containing the money for the vase, earned by his efforts as "One-Cylinder Sam," and introduces him to Rosalind, who is relieved to know that the man she is going to marry is not a burglar.

THE CHILD OF DESTINY (Columbia Pictures Corp.—Five Parts—July 24).—The cast: Alita (Irene Fenwick); Constance (Mme. Gana Walska); Bob Stange (Robert Elliott); Judge Gates (Roy Applegate); "Weird Willie" (Roy Clair); Professor Jaeger (William Yearance); Oswald Jaeger, his son (Martin J. Faust); Calvin Baker (William Davidson); Putnam (R. A. Bresee); Mrs. Putnam (Elizabeth Le Roy). Directed by William Nigh.

Alita, a child who has been left in the care of Mr. and Mrs. Putnam in a desolate swamp country, reaches the age when she is to be prepared for the world, and the Putnams send word to Judge Gates, her guardian, to come for her. Her life has been spent in the swamps with a half-witted boy, "Weird Willie," and many animals and birds of that country, as her only playmates.

Judge Gates receives the letter at his bachelor apartment, which he shares with a younger friend and companion, Bob Stange. Through the accidental dropping of a marriage license the Judge discovers that Bob is about to become a benedict—despite the fact that they had a compact never to marry, on the theory that all women are deceitful. The Judge recounts a story about one ill-fated marriage that ended in the divorce courts, in which the real tragedy was the little baby which no one seemed to want. Bob turns a deaf ear to this and leaves in anger.

Constance, the one woman Bob has idealized, is older than he. She plays upon his sympathies by telling of her hard work as a dressmaker, when, in reality, she is leading a dual life, and only wants Bob for his money. She is carrying on a liaison with a Calvin Baker, a man about town, and he is calling on her when Bob arrives and tells her a minister is on the way to marry them. Baker hides behind the screen and listens. Bob tells Constance that he has invited his best friend, Judge Gates, to the ceremony. When Constance hears this name she is startled and insists on the ceremony being hurried.

The marriage is performed as the Judge arrives. He recognizes Constance as the one who has ruined his own and his best friend's life. He denounces her, and Bob realizes her perfidy when he finds Baker hidden in the room. Bob and the Judge leave, and go away for a fishing trip, hoping to forget. In the country Bob comes upon Alita, and through a strange chain of circumstances, she is slightly wounded by a shot which her constant protector, "Weird Willie," intended for Bob. Alita falls in love with Bob, for he is the first man she has come in contact with. The Judge decides to take Alita away. Judge Gates puts Alita in charge of a professor to educate her, but she proves, through her hoydenish ways, a source of annoyance to the teacher. Bob receives a letter from his sister, telling him she has found the right girl for him at a summer hotel, where she is stopping. The Judge buys an extensive wardrobe for Alita, and by chance, they go to the same hotel for which Bob is bound.

Bob is startled when his sister leads him into the presence of Constance. Alita meets Constance and the girl is attracted to her. The Judge finds them together and afterwards upbraids Constance. Alita and Bob meet again. Bob goes to Constance, begs her to release him, and to grant him a divorce. The Judge sees Bob enter her room and follows. Alita waits until they leave. She goes to Constance and asks her if she knew Bob before. Constance tells her the truth.

Alita leaves all, and goes back to the swamp country. She cannot face the Putnams, so she runs into the fields instead, where she wishes to die. After Alita leaves Judge Gates tells Constance that Alita is her child. Constance's better nature is aroused and she goes in search of her daughter. Bob and the Judge follow. Constance agrees with the Judge that it is best not to tell Alita the truth, and when Bob and "Weird Willie" find Alita in the swamps, Constance wanders away to her death that Bob may be free to marry the child she has wronged.

THE SILENT BATTLE—(Five Parts—July 24).—The cast: Tom Gallatin (J. Warren Kerrigan); Jane Loring (Lois Wilson); Nina Jaffray (Maud George); Coleman Van Duyn (Harry Carter); John Kenyon (Ray Hanford); James Loring (J. F. Connolly). Scenario written by F. McGrew Willis. Directed by Jack Conway.

Tom Gallatin, a brilliant young lawyer, who has inherited a craving for drink, is on the verge of ruining his career by overindulgence. He goes to the Canadian woods to recuperate. The Lorings, wealthy Westerners, have a camp in the vicinity, and one day Gallatin rescues Jane Loring from the clutches of one of the Loring guests, Coleman Van Duyn, who has taken advantage of Jane's defenseless position while she is alone with Van Duyn on a ramble through the woods.

Having driven Van Duyn from his prey, Gallatin starts to escort the girl to the Loring camp, but the pair lose their way. During a heavy storm Gallatin becomes rain soaked and gets a chill. Jane gives Gallatin a draught from her emergency flask of whiskey. Tasting liquor for the first time in months, the fumes go to Gallatin's brain, unsettle his judgment and he attacks the girl. She is rescued by a searching party in the nick of time.

Gallatin begins again "the silent battle" against his insidious enemy. The Lorings go to New York and enter the same social circle in which Gallatin has moved. Nina Jaffray is a society leader who has long schemed to make herself the wife of Gallatin. Coleman Van Duyn has brought to Nina some confusing and mysterious hints of Gallatin having met a young lady at his camp in the woods and there entertained her. Nina's suspicions center upon the Loring girl, and to make certain Nina plans that Gallatin and Jane shall meet at a reception.

Nina takes this occasion to show Jane that Tom's affections have been previously claimed by Nina, and to further impress the Loring girl that she cannot hope for Gallatin's love Nina goes further with her demonstrations—even to the humiliating end of compromising herself with Tom in a situation that Nina plans and in which Tom innocently participates.

All this time Van Duyn has been retrieving his own reputation with Jane and Tom has been trying to establish himself in the Loring girl's favor. Van Duyn has the "inside track" and Nina connives with him that he may hold it, while as a matter of fact Jane Loring is in love with Tom.

When the schemers have finally accomplished their purpose, Nina relents and explains her own share in the plot to turn the Loring girl relentlessly against Gallatin. With Nina's confession the way is cleared to an ultimate reconciliation between Jane and Gallatin.

THE DARING OF DIANA—(Vitagraph—Five Parts—July 24).—The cast: Diana Pearson (Anita Stewart); Jason Briscoe (Charles Wellesley); John Briscoe (Francis Morgan); Stange (Anders Randolf); Fanchette (Julia Swayne Gordon); Teague (Doc Donohue); Jimmy Towne (Donald MacBride); Forga (Lou Johnson). Written by Charles Gaskill. Produced by S. Rankin Drew.

Twenty-five years before the story opens, Jason Brisco, owner of the Daily Argus, became embittered by the death of his wife, whose life was snubbed out as her child was born. In his anguish he seeks consolation in travel. After all these years Briscoe's son, John, is editor of the Argus and has won a reputation for absolute honesty. He receives a telegram from Paris telling him to prepare to receive his father, who is coming on the next boat. The days drag for John, who is impatient to get a glimpse of the father he has never seen, but when he arrives John is disappointed. The man does not measure up to the strong, honest character with which John invested his father; his face is cunning, his eyes shifty.

Just before the arrival of his father John had been honored by a visit from the leaders of a certain political faction who came to buy the support of the Argus, but who went away with sad faces. Hearing of the return of the elder Briscoe, they return once more, determined to buy either the support of the Argus or the paper itself. In Jason Briscoe they find a man to their liking, for, although he will not sell his support, he is eager to bargain for the sale of the paper. Despite John's protests arrangements are made, and the signature of Jason Briscoe to the documents is all that is now required. In fond anticipation of the large purchase price, Briscoe is about to affix his signature to the bill of sale, when the door is thrown open unceremoniously and Diana Pearson, star reporter of the Argus, enters and commands the attention of all those present.

Recognizing her and terrified at her appearance at this inopportune moment, Briscoe jumps from his chair and tries to escape, but runs right into the arms of a waiting policeman, who brings him back and forces him to listen to Diana's tale. After the arrival of Jason Briscoe from Paris Diana had seen a woman following his automobile, and thought it worth her while to investigate the cause. On reaching Briscoe's house she heard a loud report, and entering found the woman on the floor, shot. Diana attempted to leave the house to summon aid, but was detained and thrown into a cellar with the other woman by "Briscoe" and his valet. Here, when she regained consciousness, the woman told Diana of how the man who is posing as Briscoe had trapped the real Briscoe in Paris and left him in the care of an Apache on the outskirts of the city. His real name, she said, is Stange, and he is one whom she has ample reason to hate, Diana was horrified by the story, but she realized her helplessness; she was unable to prevent the sale of the paper. Then she thought of a plan, and made Stange her innocent accomplice. Unknowingly he carried word of her plight to the Argus office with him, and one of the reporters started out immediately with a number of policemen to her rescue. After her release Diana rushed straight to the office where she was fortunate in arriving in time to prevent the illegal sale.

Seeing that all is known, Stange makes a frantic attempt to escape from his captors, but is shot to death in the struggle. Two weeks later a cable to the Prefect of Police in Paris has secured the release of Briscoe from the Apache's den, and in the office of the Argus he is introduced to his future daughter-in-law, Diana Pearson, reporter.

MOVIE MONEY (Vitagraph—July 24).—Written by Graham Baker. Directed by Charles Dickson.

In a movie show Pete falls asleep and dreams of the time when he acted before the camera in a chase scene, and stole a wallet full of money from the pocket of the director. In the chase he dropped the wallet and never regained possession of it. When he wakes up he sees himself on the screen in the picture of which he has been dreaming and also sees the spot where he dropped the money. He rushes from the theater and out to the spot where he is confident of finding his lost treasure, but finds, to his dismay, that a jail has been built right over the spot where he had dropped the money. He hires a jitney, attaches a rope to the jail, the other end to the flivver and proceeds to drag the jail from its foundation. It passes over a box of dynamite, which blows up and buries Pete in the debris. He emerges triumphant, however, for he has the wallet. On opening it, however, he finds it full of stage money.

THE PRINCE CHAP (Selig—Five Parts—July 24).—The cast: William Peyton (Marshal Neilan); Arline Arrington (Mary Charleson); Claudia, Peyton's ward (Mary Charleson); Alice Travers (Bessie Eyton); Alice's mother (Camile D'Arcy); Runion, a valet (George Fawcett); Helen Travers (Margaret Fawcett); Paul Helmer (Cecil Holland); Jack Rodney, Earl of Huntington (Charles Gerard); Phoebe Puckers (Fannie Cohen). Written by Edward Pepie. Directed by Marshall Neilan.

William Peyton, a struggling New York sculptor, in love with Alice Travers, a beautiful but cold and calculating young society girl, accepts an invitation from his friend, Jack Rodney, Earl of Huntington, to seek his fortune in London. Alice promises to wait until he makes good. Arline Arrington, a model who is forced to work for the support of her infant daughter and her good-for-nothing husband, is hired by Peyton to pose for a masterpiece he has planned. He also hires Runion, a valet.

Helen Travers, cousin of Alice, calls at Peyton's studio, and just as she enters the model faints and falls in Peyton's arms. She places the wrong construction on the incident. With the passing years, Arline becomes the victim of a lingering malady. Knowing her days are numbered, she exacts a promise from Peyton to always care for her daughter. Arline dies and Claudia, her daughter, learns to call Peyton her "daddy" and he tells her the story of "Princess Alice" and the "Prince Chap." This is a story of his own life.

Helen Travers encounters Peyton and Claudia in a London park, and, hearing the girl call Peyton "daddy," she promptly dispatches her information to her cousin in New York. As a result, Alice hurries post haste to London with Paul Helmer, a Wall street broker, now a suitor for her hand. Arriving at Peyton's studio, Alice and Helmer encounter Claudia during the artist's absence and hear her call him "father." As a result Alice renounces him and later marries Helmer.

After the passing of a decade, we find Claudia a beautiful girl of eighteen. Peyton is now wealthy. Helmer, who has been a brutal and dissolute husband, dies, and Alice immediately gets in touch with Peyton to tell him that she is now free. The Earl of Huntington proposes marriage to Claudia, but she refuses. He divines the reason. She now loves Peyton in a different manner than she did as his ward.

Alice calls at the studio to win Peyton and Claudia overhears her tell Peyton that she thought all along that Claudia was his daughter and pleads for forgiveness. Claudia believes, as a result, that she is standing between Peyton and happiness. She resolves to flee.

The Earl of Huntington arrives at this juncture and Claudia tells him she is now ready to marry him. Knowing of Peyton's love for her, however, he refuses and later Peyton learns that Claudia has always looked upon him as her "Prince Chap" and that she has always hoped to be his princess. He takes her into his arms.

GLORIA'S ROMANCE (No. 8—"The Mesh of Mystery"—Two Parts—July 10).—The cast: Gloria Stafford (Billie Burke); Dr. Stephen Royce (Henry Kolker); Richard Freneau (David Powell); David Stafford (William Roselle); Frank Mulry (Frank Belcher); Pierpont Stafford (William T. Carleton); Mrs. David Stafford (Jule Power); Judge Freeman (Henry Weaver); Gideon Trask (Frank McGlynn).

Gloria Stafford's scream just as she fainted upon seeing the supposed murder of Richard Freneau, her fiance, at the base of the Soldiers' Monument, just across the way from the Stafford home on Riverside Drive, New York, aroused the household and the night nurse, Pierpont Stafford, and others came rushing to discover the cause of the alarm. When Gloria recovered enough to relate what she had seen through the binoculars from her window, her hearers could scarcely believe their ears and thought her suffering from delirium.

Dr. Royce was summoned and to satisfy Gloria that no murder had taken place went across to investigate at the base of the monument, returning to report that all was quiet and still there. Next morning Gloria received a telegram signed "Freneau," reporting his arrival at the first city on his route, and the others felt relieved. Gloria sent a wire in answer and consternation reigned in the Stafford home an hour later when the wire was returned with the message, "Party cannot be found."

Later other wires came, signed "Freneau," from Buffalo, Cleveland, Chicago and other points, but each time a reply was sent it was returned with the same response. And then came a day when the morning paper chronicled the finding of the dead body of Freneau in the bay. Gloria fainted, then recovered and as the chapter closes vows to find the murderer of her lover and bring him to justice.

GLORIA'S ROMANCE—(No. 9—"The Shadow of Scandal"—Two Parts—July 17).—Gloria Stafford thought the worst was over when she learned by the newspapers that Freneau, her finance, was really dead, her grief being momentarily dulled in her new resolve to trace down his murderer. But next morning when the dainty frock that had been ordered as her bridal gown arrived her grief was brought back anew, and she sank to the floor.

An hour later she gained strength to put the bridal finery away in the box—as in a coffin—and then she faced the world again more fiercely resolved than ever to herself run down the murderer of her intended husband. Dr. Royce, meanwhile, disclosed to Pierpont Stafford what he knew concerning the real character of Freneau and how close Lois Stafford, David's wife, had brought scandal to the door through her reckless flirtations with Freneau. The two agreed the police must never be put on the trail lest the publicity, which would surely follow, should disclose the scandal in David Stafford's home.

Gloria found it hard to understand why the police should not be summoned immediately, but her father and Dr. Royce were resolved she should never learn of Freneau's villainy, lest it blast her entire life. In an endeavor to make her forget her grief Pierpont suggested she discard her mourning gown and engagement ring, but, alas, this only caused Gloria to grieve the more. And not even her lover's body was to be given Gloria to bury, for his mother in a Colorado town wired for the remains and they were shipped to her.

GLORIA'S ROMANCE—(No. 10—"Tangled Threads"—Two Parts—July 24).—During the first few days following her discovery that Freneau, her fiance, had been murdered, Gloria Stafford yearned again and again for the engagement ring which her father had at last induced her to discard. One day she stealthily abstracted it from Pierpont's pocket when he wasn't looking. In beginning her investigation of Freneau's death she went first of all to the office of Mulry, Dick's partner, and while there was amazed to learn that Lois was also calling on Mulry regarding "poor Mr. Freneau." This led Gloria to suspect Dick had not been as true to her as he had vowed, and later on when she accidently discovered that the firm of Mulry & Freneau had branch offices in all of the cities from which Freneau's letters had apparently come, she understood at last how easy it had been for Freneau to write the letters in advance and give them to some other member of the firm to mail back to her from each of the cities in which a branch office was located.

At last her eyes were open. She understood that Freneau had deceived her. Thoroughly indignant, she rushed home, only an hour later, to decide that Dick never could have been false, and that she was a wicked girl to even suspect him. Meantime Royce had cautioned Mulry against revealing any of Freneau's perfidy to Gloria should she come to him for information—a promise that was cheerfully given. David and Lois meanwhile become more loverlike than they had been in a long while and leave for the country home to enjoy a second honeymoon, extending an invitation to Gloria to visit them there. At first she refuses, but later accepts, desiring an opportunity to study Lois at close range and decide for herself if Freneau can have been paying her sister-in-law attention the while he was courting herself.

THE MISHAPS OF MUSTY SUFFER ("Showing Some Speed"—No. 2 of Series 2—June 28).—Musty, a messenger boy, is assigned to deliver a cook stove to a certain address. In spite of the fact that there is no one home and the house locked up, Musty takes the stove in through the window, unlocks the door from the inside, takes the stove back out through the window again, delivers it through the door in the approved manner, locks the door on the inside and exits through the window.

Down the street comes a woman of ancient Irish lineage, who has discovered a new way of beating the high cost of living. She is following a grocer's boy who is delivering a sack of flour. There is a hole in the sack, and the shrewd old biddy is catching in her apron the flour that escapes. When her apron is filled, she starts for home, only to collide with Musty, who is hurrying about his business on his trusty bike. Musty receives a beating from the economical one.

Musty goes to sleep and is aroused by his boss in a unique manner. The boss pulls a cord and about a ton of bricks descend upon our hero. As a result Musty is bent double and has to be straightened out by some carpenters, upon whom he calls for help. The carpenters give Musty a window frame to deliver, but he gets entangled with a hitching post to the delapidation of the frame. Musty is summoned to a restaurant to awaken a sleeping waiter, which he does effectively.

A cheating gambler is caught and is ejected from the game. Imprisoned in a room, he calls for a messenger boy, telling Musty's boss over the phone that it is a case of life or death. Musty hurries to save a life. The cheater changes clothes with him, and thus disguised, passes through the blockade of indignant sharps unhampered. Musty, clad in the unfair one's garments, is not so fortunate. He is captured and thrown through a brick wall. Like a projectile he hurtles through the air and strikes the cheater, bringing him to earth. Musty and cheater recognize each other and Musty calmly strikes the hoodoo over the head with a brick. The cheater politely takes the brick from Musty's hand and returns the compliment. Then both of them fade away into a sleep.

THE MISHAPS OF MUSTY SUFFER ("While You Wait"—No. 3 of Series 2—July 5).—Out of a job, Musty haunts the employment agency. The boss tells him that help is scarce these days, and that whatever anyone calls for, Musty will have to be it. In order to fit him for holding any job whatsoever, the boss turns him loose with a variety of costumes, and Musty proves his ability as a quick change artist. The boss receives a call from a fair client, who wants a maid, and Musty dons feminine regalia and answers the call. He gets the job. One of his first tasks is to go to the employment agency and get a butler for his new mistress. When he arrives at the agency the boss tells him he can be the butler, too. Musty changes to a butler's costume and goes back, but takes his maid's costume with him. Being both butler and maid in the same house, Musty has to move in lively fashion to keep on both jobs at once. Then, to make things worse, he is sent, in his capacity of butler, to hire a gardener. The employment agency boss gives Musty a third costume and another pair of false whiskers and sends him to hold down the third job in addition to the original two.

Musty strides happily into the house when he suddenly catches sight of himself in the mirror. The result is almost fatal. One look at his own face bedecked in the false mustaches nearly finishes him, but he braces up and bravely sees the trouble through. In his capacity of maid, our hero is set to washing windows. The ladder on which he is standing falls through the window and Musty escapes a long fall only by hanging to the sill by his knees. His fair mistress rescues him and Musty sets to work to rescue the ladder. He drops a rope and calls upon an amiable entomologist for help. The entomologist leaves the butterfly he is chasing to come to Musty's aid. He ties the rope to the ladder and signals Musty to haul away. And Musty does, but the unfortunate bug expert gets his legs entangled in the ladder and is pulled upward, only to be lowered several times into a well-filled rain-barrel when Musty and his mistress, whom he has called upon for help, lose their grip upon the rope.

Finally the victim is hauled into and through the house, and Musty attaches the rope to an automobile, which dashes off, dragging ladder, entomologist and, as a climax, Musty himself, who is caught in the mix-up as the picture fades.

THE MISHAPS OF MUSTY SUFFER ("Local Showers"—No. 4 of Series 2—July 12).—Musty sleeps beside an open window and the morning breezes set his hollow tooth agoing. So Musty goes to the "painless dentist." He is ushered first into the ante-room, where his joy at knowing that teeth are pulled free of charge receives a set-back, for the attractive office girl begins to weep. She just can't bear the thought of what is going to happen to our hero.

She attaches a large pair of tongs to Musty and gives the signal to the engineer, who operates the "power behind the uplift movement" in the shape of a steam hoist. After being thoroughly shaken, so that all his loose change falls into a hopper devoted to that purpose, Musty is hoisted up many floors through a series of trap-doors, to the topmost stage of the skyscraper. On the way up he meets a workman with a ladder. The results to the latter are disastrous and he falls through all the trap-doors to the engine room.

Musty is taken off the unique elevator and hauled into the reception room of the "painless dentist." There he is discouraged by the sight of so many sufferers, and further depressed by the howls of agony coming from the dentist's operating room. At last Musty's turn comes and he discovered that the painless dentist really is a painless dentist—it doesn't hurt the doctor a bit. Musty fails to succumb to the gas administered, but a few judiciously directed blows over the head render him unconscious, and the offending molar is removed. Musty is then propelled from the office in unique fashion, after being restored to consciousness by a downpour of water. He lands in the "drying room." After a few turns on the spit before the open fire, he is thoroughly dried. He escapes from the drying room by dashing up the chimney, but is pursued by a heavy stream from a fire hose, which lifts him up the flue to the roof of the building, where he falls through a series of chutes which again convey him to the bottom floor. Here he finds two ambulance attendants waiting with a stretcher and is much relieved when they carry him into a hospital.

THE MISHAPS OF MUSTY SUFFER ("A Pirate Bold"—No. 5 of Series 2—July 19).—Musty goes for a day's fishing, but bites are scarce and he whiles away the time reading an exciting story entitled "The Bold, Bad Pirate." He goes to sleep sitting on the edge of a bridge and dreams of hidden treasure and dark deeds on the Spanish Main. He is awakened by a boat which passes under the bridge catching his feet and pulling him aboard the craft. The oarsman is highly indignant at Musty's unceremonious embarkation and lands him violently ashore.

Musty is much impressed by his dream. He locates a spot which reminds him of the place where he buried a chest of gold in his dream and starts to dig for the hidden pieces of eight. He is interrupted by a cop, who arrests him. The cop calls the police patrol, a wheel-barrow affair, and Musty is trundled off to jail. Arraigned before the captain, he is given the third degree, but refuses to tell his secret. Finally, when confronted with a loaded cannon, Musty is alarmed by the sputtering of the fuse and tells his story. He is cast into a cell.

Musty, like all model prisoners, awaits his opportunity to escape. He finds that his cot is very springy and by jumping on it succeeds in having himself hurled as if from a catapult through the roof. He makes himself a false mustache of grass and so passes the guard. He hurries to a costumer's for a disguise and after donning it hastens back to the place where he was digging in the street when arrested. No sooner has he started to dig when he is again arrested. He tries to get away, and cleverly induces his captors to get in the push patrol. Then he upsets it and runs, but collides with a telegraph pole, falls and is recaptured. In the station he breaks away from the cops again, hides by sitting on the captain's bench. He whacks the cops with the captain's gavel, placing them completely hors de combat, and once more is free.

Musty goes back to the costumer's and rents a suit of armor, which he dons. No more is it upon his back, however, than his back begins to itch. What did King Arthur do in a case like this? We don't know, but the costumer found a way to relieve our hero. Musty then hurries back to his hole in the street, more determined than ever to find the hidden treasure. But, alas, that pestiferous copper is always on the job. Musty finds a way to get out of the armor without being seen and goes back to his digging. The copper, however, gets a great shock when the armor, in which he thinks Musty is still encased, suddenly comes to life and flees. After a long chase the officer regains possession of his cast steel captive and takes it to the station. Can openers, crow-bars and other devices are employed to open the armor, but in vain. Finally one of the cops hits it with a sledge-hammer. It falls to pieces, revealing no one on the interior.

Meanwhile Musty continues to dig. He breaks a water main and is caught in the deluge. This is the last straw and he gives up his treasure seeking in disgust.

PARAMOUNT.

DAVY CROCKETT (Pallas Pictures—Five parts—July 13).—The cast: Davy Crockett (Dustin Farnum); Eleanor Vaughn (Winifred Kingston); James Vaughn (Harry de Vere); Hector Royston (Herbert Standing); Oscar Crampton (Howard Davies); Neil Crampton (Page Peters); Mrs. Crockett (Lydia Yeamans Titus). Directed by William Taylor.

Eleanor, the daughter of James Vaughn, a wealthy landowner, is a frequent visitor at the home of the Widow Crockett. The widow is supported by her son, Davy, who is a famous Indian fighter, hunter and trapper. Eleanor often accompanies Davy when he goes to inspect his traps. One day Eleanor stirs his imagination by reading to him the romantic story of Lochinvar. As she reads the vision materializes before Davy's eyes and the impression of the knightly conduct of this hero leads afterward to a great event in their lives.

Eleanor and her father go on a visit to England, leaving Colonel Royston, a life-long friend, in charge. The colonel's only weakness is a fondness for cards, and during their absence he loses more than he can pay. Hard pressed, he forges the absent Vaughn's name to a note. Vaughn dies at sea and Crampton, the holder of the note, becomes aware of the forgery. By threats of exposure he coerces Royston into helping his nephew, Neil Crampton, in his plan to marry Eleanor. Neil by his polished manner and flattery wins Eleanor while the bashful Crockett loses ground.

Eleanor and Neil ride into the mountains searching for mistletoe. They nearly perish in a blizzard and are attacked by wolves. Davy Crockett saves their lives. The true worth of this great frontiersman and the underlying motive of Neil's courtship are impressed upon Eleanor by this harrowing experience.

Eleanor decides upon a strange course and in a unique manner shows Davy Crockett her preference for him. He plans a surprise for the visiting guests at the rapidly approaching wedding of Eleanor and Neil. The appointed day arrives—and the guests are given the thrill of their lives.

THE DREAM GIRL (Lasky—Five Parts—July 17).—The cast: Meg Dugan (Mae Murray); Jim Dugan (Theodore Roberts); "English" Hal (Charles West); Benjamin Merton (James Neill); Tom Merton (Earle Foxe); Alice Merton (Mary Mersch). Produced by Cecil B. De Mille.

Meg Dugan, a waif of the slums, whose mother is dead, lives with her drunken father in San Francisco. Despite her rough environments, there has developed in little Meg's soul an intense love of things beautiful, and a great taste for dancing. Fleeing from her father, Meg takes refuge in an old ash barrel and there discovers a dilapidated volume of "King Arthur and His Knights of the Round Table." Deeply interested in the pictures in this book, Sir Gallahad at once becomes the hero of her dreams.

Dugan and "English" Hal, a "black sheep" of an old English family, run a "Social Club," where liquor is unlawfully sold. The club is raided, but Hal and Dugan manage to get enough money together to carry out their plan of posing Hal as "Lord Henry Trevor." Hal kisses Meg against her will, and in the fight which results between him and Meg's father, the latter is shot and left for dead. Meg again takes refuge in her ash barrel where she is found by a policeman and hustled off to the Detention Home.

Tempted by Merton's beautiful flower garden next door, she climbs the wall and is feasting on the fruits and flowers when old Merton appears. Meg hides under a table. "Lord Hal," seeking out Merton to ask for his granddaughter Alice's hand, discovers the volume of "King Arthur" lying on the table, and is much disturbed when he recognizes it as Meg's. Unable to stay in her cramped position under the table any longer, Meg crawls out and tells the astonished Merton her story.

That night, Meg, reading her beloved book, is attracted by the music next door and again climbs the wall. The occasion is a fancy dress ball which Alice is giving in honor of her brother Tom's birthday. Tom, disgusted with trying to "turkey-trot" in the suit of armor he is wearing, goes into the garden to "cool off." Meg, believing him to be her real knight who has come to rescue her, nestles confidingly on his breast. Tom assures the little waif he has indeed come to rescue her. At his suggestion, old Merton takes Meg on probation with the idea of adopting her. "English" Hal nearly faints when he recognizes Meg. Much to Hal's and Meg's discomfiture, a slumming party is suggested, and they accidentally find Dugan, who recognizes Hal. Hal tells him about Meg and Tom. The two men plot to "work" Tom for the price of their silence, and when Tom is approached, he gives Dugan a ten thousand dollar check, the birthday present from his grandfather.

To save Alice from the fake "Lord," Meg tells his story to Merton and Tom. Hal confesses that he is "English," and is arrested. Dugan's heart softens as he hears Meg's heart-broken farewell to Tom, because her "father can't associate with high-brows" and she refuses to leave him alone, and he slips the check on which he has written his promise not to bother her again under the door. As he goes down the battered old stairway, he meets the aristocratic old Merton, and the two men glower at each other as they both realize the great gulf between them. Old Merton's heart is touched when he sees the home Meg has left, and slowly opens his arms to receive the little waif who has proved herself so worthy.

AN INTERNATIONAL MARRIAGE (Morosco—Five Parts—July 24).—The cast: Florence Brent (Rita Jolivet, Countess de Cippico); Bennington Brent (Marc Robbins); John Oglesby (Elliott Dexter); Eleanor Williamson (Grace Carlisle); Mrs. Williamson (Olive White); Duke of Buritz (Courtenay Foote); Count Janefski (Page Peters); the Archduke Ferdinand (Herbert Standing); Agnes Sotherton (Adelaide Woods); the Archduchess (Jean Woodbury). Directed by Frank Lloyd.

Bennington Brent, the laundry king, uses the phrases of the trade to shrewdly express his observations. His daughter, Florence Brent, being of another generation, reflects the finish or, as Brent expresses it, "the satin gloss" of wealth and elegance.

Congressman John Oglesby, her chum from childhood, is a handsome young statesman and a prominent member of the National Assembly. Florence visits her chum, Eleanor Williamson, who lives in Washington and meets Eleanor's fiance, Count Krinburg. The Duke of Buritz, a fellow-countryman of the Count, endeavors to corrupt Oglesby for international-political reasons. But he fails in his estimate of the man.

The Duke, who is the ambassador for his country at the American Capitol, is introduced to Florence by the Count, on whom she has made a great impression. The attentiveness of the Count to Florence leads to the breaking of her engagement by Eleanor Williamson, but having inherited an estate, the Count feels independent of international marriages.

The biase attitude of the Duke is changed to deep and sudden interest by Florence's beauty and charm. Florence Brent, in turn, is dazzled by this foreign nobleman of royal blood. The Duke is so entranced that he proposes to and is accepted by Florence. He departs for his country to arrange for the wedding. He meets with the opposition of his family, but prevails upon them to invite Florence to Buritz.

Because of his love for Florence, John Oglesby accedes to her father's request and goes abroad with the Brents. The Duke is playing a desperate game to overcome the obstacles in the way of his marriage to Florence, and as plan after plan fails, he forces Florence into a tangled situation. The subtle deception of the Duke and Count is discovered and shown up by Oglesby, who solves the seemingly impossible tangle.

THE WEAKNESS OF MAN (Peerless—Five Parts—July 10).—The cast: David Spencer (Holbrook Blinn); Janice Lane (Eleanor Woodruff); John Spencer (Richard Wagerman); Dr. Stone (Charles D. Mackey); "Babbie" Norris (Alma Hanlon). Directed by Barry O'Neill.

David Spencer, a young spendthrift, returns from France because of his father's ill-health. This has awakened a sense of duty within him, and it is inferred that he will take up his father's work and marry the ward, Janice Lane, who is the antithesis of everything he has been. Dr. Stone, the family physician, loves Janice, but she is almost unaware of it, her whole love being centered in David.

"Babbie" Norris, a fun loving creature, who is among his friends on his homeward journey, is in love with David and by this deep love, awakens a response. Shortly after David's return home, his engagement to Janice is announced and that night, Babbie, broken-hearted, comes to his town apartment and, seeing a life-sized portrait of herself in his room, cuts the painting from the frame and draping herself similar to the picture, steps into the frame. He returns and while gazing at the supposed picture, she steps out. He weakens for a moment and then tells her that she must give him up forever.

Babbie's hold upon David grows so strong that he determines to break with Janice. He gives a costume party in his apartment to celebrate the termination of his engagement. During the party, one of his guests phones to David's father, who rushes to the apartment. During a fight with one of his guests, David receives a wound on his shoulder from a curved scimitar. At this time Mr. Spencer arrives, the shock proves fatal and he dies.

As stipulated in Mr. Spencer's will, David marries Janice and renounces his old life, but after a short while domestic life becomes irksome for him and he seeks his old associates. A friend discovers David and Babbie entering the stage door and phones to Janice, who rushes to the theater and confronts David in Babbie's dressing room. In a tense scene, David says, "It is better that you divorce me" and Janice, in horror, says, "The church forbids it."

David, realizing the misery he is causing his wife, decides on suicide, goes to a section of the river not far from his house, sees the body of a man in the river, changes clothes with him and disappears. When the body is found, the face is unrecognizable and because of the clothes, it is identified as David. Janice, satisfied that it is David, marries Dr. Stone. Unable to get money without revealing his identity, David sinks lower and lower.

An acquaintance recognizes him one day, has him arrested for some faked-up insurance fraud, and at the trial, because of his repeated denial of his identity and altered appearance, everybody, even his wife, fail to recognize him, with the exception of Babbie, who testifies falsely, as they had planned to go abroad together after his release. Unable to hold the pose any longer, when his daughter is called to identify him, he grabs up a pen knife one of the lawyers was using and kills himself.

SALLY IN OUR ALLEY (Peerless—Five Parts—July 17).—The cast: Sally McGill (Muriel Ostriche); Paul Taylor (Carlyle Blackwell); Mr. McGill (Pat Foy); Mrs. McGill (Mrs. Foy); Ben (Walter D. Greene); Isabel (Jean Shelby). Directed by Travers Vale.

Sally McGill, a little Irish girl, brought up in a particularly sordid section, is compelled to work to support her entire family. Ben Blaney, the young foreman where she works, loves little Sally. Mrs. Rockwell, wealthy and childless, finds joy in taking a limited number of the poorest children to her country home each summer, and she selects those whom she will take. While visiting the lower East Side, which is distinguished by the name of "Pigtail Alley," she meets Sally and impulsively asks her to go along to earn her board and keep by caring for and helping with the children. Sally is overjoyed.

Ben Blaney, however, proposes to Sally and is rejected. Mrs. Rockwell's niece, Isabelle, is jealous of Sally and takes a violent dislike to her. Sally's ambition is to become a refined lady like those about her, and she is attracted to Paul Taylor, but knows she is inferior to him.

Isabelle succeeds in having Sally discharged. She then goes to work in a millinery store where she has opportunities to learn the refined ways she so admires, and joins a library to study on this subject. Mrs. Rockwell, in need of a maid, seeks little Sally out and offers her the position, and she again meets Paul, who proposes to her on her way home one evening, but she, realizing the great social gulf between them, does not consent and tells him he must never see her again.

She leaves Mrs. Rockwell's employment to become an artist's model and because she pledged Mrs. Rockwell to secrecy about her new address, Paul goes to her mother, who, believing there is a possibility of a rich marriage, gives him Sally's address. Paul waits for Sally and escorts her home, standing in the doorway for a chat. Ben sees them just as Paul is embracing Sally and in a rage strikes Paul down.

Later, when Ben learns that Paul has asked for Sally in marriage, he tells Sally that they are not made of the same clay, and that she has outgrown "Pigtail Alley," and he hopes that she will be happy with Paul. She goes to Paul and he holds her in his arms and finishes the sentence he started in the hallway, which Ben interrupted, "When do we start for South America?"

PAYING THE PRICE (Paragon—Five Parts—July 24).—The cast: Judith Corbin (Gail Kane); Gen. Corbin, U. S. A. (Robert Cummings); Mrs. Towne (Lydia Knott); Paul Towne (George Relph); Richard Tracy (Gladden James); Evan Vrooman (Geo. Magaroni); Countess Nimy (June Elvidge). Scenario written by Gardner Hunting. Directed by Frank H. Crane.

Paul Towne returns from a cruise and is greeted by his mother and Judith Corbin, daughter of General Corbin, U. S. A., retired, whose estates are adjoining. Paul and Judith have been reared together and are like brother and sister. After his return, Paul is sent to Washington, where he meets Richard Tracy, a lieutenant in the army. They become friends. Paul invites him to his house, where he meets Judith. They become friends at once. Their friendship grows to love, they become engaged and later are married.

In Washington, however, Richard has met a man named Vrooman, who represents himself to be a wealthy man of leisure, who introduces him to an adventuress known as the Countess Nimy. Vrooman is really the head of the secret service for a foreign government, and Nimy one of his operatives, who runs a fashionable gambling place in Washington society. Richard is introduced to this place, where he plays, winning at first. Paul, who has come to realize his love for Judith, takes a cruise to forget her. While out on "The Wadsworth," United States torpedo boat destroyer No. 60, he learns that the torpedoes do not explode properly, so he endeavors to invent a new explosive.

After the honeymoon, Richard and Judith locate in Washington, where Judith's father, through his influence, has procured a good position for his son-in-law. Richard is cool to Judith, but noticeably amiable to Nimy, who plays with him as with a toy. Judith returns home, and leading the gay life of society, Richard is soon without funds. Nimy induces Vrooman to advance him money on I. O. U.'s which Richard gives. Returning home, Judith learns that Paul is working in a shack built back of the Towne home, where he is trying his experiments. She assists him and takes down notes for him. Soon they come to learn that their love is for each other, but there is a barrier, and they must never think of love again.

Just as Paul strikes the right formula, he transcribes it to Judith, telling her to copy it carefully and preserve it for him. At this time Vrooman informs Richard that he must pay back his loans at once. Richard begs for more time, and while conversing, Vrooman informs Richard that Paul is working on some explosive formula, and that if he can procure the formula, there will be a neat little fortune in it for him. That night Richard obtains the notes from Judith's room, copies the formula, but is discovered by his wife. There is a scene in which Richard tells Judith that he was looking for Paul's love letters, and that if he saw them together again he would kill both of them.

Paul goes aboard the torpedo destroyer "Wadsworth" to try his experiment, being accompanied by General Corbin and Judith. The captain of the "Wadsworth" informs Paul that he will try the first torpedo against Clarges Rock. In the meantime, Vrooman and Richard decide to watch the test, but not until a shadow of the United States Government has trailed them to a launch, where, making his identity known, he goes as mechanic on the boat. There is a derelict not far from Clarges Rock, and the two men decide they will watch the experiments from aboard the derelict. The first torpedo is launched against the rock, splitting the rock in half—the first time any torpedo had registered such an explosion.

Paul's formula is found effective, but the captain orders another trial. The derelict, which has been a menace to shipping for some time, is made the target. With great accuracy the second torpedo is sent on its journey. Just as it is launched Vrooman and Richard attempt to escape, but too late. The torpedo strikes the derelict amidship. There is a terrible explosion. The old ship is blown to smithereens, and the two spies are killed. As the destroyer heads off for port, the launch bearing the United States Secret Service agent notifies the captain that two spies, Evan Vrooman and Richard Tracy, were aboard the derelict when it exploded. Upon learning this Judith collapses, but, after recovering from her shock, realizes that Richard, unworthy of her love and unfaithful as he had proved himself to be, met his master, and, with the obstacles now removed, she and Paul could renew the love and happiness which had been theirs from childhood, save for Richard's presence between them.

TECHNIQUE of the PHOTOPLAY

THIRD EDITION

By Epes Winthrop Sargent

ROBERT WILSON NEAL, A. M.

Author of "Short Stories in the Making," Etc. Instructor of Journalism Massachusetts Agricultural College, says:

A FEW weeks ago, in print, I named your Technique of the Photoplay—second edition—as ahead of everything written on the photodrama. But it isn't. The third edition is far better. I don't know anyone who can put more into one short sentence, or make it clearer, or give it more energy or interest or season it more with sound information and common sense. You wrote me not long ago you were uncertain as to the wisdom of putting the price at three dollars. If the selling price is to be adjusted to its potential worth to students or practitioners of photoplay writing, I think you are wrong. Any man or woman really in earnest about learning to write photoplays can afford to pay ten or twenty dollars for such a help. It is not merely the information and sound sense that makes the book valuable: it's the stimulus of its personality, its forcefulness and energy and inspiration. I have spent a large portion of my life in the classroom either as student or teacher. Speaking from that experience, I do not hesitate to express my conviction that any industrious and persistent person, with a reasonable equipment of brains and dramatic sense, can with a book like yours perfect himself in the art—train and develop himself as effectually and as thoroughly as he could possibly do in any of the subjects commonly taught in the classroom under the supervision of teachers. Indeed, I believe that, for most men who really have the right sort of stuff in them, self-training with such a treatise will be more profitable in the end than any formal course can be. Whether that is right or not, your book is one of the best practical texts I ever saw.

The third edition comprises 398 pages, plus eight, but through the selection of the type it offers more than 125,000 words of instruction and example, more than double the number of words in a full length novel. It is divided into a graduated course of study for classroom or individual work, and covers every aspect of the work. Three dollars, postpaid.

Opportunity Knocks but Once

A New Invention Revolutionizes an Industry.

A basic patent has just been granted by the United States Patent Office covering a new machine for the projection of moving pictures.

It can be manufactured at a cost that will make competition by any standard machine on the market impossible.

It works upon an entirely new principle—that of manipulation of the light, as opposed to the manipulation of the film in present machines.

Its principal feature is its simplicity, coupled with the small amount of precision work needed.

It has no shutter and the movement of the film is continuous; thus eliminating all the mechanism of the intermittent movement.

The projected picture is flickerless, owing to the fact that the shutter is eliminated, thus allowing a greater percentage of light to reach the screen.

A demonstration by a working model will be given responsible parties by appointment.

PERFECT REEL DISSOLVING

The voltage of the "MARTIN" poly-phase converter is maintained constant, so that the starting of the second arc does not disturb the light given by the first, making the dissolving of the reels as simple as if the arcs were operated in a Direct Current district. Our emergency panel does away with expensive compensarcs and cuts the wiring and installation cost in half.

How Much Are You Paying to Ventilate Your Theatre?

Are you sometimes tempted to reduce your ventilating bills by cutting out some of the fans? Don't do it. That is more expensive than keeping them going, for the moment your theatre is known to have poor ventilation your box office receipts go down. If you are paying too much for fresh air, get better service by installing

"Timothy Dobbs--that's Me"

The Inimitable
Carter De Haven Comedy Series

Beyond question the funniest thing in film comedy. Absolutely clean, fresh and wholesome fun. No resort to slap-stick methods to produce roars of laughter. Imagine if you can that master of stagecraft—Carter De Haven—portraying a boob who thinks he can act, who is trying to break into the movies on his nerve, and you get a faint idea of the outline on which this clever series is built. Directed by Wallace Beery, with the cleverest people in Universal City as a supporting company; with the Universal City Zoo, the magnificent stages, outdoor props, all the mighty facilities and resources of the Universal, and you can see that the "Timothy Dobbs" series is being produced on a scale more lavish than any comedy ever before attempted.

This superb series will be released two reels a week without extra charge TO EXHIBITORS WHO TAKE THE ENTIRE UNIVERSAL PROGRAM SERVICE. To those using a split program a slight additional charge will be made to cover cost of individual bookings. If you want to make yours the popular comedy house of your town, write your nearest Universal Exchange today before your competitor does.

BLUE BIRD PHOTOPLAYS, (INC)

THE growing popularity of BLUEBIRD Photoplays is not surprising to those who have appreciated from the beginning the definite policy of their producers.

Not only was the BLUEBIRD standard fixed higher than then existing features, but every conceivable facility for the production and maintenance of that standard was available before the first BLUEBIRD was released.

Another strong factor is the widespread publicity being given to the BLUEBIRD policy of "The Play's the Thing." The increased attendance at theatres showing BLUEBIRD Photoplays reflects the interest shown by the reading public in the half page advertisements appearing, and to appear for 52 weeks, in the Saturday Evening Post.

Exhibitors of BLUEBIRDS are sharing in this widespread interest. They are reaping their share in increased popularity and greater net profits.

How Boston Likes "Reel Life"

(Special Correspondence of Moving Picture World)

The Mutual is giving the public some interesting pictures quite up to date, such as showing how concrete bridges are made, taking us into the depths and heights of structural work. "That's the stuff to show," said a man across the aisle who wore a ribbon badge marking him a graduate of Technology. This company has had a picture called "Reel Life" showing how an interior scene is made with a large gathering, some 400 persons being employed to represent an audience at the average theatre. We get the entrance, the seating by ushers of belated ones, the applause and dispersing of the audience at the will of the director. All such help the industry, as it shows the great patience required on the part of director and players to reach the desired result.

Gentlemen:

I have always contended that the "open booking" policy was the correct one, and when your representative called here with this proposition, I joined the V-L-S-E fold, and from present indications, I will be with them for some time to come.

My opinion is, that no one but the exhibitor, is in a position to pick out satisfactory plays for their respective theatres, and the beneficial results of this method is clearly proven, by my personal experience with the "open booking" policy.

The one feature that should appeal to all thinking exhibitors, is that the releasing companies of the V-L-S-E Inc., are compelled to make good productions, for, under the privilege of selection, the poor ones remain idle and their earning qualities will not cover cost of production. The old system compelled an exhibitor to use the good, bad and indifferent picture at the same price, hence, eliminating the necessity of the producer making a consistent line of good pictures.

I also want to express my appreciation of the courtesies and cooperation received from both your representative covering this territory, and the office. It is a pleasure to do business with you, and it is also gratifying to know that there is one organization in the film business that is not only willing, but anxious to do the right thing by the exhibitor. Keep up the good work the others will trail along in time.

I am yet to get a poor picture from you. This shows what I think of the service I have been getting.

With best wishes, I am

Yours truly,

Gentlemen:

Just a few lines to let you know that we opened with "the Ne'er-Do-Well," last Monday night to 2,100 paid admissions.

The audience left the theatre praising the picture, and our business increased nightly. On Saturday we showed to 3,100 admissions, making the total for the week 11,225, or one-fifth of the entire population of Lincoln and its suburbs. This was not accomplished by a sensational advertising campaign. I think this speaks highly for the merits of the picture and is a remarkable showing when you stop to think that there are seven other better located exclusive photoplay theatres with seating capacities ranging from 500 to 1200 showing ---------- programs with tri-weekly change and at lower admission fees.

Facts and Comments

THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD has received a copy of a single reel print of the picture "Better Babies" made by exhibitors of Cleveland. We thank the exhibitors of Cleveland for their kind gift and we ask exhibitors who think they can use this picture, not as a regular part of their programs, but as a special feature in connection with some civic enterprise in their city to let us know and we will gladly let them use the reel with our compliments. We must confine the offer to territory within 200 miles of New York City.

We feel that in making this offer we are making the right use of this splendid gift of the Cleveland men.

WE GREATLY respect the man who has the courage of his convictions however wrong those convictions may be. When a man tells us that in the face of the almost unanimous opposition against censorship he believes in censorship we must give him credit for sincerity. One of the dissenters tells us that he thinks but little of our objections to censorship. He says the reproach "Un-American" or "Anti-American" means little to him. To us we confess this argument means very much indeed. Censorship is essentially alien. It does not fit in with our history or our traditions or our institutions. It has no room in our body of laws or in our system of legal procedure. That's why the courts of Ohio and Pennsylvania do not know what to do with the censorship law. They want to uphold it because the legislature has put it on the statute books, but at the same time they feel that it outrages the American spirit. We do object to censorship very largely because it is un-American.

WE HAD no idea to what extent the motion picture had earned the hostility of the liquor interest. As far as we know the motion picture has never gone out of its way to paint the evils of intemperance; if the screen reflected them it was merely performing the function of a mirror held up to the daily lives of the people. One liquor organ now proclaims with considerable pride that it is back of the proposed increase in taxation for motion picture theaters. According to the editor of the liquor journal he gathered the statistics which enabled and encouraged Congress to propose its new tax. We had no idea Congress was drawing from such sources for its information on the motion picture industry.

WHILE we have thus incurred the enmity of the saloon and of the men who furnish the saloon with its materials the churches are gradually "warming up" to the motion picture. There is still a lot of clerical ignorance and prejudice, but it is dying fast. Every clergyman and every social worker who has honestly sought to study the pros and cons of the motion picture is arraying himself on the side of the motion picture and is beginning to love it "for the enemies it has made." Recent clerical gatherings furnish pleasant proof of this fact. The Women's Clubs, too, formerly too often hotbeds of mistaken and iconoclastic zeal, are coming to look upon us with a more friendly eye. All these forces will eventually see the folly of legalized censorship and that alien idea will disappear as we always said it would.

OUR congratulations to the Oregon Motion Picture Men's Association, which is making such a splendid fight against the various brands of censorship in that state. Like all censors the Portland variants have overstepped the bounds of law and common sense by "ordering out" a trailer which contained a copy of the constitutional guarantee of freedom of expression. This silly step has brought down the wrath of the press upon their devoted heads. Our friends the exhibitors have published a well edited pamphlet explaining their position and the injustice of the political censorship that is to be foisted upon them. It is indeed a most convincing document. In the mean time several capitalists who intended to put up a big motion picture house in Portland have decided to turn their back on the inquisitorial city and will build their new theater in another town.

Bigots of the Screen

By Louis Reeves Harrison

PRODUCER. While he honestly believes that he is catering to public taste and as honestly believes that he is entirely capable of doing so, guided by the teachings of practical experience, the average producer of the better class is unconsciously bigoted. The fact that he, more than any one else concerned, has the power of determining his own actions tends to make him illiberally attached to his own opinions. Even when he is generally broad and without intention of becoming intolerant he autocratically sets up what he regards as a good business policy—he will have this kind of play, suited to his own ideas, or that kind of a play, suited to the requirements of his company.

There is small probability that he will change. He becomes attached to his individual opinions, believing that his business success is due to them instead of to an unprecedented demand for a product which he happened, most fortuitously, to be in a position to help supply. That is human. We all assume the importance of our circumstances, even though these are known to be the combined result of heredity, environment and chance. If the producer is making money, he naturally regards that as a tribute to the correctness of his judgment, and he will stick to his favorite theories as long as dividends roll in.

Unwittingly, unintentionally, the producer of set policy is really opposing the best public taste. The light of human intellience can not be diffused through the pin hole of a set policy. The rays of the sun, carrying infinite beauty of color, are unconfined. So beauty of composition is not of this or that shade, but of all combined. The producer is enforcing a limitation while the public loves variety.

The producer of set policy is not only opposing public taste, but he is as unconsciously making it difficult for the author to market good plays. True genius, the kind to be nourished, is not only sensitive, but also easily discouraged. The author who pours out a story from the sources of emotion and thought, who is distinctly original, who gives what the public most craves, can not be what he is and subscribe to this or that set policy. He must be as free to create as the audience is to appreciate.

The use of precedent as a basis of judgment prepossess the mind with what has been done, as opposed to what can be done, the deadly enemy of originality, the determined opponent of progress. To compress all future performance within the narrow confines of the past is to dull creative effort and to seriously injure advancement in an art where it is much needed. The door should, in reality, be wider open to those who are thinking ahead than to those who are thinking and writing behind the times. The builder naturally follows convention. The architect may study convention only to know what to avoid.

DIRECTOR. This master workman is more intentionally a bigot. He has been given greater latitude than was due his specific role in production because of the many responsibilities attached to his position under the early arrangements, where, as general superintendent and contractor for supplies of all kinds, he became a veritable autocrat. Having never chosen a novel for publication, or a play for stage presentation, he was without other selective taste than guided by his own personal bias and what he had seen, yet he insisted upon plays that appealed to him.

We have plenty of evidence that directors who can only put on plays that "appeal" to them are afflicted with an extremely limited appreciation. A director of wide appreciation, who can grasp the best work done by others, who realizes that his treatment of a subject may make the powerful impression, can handle any bright and original story well designed to entertain a mixed audience, whether or not it happens to suit him. Especially is this true when the author completes his scenario in psychology and characterization and develops it to the stage of an effective working plan.

The director's function is bound to become that of picturing the story, and only when he masters his specific art will he be able to make the first impression. The spectator's eye first grasps the intrinsic beauty of a scene, its appropriateness, its atmosphere, its harmony with the subject matter, this before the emotions are stirred or the mind set to thinking. Producers have learned that it is an author's role to write the story and that of the director to picture it with skill and beauty. The director's true function is not that of a general contractor and obstructive autocrat, but of an artist.

The author's appeal is to emotion and intellect, that of the director to temperament, yet he has rarely shown himself to be aware even of the possibilities of his role. The fault lies in a stupid system of working without definite plan, blundering through a lot of detached and irrelevant picturings, eliminating and joining-up in the assembly room in order to reach a semblance of complete result. Raw stuff! The only way to build a big play is from a plan studied and criticised in advance, made perfect before salaries begin to eat up dividends.

The director of theatrical experience is often limited in his vision by that experience, not equipped to select from the broad point of view in this new art and hampered in some respects by what helps him in others. He might well study Thomas Griffiths Wainewright, who held that "no work of art can be tried otherwise than by laws deduced from itself." He might have better said that no art can be otherwise tried. He was one to appreciate that an art of expression must give its equivalent for a creative author's imaginative and mental effect.

EXHIBITOR. Stand near the screen and look over the audience. Note that a few dozen enthusiasts can make a big noise with their hands, while thinking people are rarely given to that form of approval. They come again if the pictured stories have merit. Again and again they come when drawn by merit of performance. "To which show shall we go?" is the question asked after dinner at home. Occasionally they are moved by curiosity aroused by passing inspection of a billboard.

The wise exhibitor does not pronounce against this kind of play or that kind of play, for he knows that his audience loves variety, but he may well make a general demand of quality of treatment and vitality of subject matter. As to the specific kind of vital matter and fine treatment, he becomes a party to monotonous production the moment he imposes such a limitation upon the producer. Stories can not be written, nor can they be successfully visualized to suit this or that exhibitor or section of the country. Only when their appeal is big and broad can they win, and then despite bigotry in all its manifestations.

Gouging Stars

By W. Stephen Bush.

IS THE motion picture industry going to pour its accumulated wealth into the laps of a dozen or two of stars? Are producers and exhibitors going to strain and drain all their resources merely for the purpose of paying fabulous and ridiculous salaries to certain men and women claimed or supposed to be stars and superstars?

These are questions that have to be answered. Let there be no mistake. Upon the answer to these questions will depend the prosperity of both producer and exhibitor. There seems to be, I am happy to note, a spirit of cooperation between the two great branches of the industry, as evidenced by the action at Chicago. I earnestly hope that the producer and exhibitor will unite in abating this fearful star evil which is eating into the vitals of the industry with no benefit to anybody but the inflated and overpaid stars themselves.

The insolence and rapacity of these greater and lesser stars is getting worse every day. We hear of two instances where these stars "laid down" in the middle of their work and gouged huge sums of money out of their victims.

In order to remedy the evil the producers must come to a decent and rational understanding among themselves. They must realize and repent the mistakes of the past. If they had not set to work their press agents creating a fictitious value of stars through unsound and often disgusting methods of publicity, if they had not foolishly bid against each other, these preposterous salaries of stars and of near-stars and of would-be stars would never have happened. No progress toward saner ideals and saner methods will ever be made if these evils are not abated first. Not until there is not merely a legal but an equitable respect for contracts, not until one company refuses to tempt a star away from its rival by a bigger salary may we hope for better things.

Nor is it possible to absolve the exhibitors from all blame for the cancerous growth of this star evil. As one of the producers at the Chicago Convention pointed out "too many exhibitors are crying for stars and for nothing but stars." These exhibitors want a name to conjure with, a name that will draw the people into their houses. They do not realize that however promising this policy may be first it is bound to lead to bad results. It gives the real stars, who will always be few and far between, an exaggerated idea of their importance, and results in the creation of artificial stars; of men and women of the third and fourth grade, who are puffed into stardom by the indefatigable press agent. Such a policy is sure to pervert the public taste. Plays, no matter how good, have come to mean nothing to the public unless there is a star, and the presence of the star excuses and covers a multitude of sins. Of course such a state of affairs cannot last. There are not enough real stars to go around, and the "fake" stars are bound in the end to bring on a reaction on the part of the public.

I had a talk with one of the biggest and most successful exhibitors of the Northwest on this subject of the exaggerated star.

"It is up to us exhibitors," said he, "to help the producers in their battle to shake off the star evil. We have it in our power to punish stars who break contracts or who follow the greater salary from one company to another. We have a very vital interest in this matter because in the long run we are the people that pay these fat and fatuous salaries. Every dollar comes out of our box office receipts. Now when we see a star who is well paid at say $10,000 a year leave his company to follow an offer of $20,000 a year we can bar him or her out of our theaters. Of course ten or twenty thousand dollars a year are trifling amounts. I use them merely as arithmetical examples. Recently a capable young actress who on the legitimate stage considered herself well paid at $1,000 or at the most $2,000 per week has demanded six thousand dollars a week, and I believe she got it. We are the ones to pay the bill, hence we have a right to interfere. I tell you the worst feature in connection with this idolatry of the star: The producer who has to pay such salaries to one man or one woman naturally tries to skimp his productions in every possible way. Hence we get stars and rotten plays. That kind of a combination does not bring people into our houses. Personally I am willing to let my competitor have a star in a rotten play if I can get a first-class play with good artists who can act their parts well but do not aspire to stardom. I am sure I can more than hold my own in such circumstances."

We propose to hammer away at this star evil as much as lies in our power. We feel it is an obligation imposed on every true friend of the industry. The present situation is intolerable. The stars must not be permitted to become the leeches and the parasites of the screen, sucking the lifeblood of the industry.

Principle and Personality

By W. Stephen Bush.

A YOUNG man, described as a nephew of the late Adlai E. Stevenson and secretary of State of Illinois, arose at the Chicago convention and gave much edifying testimony.

"I did at one time believe in censorship for motion pictures," said he. "Our state legislature had passed a law similar to that of Ohio, and while it was in the hands of the Governor and awaiting its fate men and women from all over the state came to Springfield and offered themselves as candidates for the office of motion picture censors. Now, when I took a close view of these candidates I saw my folly and I became an ardent convert to the freedom of the motion picture."

Of course we admit that censorship is a question of principle rather than personality. Just the same there is a significant relationship between principle and personality. A man with a red nose and bleary eyes may be a sincere advocate of teetotalism, but we know how confoundedly cynical this world of ours has become. A man with a double chin will never be taken seriously by an apostle of a strictly vegetarian diet.

No sensible man or woman will ever want to pose as the judge of other people's tastes and morals. Looking over our motion picture censors, we cannot help thinking of the silly and stupid work they have done and are still doing. We feel that the principle they embody must needs be wrong, just as we plainly perceive by the appearance and accoutrements of Falstaff recruits that they do not personify the great and glorious principle, preparedness.

Some recent and youthful entrants into this wonderful industry of ours have lately throbbed with pity for the poor censors, because we have launched some shafts of satire at their devoted heads. We urge them to repress their compassion. The average censor is impervious to criticism. It's absolutely over his head. The average legalized censor has but one faculty which is fully developed—the faculty of grasping the monthly salary check.

When we take an occasional shot at our Catonian sages in Pennsylvania, Ohio, Kansas or Maryland we have no idea of affecting them in any way whatever; we merely aim at the delectation of our readers.

Exhibitors' Convention Closes with Banquet

Merry Time in Hall of Hotel Sherman on Night of Monday, July 17—Five Hundred and Fifty Persons Present

THE banquet that closed the sixth annual convention of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America was held in the Louis XVI rooms of the Hotel Sherman Monday night, July 17. It was about midnight when the guests sat down, and it was close on four o'clock in the morning when they dispersed.

The writer had attended numerous gatherings of the kind in the history of the business, but none that created such a feeling of confidence in the future of the moving picture industry and such a keen sense of the growing importance of the exhibitor as this.

The three great branches of the business were well represented, a fact that proclaimed the welding of interests that have been mutual all along, although the get-together policy has only recently been adopted. This banquet signalized the combination of all the potential forces in the business to protect it from outside influences that tend to dwarf its growth and usefulness, and it also reflected a spirit of harmony and co-operation that made the future look bright with promise.

W. Stephen Bush, of the Moving Picture World, was toastmaster. With ready and apt speech, and in felicitous manner, he introduced the various speakers, never failing to inject a delicate touch of humor when opportunity offered. He thanked the meeting for the honor and caused Chicagoans to strut when he declared that all Eastern men are benefited by a short stay in the Windy City. He claimed that the democratic spirit is more clearly manifested in Chicago than in any other city, and declared that he would return to New York a better American than when he left it.

William R. Ross, of the Association of Commerce, was introduced as the chief speaker for the occasion. He extended a welcome to the delegates and other visitors from the 4,000 members of the association.

He referred to the trying days now upon us, with a world war and the consequent problems that confront our 100,000,000 people. Here moving pictures are given a great opportunity, and true patriotism can be fixed through their influence. The amount of money in a business he considered a small factor compared with taking the proper pride in one's work and making that work contribute to the country's welfare.

"The moving picture industry need not be afraid of censorship; what those in it should be afraid of is the censorship of those dear to them," he said.

He closed by expressing the hope that the men engaged in moving picture work would rise to the full height of their opportunities, knowing that the business is for the highest benefit of the people.

M. A. Choynski followed. He stated that he had been an exhibitor for twelve years, and that only now had the opportunity come to do certain things that are very important to the business, and with the hearty co-operation of the manufacturers he looked for their successful accomplishment.

Judge Tugwell, of Los Angeles, was the next speaker. He commended the convention for the election of Lee Ochs as president, and also for the appointment of F. J. Herrington as national organizer. He had also praise for Samuel L. Trigger, "the politician," and announced that with the three mentioned as leaders victory would crown the league's efforts during the coming year.

J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of Pathe

Scene of the Banquet Closing the Sixth Annual Convention at Chicago.

Exchange, Inc., in response to the chair, expressed his thanks for the fine reception given Miss Pearl White and himself by the convention.

F. J. Herrington delivered a comprehensive speech, after being very happily introduced by the toastmaster. He touched on censorship and asserted that it had been a failure for centuries. "Women demand clean, moral pictures and think that censorship will aid them," he said. He held that every exhibitor must clean his own house, or the state or federal government will clean it.

Sam Trigger was the next speaker, and complained that everyone who preceded him had talked shop, shop, shop. He had heard a lot about the exhibitor—"the great I am." This he considered "bunk." "Thank the manufacturers, who have made the exposition possible," he shouted with much energy. "Few know the amounts of money spent by them to make the exposition the success it has been," he continued. "Essanay has sent its photoplayers to the exposition every day, for two or three hours or more. The New York producers, who have sent their stars, have done so at great expense, not only for the liberal salaries paid these stars, but because of the stopping of work that involves twenty or thirty other people, who are all the time under salary. This has happened, to my knowledge, two or three times this week, as in the case of Vitagraph and Pathe."

Other speakers called upon were Robert R. Levy, Harry Reichenbach, V. R. Day, Sam Spedon, Alfred Hamburger, Miss Rose Tapley, Ed. J. Mock and William J. Sweeney.

There were present at the banquet over 550 guests, among whom were: J. A. Berst, Pearl White, Mr. and Mrs. Werkmeister and Mr. and Mrs. Bunn, Pathe Exchange, Inc.; Sam Spedon, Lillian Walker, Rose Tapley, Dorothy Wagner and Mr. and Mrs. John B. Rock, Vitagraph; Mr. and Mrs. John Bowman and Leigh Mann, International Film Service; V. R. Day, Henry Walthall, Richard C. V-L-S-E Entertains

S. E. Abel, Chicago Manager, Dines Vitagraph and Essanay Stars.

SIDNEY E. ABEL, Chicago manager of the V-L-S-E, who won for himself the title of "Prince of Entertainers" during convention week in the Windy City, entertained the stars of the Vitagraph and Essanay companies and the representatives of V-L-S-E at a dinner given in the Chicago Athletic Club on the evening of Sunday, July 9.

Although various other social functions were being held at the time, the Abel dinner attracted considerable attention in the big Chicago club. A reception committee of the club paved the way for this. Speeches were made by almost everyone who attended, and satisfaction was expressed by the stars present at being associated with the Big Four and of the wide distribution their art received as a result of this association.

Among those who attended were Edith Storey and Mrs. Storey, Antonio Moreno, Rose Tapley, Miss Wagner, of the Vitagraph; Sam Spedon, special representative of the Vitagraph; John Rock, western representative of the Vitagraph, and Mrs. Rock, Nell Craig, Fred E. Wright, of Essanay; Bryant Washburn and Mrs. Washburn and Richard C. Travers, of Essanay, and Gordon Laurence and Sidney E. Abel, of the V-L-S-E.

"CIVILIZATION" FOR MINNEAPOLIS IN AUGUST.

The premiere Mid-West presentation of Thomas H. Ince's eleven-reel peace allegory, "Civilization," will be presented in Minneapolis the last week in August by the Supreme Feature Film Company, of which the active members are Harry Rathner and M. H. Conhaim. Mr. Rathner has also purchased the rights of "Civilization" for five other states besides Minnesota and contemplates opening "Civilization" in fourteen cities during the months of September and October.

Last Days of the Chicago Motion Picture Exposition

Several Producing Companies Make Generous Displays--Players Receive Ovations--Mary Pickford Great Favorite.

THE eager crowd of expectant picture fans that awaited the arrival of the Twentieth Century Limited, at the La Salle street station, Saturday morning, July 15, reminded one of the old-time receptions given "Our Colonel" when he came to the city. Mary Pickford, the one star on whom every citizen of the fandom world can agree as being worthy of united adoration, was aboard. And when she alighted and her escorts enabled her to make her way to the waiting auto, the ovation was remarkable both as a tribute and a psychological incident.

Old as the drama is, one cannot recall an instance where thousands of admirers ever gathered to welcome a great actor and make her visit a triumphal entry; yet in ten years the moving picture has accomplished this feat!

At the Blackstone, where Miss Pickford was guest, another great gathering had assembled to do honor to the beloved little woman, who has brought so much brightness into the lives of men, women and children of all stations in life. Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and his staff had all they could do to convey the star to her room, where a rest was most essential to the grueling day's work that was ahead.

It was the day of days at the exposition, in the Coliseum. The afternoon crowds were the largest yet seen, the floor and the balconies being packed and progress through the aisles made almost impossible, though twenty extra police had been added to the force in charge. Standing on a table in the classically constructed Paramount booth, Miss Pickford smiled and talked and gestured to the enthusiastic fans for nearly two hours. Then she was taken back to the Blackstone for a rest.

In the evening a visit was paid to Orchestra Hall, where Miss Pickford addressed the large audience from the stage. Thence back to the exposition, where she arrived about 9.45 p. m., being accompanied by her co-star, Miss Pauline Frederick. The evening reception exceeded even that of the afternoon, highly gratifying as that was in the numbers present and in enthusiasm.

In the Paramount booth a large and inclusive staff of the company had gathered to do Miss Pickford and Miss Pauline Frederick honor. Among these were: Adolph Zukor, president; William L. Sherry, vice president; James Steele, secretary and treasurer; John Flynn, Lasky's publicity manager; Ben P. Schulberg, publicity manager Famous Players; Wallace Thompson, publicity manager Paramount; Carl Pierce, publicity manager for Morosco-Pallas, and the following branch managers: F. M. Brockell, Chicago; S. J. Stoughton, New York; D. Leo Denison, Detroit; W. C. Bachmeyer, Cincinnati; Russell Schmidt, Pittsburgh; Bert Barnet, Sr., Minneapolis; A. D. Flintom, Kansas City; M. H. Cohn, Denver; J. E. Allen, San Francisco; J. E. Tandy, Atlanta; Mr. Asher, Boston; also Al. Lichtman, special representative of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; George E. Carpenter, publicity manager for Salt Lake City and manager of the Paramount-Empress theater there; L. Marcus, president of the Notable Feature Film Co., Salt Lake; Herman Wobber, general manager Progessive Moving Picture Co., San Francisco., and Mr. Robinson, publicity manager, Boston.

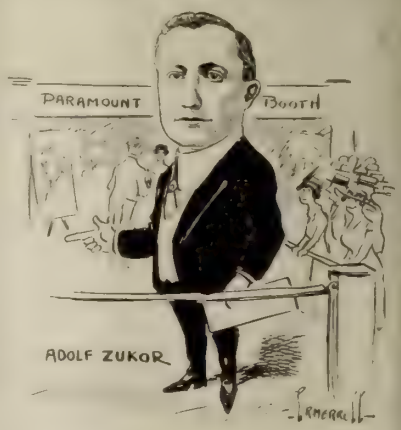
During Mary Pickford day at the exposition, the gate showed an attendance (by actual count) of 22,000 people.

Vitagraph Day at the Exposition.

Sunday, July 16, was one of the hottest days of the summer, thus far, the temperature registering high in the nineties; but even that temperature did not prevent moving picture fans from attending Vitagraph day at the exposition. Owing to the excessive heat the attendance during the afternoon was not up to the usual mark, but in the evening, when the temperature was cooler, the aisles were packed.

Edith Storey and Antonio Moreno were the only Vitagraph stars present, as Lillian Walker and Anita Stewart were detained in New York until they had finished certain scenes in which they were cast, so that they could not arrive until Monday morning.

The Vitagraph booth was surrounded on all sides, and a large police force was required to keep the throng moving.



About 8:30 p. m. the Vitagraph stars, accompanied by Sam Spedon, Nell Craig and Bryant Washburn, proceeded to the V-L-S-E theater, in which every available seat had been secured in expectation of seeing the visitors. Miss Storey and Mr. Moreno were taken to the stage and introduced by Mr. Spedon, each being received with great applause.

In the V-L-S-E booth, at the exposition, to receive the visiting stars were: S. E. Abel and F. W. Redfield, manager and assistant manager of the V-L-S-E Chicago branch office; John B. Rock, Chicago representative V-L-S-E; E. R. Pearson, branch manager, Kansas City, and the following members of the Chicago sales force: A. G. Gallos, B. I. Goldstein, I. Natkin and J. R. Clements.

Exactly at 12:01, Monday morning, July 17, an invitation performance was given in the Princess theater by the Chicago Herald to the moving picture stars in the city, delegates to the convention and exhibitors. The attraction was "Mr. Lazarus," in which Henry E. Dixey is featured. All the Essanay stars, the Vitagraph stars in the city, and Miss Alice Brady, of the World, were present, and an audience of about 600 people waited until 2:30 a. m., when the performance was concluded.

"Mother" Mary Maurice, 72 years old, and for many years connected with the acting staff of the Vitagraph, could not come on from New York on account of the tremendous heat. To her had been extended an unusual honor by the exposition committee. She was the only invited guest to the exposition by the committee, the members of which had offered to pay all expenses to and from the exposition and during her stay in this city. Many thousands of fans were disappointed because her kindly face was missing, but she can have satisfaction in the fact that she has so many friends and admirers among the great moving picture public.

Monday, July 17, Rich in Stars.

July 17 was set apart as Alice Brady day, but that estimable, clever, young star had been working like a beaver ever since her arrival in the city on Friday, July 14, so that this day could scarcely be termed her day. Every day since then she had been at the exposition, afternoon and evening, and won the admiration of the many thousands who met her.

Lillian Walker arrived Monday evening from New York, and so did Pearl White and Tom Moore, of the Pathe Exchange, Inc., accompanied by J. A. Berst, vice president and general manager. Anita Stewart set out from New York for the exposition, it is said, but never got this far.

Then there was the popular favorite, Harry Watson, Jr., best known by the title, "Musty Suffer," who also came in Monday morning on the Twentieth Century, accompanied by Della Connor, Dan Crimmins, H. H. McCollum and M. Moree. Their invaluable aids, Cameraman Walter Blakley and Property Man W. Thomas, Jr., also came along.

"Musty Suffer" Company in Front of Coliseum.

But these did not comprise all the stars that were present. Essanay was represented by Henry Walthall, Richard C. Travers, Bryant Washburn, Nell Craig and other favorites. Miss Craig, especially, has won her way into the hearts of the thousands of fans that surged around the Essanay booth during the exposition.

V. R. Day, Essanay's business manager, has been one of the hardest worked men at the exposition. I have never passed the Essanay booth that he was not present, instilling new life into his people and assisting in getting the crowds to keep in motion.

The bright particular stars for Monday, July 17, were Lillian Walker and Pearl White, and the Vitagraph and Pathe booths were surrounded by striving crowds both in the afternoon and evening.

Harry Watson, Jr., let everybody in Chicago know that he was in the city. He and his company and a special band of music left the Sherman Hotel about noon, for the exposition, accompanied by a retinue of not less than ten automobiles filled with admiring friends. On arrival at the Coliseum the party marched through the aisles headed by the band, both in the afternoon and evening, and drew all eyes their way.

On the stage of the theater in the Annex, in the afternoon, the "Musty Suffer" company made a scene from a comedy that will be released about three weeks later, under the title, "Who's Guilty?" Many hundreds of people were present at the time, and voiced their approval most eloquently, as it was the first time in their lives they had ever seen a picture, or part of a picture, in the making. The members of the company already mentioned appeared in the scene.

In the evening Harry Watson appeared in his famous three-round comedy boxing bout with a "strange unknown." The approaches to the roped arena in which the combat took place were unapproachable, owing to the crowds, and roars of laughter rolled up to the high skylights of the Coliseum.

This day vied with Mary Pickford day in the numbers present. The balconies were almost filled and the aisles on the floor were jammed, so that about sixty police officers were busy all the time in keeping the crowds in motion. Mary Pickford, however, still carried the banner, according to the count at the gate.

Closing Day of Exposition.

Tuesday, July 18, marked the close of the greatest exposition yet seen in the history of the moving picture industry. It was Universal day, and was looked forward to by thousands of fans who had not been slow to note the vigorous punches delivered by Universal, in the earlier days of the big show, to add to its success.

Joe Brandt had done big things the opening night of the exposition, and he had added to his company's reputation for doing things by the Universal Moving Picture Ball at the Hotel Sherman. Therefore, when it is said that Universal day brought no stars to the exposition, it can be readily understood that no blame attaches to the Universal executive. Arrangements had been made for the appearance of King Baggot, Mary Fuller and Violet Mersereau, according to the official program, but the Universal booth was occupied by a band instead.

I have been told that . . . is responsible for the falling down of Universal's castle, but why speak of it now since the incident has passed into the "spilt milk" region.

Lillian Walker was the only star of the evening, as Vitagraph came to the rescue nobly with Sam Spedon and John B. Rock as standard bearers to the fair Lillian. The crowds around the Vitagraph booth were the most eager since Mary Pickford's appearance, and thousands of admirers of the V-L-S-E-Vitagraph star pressed forward to get her photograph.

The "Musty Suffer" company, seeking needed rest after the strenuous efforts of the members to entertain the many thousands at the exposition on Monday, July 17, spent Tuesday as an outing day in Lincoln Park. There they participated in the making of comedy scenes, in which the little park auto train with its load of passengers cut quite a figure, and evoked great laughter from the crowds of children and their elders. George Kleine and the members of the "Musty Suffer" company returned to New York by the Twentieth Century, Wednesday, July 19.

The grand ball announced for the closing of the exposition, on Tuesday, July 18, was called off, as all the stars, with the exception of Lillian Walker, had already returned to their home studios, and without them it could not possibly have been a success.

Manufacturers' Exhibits at Exposition.

At the right of the entrance, immediately opposite the Universal booth, the booth of the Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., representing a pergola arbor effect, was situated. Both the Universal and Bluebird booths were built especially for the occasion.

The Universal booth was built to represent an Italian garden, the central feature of which was a flower vase and an electrolier. Large twisted Italian columns surrounded by caryatids stood at the corners. These supported the flower vases and were connected by a balustrade.

The Bluebird booth was finished in green and antique gold, and an assortment of cement garden furniture occupied the floor. An attractive electric fountain, such as may be seen in modern stage settings, occupied the center of the floor. The bowl was made of iridescent glass and there were a number of lights concealed therein.

The Decorators' Supply Co., of Chicago, is responsible for the decorative ideas of both booths.

The entire sales force of the Bluebird Co. was there at the opening night. I. Van Ronkel, the manager, was in charge. Assisting him were Messrs. Dunas, Miller, Eli Van Ronkel and Parnass.

The Balaban-Hershberg Film Attractions, exploiting "The Yellow Menace" serial and the Ivan productions, occupied the booth adjoining that of the Bluebird. Simeon Greiver, general manager, was in charge. Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Cobe, of the Unity Sales Corporation, were seen during the week at this booth. The attractions here were two young women and a young man wearing original costumes of the principals in "The Yellow Menace" serial.

The Typhoon Fan Co., of New York City, was represented by Ernst Glantzberg, the president. It might easily be said that this was the most comfortable booth in the exposition building, due to the unusual heat that prevailed during the entire exposition. The sweltering crowd sought relief here at all hours of the day. A set of the company's typical twin blowers were in motion from the opening until the close at night.

Sosman & Landis Co., Chicago, represented by P. L. Landis, secretary and treasurer, displayed a various assortment of miniature stage settings. Assisting Mr. Landis were Messrs. Mayer, Feinberg (of Minneapolis) and Francis.

The Decorators' Supply Co., Chicago, represented by A. F. Powers, displayed small models of ornamental plaster decorations, portable booths and lighting fixtures. This space excited keen interest among exhibitors and theater supply houses.

Exhibitors' Supply Co., Chicago, represented by G. A. Lincoln, displayed a general line of theater supplies.

Nicholas Power Co., New York City, represented by R. W. Horn, assisted by Messrs. Griffin and Lewis, displayed 6A and 6B models of Power's machines, and demonstrated a model of Geneva intermittent movement; also displayed the first grand prize certificate awarded to the company at the Panama-Pacific Exposition.

Newman Manufacturing Co., Cincinnati, represented by W. J. Newman, manager of the company's Chicago office, had on exhibition a line of brass lobby display frames.

Descriptive Film Co., Grinnell, Ia., represented by Dr. J. W. Billings, general manager and inventor of the "Descriptograph," and Leroy S. Spurlin, displaying the Descriptograph machine, a new apparatus which advocates the elimination of subtitles. The machine automatically throws the subtitles, etc., at the bottom of the screen while the film runs, without interruption.

McMahan & Jackson Film Co., Cincinnati, represented by E. J. Bauman, exploiting the feature subject, "Diana," made by the Pluragraph Co.

Alfred Hamburger Theatrical Enterprises, represented by Messrs. Beaumont, Peters and Hopson. A portion of this booth was also occupied by the Botanical Decorating Co., Chicago, manufacturers of artificial floral decorations for moving picture theaters.

George Kleine and Kleine Optical Co., Chicago, displayed a general line of supplies and theater equipment. The entire Harry Watson-"Musty Suffer" Comedy Company was present at the exposition. Their reception and activities are described under another head. In charge were W. E. Green, W. H. Jenner and M. E. Smith. George Kleine was also seen here frequently.

Amusement Supply Co., Chicago, displaying a general line of theater supplies, represented by P. Plummer, manager, and Messrs. Calkins and Sipe.

E. E. Fulton Co., Chicago, displaying a line of theater supplies and equipment, was represented by E. E. Fulton, R. H. Fulton and F. A. McMillan.

The Tom Phillips Slide Manufacturing Co. and the R. Williams Co., manufacturers of electric fountains, also occupied the booth jointly with the E. E. Fulton Co.

The booth of the General Film Co. was very attractively decorated with photographs of the players, artistically draped with red plush. The picture of nearly every prominent player could be seen at this booth. It was one of the largest in the exposition. The furniture was of green wicker, and the floor was covered with oriental rugs. The company was represented by F. C. Aiken, division manager; W. R. Skates, manager of the Chicago office, and Messrs. McDaniels, Rowley, Lansing and Mytinger. C. J. Megan, the company's advertising manager, was also present during the week.

The Enterprise Optical Co., Motiograph manufacturers, Chicago, displayed a complete line of hand-driven and motor-driven types of Motiograph machines. The booth was in charge of General Manager O. F. Spahr and John E. McAuley. They were assisted by Messrs. Hahn, Blakely and Furnay. It must be said that the Enterprise Co. made a fine impression on its visitors. The booth was in a very good location, and the machines on display were specially built for the occasion. There were several Motiographs finished in white and gold enamel, which were very attractive. Congenial Mr. Spahr and Mr. McAuley were there most of the time to greet the many callers.

The National Carbon Co., Cleveland, O., showing a line of projection carbons for all purposes, demonstrated the new silver-tip carbons for direct current. In charge were W. R. Kunzmann, Cincinnati, and Messrs. L. W. Fischer, O'Connor and Wilkins, of Chicago.

Automatic Ticket Selling & Cash Register Co., New York, was represented by E. S. Bowman, the company's secretary from New York. Arthur N. Klein, Chicago manager, and Messrs. Perrin, Rickey, Farrelly, Swiski and Howard. Several new types of automatic ticket selling machines were on display at this booth. One model was set in an attractive ticket booth. Mr. Bowman reported a number of actual sales during the exposition. A very useful souvenir was given away at this booth, in the form of a celluloid signature blotter.

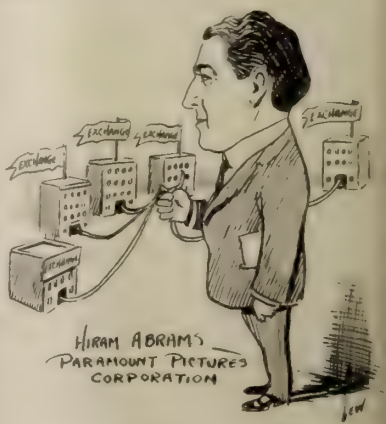
Photoplay Magazine, Chicago, represented by J. R. Quirk, general manager; Julian Johnson, editor; A. A. Cohn and Miss R. C. Slotkin, who was in charge of the booth.

The National Cash Register Co., Dayton, O., represented by M. L. Whitney, of the sales department, Dayton; A. J. Cron and H. M. Montgomery, displayed various types of National ticket-printing registers; also two-color ticket-issuing machines. A number of good sales and inquiries were reported.

Mutual Film Corporation, represented by B. N. Judell, of the Chicago office, and Messrs. Getzler, Noto, Mitchell and Duffy. The booth was tastefully decorated, and the company gave out souvenir "Charlie Chaplin Jumping Jacks" during the show. A young man dressed to represent Charlie Chaplin attracted the public to this booth.

Reel Fellows Club, Chicago, represented by R. R. Nehls, president, and M. G. Watkins, secretary, sold Reel Fellows badges at 50 cents apiece.

The F. I. L. M. Club, Chicago, also had a booth. H. A. Spanuth, of the Central Film Company, was in charge.



World Film Corporation was represented by E. C. Jensen, Chicago manager, and Messrs. Landis, Mordue, Phillip, Thompson and Ballard. Harry Reichenbach, the company's general representative from New York City, was also present.

The Celebrated Players Film Co., Chicago, exploiting new state rights subjects, was represented by Joseph L. Friedman and Messrs. Kusell, Feldman and Wolf.

Westinghouse Electric Manufacturing Co., Pittsburgh, manufacturers of projection equipment, motor generator sets, ventilating equipment, etc., were represented by H. A. Campe, East Pittsburgh; H. W. Clark, district publicity representative of Chicago, and Messrs. Campton, Price, Drake, Brundage and Smail.

International Film Service was represented by W. W. Johnson, publicity manager; John Bowman, manager of Chicago office; J. W. Burger, general manager of exchanges, of New York, and Messrs. Filkins, Friedlander, Mitchell, DeOto and Jay. The International booth was attractively decorated with paintings of the players. One of Irene Castle was particularly attractive.

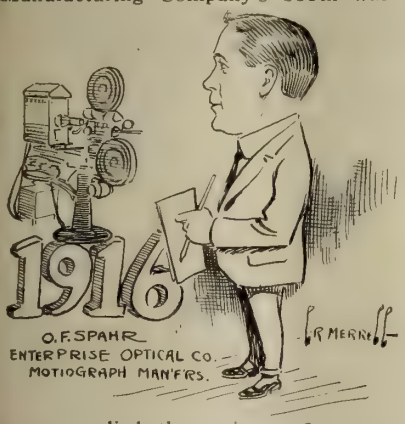
The musical instruments displayed at the exposition will all be completely described, in the "Music for the Picture" department, by C. E. Sinn.

On the left-hand side of the entrance, the Universal Film Manufacturing Company's booth was decorated in a very attractive manner, and in electric lights the word "Liberty" was placed, announcing a new Universal serial. Throughout the week Universal was well represented by a large staff. C. W. Potter was in active charge.



A. L. Randall & Co., Chicago, had a booth that looked like a spring blessing. There were artificial flowers of all descriptions and two fountains, which were surrounded by flowers. This company supplied the artificial flowers used in many of the exhibits.

The Moving Picture World booth was in charge of Paul C. Hinz, W. P. Milligan (New York) and Robert Marston. Other papers which had booths were: the Chicago Morning Telegraph, the Exhibitors Herald, Amusements, New York Morning Telegraph, Charles Geigerich; Motion Picture News, Wm. C. Estey; the Billboard, Wm. Page and A. C. Kellog; Chicago Herald, in charge of Louella O. Parsons; Chicago Examiner, Chicago Daily News, in charge of W. K. Hollander, James Fox and Hill Burnstein.

The Patriot Film Co., of New York, had a booth in charge of two young women attired as nurses. The booth was decorated with still pictures from "How Britain Prepared."

The Johnstown Automatic Register Company's booth was in charge of C. O. Bowman. This is a new register, which is manufactured in Johnstown, Pa., and will soon be offered to exhibitors.

The American Automatic Arc Co., Chicago, had a booth which displayed the new American arcs.

The Arcus Ticket Co., Chicago, manufacturers of roll tickets and regular theater tickets, had an attractive booth in charge of S. E. Peterson.

The Vitagraph Co. had a large space, attractively furnished, under the general supervision of Sam Spedon and John B. Rock. This booth was always popular because of the constant presence of Rose Tapley throughout the week.

The Essanay booth was in charge of Vernon R. Day. Mr. Day worked out a very pretty gray color scheme in this booth.

The Paramount-Famous Players-Lasky-Pallas-Oliver Morrosco combination booth was one of the finest exhibits at the show. At the rear of the booth were large oil paintings of Blanche Sweet, Pauline Frederick, Cleo Ridgely, Mary Pickford, Marguerite Clark, Geraldine Farrar and Hazel Dawn. There were miniature lakes at the front of this booth, in which goldfish swam, adding considerable charm to the general scheme.

The Pathe booth, in charge of A. Werkmeister, assistant treasurer of the Pathe Exchange, Inc., was another artistic creation. The furniture in this booth was Adam style mahogany.. There were pictures of the Pathe stars in oil paintings, placed advantageously. An interesting feature of the furnishings was a large reproduction of the Pathe trademark rooster, in marble. Mr. Werkmeister was ably assisted in his work by five beautiful young women.

Menger, Ring & Hamburg Co., Chicago, manufacturers of artistic frames, had an attractive display in charge of W. W. Wilson.

The Mid-West Supply Co., Chicago, dealers in picture theater equipment, had Power's 6B, Motiograph, Simplex and Baird projectors on display. G. A. Williams was in charge.

The Cahill Igoe Co., Chicago, printers, had a very attractive booth in charge of P. O. Garbour.

The Precision Machine Co., New York, was represented by L. W. Atwater, L. M. Porter and F. B. Cannock. A Simplex machine, in bold relief against red plush in the back of the booth, attracted considerable attention.

The Metro booth was voted one of the most artistic and novel creations at the exposition. The general scheme of decoration was Japanese, and the main attraction was an Hawaiian orchestra, which kept a crowd around the booth constantly. The whole booth was roofed with dark brown bamboo poles, and the whole exhibit was surrounded by a little stone wall covered with moss, with fountains at both ends. There were also miniature lakes with a small brood of ducklings, to add charm. The Chicago branch office must be credited with the nice taste and art reflected in the construction and in the general scheme. R. O. Proctor, J. B. Clark and J. A. Fitzgerald were in charge most of the time.

The Monarch Film Producing Co., Chicago, had an attractive booth, with several of the Monarch stars present. I. Ellfer was in charge.

"PURITY" AT THE LIBERTY.

Mutual's Picture Featuring Audrey Munson, with Some Eliminations, Is Permitted to Show.

AFTER a brief hold-up by the Commissioner of Licenses of New York city, the Mutual's picture featuring Audrey Munson, an artist's model, and entitled "Purity," was permitted to open at the Liberty theater, New York, on Saturday, July 22. Crowded houses are said to be the rule at that theater just now.

Newspaper comment on the picture was varied in nature, but none seemed to condemn the use of the nude figure in very severe terms. It is likely that "Purity" will have a considerable run at the Liberty.

JOHN ARTHUR, SCENARIO WRITER, DEAD.

John Arthur, who wrote the first working scenario of "Romeo and Juliet" for the forthcoming Metro-Quality production starring Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne, died July 21 at New York Hospital, New York City, of intestinal trouble. Mr. Arthur was only forty-four years old, but he had become so feeble that his associates had supposed him much older.

Mr. Arthur was a graduate of Northwestern University, Evanston, Ill., and became a member of the faculty of that institution, in the department of expression and dramatic art. Leaving professorial work for the stage, he had his own company and made many productions in the West. A few years ago the accumulations of years were wiped away in a bank failure, and he abandoned acting for the writing of plays and scenarios, specializing in revising the work of others. His bent was artistic rather than commercial. Mr. Arthur leaves a widow.

SUIT AGAINST BEACON FILMS DISCONTINUED.

The Great Northern Film Company has filed a notice of discontinuance of the action brought against the Beacon Films, Inc., in which it was alleged that the latter company was distributing a picture entitled "Germany's Battles at Verdun," in which had been used scenes from several Great Northern features. Before the case came to trial it was represented in affidavits filed by the Beacon Films that this defendant company had no interest in "Germany's Battle at Verdun" and that it was not booking that picture, also that the policy of the Beacon Films precluded it from handling anything pertaining to German battles. Upon these and other representations the plaintiff agreed to a discontinuance without costs to the defendant.

Nathan Hirsh, president of the Pioneer Feature Film Corporation, is enjoying a stay at Block Island. He and the company have chosen some very beautiful exteriors, which will show off to great advantage in the new sea picture. Sharks do not prevent them from enjoying their daily dips in the water.

Little Em Gorman, the seven-year-old, who is starring, will soon be a Kellerman Junior, performing clever stunts in the water.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

OHIO TO FIGHT CENSORSHIP.

President Ochs of National League Addresses Cleveland Exhibitors on Question.

THE foundation of a state-wide campaign to defeat the censorship law in Ohio was laid at a meeting of the Northeastern Ohio Motion Picture Exhibitors' League July 18, when Lee Ochs of New York, newly elected president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, was the principal speaker.

The meeting held in the league club rooms in the Republic Building was declared to be the most interesting session the local body has held in a twelve-month. More than fifty Cleveland exhibitors were present. Following the meeting Mr. Ochs was the dinner guest of Charles A. Megown, secretary of the local league.

"I believe Ohio has been the cause of retarding the advancement of the motion picture art by ten years," Mr. Ochs said during his address. "The advance of the business itself has been kept back by the state of Ohio," he added.

Mr. Ochs declared that wherever official censorship existed there must be a reason, and deplored the fact that Ohio motion picture exhibitors are divided on the censorship question, some favoring it and many being unalterably opposed to it.

"I personally am opposed to any form of censorship," Mr. Ochs declared. "I believe the public is the best judge of what they should see. No hired board can censor pictures for me. There should be a getting together of the biggest state in the union. I mean Ohio. The Cleveland exhibitors have done all they could to get the Ohio picture men together and your duty in Cleveland now is to get together the men in the rest of the state and fight censorship. I am personally anxious that you men in Ohio shall wipe out censorship and I believe you will do it.

"With no censorship the manufacturers will be able to give you and the public better pictures. I don't mean smutty pictures, indecent films, risque pictures or whatever you may call them, because you do not want that kind of stuff, but I feel that without censorship the class of pictures will be greatly improved.

"I suggest that this local league start to work at once. Show the manufacturers you are working hard to this end and you can have anything you want from them. It is your duty to break away from this burden of censorship. This must be done and it is your duty to do it."

In conclusion, Mr. Ochs urged the end of factionalism in Ohio and declared "Ohio is going after the scalp of censorship."

At the opening of his address he described the activities at the Chicago convention when the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry was formed. The need of such an organization has been keenly felt, he said, since the demise of the Motion Picture Board of Trade. The speaker placed great emphasis on the fact that no individual exhibitor or theater company could become a member of the new association without first becoming a member of the Exhibitors' League. He declared a fund of half a million dollars annually would be raised to combat adverse legislation and asserted that the league is now stronger in several ways than it has ever been before.

"I propose to make the national body the supreme court of the entire moving picture industry," Mr. Ochs declared. "We are going to be very strong, whether we want to or not. Co-operation and efficiency is what we want."

The speaker then discussed the deposit system for exhibitors and predicted that it would soon be eliminated through the efforts of the league.

Benjamin J. Sawyer, president of the local league, followed Mr. Ochs and branded the new association's program as "the most dangerous possible. The ammunition is all in the hands of the manufacturers," Mr. Sawyer declared. He asserted that by reason of stock affiliation between the film producers and the accessory manufacturers the exhibitors would be left in an "If you please sir," position.

He then reminded his hearers of the power of the screen and declared the exhibitors could and would use this power in their own behalf if necessary.

Samuel Bullock, who is chairman, and William J. Slimm, secretary of the League national grievance committee, followed Mr. Sawyer and declared that while it might be well to point out the possible danger in the new program, they believed it would work to the benefit of the exhibitors and prove splendidly successful.

Mr. Ochs then spoke again, declaring that the accessory men would be disposed to favor the exhibitors rather than the film producers on any vital issue.

The League members then discussed the efforts of the Cincinnati exhibitors to have a "get-together" meeting at Mansfield. Mr. Ochs advised against the Cleveland exhibitors officially attending any meeting not called by a body holding a national league charter. He suggested that W. H. Horsey, state secretary, attend the proposed Mansfield meeting and invite the Cincinnati exhibitors to apply for a charter.

Cleveland exhibitors are enthusiastic over the results of the Chicago meeting which they believe has given great impetus to the work of the league especially in Ohio.

Cleveland will figure largely in the national program because it will be the headquarters of the national arbitration and grievance committee.

The part the Cleveland body is to play in the national program and the manner in which the censorship fight is to be conducted are to be discussed at the next meeting.

Some of the problems to be taken up by the grievance committee are understood to be: Film rental discrimination rates; unfair competition; the deposit system, and advance payments for film.

It is also understood the local league is to undertake a membership campaign.

LEE OCHS HONORED.

Three hundred or more exhibitors, exchange men and manufacturers foregathered Thursday, July 20, at the headquarters of the New York Local, 218 West Forty-second street, to do honor to Lee A. Ochs, the recently-elected national president.

Mr. Ochs was agreeably surprised at the unusually large gathering and expressed his deep felt gratitude. An informal but delightful luncheon was served under the personal supervision of I. N. Hartstall. The luncheon was heartily enjoyed. At the end of the feast Mr. Ochs arose and thanked the exhibitors for their warm and loyal support of his candidacy in Chicago. To the film men present he said he was with and for them and would see that they got a square deal. Joe Brandt, of the Universal, on behalf of his company, presented Mr. Ochs with a magnificent floral horseshoe. Among those present were: Arthur James, of Metro; S. P. Reibon, of Big "T" Film; E. Saunders, of Metro; Mr. Shaeffer, of World Film; Mr. Seeley, of Pathe; Mr. Bauerbaum, of General Film; Mr. Sennett, of Paramount; H. Clark Mooney, of Kemble Film; E. J. O'Donnell, John Wittman, Louis Blumenthal, Tom Howard, Willie Brandt of Brooklyn, C. F. Haring, Samuel Bock, Adolph Weis, Mr. Rownheimer, F. J. Dollinger, R. Israel, Otto Lederer, James Kellock, Mr. Martino, B. Zeidman and many others.

V-L-S-E CUTS MELON.

Saturday was profit-sharing day for the employees of Vitagraph-Lubin-Selig-Essanay, Inc., and every member of the organization who had been an employee thereof for the past thirteen weeks, from porter to manager, received a very substantial check. This is in accordance with the custom established by this concern nine months ago, which permits every employee to receive a certain proportion of the money made. Business has been so good that the profit-sharing checks for the period just ended was 79.6 per cent. higher than that of the preceding period. This is the kind of incentive that makes for loyalty and efficiency, and is one of the reasons for the V-L-S-E success.

Universal Buys Laemmle and Powers Exchanges

Big U is Said to Have Paid One Million for Eight Distributing Offices—Re-alignment of Managers

ONE of the most important announcements was made by the Universal Film Company last week when an official statement was sent out to the press that President Carl Laemmle and Treasurer P. A. Powers had sold out their exchanges to that company for the sum of $1,000,000 in cash.

When the Universal was formed several years ago these two men retained their exchanges in the west and middle west and up until now have operated them independent of the company. The exchanges in Buffalo, Cleveland, Cincinnati and Indianapolis were owned by P. A. Powers, who is the second largest stockholder in the Big U, and Mr. Laemmle owned exchanges in Minneapolis, Des Moines, Omaha and the Laemmle Film Service in Chicago.

From time to time there have been rumors to the effect that Laemmle and Powers had sold their private holdings to the Universal and since the Chicago show opened it has been stated that Mr. Laemmle had disposed of his Universal stock to John D. Spreckles, the California millionaire. But this has been strongly denied by Mr. Laemmle and the other officials of this organization. The stock of the Universal is almost equally divided between Laemmle and Powers and neither have any intentions of disposing of their holdings.

About a year ago it was rumored throughout the industry that both Laemmle and Powers had turned over their exchanges to the Universal for a large sum, but this was denied and later turned out to be simply a trade wind, the source of which could not be traced.

When the convention started in Chicago, many of the film folk were surprised at the large number of exchangemen and other Universalites who had come to town. It was evident that something was going to happen, but few of the moving picture people were able to predict what that something would be.

Among the first to arrive was President Laemmle; then came General Manager Joe Brandt; he was followed by P. A. Powers, and after him came M. H. Hoffman, general manager of exchanges, and his assistant, Manny Goldstein. Then came the exchange managers from Detroit, Buffalo, Minneapolis, Omaha, Des Moines, Indianapolis, Cleveland, St. Louis and Kansas City. Immediately upon their arrival they all went into private session at the "Universal Headquarters" at the Hotel Sherman and there they remained several hours. After their departure Sunday night of July 16 the news was given out. This is a very important move on the part of the Universal and the taking over of these exchanges is going to greatly improve conditions in the Universal field. Such a transaction is usually accompanied with certain changes, and this is no different from the rest. One of the first announcements General Manager Hoffman made was that he would establish district managers throughout the country, and that the object in calling in the exchange managers was to decide on the men for these new offices. Accordingly he announced that F. C. Cropper, who has been manager of the Universal exchange in Kansas City, will be district manager of the Middle West, and will have the exchanges in Omaha, Wichita, Oklahoma City and Des Moines in his territory. His office will be in Kansas City.

George Weeks will have supervision of the Detroit, Cincinnati, Cleveland, Buffalo and Indianapolis offices, with headquarters at Detroit.

William Oldnow of Atlanta, Ga., will have the Southern District, which includes Louisville, New Orleans, Memphis, Jacksonville, Nashville, Baltimore and Washington, with the office at Atlanta.

M. L. Markowitz, of San Francisco, will have the territory west of Denver, with his main office at Los Angeles.

Maurice Fleckles will have the central division, which will include Chicago, Minneapolis and the territory between here and Kansas City.

The eastern division will have Manny Goldstein as District Manager, and his jurisdiction will include New York, Philadelphia, Boston and all of New England.

All of these men have been with the Universal a long time and here again this company has shown that it lives up to its slogan: "When we have a vacancy we hire an office boy," for every one of these men have worked themselves up in the Universal employ and have justly earned the tribute which has been paid them.

It is the intention of General Manager Hoffman to hold a meeting of district managers every sixty days in Chicago at which time he will listen to the reports of these men and discuss various questions which have come up in the meantime and listen to the suggestions which the district managers may have for improving their particular fields.

"This is one of the most important moves we have made in some time," said President Laemmle, while discussing this subject to our representative. "It means that the Universal is going to do greater business than ever before, and it proves unquestionably that we have the greatest moving picture concern in the universe. We have the finest program today and the exhibitor knows it, and admits it, but we also have the greatest organization in the field.

"During the past few months we have knowledge of the weakening conditions in certain sections of the industry. Some of the largest concerns have been close to shutting up their studios. But the Universal I think has proved to the exhibitor during the Chicago show, and to the public, that it is always in front. We don't place our stock on the market and not a single share of it is for sale. We don't need to sell it; in fact we are bigger and stronger than ever. We have done more business this year than in any year since we started and next year we are going to do even more. Today we know before we start a picture just what length it is going to be, and exactly what it is going to cost. Can you show me another firm that knows these things. This is because we run our business systematically. The day has passed when our directors can start a picture without knowing how much it is going to cost us. Efficiency is the keynote to it all, and that's just what we have today in the Universal.

"When the Universal gave up its beautiful and modern studio at Leonia, New Jersey, which cost us $500,000, and sent our ten Eastern companies to Universal City, our competitors were amazed at the move. But we found that we could make better pictures with those same companies out in Universal City, where we have tremendous facilities, and save at the very least $8,000 a week. The cost of running the studio at Leonia was $12,000 per week, and we are now making better pictures, with those same companies, at a cost of $4,000 a week. Simply a question of efficiency, you see.

"Another thing we have done which will surprise some of the other companies is to do away with stars. Today when an actor signs a contract with the Universal he agrees to play whatever parts he may be called upon to play. In other words he becomes a member of the Universal stock company. He may play the lead in a picture today and a small part tomorrow. This cuts down the large list of those who we used to keep just to play small parts in our productions. How does it work out? Well, ask the actor. One or two of them have objected and we have immediately notified them they could leave us if they didn't like our way of doing business. But they preferred to remain. The day of the actor dictating to the manufacturer what he will do and what he will not do has passed, and the Universal is now telling the actor what he can expect. If he doesn't like our method of doing business he will not be prevented from leaving. In other words this industry is becoming more conservative and we are trying to run it as any other big, successful business is run. This will be more noticeable during the next year than it is now."

METRO'S NEW VIOLA DANA FEATURE.

Viola Dana, the charming and gifted little Metro star who made her debut on the Metro program in "The Flower of No Man's Land," is at work on another five-part wonderplay. The next offering, starring Miss Dana, is called "Out of the Darkness." It is an unusual story, of great power and with many gripping dramatic situations, artistically blended with delightful lights, scenes and comedy relief.

"Out of the Darkness" was written especially for Miss Dana by John H. Collins, who will also direct the star and a strong supporting cast in the production. Mr. Collins was associated with Miss Dana when she was starring on the Edison program, and came to Metro when she was engaged for that program.

For Better Plays By Epes Winthrop Sargent

Need for More Variety and Less Personal Prejudice in the Selection.

NONE are so blind as those who do not wish to see. Lately Jesse L. Lasky wrote that only the author, of all the factors in photoplay, had failed to keep pace with the general march of improvement. Mr. Lasky was immediately jumped upon with intelligent enthusiasm. With a promptness that smacks of the carefully prepared and "planted" press campaign, he announced that he appreciated the truth of these remarks and that he had "established a scenario department along new and original lines." Thereupon Mr. Lasky gained two inches of space for every inch his first complaint had found and he was lauded as the man who was personally pulling up the sun upon the dawn of a new day. Not a single person seems to have sat down to figure out just what the new dispensation meant. Here is what it means:

Mr. Lasky had maintained a staff of writers at his studio in the west. They wrote to order. He brought east Hector Turnbull, a former dramatic critic. If freelance writers will do precisely what Mr. Turnbull tells them he wishes done, he will perhaps buy their stories. They must, however, sink their own personalities. They must remove from their stories every trace of originality. They must make a synopsis of Mr. Turnbull's improvement on their ideas, and all the stories will be stamped by the same seal of deadening approval. It is not sufficient that the story is good. It must be such a story as Mr. Turnbull approves. He might better write them all himself. He deals with the freelance instead of the studio writer, but the result is the same. They are all Turnbull. This is not a new or original idea. It is the same old reconstruction stuff that has been eating at the vitals of the business since production began.

Mr. Turnbull may know the drama, but he does not appear to know photoplay. We have seen an original script and a Turnbullized version. The former was better calculated to make an entertaining play, but it was not Turnbull. Mr. Lasky has not hit upon the solution of the problem.

In the first place a dramatic critic is about the last man to place at the head of the script staff. He is looking for drama, for dramatic situation. He does not consider the story so much as the matter of the moment. And photoplay is not drama. It is photoplay; more nearly akin to fiction than to drama, but begotten of both though possessed of an individuality of its own, strong and well marked. The ideal editor would be an old magazine editor who has studied the new art without prejudice. He must not compare it with fiction nor yet seek a drama. He must look for photoplays and be competent to tell them when he sees them.

In the second place, he must realize the value of variety. He must see many men of many minds and encourage them to write along their lines and not in accordance with his own ideas. He must be a man so broad of mind that he does not even favor those plays that are most nearly in accordance with his individual judgment. He must purchase to gain as wide a diversity of thought as is possible.

He must train these men to express their ideas in action. He must not be content with a thousand-word synopsis for a five-reel story. A five-reel story should carry as much plot as the average novel and the average novel cannot adequately be condensed into a thousand words. Each author should be encouraged to express his ideas in action in harmony with the nature of the story. He must not be shown one or two plays that shall serve as standards. He should read Munsterberg and Lindsay and be encouraged to try and realize their ideals in the light of his own wisdom and from his personal point of view.

Then, and then only, will photoplay be something spontaneous and free, not trammeled by the narrow views of a dozen men nor downtrodden beneath the hoofs of hobbies ridden by fanatics.

It is not a case of money alone—though it is discouraging to be offered a hundred dollars for a five-reel play and then be told that thirty thousand dollars will be expended in its production. Money alone will not suffice. Better plays may sometimes be bought for five hundred than for a thousand dollars and liberality is not extravagance. Money must be spent, but it must be spent intelligently to gain variety of product and production.

As matters stand there is no variety and no chance for variety. The script must please the editor or his employer, must accurately represent his personal ideas, no matter how erroneous those ideas may be, and often only one style of script is available since the entire energies of the production company are centered upon one theme. Take the Famous Players, for example. They have for stars Mary Pickford, Marguerite Clark, Ann Pennington, Louise Huff and Marguerite Courtot, all of whom work along the same general lines. Another company specializes in Vampires and another can see only western stories with rugged male leads. If we get little girls, they all act the same way, we get one general brand of vampires and one trade-marked style of westerners where we might have three styles of each with a more diversified scheme of production.

The only new and original scheme of script purchase will be an editor who knows what a photoplay is and who seeks to get as many different sorts of photoplays as he can. This has not yet arrived.

Pallas Engages Florence Vidor.

FLORENCE VIDOR, the talented beauty whose work under the Vitagraph banner has been attracting considerable attention of late, has been engaged by Pallas Pictures to appear in important ingenue roles for the Paramount program. Although scarcely twenty years of age, Miss Vidor has achieved considerable success in the silent drama, one of her most noteworthy portrayals having recently been presented in "The Yellow Girl." Prior to her affiliation with the Vitagraph Company in Santa Monica, she appeared on the screen under various brands in the East.

Florence Vidor.

The initial production in which Miss Vidor will appear for Pallas Pictures is "The Intrigue," a story of present international conditions by Julia Crawford Ivers. This photoplay will also mark the return to the screen of Lenore Ulrich, who is starred. Supporting Miss Ulrich in the role of the Countess Sonia, Miss Vidor is given what is expected to result in her greatest dramatic effort in motion pictures.

Miss Vidor is the daughter of a rancher from the old school and a lover of the great outdoors. She recently made an automobile trip from Houston, Texas, to San Francisco during which time she camped out and cooked her own meals the entire trip. She has many friends among the Indians on the Utah reservation, where she spent the greater part of her childhood days.

NEW THEATER AT ENDICOTT.

F. and B. H. Dittrich and R. L. Keeves are to build a moving picture theater at Endicott, N. Y. They have purchased a lot 75 by 100 feet at the corner of Washington and Monroe avenues, that place upon which the photoplay house is to be constructed. The theater will seat 800, and it is expected to be ready for opening in November next. B. H. Dittrich, who has had considerable experience in managing picture theaters, is to be manager of the new house.

KARPEN A UNIVERSAL FILM EDITOR.

C. A. Karpen, film expert, attached to the Universal studios at Leonia Heights, N. J., did not accompany the exodus to Los Angeles, but has been transferred to the main office of that company at 1600 Broadway, New York, where he is engaged in editing film.

Spoor Announces Next Walthall Feature

"The Misleading Lady" Is a Five Part Subject Which Will Be Released Through V-L-S-E —Has Interesting Features

PRESIDENT George K. Spoor of Essanay announces that construction of Henry B. Walthall's next feature has been completed and that the play, "The Sting of Victory," will be offered through V-L-S-E early in August. It will mark Mr. Walthall's first appearance since "The Strange Case of Mary Page" and his first five-act picture since "The Misleading Lady."

The several hundred exhibitors who visited the Essanay studios the day before the opening of the convention saw Mr. Walthall appearing before the camera.

Both Mr. Spoor and Mr. Walthall are eminently satisfied with the new production, the former because it gives him a feature of unusual merit to offer exhibitors and the latter because he considers it typical of his greatest work on the screen.

In it the well-known Walthall talent has full sway; his deep emotional powers and interpretive abilities rule the story. To test his art to the utmost, Mr. Walthall appears in a double role, that of two brothers of opposite dispositions. What an opportunity this gives him can readily be imagined.

Heading the supporting cast is Antoinette Walker, famous on the stage. She attained especial prominence because of her success with David Warfield in "The Music Master." She has starred in numerous other Belasco productions.

Thomas Commerford, Essanay's "old man of the screen," who has portrayed so many lovable parts, also appears in the supporting cast. John Lorenz and Anne Leigh, also known in Essanay leads, make up the other principals.

Although everything was undertaken on a large scale, the picture was completed in four weeks. Essanay's largest studio was set aside for this picture alone. As soon as Director J. Charles Haydon completed his exteriors he found his principal interior sets ready and waiting.

The First Regiment of the Illinois National Guard was used for several battle scenes, which were taken at Camp Logan, the guard rifle range near the Wisconsin and Illinois state line. The boys received their call to the border, oddly enough, just as the last scene was taken. Eight cameras were utilized for these scenes, each man getting about 200 feet apiece, from which the required 600 feet could be selcted.

The story deals principally with the affairs of two brothers of a Southern family. One is an officer in the United States army and with the outbreak of the Civil War he retains his commission. He is spurned by friends, relatives and the girl he had hoped to marry.

As military commandant he returns to his own neighborhood after the war and finds the plantation hardly more than a waste and his brother deep in the power of a mortgage shark whose son aspires to marry their sister.

When the lender is found dead, the reckless brother is accused. He must come before the military commander for trial. The brother, who will not swerve from his duty, is about to sentence him to hang when a negro confesses he killed the man.

It is then "the sting of victory" is experienced by the officer when he sees the girl he loves throw herself into the arms of the ne'er-do-well brother.

Varied Assortment of Bluebirds Ready

Early August Releases Include a Number of Excellent Subjects—Many Leading Players Featured

THE Bluebird management looks with complacency upon the early weeks of the forthcoming theatrical season, assured that their exhibitors will be abundantly fortified with excellent class releases to combat the opposition of the regular dramatic houses. There have been produced and made ready for release enough features to carry the program through the Autumn months, in a varied and entertaining manner, each production calculated to back the national advertising the Bluebird people are promoting in the mutual interest of themselves and the exhibitor.

The early August releases have been announced: Harry Carey, Olive Fuller Golden and a company of typical plainsmen in the Western comedy, "Love's Lariat;" Louise Lovely, Francelia Billington, Rupert Julian and a sterling comedy-drama organization in "Bettina Loved a Soldier;" and "Little Eva Edgarton," featuring Ella Hall, Herbert Rawlinson, and Robert Z. Leonard's company. These three releases carry the program to August 28, when "The Girl of the Lost Lake" will be presented.

Myrtle Gonzalez, Val Paul and Fred Church will be featured in "The Girl of the Lost Lake," following the great success attained by Miss Gonzalez and Mr. Paul for their work in "The Secret of the Swamp." In preparation for early showings are "Saving the Family Name," "The Social Buccaneers," and "The Clique of Gold," three features based upon popular fiction of wide vogue.

"Saving the Family Name" is a Smalley production with Phillips Smalley leading man for Mary MacLaren, the heroine of "Shoes." Lois Weber furnished the scenario along lines of an idea advanced by Evelyn Heath's writtings. The first showing of this feature, to the employees of Bluebird during the past week, made every one who saw it eager to have it scheduled forthwith, so greatly were they impressed with its forcefulness and charm.

"The Social Buccaneers" will mark the advent of Louise Lovely as leading lady for J. Warren Kerrigan, clever players who have previously been lone stars in Bluebirds. Jack Conway directed the production, F. McGrew Willis adapted the scenario from Frederick S. Isham's widely read novel. This will be Miss Lovely's third change of directors in as many successive productions, the Australian beauty having passed from Joseph De Grasse to Rupert Julian and on to Jack Conway, through "The Grasp of Greed," "Bettina Loved a Soldier," and finally to "The Social Buccaneers."

"The Clique of Gold," based on Emilie Gaboriau's famous novel of the same title, will have Elsia Jane Wilson featured with Rupert Julian her leading man and director. Francelia Billington, Douglas Gerrard, Tom Lockwood, Hobart Henly and Sydney Dean will also be in the company. E. J. Clawson adapted the scenario.

WILL C. SMITH RETURNS FROM CHICAGO.

Will C. Smith, assistant general manager of the Nicholas Power Company, who has been absent from New York attending the motion picture convention and exposition at Chicago, returned to New York very enthusiastic with the success of the Chicago show. Mr. Smith asserts that the exposition was the most largely attended of any yet held and was particularly pleased with the interest shown by exhibitors, exchangemen and the public in the Nicholas Power Company display, and he feels that a great deal of good will be derived by the entire industry from both the convention and exposition.

'EM GORMAN TO STAR FOR PIONEER.

Em Gorman is going to star in a new production for the Pioneer Feature Film Corporation. The numerous houses that have run "The Little Orphan" featuring this world-famous child, will be delighted with her summer picture. A story full of heart-interest, pathetic and appealing to everybody, and whereby the child Bernhardt can pronounce her emotional and dramatic qualities.

Em assures her exhibitor friends that she will try and please their audience, as she intends to cry with real tears, and also make them feel happy.

CANADIAN FILM MEN VISIT NEW YORK.

A. H. Fischer of Montreal and Meyer Fischer of Toronto, both connected with the United Photoplays, Limited, of the Canadian cities named, were recent welcome visitors at the office of the Moving Picture World. The brothers were in town on a brief business trip.

August Big Month for Kalem

Will See First Release of New Series and Early Ivy Close Comedies.

INSTEAD of bringing a "summer letup" August bids fair to be a month of unusual activity for the Kalem forces. The initial releases of that company's new series production, "The Girl from Frisco," will be seen early in August, while the month also brings the early Ivy Close comedies. In addition the one-a-week releases of "Hazards of Helen" and "Ham and Bud" comedies are also continued in the Kalem output.

Scene from "Daisy the Demonstrator" (Kalem).

All of these productions will be found in the regular service of the General Film Company. Ivy Close comedies get off to their start with the last Friday release in July, when "The Girl and the Tenor" is issued. The first week of August brings the second Ivy Close comedy, "Peaches and Ponies," on Friday, August 4. On the following Friday, August 11, "Daisy the Demonstrator," another Ivy Close comedy is issued.

These new comedy releases are all of one reel length. In addition to the famous English beauty in the leading parts, Henry Murdock, the acrobatic comedian who achieved such popularity in Sis Hopkins' comedies, is seen in prominent roles. Arthur Albertson, William McKey, Mary Taylor-Ross, Frances Nemoyer and C. D. Perushi are others seen in the all-star casts. Robert Ellis is in charge of the direction.

"The Heart Menders," is the one-reel comedy that will mark the first appearance of Ham and Bud on the August schedule, being released Tuesday, August 1. Ethel Teare is also seen in this single reeler which finds Ham and Bud leading a jolly life as menders of marital breaks. The same week will also see the release on Saturday, August 5th, of "A Mystery of the Rails," a "Hazard of Helen" which finds Helen Gibson performing new feats of daring to live up to her reputation as a fearless screen star.

Four episodes of "The Girl from Frisco" series are scheduled for release through General Film exchanges during August. Wednesday, August 9th, brings the initial episode of this series featuring Marin Sais and True Boardman, this two reel issue being titled "The Fighting Heiress."

"The Torquoise Mine Conspiracy" follows on Wednesday, August 16th. It was in filming this episode that the company encountered such dangers in the Mojave Desert. "The Oil Field Plot," which has its setting in the Bakersfield oil district, is then issued on Wednesday, August 23rd, while the month closes with the release on August 30th of "Tigers Unchained," fourth episode in the series.

In addition to Marin Sais and True Boardman, others seen in the casts of the four "Girl from Frisco" episodes are Frank Jonasson, E. Forrest Taylor, Ronald Bradbury, Edward Clisbee, B. Furey, Jack MacDonald, Rupert Dell and Hart Oxie.

Clara Kimball Young at Solax Studio

With Conway Tearle and Paul Capellani as Principal Support in Cast of "The Common Law"—Work is Well Under Way.

ON her return from the Chicago Convention last week Miss Clara Kimball Young and the supporting company engaged by Director General Albert Capellani plunged at once into the production of Robert W. Chambers' famous novel, "The Common Law," at the Solax studio in Fort Lee, N. J. In the absence of the star the director and his staff had prepared the majority of the interior settings for the picture so that there would be no delay in getting started.

The engagement of Conway Tearle to play the part of Kelly Neville, the artist, opposite Miss Young in the role of Valerie, the model, is of unusual interest. Mr. Tearle is one of the best known leading men on the American stage. He is recognized as a supremely capable actor of the modern school and has appeared as the principal support for many noted stars, including Nazimova, Frances Starr and Grace George. In pictures he has been in all-star casts with Famous Players and Lasky.

Paul Capellani needs no introduction to Miss Young's followers as he has appeared opposite her in several of her biggest pictures, including "Camille," in which he played Armand, a role he had played with Mme. Bernhardt on the Paris stage. In the screen version of "The Common Law" Capellani, who is a brother of the director, Albert, will play the part of Querida, a strong characterization that will give him opportunity to win new laurels.

Among others cast to play parts in the earlier scenes of the picture are Lillian Cook, well known to the screen for her many engaging ingenue impersonations; Julia Stewart, who has played "grande dames" in a number of Miss Young's pictures; Charles Craig, one of the best known character actors on the screen, and Lydia Knott, who plays the part of Valerie's mother.

Gaumont Releases.

Week of August 6 Presents Some Interesting Single-Reel Subjects on the Mutual Program.

NO PHOTODRAMAS are scheduled for release by Gaumont the week of August 6, but three single reels will come from this company's laboratories for Mutual Service. August 6 "Reel Life," the Mutual Magazine in Film, will answer the patriotic demand for preparedness by showing pictures of "The Making of a Naval Apprentice." These have been taken at the U. S. Training Station at Newport, R. I. They show the youth from the day he enters the service as a raw recruit until he is ready to serve his country as "the man behind the gun." Another division of this reel will take spectators on a visit to the largest duck farm on Long Island. As about 5,000 ducks are shipped to the New York market from this farm every week, the magnitude of the place can be imagined. The duck is shown from the egg until he goes to market and to the manufacturer of feather beds.

The second Gaumont release of the week is "See America First." This appears August 9 as a trip to Delaware Mountain Gap and the Pocono Mountains. As this territory is one of the most familiar summer playgrounds of the Atlantic States, it will be a welcome series of views both for those who have enjoyed vacations there and for those who have only read of its summer glories. On the same reel will appear a topical cartoon from the pen of Harry Palmer.

The third Gaumont release of the week will be The Mutual Weekly. This will have views from the border among its current news pictures.

Mary Pickford in "Hulda from Holland"

Famous Players Production Exhibited in Principal Cities Before Its Scheduled Date by Paramount

SO KEEN was the interest manifested in Mary Pickford's latest Famous Players production, "Hulda from Holland," that it was decided to permit the exhibitors in the principal cities throughout the country to book the picture before its scheduled release date, July 31, on the Paramount Program. One of the immediate effects of this decision was the appearance of the production in Chicago last week at the time of the exhibitors' convention while the star herself was in the Windy City.

The success of the production was phenomenal even for a Mary Pickford subject and the lavish praise which was bestowed upon "Hulda" at Chicago has been echoed by the other cities in which the photoplay has been given its respective premiers.

"Hulda from Holland" was produced under the direction of John B. O'Brien, who also directed Mary Pickford in "The Foundling," one of her more recent successes. As the title suggests, the story is Dutch in its setting, the action opening in Holland and then being transferred to America, where it centers in the heart of the Pennsylvania Dutch settlements and in New York City. For the purely Dutch scenes a complete village was erected, town pump and all, and a number of interesting types were secured by the director to serve as villagers. There is no character more interesting or more pronounced than the Pennsylvania Dutchman and it was therefore decided to take the players to the Keystone State for those scenes which transpired in that locality.

Though Mary Pickford created a sensation by her enacting of the Italian character in "Poor Little Peppina," it was the verdict of the press and of the public that Hulda was even more appealing from a personal standpoint than Peppina. The production abounds in those homely little domestic scenes which endear a character in the eyes of the audience and everywhere that Hulda goes she takes with her three of the most adorable little Dutch children that have ever been seen.

The story concerns itself with the sudden death of Hulda's father in the dyke country and her valiant efforts to look after her three tiny brothers until her wealthy Uncle Peter sends for her to bring the children to Pennsylvania. He meets them in New York, but is injured and removed to a hospital without any means of identification.

The children are in despair until a kindly landlady takes pity on them and is the indirect means of Hulda's meeting with the young son of a railroad president who is endeavoring to force Uncle Peter to sell him a right of way through the farm. From that point on the dramatic note in the story becomes increasingly intense in the efforts of all concerned to locate the stubborn old Dutchman and in the gradual development of the romance between Hulda and the president's son.

Though there is a great deal of pathos and dramatic action in the story, there is an unlimited amount of comic relief in the situations arising between Hulda and the three irrepressible children. Imagine Hulda mending her little brother's pantaloons without the formality of removing them. Not she—Hulda simply puts him over her knees and plies needle in the required spot while he kicks up his heels regardless of the imminent danger of being sewed fast to his apparel. That, however, is only one of the many funny scenes which occur in the picture with such frequency that one is at a loss to describe the photoplay as anything but a big slice from all the emotions of everyday life.

In support of Miss Pickford there have been gathered several prominent players, among them Frank Losee, John Bowers, Russell Bassett, Charles E. Vernon and Haral Hollacher.

Exchanges Buy "How Britain Prepared"

Jones, Linick and Shafer Get Illinois and Indiana —Monarch Feature Film Co. of Kansas City Takes Kansas and Nebraska, Iowa and Missouri—Emanuel Mandelbaum Gets Ohio

FOLLOWING the return of Al Lichtman, the general manager of the Patriot Film Corporation, from his trip to Chicago and Detroit last week, that company has announced the sale of state rights to a number of the most important exchanges in the country. Messrs. Jones, Linick and Shafer, the owners of one of the largest theatrical and picture organizations in the middle west, have purchased the rights to the States of Illinois and Indiana, and will handle the production through their Central Film Exchange, of Chicago. The production is at the present time playing in the Colonial theater, in Chicago, which is owned by Jones, Linick and Shafer.

Emanuel Mandelbaum, who owns one of the most important exchanges in the middle west, has secured the rights to the State of Ohio, and the Monarch Feature Film Co., also an important factor in their territory, has bought the states of Kansas, Nebraska, Iowa and Missouri.

During his trip Mr. Lichtman also arranged for a number of important showings. The Detroit opera house, of Detroit, Mich., has booked the production for a run of four weeks, and the theater in Grand Rapids, Mich., has booked the production for an indefinite run. Other bookings have been arranged for, pending the sale of state rights.

The Boston Photoplay Co., which bought the rights to all of the New England States, reports splendid business on "How Britain Prepared" throughout their territory. The timeliness and the publicity value of the picture has made it perhaps the most desirable box office attraction obtainable, according to the Boston company.

FRANKLYN FARNUM JOINS UNIVERSAL.

For the first time in his theatrical experience Franklyn Farnum, well known on the speaking stage, has made his appearance before a motion picture camera. He has been engaged as leading man for Ruth Stonehouse, the well known film star, who is to appear in "The Spring Song," under the direction of William Worthington. Farnum has just closed an engagement in New York with "The Only Girl," in which he played the lead. He was two years with Charles Frohman, and has played important roles in such well known productions as "The Dollar Princess," "The Sunshine Girl," and the lead in Henry W. Savage's production of "Little Boy Blue."

Paramount Program for Week of August 7

Two Famous Players and a Variety of Short Reel Subjects

TWO Famous Players productions will be featured on the Paramount Program for the week of August 7, in which Marguerite Clark and Pauline Frederick will be starred. Miss Clark will have as her vehicle, "Little Lady Eileen," this being her first appearance on the program since her great success in "Silks and Satins," on June 12, while Miss Frederick's production, "A Woman in the Case," will be her first appearance since June 26, when she appeared in "The World's Great Snare."

Variety will be the watch-word of the Paramount Program and its short reel releases for this week. Short reel subjects will include the 26th edition of the "magazine on-the-screen," Paramount Pictographs, a trip from Carlsbad to Moravia with Burton Holmes in the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel Pictures, and the Paramount-Bray Animated cartoon, "Farmer Al Falfa's Egg-citement."

Paramount Pictographs will have five leading subjects including "Better Babies," "Living in the Air," "Yachting," "Tree Surgery" and "Breaking the Freight Tie-up."

In the "Better Babies" subject, there is shown how to make a bed as it is made in hospitals, so that it is physically impossible to kick the sheets out at the bottom. New York has one of the greatest conglomeration of roofs in the world, upon which people eat, sleep, dance, drink, raise birds, fish and chickens, farm, play baseball, etc. This is one of the most unique pictures that has even been put on the screen.

"Driving a Yacht" is another very interesting section of the screen-magazine, showing the various features of sailing a yacht, and also picturing Pierpont Morgan at the helm of the "Grayling." In "Tree Surgery" there is shown how an immense cavity in a huge tree is filled with concrete, and also how stumps are pulled out by "four-footed dentists." The concluding pictures of the Pictographs show how modern methods were installed around New York which finally broke up the freight tie-ups, being instrumental thereby in lowering prices. It also shows an elephant pushing a crate up a gang plank with his trunk, and shows how coffee is loaded scientifically.

Burton Holmes in his Travel-Pictures takes Paramount audiences on an interesting trip, from Carlsbad to Moravia, which is varied in interest, beginning at the Carlsbad Springs, in which the party mingles with the throngs from all over the world who have come to this celebrated watering place to take the cure. Fifty thousand visitors come every year to drink and grow thin. The scenes in and around this wonderful famous "Spa" and at Marienbad, the countless throngs of millionaires from America and poor Poles from Poland, are varied by the native "dog o-mobiles," the goose farms of Bohemia, and the quaint costumes and customs of the Slovaks of Moravia, give a wonderful variety to this peculiarly interesting "Easy-Chair Journey."

Paul Terry contributes "Farmer Alfalfa's Egg-citement," as the Paramount-Bray Animated Cartoon for this week. It is a cartoon of a wayward duck who refuses to listen to her master and lays eggs with utter disregard, only to get herself into a great deal of trouble when she lays a nest of eggs in Alfalfa's beard, and he, to settle the question of who committed the crime, smashes an egg only to find its contents is a little cow which causes great excitement on Alfalfa's farm, and everyone scaringly takes to the "tall timbers."

Secretary Binder Returns From European Trip

Tells of Effect of the War on London—Picture Trade Bothered by Over-production

J. W. BINDER, executive secretary of the old Motion Picture Board of Trade, returned from London on the St. Louis on Saturday, July 15. "I have had a most delightful trip abroad," he said. "It has been a distinct privilege to see London in war time. One does not note so much difference in daytime except the noticeable absence from the streets of young men. At night, however, the difference is marked. The streets are in almost total darkness, there are no lighted shop windows or electric signs and the motors move along with only two tiny electric side lamps instead of the ordinary brilliant headlights.

"Then, too, the broad bands of light from the great searchlights encircling the sky all about London, once every two minutes from dark until 3 A. M. make a spectacle that will not soon be forgotten. And everywhere are soldiers—regiments marching through the streets with bands of music, and at the railway terminals, trainloads of the wounded being brought back from the base and field hospitals to recuperate under the kindly care of Britain.

"I was a bit shocked on going through Westminster Abbey to find the tombs of William the Conqueror and Edward the Confessor covered with two-inch armor plate, which in turn was overlaid by heavy oak planks. Over all this sand bags to a depth of two feet had been piled.

"'We might repair a hole in the roof of the Abbey,' laconically said the cockney guide, 'but we couldn't make a new tomb for William and Hedward. So we take no chances with them from Zeps.'

"I was mighty courteously received by the motion picture contingent in London. Anima Lodge of Freemasons, composed entirely of men connected with the motion picture industry, made me their guest of honor at a meeting held on the evening of July Fourth. I also had the pleasure of dining with Mr. W. R. Sheehan and his bride. Both send their best regards to their many friends here.

"The motion picture industry in England is suffering from about the same evils as seem to afflict it here. Over-production and censorship agitation seem to be the foremost troubles. American films make up at least 80 per cent. of the programs shown in London and throughout the provinces.

"Referring again to the war, it is my belief that the last stages have been entered upon and that by November 1 peace will either have been declared or the negotiations will be far enough along to insure a termination of hostilities before winter again sets in.

"I am told that considerable progress has been made in launching the new trade association. I am glad to know that this is the fact. The industry certainly stands in dire need of unified organization. This not alone to combat present hostile conditions threatening from without, but in no lesser degree to eliminate the evils which threaten its continued prosperity from within—over-production, inflated salaries and a chaotic system of distribution.

W. K. HOWARD ON CHICAGO V-L-S-E SALES FORCE

Sidney E. Abel, Chicago manager of the V-L-S-E, announces that W. K. Howard, one of the best-known film salesmen in the country, has been taken on the sales force of the Windy City office.

Mr. Howard, who joined the Big Four on July 10, began his connection with the photoplay industry as a lecturer with one of the first feature films, "Dante's Inferno," and later was connected with "Oliver Twist," in which Nat Goodwin was starred. This line of work carried his activities to the exploitation of a production made by the Essanay Company for the Weideman Company of Newport, Ky. Subsequently Mr. Howard entered the exchange business, beginning as shipping clerk of the World Film Corporation in its Cincinnati office. Then he was manager of the Bluebird Company in the same city, returning later to the World as assistant manager.

Mr. Howard has an excellent knowledge of modern merchandising, selling and advertising, which he has used to great advantage in the film business. He has written many articles on selling.

WILL APPEAR IN VIM COMEDIES.

Latest to join the Vim forces are George Reehm, William Chamberlin and Jennie Nelson, all of whom are well known screen stars. They will commence work shortly in Myers-Theby comedies under the able direction of Harry C. Myers, making a cast of five in future releases of these refined feature comedies.

Strong Features on Mutual Program

Two Mutual Star Productions Supplemented by a Number of Good Subjects in Shorter Lengths

"JUDITH of the Cumberlands," a five-act drama of mountain life in Kentucky and Tennessee, with Helen Holmes the featured player, and "The Strength of Donald McKenzie," a romantic drama of the North Woods, starring William Russell, both of which will be released as Mutual Star Productions, are the chief feature offerings of the Mutual Film Corporation for the week of July 31.

"Judith of the Cumberlands," a film adaptation of Alice McGowan's virile story of the same name, which will be released July 31, was screened under the personal direction of Director-in-Chief J. P. McGowan, of the Signal-Mutual studios, especially delegated as director of the Helen Holmes series of Mutual Star Productions.

her clan engaged in a bloody warfare of extermination, adds a new character to her already long list of film creations, the role being one which affords her unusual opportunities to display her remarkable talents for emotional expression.

For the filming of many of the scenes in this Mutual Star Production, Director McGowan, noted as a stickler for true to life atmosphere, in order to obtain the necessary locations led the members of the cast, some twenty in all, far into the wilds of the Santa Ynez mountains, below Santa Barbara, where many days were spent at work on the exterior scenes.

Miss Holmes' supporting cast in "Judith of the Cumberlands," which is the third of the Mutual Star Productions in which she has been featured, is an unusually large one for a film drama. Leo D. Maloney, as "Creed Benbright" whose father was killed in a fight with a rival clan and who devotes practically all his time in trying to educate the sturdy mountain men to respect instead of disregard the law, has the chief supporting role opposite Miss Holmes. Mr. Maloney, an exceptionally talented young actor, has long since established his position as an unusually powerful portrayer of exacting roles. Others in the cast include Paul C. Hurst, Thomas G. Lingham, William Brunton, Clara Mosher, Harry Lloyd, Sam Morje, G. H. Wischussen and others of equal importance, several of whom, including Hurst, Lingham, Brunton and Wischussen, have already appeared in the companies supporting Miss Holmes in preceding Mutual Star Productions.

The story of "Judith of the Cumberlands," as the countless thousands who have read Miss McGowan's most important contribution to literature will remember, treats of a mountain feud and the novel way in which the mountain girl brought it to an end.

"The Strength of Donald McKenzie," third of the William Russell Mutual Star Productions, which goes to the public August 3, is a filmization of Russell Smith's story of the same name, prepared for the screen by J. Edward Hungerford. The role of "Donald McKenzie," the trapper-poet and hero of the story, is particularly suited to Mr. Russell's unusual talents and presents the star in one of the best characterizations he has yet portrayed in this series of William Russell Mutual Star Productions.

The story, most of which takes place in the open, deals with the romance and tragic adventures in the woods where guides and trappers roam. For these outdoor scenes Russell and his co-director, Jack Prescott, selected locations among the Thousand Pines, on Little Bear Lake, fifteen miles up the mountains from San Bernardino, Cal., where all of the outdoor work was shot.

Charlotte Burton appears opposite Mr. Russell in the role of "Mabel Condon," daughter of the publisher. Others in the cast are Jack Prescott, Nell Franzen, Harry Keenan and others especially chosen from the numerous companies now at work at the American-Mutual studios.

Mutual three-part offering of the week is an American production for release August 3 under the title of "The Madonna of the Night." Nita Davis and E. Forrest Taylor are the co-stars in this unusually interesting story surrounding the strange adventures which befell a convent girl. The drama was prepared for the screen by Karl Coolidge from the story written by Constance Crawley and Larry Peyton, members of the playing forces of the American Mutual studios. It was screened by William Bertram.

"The Dreamer," a stirring story of romance and adventure, featuring Edward Coxen and Lizette Thorne, for release July 31, tops the Mutual's two-part offerings of the week. In this American release the co-stars are supported by a noted company of players.

Second of the week's two-part offerings will be released August 4 under the title of "Sandy, Reformer." Art Acord and Helene Rosson are the featured players. "Sandy, Reformer" is a Western story replete with thrills and action.

Margaret Gibson has the principal role in "Fate's Decision," the two-part Centaur release which goes to the public August 5. William Clifford leads the big company of players appearing in Miss Gibson's support.

Single-reel comedy releases for the week include "Painless Extracting," a laughable satire on modern dentistry, with Rube Miller as chief funmaker. This Vogue-Mutual comedy will be released August 1. Beauty releases for the week include "Daredevils and Danger," featuring Johnny Sheehan and Carol Halloway, for release August 2, and "Just as He Thought," starring Orral Humphrey, to be released August 6. "When Jerry Came to Town," with George Ovey supplying the laughs, is the Cub release of the same week. It goes to the public August 4.

Mutual Weekly No. 83 and "See America First," the Gaumont single-reel offerings, for release August 2, present a wide range of subjects. Mutual Weekly cameramen with the troops along the border have secured a number of interesting and exclusive pictures which will be released in this issue.

The regular weekly release of "Reel Life," the Mutual film magazine in motion pictures, for release August 6, presents a series of interesting topics.

RAYMOND WHITAKER JOINS UNIVERSAL.

After a number of years experience both on the legitimate stage and in pictures, Raymond Whitaker has joined the Universal Film Manufacturing Co., and will work under the direction of Raymond Wells in support of Ruth Stonehouse, and Henri De Vries, in a five-reel feature entitled "The Saintly Sinner." Whitaker played leads with Blanche Walsh, Nance O'Neil, and Grace George, and for a number of years also played leads in stock companies in various Pacific Coast cities.

EDWARD EARL NOW VICE PRESIDENT.

Edward Earl, who for a number of years held the office of secretary-treasurer of the Nicholas Power Company, was elected vice president and treasurer at the recent annual meeting of the stockholders of that company. The company's business for the year is highly gratifying, showing a substantial increase over the previous year, and the export business to all parts of the world have been practically doubled. Mr. Earle attended the motion picture convention and exposition at Chicago and is highly elated with the showing made by the Nicholas Power Company.

Advance Tips on Brady-mades

Interesting List of Productions Presented for August, September and October

WITH the summer's end approaching and arrangements going forward for the beginning of the autumn season, William A. Brady announces definitely the forthcoming releasing program of the organization of which he is directing head.

While the autumn season, proper, does not begin until September 4, the latter part of August will see the beginning of the new Brady-Made program, which was begun in productional part when Mr. Brady assumed control of the World Film in June.

August 21, a Maurice Tourneur production, "The Rail Rider," will inaugurate the new season and House Peters will be the featured player, supported by the typical Brady cast.

August 28, the first all-star Brady-Made picture with Holbrook Blinn, Ethel Clayton, Gerda Holmes, Emmett Corrigan, Montagu Love and Dion Titheradge will be offered in a production by Barry O'Neill called "Husband and Wife."

September 4, Gail Kane will make her appearance in Frank Powell's production of "The Other Sister," in which Miss Kane plays her first dual role.

September 11, another all-star cast containing E. K. Lincoln, June Elvidge and Frances Nelson, will be featured in a sensational production, "The Almighty Dollar."

Robert Warwick in "Friday the 13th," a production created under the direction of Emile Chautard, will be the unit on the program, on September 18.

On September 25, running out the month in a vivid dramatic concoction, entitled "The Scorching Way," will be seen Ethel Clayton, Irving Cummins and Madge Evans.

The week of October 2 is left open, in so far as title and star is concerned, but on October 9, a two-star document with House Peters and Gail Kane named "The Velvet Paw" will precede the magnetic Alice Brady in her next picture, "Her Majesty."

Following Miss Brady will come Robert Warwick again with Gail Kane playing opposite him in a picturization of Clyde Fitch's tale of the famous historical episode, "Nathan Hale," which will be entitled, "The Heart of a Hero," and which is now in the course of construction in the New England locales made famous by the Revolutionary period.

On October 30, the end of the second month of the autumn season, Kitty Gordon and Muriel Ostriche will be seen in a co-starring vehicle, entitled "The Man She Married."

The program as laid out by Mr. Brady entailed no little effort on the part of this more than experienced man to get more than the proper diversity of subjects, the proper differences of types of players and the proper diversity of themes, basic plots, situations and climaxes.

"An International Marriage" at the Strand.

RITA JOLIVET was the star of "An International Marriage" at the Strand theater the week of July 23. The screen version of George Broadhurst's stage success was produced by the Morosco Paramount Company and follows the play closely. The story tells of a beautiful American girl who becomes fascinated with the idea of marrying a Duke and, her millionaire father not being averse to the union, the match is arranged. But a young American also loves the daughter. He proves that the Duke is an unscrupulous agent of his country, and finally thwarts the marriage. The cast includes Herbert Standing, Elliott Dexter, Courtenay Foote, Marc Robbins and Olive White.

Other features for the week were a scenic and travel study, a short comedy, the Strand Topical Review, and a Mutt and Jeff animated cartoon. The musical program consisted of an overture and incidental music by the Strand Concert Orchestra, and solo numbers by Miss Helen Scholder, Bruce Weyman and Robert Armour.

"The Marriage of Molly-O" at the Rialto.

Mae Marsh and Robert Harron are the leading players in "The Marriage of Molly-O," the Fine Arts Company photoplay which was the principal attraction at the Rialto theater. The scenario was written by Granville Warwick and tells an old fashioned Irish love story. A section of Dr. Leonard S. Snyden's fine travel pictures, "The Lure of Alaska," the Topical Review, and other special features, were shown.

"Under Cover," at the Broadway.

"Under Cover," the drama which scored a success at the Cort theater, New York, and was chosen by the Famous Players Film Company as a vehicle for the first appearance of Hazel Dawn and Owen Moore as co-stars, was the attraction on the Paramount Program at the Broadway theater. The screen version retains the life and vigor of the stage play, written by Roi Cooper Megrue, and calls for a large number of striking and diversified scenes. The usual one-reel comedies and special subject pictures were on the program.

Eighty-first Street Theater Bill.

At the Eighty-first Street theater four Triangle pictures were shown. On Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday Bessie Love in "Stranded," and on Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday Wm. S. Hart in "The Captive God," were the stars. A Sennett Keystone comedy completed the picture portion of the entertainment.

Strand Camera Car

Automobile Equipped With Camera Scouts the Streets of New York for Strand Weekly.

FOR some weeks past the Strand theater, New York, has maintained what is termed the "Strand Daily News Service," the outward evidence of which is a large motor car painted a cream white with the name of the Strand on it here and there, known as the Strand Cameracar.

The cameracar is a limousine fitted with folding doors in the roof and a tripod mounted on top. When the camera man wants to take a picture he opens the doors and, standing on a platform on the back seat, adjusts his machine to the tripod. A sign is then hung out that the pictures being taken at that time will be shown on the screen at the Strand the day following.

Strand's Camera Car.

With the cameracar at its disposal the Strand can shoot out its cameraman to any place within a radius of fifty miles and get pictures while the event is still fresh. The roof of the car has also proven an advantageous place from which to "shoot" over the heads of crowds or obstructions. Since its inauguration it has been a great adjunct to the Strand Topical Review, the compilation of news services the Strand runs.

A CLEAN RECORD.

In the nine five-reel features which the Frohman Amusement Corporation has produced, the National Board of Review has cut out only eight feet of film and changed two subtitles.

That Universal Program for Week of July 31

Long List of Stars Illuminates the Coming Attractions

THE following stars appear on the universal program for the week of July 31: Carter De Haven, King Baggot, Francis Ford and Grace Cunard, Ben Wilson, Marie Walcamp, William Garwood, Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran, Marcia Moore, Lee Hill, Edna Hunter, Dan Russell, Hobart Henley, Howard Crampton, Catherine Calvert, Jack Nelson, Lucille Younge, Agnes Vernon, A. Lowrie, Baby Early, Rex De Rosselli, Golda Colwell, William V. Mong, Gale Henry, William Franey, Marjorie Ellison and Gene Rogers.

Carter De Haven leads off the week in "From Broadway to a Throne," a five-reel Red Feather feature which is followed on the same day, July 31, by Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Marcia Moore in the Nestor comedy, "Beer Must Go Down."

On the following day, August 1, the special Universal novelty two section three-reel mystery drama, "Who Pulled the Trigger?" is the feature of the day. Marie Walcamp and Lee Hill are starred in this Gold Seal multiple reeler. They are followed by William Garwood in a Victor comedy entitled, "A Society Sherlock."

Ben Wilson heads the program of August 2 in the Imp drama, "The Lucky Gold Piece," in which he is supported by Edna Hunter. On the same day Dan Russell cavorts about in the two-reel L-Ko comedy, "Where Is My Husband?" The day's program closes with issue 31 of the Universal Animated Weekly, with all the topical news events of the day in film form.

"My Lady's Millions," a two-reel Laemmle society drama featuring Hobart Henley, Howard Crampton and Catherine Calvert heads off the program of August 3. On the same day Jack Nelson and Lucille Younge appear in the Big U drama, "A Man's Hardest Fight." Another of the Dr. Dorsey expedition educational features will be released under the Powers brand on the same day. This feature is entitled "The Rough Riders of India."

On August 4 Agnes Vernon and A. Lowrie will share honors in the Imp drama, "A Daughter of the Night." They will be followed on the same day's program by the Victor two-reel juvenile comedy, "When the Minstrels Came to Town," in which little Baby Early is the star.

A two-reel Bison animal thriller par excellence entitled, "Under the Lion's Paw," and featuring Rex De Rosselli and Golda Colwell will be released by the Universal on August 5. It will be followed by Cleo Madison in "The Girl in Lower 9," a Big U drama in which Miss Madison is supported by William V. Mong. Gale Henry and William Franey close the day's program in a Joker comedy entitled "Kate's Lover's Knot."

On Sunday, August 6, King Baggot is starred in the Big U two-reel sea drama, "The Captain of the Typhoon," in which Mr. Baggot is supported by Edna Hunter. An Imp drama, "The Finishing Touch," with Marjorie Ellison, released on the same day together with the L-Ko howler, "The Youngest in the Family," with Gene Rogers supplying the fun.

During the week of July 31 Francis Ford and Grace Cunard will appear in the fourteenth two-reel episode of the Universal special feature serial, "The Adventures of Peg o' the Ring."

V-L-S-E Vitagraphs Include a Daniels Comedy

A Hamlin Garland Blue Ribbon Feature and a Frank Daniels Comedy Make Up the Week's Contributions

A CAST, truly worthy of the much abused title "all star," is one of the distinguishing features of Vitagraph's latest offering in the way of Blue Ribbon Feature. The picture in five parts is "Hesper of the Mountains," from the popular book by Hamlin Garland. The cast, without exception, handles itself naturally and creditably. Particularly favorable mention must be given Lillian Walker and Evart Overton, the two featured memers who, throughout the production show themselves as ramatic players of the first calibre.

Those seen in their support include Donald Hall, Denton ane, Rose Tapley, Lillian Burns, Donald McBride, Robert aillard, Templar Saxe and Josephine Earle.

In brief, the plot tells of Ann, a young Eastern miss who dmits her dislike of the West, but after witnessing the stoicism of Western men is forced to change her opinion and finally marries one of them. As a whole the picture is interesting and sure to please. Some of the outstanding features are the beauty of interior and exterior scenes, clear photography and the attention to detail which Director North has exercised throughout. The picture, with its many scenes of the great outdoors, should be an ideal hot weather feature.

Frank Daniels, whose success in many Vitagraph productions has established him as the premier straight comedian in the photoplay world, lives up to his reputation in "Dear Percy," his latest picture. Although it is told in one part, "Dear Percy" has material enough for two or three and the audience is therefore assured of a picture chock full of laughs. The combination of Cyrus Townsend Brady as author, the inimitable Frank as star, and Arthur Ellery as producer, has brought forth an excellent production. The comedy hinges on the transfusion of blood between Percy, a meek effeminate individual, and Casey, a longshoreman and twentieth century cave man. After the operation a great change has taken place, the meekness of Percy is embodied in Casey and the former sentimental Percy is endowed with the might of Sandow and the brutality of Nero, to the consternation of his wife. Charmine Mayfield, Nellie Anderson and Olive Trevor are also seen in this sparkling comedy.

NEW THEATER FOR TIMMINS, ONT.

Leo Mascioli, Charles Pierce and P. M. Bardessono expect to open their new photoplay house in Timmins, Ont., about the middle of August. The theater will be known as the New Empire, and will be three stories in height. Its dimensions are 60 by 108 feet. The seating capacity will be 900, of which 200 will be in the balcony. The auditorium will be plentifully supplied with wide aisles and exits. All wiring will be done in conduits. Mr. Bardessono will manage the new house. While the New Empire will be devoted to motion pictures primarily, road shows will be booked occasionally. The owners of the new structure are also the owners and operators of the Empire theaters at Cochrane and Schumacher, Ont. The new Empire, when it is completed, will represent an investment of $30,000.

Hatch Buys Ohio Rights

Veteran Film Man Purchases "The Fall of a Nation" for That State.

J. FRANK HATCH, the well-known film man and veteran showman, purchased the Ohio state rights of "The Fall of a Nation" from the National Drama Corporation. He is proprietor of the J. Frank Hatch Film Company of Newark, N. J. He will at once prosecute an active campaign for the exploitation of the Dixon-Herbert spectacle in the Buckeye State and will start operations with runs at first-class prices in Cleveland, Cincinnati, Columbus and Toledo.

Mr. Hatch entered the film business in the fall of 1906. He rapidly created a profitable system of exchanges with centers in Chicago, Buffalo, Newark and other cities. In the course of his enterprises he acquired the Grand theater, Newark, of which he is still the owner. He had also on the road the J. Frank Hatch Shows, a thirty-car circus and carnival, but sold out all his circus interests in 1913. Hatch is one of the largest owners of film in the world. Ten million feet of it are stored in a fireproof structure built on the roof of his building at 284 Market street, Newark, N. J. He can supply anything from a twelve-reel tragedy to a split-reel comic or travelogue.

With it all, the proprietor of the Ohio "The Fall of a Nation" has the keen instincts of a showman for modern, live, up-to-date stuff, and he foresees for the Dixon play one of the most sensational theatrical campaigns that has ever been launched in the Western reserve. It will be recalled that the Ohio censors have continuously refused a license for "The Birth of a Nation," the earlier product of the Dixon fantasy. But they took more kindly to "The Fall of a Nation," and the latter work was passed for presentation in Ohio without any cuts or emendations whatsoever.

Thanhouser's August Productions.

Announcement of the First Subjects to Be Released on the Pathe Program.

"THE FUGITIVE," a drama starring Florence La Badie, and "Hidden Valley," a tale of South African adventure, featuring Valkyrien are the first five-reel features that Thanhouser will release under the new arrangement with Pathe.

Miss La Badie's latest vehicle is by Philip Lonergan, directed by Frederic Sullivan, and is the story of a girl who takes the blame for a murder she did not commit and who is apprehended after the death of the only witness who could prove her innocence. The heroine is freed by a circumstance novel and unexpected.

Miss La Badie is supported by Ethyle Cooke and George Marlo. An exciting factory fire is one of the big scenes in the production. "The Fugitive" will be released on Aug. 13.

In "Hidden Valley," Valkyrien is a white goddess who has been captured by savage blacks in South Africa. She is found by a young missionary, played by Boyd Marshall, and rescued from a sacrificial altar. Valkyrien was selected as the most perfectly formed girl in Denmark in a competition conducted by the government. The dance of the white goddess before the natives is one of the most beautiful scenes in the production. The story is by Emmet Mixx, and the director was Ernest Warde. The picture was made in Jacksonville, Fla.; the date of release is August 27.

Gladys Hulette and Florence La Badie probably will be the stars in the Thanhouser features released in September.

ROBERT CUMMINGS IN METRO'S "ROMEO AND JULIET."

Robert Cummings will play Friar Laurence in the Bushman and Bayne film production of "Romeo and Juliet." Mr. Cummings probably has the creation of more original roles to his credit than almost any other actor on the stage.

Josephine Earle.

JOSEPHINE EARLE has now been at the Vitagraph eastern studios for more than a year. During that time her work has been consistently good; it has confirmed the impression she created on her first appearances, in which she made good beyond question. Many of her roles have been in the "heavy" category, the hardest task of any player, but one in which the reward is sure, if there be marked merit in the performance.

Josephine Earle.

Miss Earle is of Scotch extraction, her family having been on this side of the Atlantic since the coming of William Penn. Her maternal great-grandmother sang "The Star Spangled Banner" in old Independence Hall, Philadelphia. Although possessing a good singing voice, the player's first stage experience was in vaudeville. It was not long, however, before she went into musical stock, where she sang leading roles in Gilbert and Sullivan operas.

Following this she was offered an engagement by Mr. Savage as Beauty in "Everywoman," being the 101st applicant. Returning later to vaudeville, she was starred in her own act, a tabloid called "The Cloak Models." Then she went to the Vitagraph Company.

Some of the pictures in which Miss Earle has been seen are "The Return of Maurice Donnelly," "The Gypsy Trail," "Writing on the Wall," "The Two-Edged Sword," "The Shop Girl" and "Hesper." In "The Two-Edged Sword" she shared the honors of the acting with Edith Story and Robert Gaillard. She dominated many of the scenes by her forceful interpretation of the thoughtless woman who brought suffering on two families by her flirtation and she materially contributed to the making of an unusually strong picture. Her more recent work includes appearances in "The Blue Envelope," "John Thursday" and "There and Back," the latter a single-reel comedy of which Miss Earle is the bright particular star.

ABELES IN CONNECTICUT.

Manager A. S. Abeles of Pathe's New York office went on a trip in Connecticut in what he characterizes as "An 1898 Ford" last week, accompanied by Salesman Horace Fuld and the first three episodes of "The Grip of Evil." Reports from the front indicate great success.

GOLDFRAP WITH MOSS.

John Henry Goldfrap has succeeded Arthur MacHugh as press representative for B. S. Moss' motion picture interests. Mr. MacHugh will continue to paragraph for the Moss Theatrical and Vaudeville interests.

Freuler Strong for "Stars"

Says He'd Pay a Million for Another Chaplin—Stardom the Mark of Public Approval

"A MILLION dollars for another Chaplin." This is the reply of John R. Freuler, president of the Mutual Film Corporation, to the recent utterances of the motion picture magnates who seek to depreciate the position of importance occupied by the stars in the industry.

"Back of the expressions of the men who charge that the exploitation of stars is a detriment to the film drama you will find a false hope of the reduction of production costs and a hopeless attempt to foster a market for a photodrama product of mediocre quality," said Mr. Freuler.

"To attain stardom for an actor is simply to gain the public's stamp of approval. The actor who serves and pleases the public best is the greatest star. The primary purpose of this film drama is to furnish amusement. It is mere primer reasoning to point out that the most satisfactory drama must be presented by the most popular stars. There is no evasion possible.

"The permanence of the position of the star in the photodrama is assured. One has only to point to the dramatic and operatic stages and their history. The drama of the stage with its centuries of experience where the film has years has not found success without stars. The same magic of personality which gave world fame and success to Booth, Clara Morris, Mansfield and the other wonderful names of the stage exists also for the screen. Dramatic art cannot be divorced from personality. The making of Chaplins and Pickfords and Mary Miles Minters is not the matter of a film man's whim or desire and it is beyond his control. Stars are made by the artist and the public, and no one can successfully come between them.

"With a keen appreciation of this primary truth I have made the declaration of all-star policy to the motion picture public and the motion picture exhibitor."

Vitagraph's Dynamo Car.

Illuminates Three City Blocks—Built by Garage Crew for Outdoor Night Scenes.

A MAMMOTH 218 ampere dynamo car built in the Vitagraph studio garage was given a try-out in Flatbush recently during an outdoor night scene staged by Director William P. S. Earle. There were a great many people in the cast, it being a mob scene in "The Battle Cry of War," and the car's power to give light enough to illuminate the whole area covered by the action was in question. Although the car was not entirely trimmed, Harry Waldron, superintendent of the garage and Andy Kennedy, chief mechanic, were confident of its success. The result was excellent. All the light needed was supplied, and the portable dynamo demonstrated its ability to light three city blocks under the ordinary lighting conditions.

The dynamo is driven by a 50 H. P. marine engine; both engine and dynamo are mounted on a 5-ton White truck. The car and all its parts were built by the Vitagraph garage crew. It will be used at outdoor locations where electric power is not available, such as woods and remote roads, to provide arc light enough for any motion picture photography. This is one of the very few and is the largest car of its kind in the United States.

FAMOUS PLAYERS-LASKY SWAP PLAYERS.

One of the first outward manifestations of the practical advantages of the recently formed merger of the Famous Players Film Company and the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company, is the fact that Mae Murray, who has appeared under the Lasky banner since her debut on the screen, is now working on staging her new Paramount picture, "The Big Sister," at the Famous Players studio under the direction of John B. O'Brien, Famous Players director.

Never before has such a situation arisen between the two companies except once in the case of Marguerite Clark, who was loaned to the Lasky Company for the production of "The Goose Girl," after she had created a sensation in her screen debut in the Famous Players-Lasky production "Wildflower."

In the case of Mae Murray, however, her conversion to the roster of Famous Players stars is only the first of many similar steps that are sure to be taken as circumstances warrant. It so happens that the atmosphere of "The Big Sister" is strictly Eastern in every aspect and that although it could be produced at Hollywood, Cal., where the Lasky studios are situated, the transportation of Miss Murray to New York represents a far less expense than that which would be incurred in traveling on the Pacific coast in search of location and of devoting great areas of floor space to the erection of studio sets.

UNIVERSAL FORT LEE PLAYERS STILL BUSY.

Although most of the Universal East Coast photoplayers have gone to Universal City and are already hard at work in "The Capital of the Film World," several companies are still busy in the Universal's big Fort Lee plant.

Director Ben Hill has finished "Judith Belgrove," a one-reel drama in which Violet Mersereau and Harry Benham play the leads. Mary Fuller is braving the Jersey mosquitoes and July heat to finish "The Highest Bidder," a two-reel produced by Mr. Henderson. King Baggot is working on "Absintha," a multiple reeler. Director Grandon is working with Violet Mersereau and Harry Benham on "The Angel of the Attic," a two-reel drama, while Director Ben Hill has under way a one-reel drama, title as yet not decided upon, in which Clara Beyer plays the lead. Director Frank Smith is producing "The Primitive Soul," a one-reel drama in which Margaret McRae and Johnny Walker play the principal roles.

EMILY STEVENS RECOVERING.

Emily Stevens, who was last seen on the Metro program in "The House of Tears," will begin work soon again on another Metro wonder play. Miss Stevens recently finished a successful tour of the United States in the play, "The Unchastened Woman," which enjoyed a remarkable run on Broadway before it was sent out on the road. At the close of the season she suffered an attack of appendicitis, and following an operation in the Woman's Hospital in New York she went to rest and recuperate at the beautiful country home of her aunt, Mrs. Minnie Maddern Fiske at Moose Lake, in the Adirondack Mountains.

McMANUS GETS A WATCH.

When the International branch managers met in Chicago during the convention week and learned that E. A. McManus, general manager of the company, could not be present they immediately decided to express their appreciation of him in a substantial way. It took the form of a gold watch suitably engraved, which very desirable present was forwarded with a telegram of felicitation. Those who participated in the gift were J. F. Bowman, Chicago, Jos. S. Engel, New York, F. H. Vine, Boston; G. H. Atwood, Los Angeles, B. F. Lyon, Pittsburgh, H. L. Knappen, San Francisco, G. R. Allison, Atlanta, F. B. Wathne, Washington (D. C.), E. W. Dustin, St. Louis, E. W. Sweigert, Philadelphia, J. K. Burger, New York.

"Must Have Better Stories"?

Then Better Prices Must Be Paid for the Time Required to Write Them.

By Emmett Campbell Hall.

"EVERYTHING has improved—except the stories. We must have better stories!" So cries the producer, suddenly awake to the fact that the picture business is moving by hitherto acquired momentum only, and that it is the story that must supply further motive power. With his business on the verge of a very serious illness, he has correctly diagnosed the disease, but is doing absolutely nothing toward remedying the thing he deplores. What can he do? The first thing needful is to realize that—

There will never be any better stories!

The stories of 1916 are no better than the stories of 1716, or of A. D. 1, nor will those of 2016 be. A prize offer of a million dollars would not bring forth a story better than thousands for which the authors received a skimped handful of shillings or francs or dollars, or told for the mere love of telling a tale.

The trouble is not with the stories, but in the method of telling. Take the masterpieces of fiction and strip them to their skeletons—their plots. Rather trite and banal, are they not? It is the method of presentation that has made them things of beauty. What would an untrained or hurried hand have accomplished with the same materials?

Haste of composition, not poorness of theme, is the cause of the hackneyed and mediocre results we see upon the screen. It isn't that the photo-playwrights can not do better, but that they cannot afford to. The world is frequently assured by producers that they would joyously pay fabulous sums if only the authors would write something worth paying for. The photoplay author must be pardoned a sceptical smile. Once or twice he has made a play a labor of love—has given it weeks or months of devoted labor, turning it out polished like a gem—and received for it the same "our regular rates" that he got for the crudity he hammered out in a couple of mornings.

The time it takes to write a good photoplay must be paid for, if good photoplays are to be written. Ten five-reel subjects a year should be a large output for a very industrious author—five, of his maximum quality would be nearer right. To make a decent income, how many must he turn out at the prices he can get? Few producers are paying or are willing to pay more per reel than the better producers paid four years ago—with many the rate is no better.

It is not merely the story that the producer must purchase—it is that story in its highest photoplay development—if he wants good stories as seen through the medium of the screen. And to bring a story to that development takes time, patience, labor plus natural ability, training and a discriminating knowledge of picture technique.

Of course the overhead must be kept down, but—a point strangely overlooked—it is in the manuscript, not in the purchase price of the manuscript, that economy should be found. There are few features appearing on the screen in which a really competent author could not have saved hundreds and even thousands of dollars without any sacrifice of screen effect, by a sometimes very slight rearrangement of the story. To get maximum screen value at minimum necessary production cost is an art that one might expect would be appreciated, but it does not appear to be. The man whose play—no better on the screen—costs five thousand dollars more to produce, through the fault of the author—will get just as much for his manuscript as the author whose ability saves that amount. There is no premium on taking pains.

Solution? Remedy? Realize the difference between mere story value and photoplay value, stop paying absurd prices for the former and use the money to pay decent prices for the latter. Encourage the people who would write real photoplays if they could afford to by making real effort worth the while. Guarantee a reasonable sum but pay on a royalty basis, the author's percentage being on the net profits. This will bring about what is really wanted—better pictures—not the impossible "better stories"—at smaller cost for production.

Henry Kolker.

HENRY KOLKER, who heads the supporting company in "Gloria's Romance," the George Kleine motion picture novel in which Miss Billie Burke is the featured star, has proven time and again on the screen that he is just as capable a star when appearing in the silent drama as he is on the speaking stage where he can use his voice to aid his pantomime; but perhaps never has his playing been more impressive than in his present vehicle. As Dr. Stephen Royce, the young physician who falls in love with Gloria Stafford, Kolker grows better and better as the story progresses.

Henry Kolker.

This talented player began his career with the German Stock Company of Milwaukee, Wis., studying under the direction of the then leading man of that company, Franz Kauer, and soon afterwards went over to the American theater, joining Robert Downing in such plays as "The Gladiator," "Damon and Pythias," "Virginius," "Ingomar," "Othello," "David Garrick" and "Richard the Lion Hearted." After spending two seasons with Mr. Downing, Kolker headed the company supporting James O'Neill in "Hamlet," "The Courier of Lyons," "Virginius" and "Monte Cristo." His first New York appearance was made at Wallack's theater, where he played "Guiderius" in the big revival of Shakespeare's "Cymbeline." The next five years were spent as leading man of stock companies in Buffalo, Syracuse, Rochester, Indianapolis, Montreal, Philadelphia, Newark and Denver, and at the end of that period he was cast for the title role in "Sergeant James," Eugene Walters' first play, produced by Kirk La Shelle.

A varied series of dramatic engagements covering several years followed before he did his first picture work in the feature entitled "The Bridge." His work in "The Warning," another feature film, is also still remembered by many, and then he was employed to create the role of Dr. Stephen Royce in "Gloria's Romance," appearing opposite Billie Burke in this important role.

"CIVILIZATION" AT BUENOS AYRES AT FIVE DOLLARS A SEAT.

The stockholders of the ten-million-dollar opera house in Buenos Ayres, Argentine Republic, have just cabled to Richard Pitrot, their New York representative, announcing the sailing from that city of Pablo Calazzi, for the purpose of consummating the final arrangements for the presentation of Thomas H. Ince's "Civilization" in the opera house where the great Caruso sang recently and was paid $10,000 each night. The directors also stated that the scale of prices adopted for the engagement of the big Ince cinema spectacle in Buenos Ayres will be practically the same as when Caruso sings. The boxes vary from $25 to $100, each seating from four to six persons, while the orchestra or parterre which seats 850 persons is scheduled at $5 throughout. The upper gallery or sixth balcony provides the cheapest seats, in this part of the auditorium half selling at $2 and the other half at $1 a seat.

MARIE SHOTWELL JOINS THANHOUSER.

Marie Shotwell, who recently completed a five-year contract under the management of Daniel Frohman, has gone into moving pictures. She has signed with the Thanhouser Company and is now at the New Rochelle studios working in an Italian story by Emmet Mix in which she will be starred. Miss Shotwell is perhaps best known for her characterization of "Shirley" in "The Lion and the Mouse."

FIRE AT MONROVIA STUDIO.

Assistant Director Costello Injured in Studio Fire.

FIRE, caused by friction in the projection machine, at the Monrovia Feature Film Company in Monrovia destroyed a reel of film, injured the operator and caused some little damage, on the morning of the 13th.

It started when a section of "The Daughter of the Don," catching fire from friction in the projection machine, flared up. The celluloid film was jerked out of the machine by Assistant Director Costello, whose hands were painfully burned in the process. Little property damage was done. The fifteen or so scenes that went up in smoke can be easily reprinted from the original negative.

The fire alarm was turned in and promptly answered, the fire boys completing the work of stamping out the blaze that for a short time endangered the building.

R. M. Francisco arrived home this morning from San Francisco, bringing the reports that "The Argonauts" will open in Stockton and Sacramento soon. Preparations are being made for the sale of state rights.

"The Daughter of the Don," to be given its premiere in Los Angeles August 13, will have its advance ticket sale started here next week. Tickets have already been applied for from several outlying cities, and the prospects for a good run are favorable.

THEATER BURNS.

Santa Ana House, "Lyric," Manager Saves Audience by Clever Ruse.

Fire, caused by the parting of a film, in the Lyric theater in Santa Ana, did about $2,500 damage and closed the house one night this week.

The large crowd in the house at the time moved out in an orderly manner as the result of the cleverness of R. L. Hurlburt, manager. The loss is partially covered by insurance. The operator, G. Brown, escaped.

One of the features incident to the conflagration was the clever ruse Manager Hurlburt used to prevent a panic. He stepped out in front of the audience and in an unconcerned manner said that candles for disinfecting the building were being burned; that it was an experiment with him and he did not know whether it would be a success or not, and requested that the theater be vacated. The house was filling with smoke and everyone filed out with perfect composure. There was no excitement, and none knew that their lives had been imperilled until they reached the sidewalk.

"Discovered" was the film being run when the fire occurred. It was proving a big drawing card and the house was full.

A pianoplayer, costing $750, was damaged to the extent of $253. "Bridal Falls," a painting on the west wall next to the entrance, was ruined, and much of the ceiling fell as the result of water thrown by the fire department in the vacant space above the ceiling to quench the flames.

R. L. Hurlburt and J. Weston are the owners of the theater, having but recently purchased it from J. G. Knapp.

Proprietors of other show houses in the city have shown their sympathy with the Lyric management by offering to put on the regular program of the Lyric, in addition to their own programs.

TYRONE POWER SIGNS WITH DUDLEY MOTION PICTURE CORPORATION.

N. B. Dudley, president of the Dudley Motion Picture Corporation, has closed a contract with Tyrone Power for the production of eight ten-reel pictures.

The first of the series will be built around the fifth commandment, "Thou Shalt Not Kill." Work on the production will begin Monday, this week.

The studios of the Dudley Motion Picture Corporation are located in Redlands, California, where the company is now producing "The Humanizing of Mr. Winsby" from the story by Peter B. Kyne.

YORKE FILM COMPANY STARTS PRODUCTION ON BIG FILM.

The Yorke Film Company, a branch of the Metro Corporation, has leased the old studios of the Nevada Film Company, at 1329 Gordon street, and have started production on a five-reel photodrama entitled "Mister 44." The play in which Harold Lockwood and May Allison are being costarred is a picturization of the novel of the same name by E. J. Rath, under the direction of Henry Otto.

Several members of the Yorke Film Company arrived from New York last week, including Fred J. Balshofer, president of the Yorke and Quality Companies; May Allison, Harold Lockwood, Henry Otto, Bennett A. Molter, Lester Cuneo, Antonio Canter and Ben H. Grim.

It is expected that by fall all of the Metro companies will be making pictures in Los Angeles. Among the producing companies are the Yorke, Quality, Popular Plays and Players, Rolfe, and Columbia.

CENTURY FILM CORPORATION BRINGS COMPANY HERE.

Another motion picture company has arrived in Los Angeles, the Century Film Corporation, with headquarters at Roundup, Mont., under the direction of J. P. Hamilton, formerly of the Essanay, American and Albuquerque film manufacturers.

The Century Company will spend half its time here and the balance at Roundup The company is using the Christie studios at Gower street and Sunset Boulevard. Dot Farley is being featured in all of their pictures. William Conklin is playing the leading male part. Others in the cast are Frank Newberry, husband of Jane Novak; Charles Mulhall, brother of Lucille Mulhall, the "lady roper," and G. E. Kern, assistant to Mr. Hamilton. The company is now filming a seven-reel feature entitled "Inherited Passions."

McRAY BUILDING A RAILROAD AT UNIVERSAL CITY.

Henry McRay is building a private railroad at Universal City, to be used by the 101 Bison Company for staging of railroad stories.

Director McRay is well known for his railroad stories. Ever since the organization of Universal Company he has been practically the only director engaged in the production of films of that brand. To facilitate his work along this line he secured permission from Universal officials to construct a stretch of railroad one and a half miles in length at the big picture city. A force of men is now busy at work laying the steel, and within a short time the tracks will be ready to carry its first burden of rolling stock before the cameras.

Although this track is being constructed primarily for the 101 Bison Company, it will be at the service of whatever U company may chance to need it.

FAY TINCHER'S NINETY-FOOT DIVE.

Fay Tincher, the clever little Fine Arts comedienne, was compelled to make a ninety-foot dive twice in a two-reel Triangle comedy. Director Dillon took his entire company to San Diego last week in order to secure the scene where Fay, in escaping from her drunken husband, plunged headlong from a cliff into the ocean, a distance of ninety feet.

The camera was placed in position and Fay with a dummy baby in her arms, made the plunge. Upon swimming ashore it was found that the cameraman had forgotten to fasten his film correctly in the camera box, so the scene had to be taken over. Although completely tired out, plucky Fay graciously agreed to do it a second time, but before she made the second leap she went over the camera carefully and made sure that the film was properly placed in position. She then made the dive again and seemed none the worse for her second dip.

Miss Tincher is a powerful swimmer and expert diver.

She recently won second prize in the woman's rough water swimming contest from Ocean Park to Venice, a distance of over a mile.

The diving scene only takes a short piece of film; but in order to secure the ideal location Director Dillon took his entire company to San Diego.

The name of this feature is "Laundry Liz," a melodramatic comedy. One of the unique features of this film is the showing of how motion pictures are made; another scene in this film is the showing of the interior of the motion picture theater with the motion picture being run and the audience in the foreground.

It was reported that Will M. Ritchie had left the Balboa, but H. M. and E. D. Horkheimer, heads of the company, positively deny this.

Converting timely topics into comedies seems to be the long suit of Director Hal Roach of Rolin-Pathe funny pictures, for this week the company started work on a picture in an ammunition factory. Fourteen sticks of dynamite, twenty-seven large cans of black powder, eighty-three fuse caps and three hundred feet of fuse were delivered to the studio.

The other Rolin company is doing a picture theater comedy with its players as principals in a big controversy. For this a large number of extras are used as an audience and some funny situations are woven into the laugh producing story.

The following remarks by a tourist prove that travelers like pictures. He refers to a new house in Long Beach:

"'I wonder if the people themselves,' remarked a tourist in casual conversation with me," said George H. Brooks, of 641 East Twentieth street, "'appreciate the fact that local capital's faith in Long Beach, present and future, has given this city another real attraction? What I refer to is the new theater on West Ocean avenue. There are other theaters here, good and well worthy of the large patronage they receive, but it seems to me that the investment made in this latest completed playhouse is eloquent of the faith of capital in this city and that the crowds gathering there are already proof that the investment was wisely made. Floral decorations of the new theater are appropriate reminders of the fact that this is a land of flowers the year 'round. The pipe organ is one of the finest features. The organ itself is a wonder, and a master presides at the keyboard. I am not the only tourist in Long Beach who will come again and come partly on account of this theater.'"

Word has been received at the Lasky studio that Laura Marie Trainor, the Missoula, Mont., girl, who is riding on horseback from that city to the studio in Hollywood, has reached San Francisco, where she was enthusiastically received at the Paramount office. After a brief rest, Miss Trainor will finish the last portion of her trip.

Among the latest to enter the film business in this city is Frank Wilson, who started his moving picture career in the days of store "fitups," later drifting over to the general amusement business, and recently returning to his "first love." He is now managing the Star Film Company, in the Knickerbocker Building, on Oliver street, the company having been formed to handle advertising films as a specialty. Mr. Wilson states he will be glad to hear from any Eastern concerns which require representatives in and around Los Angeles.

Sessue Hayakawa, the Lasky star, is delighted with the story of "The Honorable Friend," not for its value from a dramatic standpoint, but from the fact that it has three fights in it, one of them, between himself and some of his fellow countrymen, being fought entirely by jiu-jitsu. During the taking of these scenes the air was filled with flying Nipponese and many of the tricks of this clever method of combat were displayed.

Tod Browning, director for the Triangle-Fine Arts Company, on July 12 was tendered a surprise party by his friends at the Reiter Arms Apartments, Hollywood. The affair was given in honor of Browning's twenty-third birthday.

Miss Alice Wilson had charge of the arrangements. Browning was taken to the downtown district for dinner. One of the members of the party soon after the dinner pleaded a severe headache and they all adjourned to the Reiter Arms, where Browning was met by the three hundred guests who were invited to the affair, including notable film people from the various studios in the motion picture colony. Charles Murray, the Keystone comedian, acted as master of ceremonies, and welcomed Browning home with a traditional Keystone bit of comedy.

A buffet luncheon was served in the Reiter Arms ballroom, and the evening was spent in dancing.

Among the guests were Mr. and Mrs. Edward Dillon, Chet Withey, Mabel Normand, Fay Tincher, Dorothy Gish, Robert Harron, Wallace Reid, Dorothy Davenport, Mr. and Mrs. Lloyd Ingraham, J. C. Epping, Ruth Stonehouse, Mr. and Mrs. W. C. Cabanne, Bessie Love, Mae and Marguerite Marsh, Mrs. Marsh, Mary H. O'Connor, Hettie Gray Baker, Constance Talmadge, Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Clifton, Mr. and Mrs. Walter Long, Bernard McConville, Roy Somerville, Mr. and Mrs. Tom Wilson and others. Hettie Gray Baker, of the scenario department of the Fine Arts Company, celebrated her birthday at the same time.

Eddie Dillon presented Browning with a sponge cake containing twenty-three red peppermint candies, arranged so as to form Browning's initials.

Frank E. Woods, manager of production of the Triangle-Fine Arts Company, is again at his desk after a flying trip to New York.

Mr. Woods spent a week in New York conferring with Triangle officials. In New York he was joined by Mrs. Woods, who, with Mrs. W. E. Wing, wife of the well-known scenario writer, had made the trip from Los Angeles to New York in an automobile.

Roscoe Arbuckle tells this joke on himself:

Some of the members of the company were joshing him about his size. He turned around to his director and said, indicating an auto race track near which they were standing, "I'll bet, just the same, I can run around that track in three minutes. Anybody got a stop-watch?"

A silence followed.

Then the director looked at Roscoe sympathetically.

"You don't want a stop watch, Roscoe. What you want is a calendar."

This time their destruction consisted of the smashing of a California bungalow, which was placed upon trucks and was just crossing the track when a locomotive ran into it, completely demolishing the beautiful cottage. Many other scenes were made during the day with a full train crew and a bevy of film stars."

A dispatch from Beaumont, eighty miles east of here, says that on July15, had the camera man been ready, a thrilling film not on the program would have been caught when an auto containing members of the Dudley Motion Picture Company caught fire. The company has recently been stationed at Redlands and came here to film cattle scenes.

The occupants of the auto were dressed in nifty white suits when the fire started. Although almost surrounded by flames, they managed to escape without being burned, but their costumes were ruined by a stream from a chemical fire extinguisher, which had been hurriedly brought from another car.

The machine was saved from destruction, but the picture actors were compelled to return to Redlands minus the scenes which they had expected to film.

Nell Shipman, in her brief vacation between the completion of the Vitagraph feature, "Through the Wall," and the beginning of her engagement with the Fox Company, has spent the biggest part of this time in her beloved pastime—swimming. Her daily long swims in the ocean brought to her last week the offer of instructress at a beach swimming pool in Ocean Park, but of course she could not accept the position.

Walt. Woertman, who is six feet six inches tall, is thankful for his long legs. Here's the reason:

While doing the camera work on some scenes for Gaumont's "Reel Life" in a small launch at Catalina Island, he lost his balance and would have fallen overboard had his foot not become entangled in the anchor chain and held him fast.

When asked if he could swim, he replied, "No; you see it's this way, I have never learned, as I'm tall enough to wade out of most places."

Paramount Holds Publicity Convention

Officials, Exchange Men and Publicity Experts Forgather in the Windy City and Lay the Keel of Advertising Campaign

PARAMOUNT Pictures Corporation announces this week that it is about to launch the most complete publicity campaign that has yet been planned for the industry, the foundation of which is to be sincere and absolute co-operation with the exhibitor. This campaign comes as the ultimate outcome of the publicity convention that was held in Chicago recently by the members of the Paramount family, at which there were present representatives from the producing companies making Paramount Pictures, publicity and advertising directors, and managers of the exchanges of the corporation, and the heads of the departments of Paramount's New York office.

The publicity convention was held at the Blackstone Hotel where every possible publicity problem of the Paramount family was discussed. The members of the Paramount family who attended the conferences were: Hiram Abrams, president of Paramount; William L. Sherry, vice president of Paramount; James Stelle, treasurer of Paramount; Wallace Thompson, director of publications and advertising of Paramount; John A. Stevenson, manager of the extension Bureau of Paramount; B. P. Schulberg, Famous Players publicity manager; J. C. Flinn, Lasky publicity manager; Carl H. Pierce, Morosco-Pallas publicity manager; Julian Solomon, assistant to Mr. Pierce; W. E. Greene, treasurer of the Boston exchange; S. J. Stoughton, general sales manager of the Sherry exchange; R. C. Schmidt, manager of the Pittsburgh exchange; W. F. Seymour, manager of the Twenty-third Street exchange; C. E. Tandy, general manager of the Southern Paramount Pictures Company of Atlanta; Herman Wobber, general manager of the Progressive Motion Picture Company of San Francisco; J. W. Allen, assistant manager of the Progressive Motion Picture Company of San Francisco; George K. Robinson, publicity manager of the Boston exchange; A. D. Flinton, president of the Kansas City exchange; Bert Barnett, general manager of the Minneapolis exchange; L. D. Balsly, advertising manager of the Kansas City exchange; Oscar A. Morgan, publicity manager of the Philadelphia exchange; John S. King, advertising manager of the Pittsburgh exchange; W. C. Bachmeyer, manager of the Cincinnati exchange; George E. Carpenter, publicity manager of the Salt Lake exchange; J. W. H. Cohn, manager of the Denver exchange; F. M. Brockell, manager of the Chicago exchange; D. L. Dennison, manager of the Detroit exchange; Harry Asher, manager of the Boston exchange; L. Marcus, manager of the Salt Lake exchange; Frank Paxton, publicity manager of the Chicago exchange.

Exhibitor co-operation has been one of the strongest features of Paramount service in the past, but with the beginning of August when the plans for the great campaign will be put into full play, there will be given an exhibitor's service as effective, probably, as that of any corporation in the country. With the progressive ideas of the newly elected officials of the Paramount organization, President Hiram Abrams, Treasurer James Steele, and Vice President William L. Sherry, backed by the firm determination of the producing companies represented by President Zukor, Messrs Lasky and Goldfish of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and Oliver Morosco and Frank A. Garbutt, of the Morosco and Pallas Pictures interests, to give the exhibitor, not only the best pictures that are procurable but a service and co-operation that will aid the exhibitor to present his pictures to the public in an attractive manner and advertise them in a Paramount way, it is believed that the next year will show even more wonderful strides made by Paramount than they have made during the past two years.

The first move towards the perfection of the plan has been the establishment in every exchange of a publicity efficiency department where there has been none in the past, and through these departments Paramount will distribute more and better publicity matter than ever before. Every want of every exhibitor will be given serious consideration, and no matter what form of publicity is desired by the exhibitor it will be furnished to boost Paramount pictures and producers of Paramount pictures.

President Abrams has sounded the keynote of the campaign in stating that Paramount had determined upon a policy of absolute and consistent co-operation with the exhibitors, which was to include a sincere effort for the further unification of the various interests interlinked in the Paramount plan; that no stone would be left unturned to bring this about and that there would be no stone wall existing between producer, exhibitor and distributor, for in Paramount there would be naught save the most sincere of family feeling, each assisting the other toward the building of a better and greater Paramount organization.

Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has seconded Mr. Abrams in this and made it plain that the producers and Paramount had formulated this plan for the most aggressive campaign for better productions and more equitable and judicial distribution than has ever before been made in the motion picture industry with the sole purpose of giving the exhibitor that more earnest co-operation and personal attention that he has always dreamed of some day obtaining. These same purposes and plans have met with the heartiest approval of Morosco and Pallas Pictures representatives, and the publicity campaign of Paramount will be in full swing in a short while.

Vitagraph Employs Woman Director

One Time Scenario Head Will Write and Direct Features.

MARGUERITE BERTSCH, one of the foremost scenario writers and one of the few women directors in the motion picture profession, has started producing her latest effort, which will be released as a Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature.

For a number of years Miss Bertsch was the editor-in-chief of Vitagraph's scenario department and it was then that she wrote a number of the big successes produced by that company.

It is only during the last year that Miss Bertsch has undertaken the actual direction of her pictures, but her first effort was such a marked success that she will continue along the producing end, both directing and writing the pictures.

Some of Miss Bertsch's scripts are "For a Woman's Fair Name," "Salvation Joan," starring Edna May, and "The Law Decides."

Unless we are bad guessers it will not be long before this capable woman will be one of our foremost picture directors.

B. S. MOSS TO BUILD THEATER.

B. S. Moss announces that he will build a motion picture theater at 181st street and Broadway, New York City, which will be one of the most elaborate in the city and will seat 3,500 persons. The plans have been drawn by Thomas W. Lamb, and it is expected that the house will be ready for occupancy by February 1, 1917. The cost of the project is said to be about $1,000,000.

Brenon Signs Nazimova

Secures Famous Actress and Will Present Her in a Picture Version of "War Brides."

Herbert Brenon announces that he has closed a contract calling for the appearance of Mme. Alla Nazimova in a picture version of "War Brides," in which the actress appeared on the legitimate stage. In discussing his plans for this production, Mr. Brenon says that he will have no battle scenes, believing that the play is sufficiently strong and the actress sufficiently able to make the subject the success he hopes to achieve.

Along with this announcement Mr. Brenon gives the information that Lewis J. Selznick and Stanley Mastbaum will be associated with him in his new enterprise. Mr. Selznick heads the Clara Kimball Young Company and Mr. Mastbaum is one of the big exhibitors of Philadelphia.

BROOKLYN THEATER MEN APPEAL TO MAYOR.

A committee of forty-two Brooklyn motion picture theater exhibitors called on Mayor Mitchel of New York on Monday, July 17, in an effort to have modified the recent ruling of the Health Commissioner that during the epidemic of infantile paralysis children under sixteen years of age could not be admitted to theaters. William Brandt, executive secretary of the Associated Motion Picture Exhibitors of Brooklyn, was the spokesman for the delegation. The Mayor listened to the statement of Mr. Brandt and asked him to write him a letter embodying his arguments, which he promised to present to the Health Commissioner.

On the following day Mr. Brandt sent a letter to the Mayor setting forth in detail the side of the motion picture men and asking the chief executive of the city if it be impossible to have rescinded the original order that it at least be modified so as to permit the admission of children over twelve years of age. Mr. Brandt among other things pointed out that the law already prohibits the admission of children unless accompanied by an adult.

CORRESPONDENT CHENEY DONS KHAKI.

George M. Cheney, correspondent in New Orleans of the Moving Picture World, is now at Camp Stafford, Louisiana, with Battery A of the Washington Artillery. "Believe me," says Mr. Cheney in a note accompany his letter of this week, "Sherman was mild in describing war. Our fodder is good and the discipline better. But what hurts me are these awful hours I have to keep. Up every morning with the chickens and me an ex-morning newspaper man! I never used to be thoroughly awake until 3.30 (P. M.). But now it is A. M. instead."

Mr. Cheney adds that he was glad to meet his motion picture friends in New Orleans, but says it is liable to be some time before he sees them again as he expects his battery will be on the way to the border shortly.

MORE PLAYERS ENGAGED AT UNIVERSAL CITY.

The following changes have been made in the personnel of the Universal companies and general stock: On July 1 Clara Horton was engaged to play in the Lule Warrenton Juvenile company; on July 3 A. W. Wertz was engaged to play juvenile roles; on July 5 Fred L. Wilson was engaged to play characters, C. Eaglewing, an Indian, to play Indian roles, Earl Silvera and Joe de la Cruz, to play Mexican parts. V. V. Clegg and Jack Walters, to play in character, and Henri DeVries and Dorothy Drake to do heavies. On July 6 Claire De Bray and Eileen Allen were engaged to serve as utility actresses and Evelyn Selbie to play character roles.

FANNY WARD RETURNS TO THE LASKY STUDIOS.

After a vacation and rest of several months spent in New York, Fannie Ward, the Lasky star, who achieved exceptional success in "The Cheat," and who has appeared also in "The Marriage of Kitty," "For the Defense" and "The Gutter Magdalene," has returned to the Lasky studios at Hollywood, Cal., to begin work on a new elaborate production entitled "Each Pearl a Tear." Jack Dean, her husband, returned with her.

UNICORN OPENS EXCHANGES.

The Unicorn Film Service Corporation announces the opening of several new exchanges as follows: Charlotte, N. C., C. O. Moss in charge; Harrisburg, Pa., with W. A. Kline, formerly of Washington, D. C., in charge, and Baltimore, Md., with Palmore & Homand in charge. The Washington office is now in charge of William Mack.

Vitagraphs on the General Film Program

Two Comedies and a Drama Will Be Released During the Week of July 31 and August 5

A HEART interest story, superbly acted and with a strong appeal, is told in "The Bond of Blood," a Broadway Star Feature in three parts which Vitagraph announces for Saturday, August 5th. The star, Leah Baird, is charming and convincing in a role which afford her opportunities for much emotional work, and Van Dyke Brooke, to whom belongs the credit for directing the picture, is thoroughly acceptable in a powerful sympathetic part. George Arvine and Jack Ellis, who are seen in the supporting cast also fit well into their parts. The settings are well chosen and detail has been carefully attended to. Some pretty light effects are worthy of mention. One of the strong scenes is seen when Van Dyke Brooke, as a former actor, now down and out, is given a chance to play a part in a new play and finds, on clasping the leading lady, who is supposed to be his daughter to his breast, that she really is his daughter who has been lost to him for a great many years. A touching reunion takes place and the old actor takes a new lease on life. With its large human interest element and the prominence of the star, this will surely prove a top notch attraction. Van Dyke Brooke also wrote the story.

A well developed comedy theme, amusingly interesting throughout and with good work on the part of principals and cast, is embodied in "A Hard Job," a one-part comedy. William Dangman plays the leading part in his individual and distinctive style and his support is all that could be desired. One member of Dangman's supporting cast unconsciously amuses the audience all through the picture. This is a merry little baby who is seen in almost every scene and never minus a broad smile. Dangman is seen as a young man who, through straitened circumstances, is forced to mind a child to earn a living. Though the babe has a sweet disposition, he still causes the hero sufficient trouble to insure the audience many hearty laughs. The action of the picture is fast and direction good. The remaining parts are well taken care of by George O'Donnell, Florence Natol, Jessie Miller and Lucille Crane. Frank Currier directed the comedy from Mrs. Owen Bronson's scenario.

"The Race for Life" is a comedy cleverly worked around a college athletic meet. The heroine, Mary Anderson, does good work as a college Miss who shatters the heart of an ardent admirer by reserving her smiles for an athletic youth who attends her college. The heart broken youth finds himself in favor once more, when, chased by a murderous looking individual wielding a dagger and a gun, he rushes right into a college athletic meet, unknowingly enters a race and romps home far in the lead, thus scoring the deciding point and saving the day for his college. The action is fast and interesting, and in the athletic meet, William Wolbert, who wrote and directed the story, obtained a very realistic scene. Jack Mower, Otto Lederer and William Weston support Miss Anderson.

Triangles for August

Great Variety of Subject and Treatment Offered on the Mid-summer Program

TRIANGLE releases for August provides an almost endless variety of subject and treatment. Among the stars who will be seen in the various features are Mae Marsh, Frank Keenan, Charles Ray, Norma Talmadge, H. B. Warner and Wilfred Lucas. Two decided novelties in the month's releases are "The Marriage of Molly-O" which will be released August 5th, and "The Jungle Child" to be released August 20th.

"The Marriage of Molly-O" is an extremely interesting and typical Irish story in which Mae Marsh is ably supported by Robert Harron. No end of expense has been spared to make the settings of the story realistic, and one scene, a village street, is an exact replica of a street in the little town in County Kerry. The story serves to emphasize the remarkable ability of Miss Marsh for characterization, and will undoubtedly prove one of the best Triangle features ever released.

"The Jungle Child" is a daring piece of photography in which the interior of a jungle is used for a setting of the early part of the story. The idea of the play is a decidedly novel one and Howard Hickman and Dorothy Dalton, who fill respectively the leading male and female roles, give unusually fine interpretations of the characters.

During the month two thoroughly typical Frank Keenan characters will be shown. On August 5th "Honor Thy Name," brings Mr. Keenan as a co-star with Charles Ray. He plays a Southern gentleman in the Autumn of life, with feeling and full appreciation of the character. In "The Thoroughbred," scheduled for release on August 27, he is again seen as a Southerner, but in this he is one of the delightful horse racing fraternity, so popular both in fact and fiction whenever the name of Kentucky is mentioned. Both Keenan features are "sure fire" and will add not a little to the large following of admirers that that decidedly capable actor already has.

"Hell to Pay Austin," another release for the week of August 20, is one of those big Western stories for which Triangle is so well known. It serves to bring Wilfred Lucas to the front as a Triangle star, and an advance synopsis of the story indicates a typical Triangle success.

Other August features are "The Devil's Needle," in which Webber's Show, Denver, Colo.

Another Magnificent Photoplay House Being Erected in This City—Convex Front Will Be One of Exterial Features—Architecture to Be Cubistic.

WEBBER'S SHOW—That's the name of Denver's newest proposed photoplay house. Ground was broke for it recently and work of construction is being rushed, but it is expected that it will be December 1 before the theater is completed. It is to be located at Bayaud and South Broadway in the heart of a thriving business and residential section. It is to cost $75,000, and its owner declares that it will be second to none in the United States. The Webber theater is the fourth first class theater to be projected in Denver within a few months.

Three blocks north of the site of the Webber Show, the Moore and Greaves Amusement Company, owners of the Princess theater on Curtis street and a string of other houses in Colorado and Wyoming, is rapidly pushing work on a moving picture house that is to be a model in itself. It is to be known as The Queen. Located one block on either side of the Queen are the Royal and Bronx theaters, first class houses, making South Broadway a serious rival of Curtis street, which is famous all over the country as a "Movie Row."

Simultaneous with the breaking of ground for Webber's

Show, work of clearing the site for the America, the new picture theater planned for the northeast corner of 16th and Curtis streets, was begun. Across the street from this location the finishing touches are being put on the new Rialto, which is to be operated by the owners of The Strand, another large Curtis street house. The announcement of plans for Webber's Show is of interest from more than one standpoint. In addition to the significance it bears to the growth and prosperity of the firm industry in Denver, it marks the return to the photoplay family of one of its oldest and most prominent members.

DeWitt C. Webber, who is back of the project, is a pioneer show man. He was in the "legitimate" game before moving pictures entered the amusement field, and he was one of the first to take up the business of exhibiting films in Denver. Heretofore his activities have been confined to Curtis street where he operated several small shows before taking over The Iris, one of the larger of the downtown houses. He operated this for several years, retiring twelve months ago. The money to be expended in the building of Webber's Show was made in the motion picture business.

The Webber Show, according to its owner, will be an ornate fireproof structure. Architecturally it will be unlike any other theater in the United States. It is designed along cubistic lines and will be a combination of ornamental stucco and gorgeous color effects. The convex front extends the full height of three stories, broken by French doors and surmounted by bronze balconies. On each side of the entrance doors will be two large cubist figures, supporting huge flower vases which will be used in conjunction with other devises for lighting the exterior of the building, instead of the usual display of innumerable light bulbs. The building will be lighted exteriorly by a "flood lighting" system placed on standards at the curb line. It will probably be the only theater in the country lighted this way.

The interior also will be lighted in an entirely novel way. With the aid of dimmers the light in the auditorium may be changed from brilliant noonday sunshine to a soft mellow glow. No lamps will be seen. The source of all light will be concealed in large ornamental gold fixtures hung from the ceiling and recessed in the walls. In the foyer four cubist figures will support additional reflectors. The theater will be equipped with 1,000 seats, all on the ground floor. Three spacious aisles will be provided. The opera chairs will be commodious and artistic in design, set thirty inches apart.

Directly over the foyer and extending the full width of the building will be the loggia, containing the conservatory hung with tapestries of unique design and furnished with luxurious divans. The loggia will open into the lounging room through a series of French doors and will be illuminated by reflectors. From the loggia a view of the auditorium will be obtained. On the exterior a gold bronze balcony parallels the lounging room. Not the least interesting feature of the structure will be the location of the operator's booth which the designer declares will be completely hidden from view by an illusory effect.

The screen will be so placed that occupants of the front rows will have a perfect perspective of the picture. The orchestra pit will contain a consol and will be large enough to accommodate an operatic orchestra. The building will be of reinforced concrete with an asbestos roof. Heavy brick walls will extend to the roof line and will be covered with Medusa pebbledash cement with a brilliant white surface on which the colors of the ornamental stucco and the gold figures at the entrance will be richly silhouetted.

Special study will be given to heating and ventilating. The air in the theater will be completely changed every ten minutes. It will be conducted into the house, both summer and winter, through two large ducts from the roof and will be directed to various parts of the house without draughts by motor fans. It is claimed by Mr. Webber that the temperature can be raised or reduced quickly 25 per cent. There will be no balconies in the lofty interior.

Among the many decorative effects for the foyer will be an aquarium with a background of turquoise velvet on which will be painted figures of mermaids. Numerous cameos in blue and white, matching the blue and white tiling of the floor, will blend harmoniously with the arrangement of gorgeous colors, flooded with soft and radiant light. In the lobby between the inner doors will be a drinking fountain of delicate sculpture in the form of the head of a beautiful woman with water bubbling alluringly from her lips.

The Walbrook Theater, Baltimore, Md.

Magnificent Photoplay House a Credit to the Industry—Constructed of Fireproof Material, and Is Equipped with Everything Modern.

ONE of the most substantial and up-to-date suburban theaters of Baltimore, Md., is the Walbrook theater, which is located in the pretty suburb of that name at North avenue and Rosedale street, on the northwest corner This theater was built by the Walbrook Amusement Company, which is being financed by many of the Walbrook people, and was opened to the public on Monday, May 29, 1916.

The officers of the company are: Harrison L. Stires, president; Oscar Teschner, vice president; Otis J. Tall, treasurer; Clarence H. Koonze, secretary; Christopher Wattenscheidt, counselor, with Marion S. Pearce and Phillip J. Scheck, directors.

The building has been constructed so as to be absolutely fireproof throughout. The exterior is of Colonial brick with metal cornices, a slag roof, and a marquee has been placed over the triple arched doorways of mahogany of the main entrance on North avenue. The building measures 48x121 feet, and the lot on which it stands is 150 feet deep. Exits have been placed on all four sides and heavy metal fireproof doors protect the rear and side exits. The chairs were installed by Heywood Bros. Wakefield County ground was stalled by Heywood Bros. Ground was broken for the construction of this theater in December, 1915.

The lobby measures 10x45 feet. The walls are of old ivory, while the wainscoting is of Marvelo marble. The box office, which has a verdi-antique base and is paneled with heavy plate glass on three sides, is located in the center of the inner wall between two large mahogany doors paneled with glass which lead into the auditorium. Directly at each end of the lobby, large doors open upon spacious staircases of ornamental cast iron with slate treads which lead to the mezzanine floor, where private rest rooms for women and men, beautifully arranged, are located; and thence to the balcony. The seating capacity of the balcony is 200 and the first row is arranged as boxes, which may be engaged for parties of three or four.

The operator's booth is located directly over the mezzanine floor and back of the balcony. It is equipped with the latest mechancal devices, including two Simplex, motor driven, projection machines, a motor generator and a rewinder. The ventilation of this booth is done by a large rotary exhaust fan. Fireproof protections of the latest design have been taken. The throw of the projection machine to the gold fibre screen, measuring 15x18½ feet, is 110 feet.

Situated in the ceiling, under the balcony, as you enter the auditorium, is located a dome, finished in old ivory, which emits a beautiful diffused glow from the cove lighting system with which it is equipped. The floor is bowled so that the screen can be plainly observed from every seat. There are two four-foot aisles. There is a row of eleven seats in the center and on each side of this row is a four-foot aisle, and next to the walls on both sides is a row of six seats. These seats, which measure 19x20 inches, like the woodwork, are done in French grey. The ceiling is 30 feet high. The walls are done in old ivory, with large panels of Rose du Barry silk, topped by flower festoons. Below this a wainscoting of old leather dado. A large chandelier having an old metal effect of antique bronze is suspended from a heavy beamed and paneled ceiling with enriched cornices and mouldings. The orchestra pit measures 9x14 feet and has room enough for a baby grand piano and six musicians. A heavy, maroon colored carpet covers the floors. The seating capacity, including the balcony, is about 1,400.

A low-pressure steam heating system is used. Three large radiators have been placed in recess panels on each side of the main auditorium and one small radiator is located in each rear exit. Other radiators have been placed throughout the building, so that a uniform temperature is produced.

Both natural and artificial ventilating systems have been installed. There are ten ceiling ventilators. Large, rotary, ball-bearing fans have been placed in a vent house situated on the roof, which can be used to force the air either in or out of the theater.

The performances are continuous from 2 p. m. to 11 p. m., but the regular stated periods for the schedule are from 2 to 5 p. m. and from 7 to 11 p. m. As yet no manager has been appointed for the theater, but this end of the work will be done by the directors and officers of the amusement company.

Wonderland Theater, Windom, Minn.

In the year 1914 P. G. Redding and J. H. Stroud opened the Wonderland theater in Windom, Minn. It was erected at a cost of $15,000, and is 35 feet wide by 115 feet long. Fireproof material has been used in constructing the Wonderland, and it complies with the law in respect to wiring, aisles, exits, etc. There is an eighteen foot ceiling, and the interior is decorated in perfect harmony.

Wonderland Theater, Windom, Minn.

The seating capacity is 600, and there is plenty of room between the rows of chairs. The Wonderland under the able management of Redding & Stroud has been a profitable investment since it was opened. The management is booking big features as well as running the regular program material. Among the big productions that have been shown at the Wonderland are "The Birth of a Nation," and "The Battle Cry of Peace." The accompanying illustration shows the house in gala dress for the presentation of the last named picture. The Wonderland is advertised extensively.

Lobby Fitted with Tables and Chairs of Hickory Reminds One of Private Veranda—Issues Monthly Calendar with Names of Pictures for All Days — Attendance Largely Derived from University Nearby.

ONE of the most interesting moving picture theaters in the Eastbay suburbs of San Francisco is the Campus theater at Durant and Telegraph avenues, Berkeley, conducted by the Campus Motion Picture Company, of which R. M. Gilman is manager. The house takes its name from the fact that it is located but a short distance from the campus of the University of California, the beautiful Sather gate being but three blocks distant, with the new Campanile in full view from the lobby. Fully 60 per cent, of the patronage is from the student body at the university and the faculty, making it almost a college institution.

The theater was erected about two years ago and is of tile construction, being practically fireproof. It covers a lot

Campus Theater, Berkeley, Cal.

40 by 130 feet in size and has a seating capacity of five hundred. If the chairs were arranged as they are in many other houses at least six hundred persons could be accommodated but comfort has been considered above all things and no crowding has been permitted. Twenty-two inch chairs are used and an unusually wide space has been left between the rows. When the house was first opened under a different management there was no heating plant and the cement floor was a source of great discomfort, but the new proprietors have installed a heating system and the place is now comfortable at all times.

One of the most interesting features of the theater is the lobby, which faces the university grounds. This is about 15 by 35 feet in size, with a red tile floor, and has been fitted up in an unusually attractive manner. Here are tables old hickory furniture, potted plants and hanging baskets, affording a splendid setting for the posters which are hung in neat frames from the walls and shown on attractive easels. In its general appearance the lobby reminds one of a broad home veranda and is not much different from the entrances to some of the fine sorority houses in the neighborhood.

Above the lobby, reached by a stairway from the inside, is a beautiful parlor, furnished with wicker furniture, rest rooms for patrons, an office, sign and storage room and the operating room. In the latter are installed two Power's Cameragraphs No. 6A and a General Electric Compensare. The picture projected is a little larger than is usually found in a house of this size, being 14 by 19 feet. A gold fiber screen is used with good success. Music is furnished by a Fotoplayer installed at a cost of $5,000 and this is becoming a feature of the theater, the musician being an expert performer. The price of admission at all times is ten cents for adults and five cents for children.

The program at the Campus theater is changed daily, Paramount pictures being shown four days a week, V-L-S-E productions for two days and Metro, or Pathe, on the remaining day. The pictures are booked for more than a month in advance and each month a program calendar is issued and distributed to patrons. This is in the form of a regular calendar and with the figure showing the day of the month is printed the feature for that day, the star of the production and the make of the film. The time at which the main production goes on the screen is also shown, together with the day on which the Hearst-Vitagraph News can be seen. The mailing list of the theater more than doubled following the adoption of this calendar plan. To add tone to the calendar a handsome cut is used each month showing some favorite star. Owing to its location the attendance at this house is affected considerably by the closing of the university for the summer vacation and it is likely that the theater will always be closed during this period, as is the case this year.

The operator's booth is equipped with the latest appliances, consisting of two Simplex motor driven projection machines and a mercury arc rectifier. The pictures are projected on a radium screen.

The seating capacity is 480 with standing room sufficient to accommodate about 200 more. The ventilating is done by five windows on each side of the building and four large ventilators are located in the ceiling. The indirect lighting system is used.

The program of this house includes the productions of Triangle, V-L-S-E, Inc., and Mutual, and it is stated by Mr. Leibold that he has always done good business with the pictures he has booked.

Regent Theater, Elmira, N. Y.

Harton Company Establishes Up-to-Date Photoplay House in This City—Management Considering Enlarging Seating Capacity—Electrical Equipment Installed by Westinghouse Company.

IN the Regent theater at Elmira, N. Y., the Harton Theater Company has given to its patrons a moving picture playhouse ranking with the foremost in the land. The interior decorations while plain are artistic and harmonize with the stage setting. A pipe organ with its pipes on both sides of the stage adds considerably to the attractiveness of the auditorium. The theater building is L-shaped, the entrance being on East Water street. The theater proper is on the L extending to Railroad avenue.

High class photoplays are shown exclusively and that the public appreciate the policy of the management in the careful selection of the subjects to be shown is demonstrated by the fact that the S. R. O. sign is hung out nightly at an early hour. The theater seats 871 persons, but the management are seriously considering increasing this capacity. The screen is 14 by 18 feet, and the projection distance is 74 feet. Two projection machines are used. Ample ventilation is secured by exhaust fans.

The Harton Theater Company realized that a well appointed and attractive theater was not the only requisite in order to assure success. The pictures must be thrown on the screen in the best possible manner; the focus and projection must be right and the illumination of the screen uniform and brilliant. This is best effected by the use of direct current as a means for obtaining the necessary light. As the Elmira Water, Light and Railroad Company, from which the theater management buy their electricity, could only furnish alternating current, it was decided that a two-light motor generator set be installed to convert the 3-phase, 60 cycle, alternating current into direct current at 75 volts. The motor of the set is rated at 7½ horsepower, 60 cycles, 220 volts, 1800 rpm. It is operated by the current furnished by the lighting company and is used for driving the 4⅛ kw., compound wound, direct current generator. The generator delivers current at 75 volts, but as only 55 volts at the arc is required the voltage is reduced to this value by means of non-inflammable, well ventilated resistors with a sufficient number of steps for adjustment purposes.

While the motion picture machines in the Regent are operated on direct current, arrangements are made whereby in the event of the failure of the direct current supply, either of the two projectors may be thrown onto a 110 volt alternating current circuit. This is accomplished by means of double throw knife switches. These switches are properly fused at both ends to give protection to both the direct current and the alternating current circuits. This is necessary as the alternating current arc requires about three times as many amperes as the direct current arc. Four arc steadying or ballast resistors are used, one in each direct current circuit, and one in each alternating current circuit. The direct current resistor has a capacity of from 30 to 50 amperes and is equipped with connections for adjusting the amount of resistance. The resistor in the alternating current circuit is designed for reducing the 110 volt supply circuit to 32 volts at the arc and is capable of giving from 75 to 100 amperes. This resistor also has connections for adjusting the amount of resistance. A switchboard is mounted on the wall and contains a 150 ampere ameter, a 150 volt voltmeter, two ground detector lamps to meet the requirements of the Underwriters, and the two double pole, double throw knife switches. The electrical equipment, consisting of motor-generator set and control, was furnished by the Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Company of East Pittsburgh, Pa.

Helen Greene

UNQUESTIONABLY, one of the most promising of the younger leading women of the screen is Helen Greene, the beautiful and accomplished daughter of Clay M. Greene, who has just passed out of her teens. Her rise has been next to phenomenal in the two branches of theaterdom she has attempted, and her star seems to be still brightening. After a few weeks in the stock company of the Chestnut Street Opera House, Philadelphia, in minor roles two years ago, she accepted a call to the Comstock Company in Cleveland as ingenue. During the last six weeks of this engagement the defection of the leading lady caused the promotion of Miss Greene to her position and she played the leads with commendable success until the close of the season.

Helen Greene.

Last year she attempted pictures for the first time, joining her father's company at Lubin's in Philadelphia, and her first effort was so successful that the firm engaged her for the leads, in which position she continued until her engagement as the principal feature in the dramatic serial exploited by a newspaper syndicate. Having concluded this engagement it was her purpose to indulge in a much needed rest at the seaside home of her parents, but two flattering offers already made are likely to cause an alteration in her plans. Miss Greene is bright, vivacious even in her serious moments and has a ready wit.

"Meteoric!" she ejaculated in response to a query. "No, I'm not quite sure that I fancy having my experience called that. Meteors are quick, snappy, ephemeral sorts of things are'nt they? I have a notion that they suddenly appear out of nowhere, broken off of something or other, then, after sputtering, or gliding quietly across the sky for a few brief moments, they darken and fall into oblivion where nobody ever finds them. I've worked too hard and too constantly to be rewarded by a career that sputters awhile, then snuffs itself out into nothingness. Mushroom is a better word, for it has a fluctuating price according to supply and demand and a material entity which a meteor has not.

"Yes, I do love my work, although I'm not prepared to say just yet whether I like the theater or the studio best. In pictures I miss the wonderful lines I so love to speak, and in the theater I miss the evenings to myself when I can study or listen to the spoken words of people who are cleverer than I am. So, you see, I could be happy with either were t'other dear charmer away, and I shall be glad to supply demands in either direction to the best of my ability.

"Shell Forty-Three," a Powerful Ince Production, Featuring H. B. Warner, and "The Devil's Needle" Offering Intense Opportunity for Tully Marshall.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

"SHELL Forty-Three" goes deep into the most vital topic of these times. It tears away the false heroics and the glamour of sentimentality with which war is invested and reveals the naked truth about man's dedication to a purpose which offers no honor, no reward, no ennobling influence, no purging fire, at the call of those who make war. The stark reality of death stares him in the face at all times, even when he turns with mingled sadness and sweetness to scenes of domestic love and happiness. It reveals man as, above all things, a ruthless logician, capable of yielding all that makes life sweet to live, through recognition that he is not an individual at all, but a mere cog in a great social machine, which he must protect at the cost, not only of his life, but of all that he has lived for.

The doctrine beneath this magnificent story does not obtrude; it is merely felt by the intelligent observer, while story interest concerns itself with the mystery and constantly-growing peril of a central figure, a spy of the highest order, but the doctrine is there—men cast aside all personal interest as puerile in time of national danger and enter upon red-handed destruction with only one hope—that they may be one little factor in the advancement of mankind. Story interest centers upon a highly intelligent agent of the English Secret Service system, gambling with death from morning to night in a false role, one constantly suspected, that of a German spy masquerading as an American newspaper correspondent. Every move is attended with double mystery, but the final one brings what might be expected—the story is thoroughly artistic and consistent to the end. The treatment and selection of types is of the highest order.

"The Devil's Needle" affords Tully Marshall an opportunity to picture the horrors a talented artist suffers when he becomes addicted to the use of "dope," and it unconsciously gives Norma Talmadge a delightful role, which she uses so well that she draws most of the sympathy, but the story is not an attractive one; the effect of it is as bad at times as it is good at others, and there are serious faults of construction which mar the telling. The artist, after he acquires the habit, still maintains a fine studio and handsomely furnished apartments, a grand piano among the pieces; yet he is too poor to buy a little "dope" and has to beg it. A high comedy at the outset, the play terminates in some old-fashioned melodrama that does not harmonize with either the purpose, nor the intelligence, supposed, of the characters.

Director Frederick J. Ireland is completing the "Tom and Jerry" series of two-reel Emerald comedies. The current week's release is entitled "In a Fog."

"The Light at Dusk"

A Remarkable Lubin Production Directed by Edgar Lewis and Released on the V-L-S-E Program.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Bush.

THIS is one of the rare features which defy classification. Whatever we may think of the theme and its treatment there is no question of the originality of both. A big thought underlies the production, a big thought and altogether novel and deep one. One of its most gripping points is the bold but not unskilful introduction of the supernatural element. A man steeped in sin and selfishness is recalled to a realization of his folly by an apparition of Jesus of Nazareth. We have heard of old legends employing such visions but on the modern screen at last the idea has never been embodied before. The task for both director and actor was an exceedingly delicate one and it is due to them to say that they performed the task both delicately and reverently.

The leading part is taken by Orrin Johnson. Mr. Johnson has one great thing in his favor—he screens uncommonly well. He showed appreciable skill in the portrayal of character, he held himself under control and rendered a most creditable performance. Much praise is coming to Mary Carr who played the part of the plodding loyal peasant woman.

Though the feature is nearly seven reels in length and though at times there are episodic digressions it gains a firm hold on the spectators' interest, curiosity and sympathy and this hold is never relinquished for a moment. The director has thoroughly mastered the art of holding his audience. The compassion of the audience is often roused in a wonderfully clever way, there is never a false move. Mr. Lewis has a keen sense of dramatic values and a lively sense of dramatic proportion. The subject always remains under his control.

I have no doubt that this picture will give rise to controversy and criticism and incidentally to attractive advertising possibilities.

While atmosphere and settings leave nothing to be desired there are few details that have been overlooked and slighted. The scene being laid in Russia there should have been a Greek cross on the little village church which is seen so often. The coiffure on the daughter of the peasant seemed modern and American rather than Russian.

"The Light at Dusk" is a big subject done in a big way.

"The Yellow Menace" in Philadelphia.

Harry Schwalbe, Manager of the Electric Theater Supply Co., of Philadelphia, who will distribute "The Yellow Menace," the Unity Sales Corporation's 16 episode serial, in the Philadelphia territory, has been in New York for the past few days looking over the concluding episodes of the pictures.

"Love's Lariat"

Amusing Five-Part Western Comedy Presented by Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., Features Harry Carey.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

WHOLESOME in type, and at times brimming over with genuine comedy, "Love's Lariat" overbalances at the wrong end of the plant. Its first reel and part of its second displays some of the best western comedy, natural and spontaneous, that a film production ever boasted; but unfortunately the cowboy crudeness of the latter portion of the picture palls one's sense of the comic to a large extent. It is a case of "too much of a good thing." When Edward G. Landers, better known in the west as "Sky High," learned that he had inherited his late uncle's estate, he insisted that his pal "Skeeters" accompany him east; and when "Skeeters" refused point blank to leave the rest of the boys and "Sky High" decided to take the bunch along, an exceptionally comic situation arose. Their arrival at "Sky High's" new home in the city with no luggage other than their saddles, and the efforts of the butler to put them away respectably for the night are extremely amusing. As before said, a little of this would have been well enough, and the remainder of the story might have been developed in a more interesting fashion.

Harry Carey is especially pleasing as "Sky High," and Neal Hart at the saloon in the little western town of Coma does an exceptionally artistic "drunk" scene that is too amusing to be objectionable. William Quinn as Allan Landers, cousin of Edward G. Landers, and mild type of villain, and Olive Fuller Golden as Goldie Le Croix as the girl who threw Love's lariat and captured the hero, both do acceptable work. Miss Golden's role might, however, have been strengthened to advantage.

The picture, which will be released August 7, was directed by George Marshall and Harry Carey.

"The Tortured Heart"

Five-Reel Fox Production Features Virginia Pearson in Story of Strong Heart Appeal.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

IN THIS five-reel production, written and produced by Will S. Davis, the observer is provided with an old-fashioned story which exerts a considerable pull on the heart strings. The fore part of it is melodrama of the suppressed, convincing type, and the last reel breaks into action and thrills. The plot is not one of any particular novelty, but well constructed and consistent throughout.

Virginia Pearson has an extremely emotional part and carries the role creditably. She appears as Lucille Darrell, mother of the girl baby around whose life the story centers. She appears first during a hard rain storm, mysteriously wrapped and hooded, carrying the child on her arms. She deposits the baby inside the doorway of the Rev. Joseph Lorimore, and leaves with the intention of drowning herself. As she approaches the stream a second woman crosses her path, bent on the same errand.

The second woman commits suicide and Lucille Darrell decides to live. The dead woman is naturally suspected of having been the child's mother, and Lucille finds it easy to watch over the infant from a distance, after the minister has adopted it.

The character types are well drawn and some comedy is provided in the opening scenes. The child grows to womanhood and is lured away by a gambler. He abuses her and is killed after a saloon brawl. The mother then claims the child and tells of her own unfortunate marriage. The action in the closing reel is spirited and exciting.

"Father and Son"

Five-Reel Mutual, Featuring Henry E. Dixey.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

MR. DIXEY is a fine actor, whether on stage or screen, but he can not carry over to success any such vehicle of the most ordinary type as "Father and Son." The title has already done service and has little more application in this case than "Mother and Daughter," for father and son in the pickle business marry mother and daughter, their business rivals, events which so plainly cast their shadows before that there is no suspense in the story. The son in one case spies on the rival concern in disguise and falls in love with the daughter. The mother in the other case spies on the rival concern in disguise and finally marries the father.

To tell this story five reels are used by the usual device of depicting every movement of the characters, whether irrelevant or merely stupid. It is merely a case of waiting for the story to finish, except where Mr. Dixey manages to inject a little life into the limited opportunity afforded him. The story is amateurish in construction and hackneyed in subtitle, except when there are attempts to make the subtitles funny. The saddest part of such a release is the ability shown in settings and selection of types, ability wasted on what is not worth the effort. To keep anywhere near present standards, mere visualization is not enough—there must be something of interest to visualize.

"The Shadow of Her Past"

Lina Cavalieri and Lucien Muratore Co-Stars in Five-Part Gold Rooster Play.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

IF BEAUTY of photography, richness of setting and grace of posture were all that were necessary to the perfection of a moving picture drama, "The Shadow of Her Past" would indeed stand high in the category of film productions. Unfortunately, Lucien Muratore, who has directed the picture as well as having played the role of the rejected lover, has gone further in exploiting the personal beauty of Cavalieri than in developing what dramatic possibilities the story might afford under different treatment. To be sure, the beauty of Cavalieri is a joy to look upon; but it alone, nor coupled with other attributes of excellence which the production boasts, cannot compensate for the lack of dramatic fitness which characterizes it. Against the faults of the picture there are moments of delight such as occur through exquisite effects of illumination, clear photography and artistic composition. The finest example of the latter will be found early in the picture, where, in the shadows of twilight, Elayne delights a group of friends by a recital of piano music. These scenes are, however, distinctly individual, and have too shallow a bearing on what might be termed the dramatic flow of the production.

The story on which the picture is based is an old world romance and has been staged in Italy. The plot concerns the career of a young pianist who while finishing her musical education in Italy meets a young artist. A mutual attraction forms the commencement of a romance which eventually is the cause of a duel being fought between the nobleman accepted by the girl as her lover, and the man she really loves, and also the final act of suicide on the part of the woman who chooses to die on a flower-covered bier where later she is found by her artist lover. The close of the picture leaves him lamenting over her dead body.

Lawrence B. McGill, who, with Howell Hansell, has been alternating in the directing of the Arrow-Pathe serial, "Who's Guilty?" has completed his work and has gone to Waldo, Fla.

New Kalem Releases

First Two Episodes of the Two-Reel Serial, "The Girl from Frisco," Featuring Marin Sais and True Boardman, and "Peaches and Cream," Second Number of the One-Reel Comedies in Which Ivy Close Is the Star.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

"The Fighting Heiress."

ROBERT WELLES RITCHIE, the author of "The Girl from Frisco," the new two reel Kalem serial featuring Marin Sais and True Boardman, is on familiar terms with the people and the geography of the West, if the first two installments of his work are any criterion. The opening episode, "The Girl from Frisco," also promises well for the interesting qualities of the serial. At the start the characters give one the impression of being worth knowing, and the incidents of the story are red-blooded and vigorous. Ace Brent, a wealthy land owner of California, receives word that Jim Bliss, an old enemy of his, is herding a flock of sheep on one of his (Brent's) ranches. Brent and his men attempt to drive Bliss off and are unsuccessful. Barbara Brent, the ranchman's daughter, hears of the trouble and, leaving her fashionable friends in San Francisco, hurries to her father's assistance. She arrives at the ranch, mounts her horse and discovers that her father has been shot down by an unknown assassin. The culprit is a discharged ranch hand, a Mexican named Lopez. The girl first summons help; then, starts on the trail of Lopez. The chase ends in a running fight, in which Barbara proves the winner. Congressman John Wallace, who is in love with the girl, has followed her to the ranch. He helps the Brent faction drive off the Bliss gang and does what he can to assist Barbara, but that energetic young woman moves at too rapid a pace for him.

Scene from "The Fighting Heiress" (Kalem).

The type of woman enacted by Marin Sais in "The Girl from Frisco" has many counterparts in the life of today. Born and bred in the free air of a western ranch, trained to ride and shoot, educated at the best schools and given every advantage of wealth and social position, Barbara Brent is endowed with the proper qualities for a heroine of modern romance. Marin Sais proves conclusively the fitness of her selection for the part. True Boardman makes Congressman Wallace a manly representative of the educated Westerner, and Frank Jonassen, E. Forrest Taylor, Ronald Bradbury and B. B. Furey demonstrate the wisdom of having them in the cast. The production shows a liberal and intelligent expenditure of money, and capable direction by James W. Horne.

"The Turquoise Mine Conspiracy."

The second episode of "The Girl from Frisco" is somewhat more conventional in plot than its predecessor, but contains no lack of live incidents, a number of quaint character studies adding largely to its value. Sidewinter Steve, a happy-go-lucky prospector, has been grub-staked by Ace Brent. When Steve locates a turquoise mine, he notifies Brent, and, as the ranch owner is still on the sick list, Barbara takes the matter in charge. A band of swindlers manage to steal Steve's map of the claim, while he is ill, but Barbara and the Congressman, after an exciting series of adventures, defeat the attempt at claim-jumping.

The success scored by Marin Sais in the first picture is repeated in "The Turquoise Mine Conspiracy," and True Boardman makes the same record. The fine horsemanship of the two stars is a feature of both pictures. A valuable member of this cast is Jack MacDonald, who plays "Sidewinter" Steve. His acting is as convincing and genuine as the beard on his face and the want of hair on the top of his head. Frank Jonassen, Ronald Bradbury, William Parsons, B. Furey and Edward Clisbee are members of the cast.

The production is excellent in every respect. So far, the serial carries out the promise of the Kalem Company to have each episode complete in itself.

"Peaches and Ponies."

The second comedy in which Ivy Close is featured is a distinct advance over the initial picture, a result in which the English actress is a prominent factor. "Peaches and Ponies" is concerned with attractive fillies of both the two- and the four-footed varieties. Miss Close plays the wife of a young chap who is forced by his employer to take a female buyer out to supper and "show her a good time." This legitimate business stroke gets the young fellow into a peck of trouble. The wife, not knowing the true state of affairs and learning of the supper party, is led on by a bungling detective to make it heated for hubby. Miss Close plays the wife with skill, and confirms the first impression of the excellence of her schooling and the pleasing qualities of her personality. Henry Murdock's burlesque impersonation of the detective skips nimbly along the path of broad caricature. Arthur Albertson, Frances Nemoyer and William McKey complete the cast.

"Under Cover"

Famous Players Five-Part Adaptation of Megrue Story Results in a Production of Unusual Strength.

Reviewed by George Blaisdell.

HERE'S a corking play that makes a corking picture. "Under Cover," contains a big measure of suspense, a mystery that runs from the beginning to the end. Its action is fast and yet smooth; it hooks up without a jolt at any place. No one but a Killjoy would attempt to outline the story to any one with a remote chance of seeing it for himself. The kick is in the finish—and it comes very much within the domain of the surprise.

Scene from "Under Cover" (Famous Players).

Robert G. Vignola directs this five-part adaptation of the strong drama by Roi Cooper Megrue. He has embellished the story by giving it a pictorial setting, a setting befitting the financial and social positions of the chief characters. There are scenes on ship and on shore—and the staging is always convincing. Then, too, there is a fine cast, the members of which well may have found unusual satisfaction in their roles. But the dominating notes are speed, smoothness and tension.

Owen Moore is Stephen Denby; and finely he plays the role. Very completely does he deceive the observer. Mr. Moore has a big part and he "goes to it." Hazel Dawn is Ethel Cartwright, the young woman who under duress becomes an agent of the United States Government. The player does not overlook the dramatic opportunities; of them she makes much. Frank Losee is Dan Taylor, customs official. William Courtleigh, Jr., is Monty Vaughn, the friend of Denby. And there are several others, all of whom contribute their share to the making of an exceptional picture.

Over all, however, is the story itself.

"The Lure of Alaska."

Scenic Pictures of the Alaskan Country Taken by Dr. Leonard S. Sugden.

Reviewed by W. Stephen Push.

THESE pictures are well chosen, well assembled, but the photography of many of the scenes is far below the standard which is now accepted as the minimum requirement of every motion picture intended for public exhibition.

At a private showing held at the Rialto theater, Dr. Sugden, who took these pictures, lectured on them. Dr. Sugden, who describes himself as an "Explorer, Scientist, Lecturer and late Surgeon of the Royal Northwest Mounted Police," is an entertaining talker with a firm grasp of his subject. He has spent seventeen years in Alaska, is of course thoroughly acquainted with the country and at once conveys the impression of a man who is qualified to talk on his subject. In the catalogue of scenes are pictures of the wonderful placid and majestic lakes of Alaska, the mountains, the glaciers, the great coal fields, a wonderful forest fire, etc. Not all of the pictures are purely scenic; we get glimpses of animal life, which are quite instructive and amusing. There are something like seven thousand feet of these pictures and they leave no part of Alaskan life and nature unexplored or unexplained. Dr. Sugden's lecture is the strongest part of the entertainment, which, as I pointed out in the beginning, suffers severely from poor photography.

"The Yoke of Gold."

Five-Reel Red Feather Production Tells Quiet Story of Early Mission Days in California.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

STORIES of localities frequently depicted on the screen must always bear comparison with former offerings of the same kind. This five-reel subject, with the scenario by Calder Johnstone and produced under direction of Lloyd B. Carleton, succeeds in certain respects and falls short in others. A weak story is its main drawback, and this is the more noticeable because so many strong tales have been woven about the early days of California.

The settings and general atmosphere leave little to be desired. The hero, Jose, is induced to travel from San Gabriel to Santa Barbara in company with Luiz Lopez. The latter poses as a friend of the common people and it is their intention to steal from the wealthy Spanish aristocracy and return home to distribute their spoils among the less fortunate. They are welcomed at Santa Barbara by the Franciscan monks, who appear throughout the story. The hero falls in love with a beautiful girl, who gave him help on the desert, and gradually learns the true character of Lopez. He returns some money the latter has stolen and the regeneration of Lopez follows. There is a great deal of quiet beauty in this offering and a strong moral purpose in the story. But these things do not compensate for the slow action and lack of dramatic strength.

Scene from "The Yoke of Gold" (Universal).

The cast is pleasing, and includes Dorothy Davenport, Alfred Allen, Emory Johnson, Richard Morris and Gretchen Lederer.

"The Daring of Diana"

Interesting Newspaper Drama Presented in Five-Part Blue Ribbon Feature.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE story of how Stange, the Paris agent of a New York newspaper, attempts to impersonate the owner of the paper, and of the manner in which circumstances and a quick wit place within the power of Diana Pearson, a reporter on this particular newspaper, the means of turning the situation against the villain and winning for herself love and position, is given a thrilling recital in the production in question, through the artistic efforts of Director S. Rankin Drew. Anita Stewart as Diana Pearson has invested the role with all that belongs by right of profession to the character of the alert newspaper woman, plus her own personal charm. The supporting cast is a fine one including Anders Randolph in the role of Stange, and Julia Swayne Gordon as his castaway mistress, who for the sake of her child follows him to America and goaded to exasperation through his abuse lays bare the plan by which he has schemed to gain possession of and sell his employer's paper.

Charles L. Gaskill has written the scenario from which the picture was made. The story is a consistent one and bases its main issue on the fact that Jason Briscoe, owner of the New York Daily Argus. at the death of his wife in childbirth, flees the country, leaving his infant son, and also his business interests to the care of others. This makes perfectly feasible the scheme of Stange, who upon learning of the intention of Briscoe after years of absence to return to his own, devises a plan whereby he drugs Briscoe and places him in a cellar under cruel restraint while he hurries away to America to possess himself of the Briscoe interests.

The picture has been well directed, and one of its most noticeable points of excellence is the care given to every detail. The psychology of the production is also remarkably correct.

UNICORN BUSINESS GROWS.

The Unicorn offices now number twenty-five, and the business has grown in leaps and bounds. The executive offices, situated on the entire third floor of the Leavitt Building, 126-130 W. 46th St., are a busy hive.

General Manager Schlank is more than pleased at the weekly reports from his twenty-five branches. "I had been advised to wait until the fall to launch the program, to avoid the hot summer months. It is particularly gratifying to note that the southern points, where the hot weather usually affects business to a material degree, are keeping up with our more northern offices in the constant increase of business. When you realize that we are to-day serving practically one fourth of the exhibitors in the United States you will appreciate how the Unicorn Program has 'caught on.'

"Another thing that is out of the ordinary is the number of repeat dates we are playing. For example, here is a letter from John J. Wittman, president of the Exhibitors Association and manager of the Wilkins Amusement Co., on Southern Boulevard, New York:

"'You would oblige me greatly by letting me know the first open date you have on "The Rise of a Nation," as I would like to book it the second time. I showed that film at my Eldorado theater on July 4, and the numerous requests I have received from my patrons cause me to ask for an early repeat date.

"'I might say without fear of contradiction that Unicorn Service is unsurpassable, and has increased my business to a surprising degree. I assure you that in my long experience in the motion picture business I have never been so enthusiastic about any program.'

"Besides the excellent quality of the films—and we keep an adequate supply of fresh, clean prints in each office—we are specializing on service. Here's a letter from John Shirk, manager of the Pictureland theater, Kokomo, Ind.:

"'I want to thank you for seeing that my shipments are always on time. Also want to tell you that the Unicorn Service has increased my business 50 per cent. No more features for me—and your Westerns will get money for any real live exhibitor. No one need be afraid of that program.'"

"FALL OF A NATION" AT OCEAN GROVE.

The Nation Film Corporation, F. E. Backer managing director, which purchased the New Jersey State rights of "The Fall of a Nation," has effected a neat coup on owners of rival films by booking the Dixon-Herbert spectacle into the Ocean Grove Auditorium on August 7 and 8. This will be the first presentation of any of the great current pictures in the Jersey shore resort section. The Auditorium at Ocean Grove has 11,000 sittings—the largest capacity of any public assembly in the world. It has been noted for big musical events as well as literary and religious gatherings, and the distinctive excellence of Victor Herbert's orchestral score to Thomas Dixon's play naturally caused the Auditorium officers to give the preference to "The Fall of a Nation."

OTTO'S VACATION (Lubin), July 17.—Otto spends such a lively vacation that it is doubtful he will ever indulge in another one. He makes the mistake of leaving his wife at home, as a consequence, gets into all kinds of trouble. The scenario was written by V. L. Wormell and has a number of amusing complications. D. L. Don, Patsey De Forest, Eleanor Blanchard and George Clark are the laugh extractors.

THE SELIG-TRIBUNE, NO. 57, 1916 (Selig), July 17.—German submarine Deutschland reaches Baltimore; Cloak makers, on strike, parade and hold meeting in Union Square, New York; Olga Doefuer wins swimming championship at San Francisco; Capt. Paul Koenig of the Deutschland; bodies of troopers killed in the Carrizal fight brought to El Paso; head-on collision of two locomotives, Tacoma, Wash.; body of Capt. Chas. T. Boyd at El Paso; world's largest recreation pier, Chicago; reunion of "Vets" at Santa Rosa, Cal.; National Guardsmen at El Paso.

THE MUSICAL BARBER (Vitagraph), July 17.—S. Rankin Drew has the leading part in this one-reel farce and does a clever bit of eccentric acting. The situations are of the comic supplement order. A Swiss mountain scenic is on the same reel.

THE GREAT DETECTIVE (Kalem), July 18.—As this is a Ham comedy it is easily guessed that the big fellow is the celebrated sleuth. He and Bud undertake to run down a giddy married man, and Ham assumes some marvelous disguises, by the aid of trick photography. An average good Ham comedy. Ellen Godsay and A. Edmondson have parts in the picture.

VERNON HOWE BAILEY'S SKETCH BOOK OF NEW ORLEANS (Essanay), July 19.—The many picturesque spots in New Orleans offer fine subjects for the clever pencil of Artist Bailey. His motion drawings are thoroughly artistic and present the different views of the city in a novel manner. A western scenic is on the same reel.

A WATERY WOOING (Kalem), July 19.—Although much of the action of this one-reel comedy takes place "by the sad sea waves," the billows are the only sad things in the picture. And even they brighten up perceptively when Ethel Teare appears on the beach in a bathing suit. The complications are humorous. Myrta Sterling, who, also, appears in a bathing suit, is a member of the cast. Victor Rottman and Gus Leonard take care of the male roles.

THE CONNECTING BATH (Vim Feature Comedy), July 19.—Harry C. Meyers and Rosemary Theby supply most of the acting in this one-reel comedy. They appear as an about-to-be-divorced couple who occupy rooms connected by a bath, and play hide-and-seek from one room to another until they discover that they haven't the slightest use for a divorce. Most of the stage business is clever, and the stars are easy and natural.

THE SELIG-TRIBUNE, NO. 58, 1916 (Selig), July 20.—U. S. submarine M-1 in speed trial off Provincetown, Mass.; statue of Peace now on east front of Capitol at Washington; wealthy naval recruits on U. S. S. Virginia, Charlestown, Mass.; prison camps at Frankfort-on-Main, Germany; summer colony enjoys sports at Falmouth Heights, Mass.; Elks Gala Day, Baltimore; new electrical roll-call device in Congress; nurse brings gas mask from France; Chicago society attend fair at Lake Forest, Ill.; American Derby run at Chicago.

AUNT BILL (Vim), July 20.—Plump and Runt are the stars of this one-reel comedy. It has a well-defined plot that has seen considerable service in the cause of dramatic art, mistaken identity being the foundation for the fun. Florence McLoughlin, Ray Godfrey, Bert Tracy and Billie Bletcher give Baby Hardy and Billy Ruge a helping hand with the acting.

A DOUBLE ELOPEMENT (Kalem), July 21.—The pair of runaway matches in this one-reel comedy are ditched by Miss Sis Hopkins. She attempts to help one elopement and prevent the other and gets both badly tangled. Henry Murdock assists Rose Melville in keeping the reel supplied with laughs.

IN HEATH'S PATHWAY (No. 89 of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series) (Kalem), July 22.—S. A. Van Petten is the author of the scenario of this one-reel drama. The daughter of the railroad superintendent attempts to elope and is aided by the lady operator at Lone Point. The hazard undertaken by Helen Gibson is a real one and consists in walking on a plank placed between a handcar and a speeding train. The title does not overstate the risk taken by the actress.

AMERICANS AFTER ALL (Lubin), July 22.—The humorous side of the present situation in world politics is treated in a fairly entertaining manner in this one-reel comedy, of which Frances M. Greene is the author. Members of a German band have married wives of different nationalities and lead anything but peaceful lives.

THE FUR COAT (Vitagraph), July 21.—In this one-reel comedy the hero is left a fur coat by his miserly old uncle, a fortune in bills having been concealed in the lining. The coat gets its new owner into all sorts of trouble, before he learns of its real value. Not a very original plot, but the complications are amusing. William Dangman is easy and active in the leading character, but some of the business that falls to his share is more extravagant than mirthful. George O'Donnell, Shirley Moore and Ralph Whiting belong to the cast. Edward J. Montague wrote the scenario and Frank Currier directed it.

THE DUPE (Knickerbocker), July 14.—The clash of interests in this three-reel screen drama fulfills the rules of playwrighting, but the motif is rather unpleasant. A married couple, having agreed to disagree, become infatuated with a new affinity. The husband tries to make a dupe out of a young chap who has been obliged to accept a position as the man's chauffeur. The production has been carefully mounted and rehearsed. Frank Mayo, Virginia Norden, Neil Harden, Lillian West and Daniel Gilfether form a thoroughly satisfactory cast.

THE SECRET OF THE NIGHT (Essanay), July 15.—The story of this three-reel photoplay is not very plausible, but shows considerable ingenuity on the part of the author. John Martin, a detective, is struck by lightning and loses his memory. The way in which he is restored to his wife and daughter involves a series of interesting events. Lillian Drew, Sydney Ainsworth, John Lorenz, Gertrude Glover, John Cossar, Wm. Burke and Fred Malatesta constitute an excellent cast.

THE WATERS OF LIFE (Vitagraph), July 15.—The material employed by Mrs. Owen Bronson in constructing this three-reel photoplay has been used a great many times. It tells the story of a woman who leaves her husband and marries another man, only to find out later that she has made a terrible mistake. The picture is well put together and is competently acted by Jack Mower, Constance Tourney, Mary Anderson, Corinne Griffith, Carl Von Schiller, and Otto Lederer. William Wolbert directed the drama.

THE PRIVATE BANKER (Selig), July 17.—T. Edward Hungerford has dug up considerable new material for this two-reel photoplay. The characters are all Italians, and the incidents of the story are convincing. Edith Johnson, Wheeler Oakman, Leo Pierson, Harry Lonsdale and Thomas Bates give a good account of the acting. Thomas Santschi directed the picture.

THE OTHER MAN (Essanay), July 18.—The everlasting triangle is the theme of this two-reel reissue of a photoplay written by Maibelle Heikes Justice. The story is fairly interesting, an aged butler preventing his mistress from disgracing herself and ruining the life of her child. Francis X. Bushman and Lillian Drew head the cast.

BY MAN'S LAW (Biograph), July 18.—A two-reel re-issue of a photoplay which dealt with White Slavers. The oil trust grinds down the family of an independent producer and the man's daughter is pursued by a band of slavers. The picture has a powerful and well constructed plot.

THE ROUGH NECK (Lubin), July 20.—A three-reel photoplay with scenes laid in the United States and a mythical South American Republic. One of Uncle Sam's warships and a landing party of Jackies take part in the action. A review of the picture was printed in the issue of July 29, page 806.

SYBYL'S SCENARIO (Knickerbocker), July 21.—Marie Empress is the featured player in this extremely melodramatic three-part picture, made by H. M. and E. D. Horkheimer. Criticism of the story is to some extent disarmed by an announcement that it was produced exactly as submitted by the writer of the scenario, a young woman who gave her imagination free rein. The plot concerns the attempted seduction of a girl by a man who turns out to be her father, and the rescue of the child by her mother, a music hall entertainer. Settings are good and the acting is appropriately melodramatic.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.

LOVE'S LARIAT Aug. 7.—A five-reel western comedy, featuring Harry Carey. The first couple of reels of this production are delightfully natural and filled with excellent western comedy. Unfortunately the comedy has a tendency to lag as the picture progresses. A full review will be found elsewhere in the magazine.

Fox Film Corporation

THE TORTURED HEART (Fox), July 10.—A five-reel story of the old fashioned type, mingling heart interest and melodrama in an entertaining manner. The time is in the '60s and the costumes are of that period. The scenes occur on a Southern plantation and are attractive throughout. There is no great novelty in the plot, but it is well-constructed and convincing. Virginia Pearson is featured in the leading role and is supported by Stuart Holmes and others. A good production of the type.

International Film Service Inc.

HEARST INTERNATIONAL NEWS PICTORIAL, No. 57, 1916 (July 18).—Troopers killed in Battle of Carrizal are buried in Arlington Cemetery, Wash.; Annual Cotton Carnival, Galveston, Texas; giant periscope used on Chicago Elevated Railroad; armored automobiles, El Paso; teaching girls to swim, New York; Annual Round-Up Day, San Jose, Cal.; electric roll-call in Congress; giant Zeppelin, Salonika, Greece; General Cipriano Castro detained at Ellis Island; Elks' Parade, Baltimore; new sea wall, Galveston, Texas; Thomas Mott Osborne returns as Warden of Sing Sing; sharks along the New Jersey coast.

HEARST INTERNATIONAL NEWS PICTORIAL, No. 58, 1916, (July 21).—Lewis machine gun tested by U. S. Marine Corps, Charlotte, N. C.; floods sweep the Atlantic coast; Capt. Paul Koenig, of the Deutschland, presented with silver cup; Battery A, of Mass. Field Artillery, at El Paso, Texas; Gwendolyn Heath Streeton wins 100 per cent. baby contest at Los Angeles, Cal.; N. Y. State Naval Militia leave Brooklyn and board U. S. warships; British submarines in action; fashions; T. E. Powers' cartoon, "On again; off again."

Metro Pictures Corporation.

THE QUITTER (Rolfe), July 10.—A western picture featuring Lionel Barrymore in a story written by Isola Forrester and directed by Charles Horan. The plot is not unusual, but it has been skilfully handled and many of the situations are either exciting or amusing. Marguerite Shirvin appears to advantage in support of Mr. Barrymore.

Mutual Film Corporation

IN THE LAND OF THE TORTILLA (Beauty), July 19.—An amusing farce comedy in which a moving picture camera man goes to Mexico. He gets into difficulties trying to film the execution of a Mexican prisoner of note, and is aided by the pretty daughter of the dictator. In his attempt to get away with his prize he is pursued by the Mexicans and rescued by United States soldiers.

MUTUAL WEEKLY, NO. 81 (July 19).—This issue includes some of the newest fashions in bonnets from Paris, France, Uncle Sam's newest super-submarine on her trial trip, the "Deutschland" and her crew at Baltimore, Reuben Brown and his rooster companion at Washington, D. C., and the opening of the Great Western Rodeo at San Jose, Cal., with a wedding on horseback.

JERRY'S STRATAGEM (Cub), July 21.—Jerry woos his girl with doggerel poetry, which her father gets hold of. They mix it from the beginning. Jerry studies archery and sends his missives by means of arrows. A characteristic nonsense number with a number of broad smiles in it.

REEL LIFE, NO. 12 (Gaumont), July 23.—Views of a great correspondence school in operation lead this. The subtitles do not specify very clearly what is being pictured, but this may be easily remedied. Instructive views of an anthracite coal mine in full operation follow, and the coal is shown moving from breakers to cars through various operations. The breeding of sea gulls off the Maine coast closes the reel.

A STUDIO SATIRE (Beauty), July 23.—A moderately entertaining comedy in which the director and author of a moving picture company are given "Dreamo Pills" by a couple of players who are anxious for a holiday. The bulk of the picture has to do with the dream of the director, who believes himself transported to the house of a fascinating woman, with various unhappy results.

JEALOUSY A LA CARTE (Vogue), July 25.—A slapstick comedy much of the action of which takes place in a cafe. Considerable food slinging is included in the comedy when the waiter and the cook become rivals for the glances of a pretty girl.

GAMBLERS IN GREENBACKS (Beauty), July 26.—This comedy will be found fairly amusing. A politician's pretty daughter falls in love with an artist, who paints her picture as Liberty, and is kidnapped along with the picture, a cut of which is used on the spurious money manufactured by her father, after which the police take a hand and clear matters for the young couple.

SEE AMERICA FIRST NO. 46, "Crater Lake, Oregon" (Gaumont), July 26.—This number presents some exceptionally fine views of Crater Lake, Oregon, and vicinity. On the same reel with it is an animated cartoon by Harry Palmer, entitled "Old Pfool Pfancy at the Beach."

A GERM GEM (Beauty), July 30.—A moderately entertaining farce comedy number, featuring Orral Humphrey. The leading comedy role represents a faddist on germs. One day he meets a pretty girl to whose charm he falls, and thereafter his interest in germs fades away.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials

THE OSTRICH TIP (Centaur), July 22.—A two-reel number, featuring Wm. Clifford and Margaret Gibson. This has a large ostrich farm for its locale, and much of the process of preparing feathers for the market is included. The settings and views of the ostriches themselves insure the picture a wide interest. The story, while clearly made up to fit the surroundings, is entertaining. The young feather dyer, jealous of the old dyer's secret methods, furnishes the chief villainy. He is killed at the close of an ostrich stampede.

PASTURES GREEN (American), July 24.—One of the most interesting figures in this two-part drama is George Periolat in the role of an eccentric countryman, who believes himself to be an expert detective. The story treats of how a young man in his folly of wine and Bohemian living promises to marry a dancer, and flees the town to be rid of her. The woman is found dead on the day on which he leaves town, and he is accused of the murder. The accusation is withdrawn when it is discovered that she died of heart failure. Various opportunities for comedy are taken advantage of. Vivian Rich plays the feminine lead, and is charming as a little country maid. Alfred Vosburgh appears in the male lead.

THE SECRET OF THE SUBMARINE NO. 10 (Mutual Special Feature), July 24.—In this chapter of the serial of the story of how Hook Barnacle helps Hope to land at the cabin where Cleo is imprisoned, after the cable of the trolley line has been cut, has been thrillingly told. In their attempt to get away they are attacked by Mahlin and Satusmo. The close of the chapter leaves Cleo and Hope in the quicksands, from which the next chapter will no doubt extricate them.

OUT OF THE RAINBOW (American), July 27.—A three-reel society drama, directed by Thomas Ricketts, with Edward Coxen, Leona Hutton, George Field and Lizette Thorne in the leads. This is an unusually attractive number, particularly in the social scenes, which have the correct atmosphere so difficult to attain. The story is also a good one. Leona Hutton does excellent work as the jealous girl who breaks the hero's engagement to another by a trick and marries him herself, only to pay a price for her deception later. The rainbow effect is pleasing. This makes a very enjoyable subject.

THAT GAL OF BURKE'S (Mustang), July 28.—A good ranch yarn, by Lawrence Payson. Frank Borzage directs the production and appears in it, supported by Anna Little, Jack Richardson, Dick La Reno and Queenie Rosson. This shows what pleasing personalities can do in infusing new life into a plot that has been done repeatedly. It is the old story of the boy from the East coming West to make a man of himself. The interest is held right through and the photography and settings are good. A fine offering of the type.

Paramount Pictures Corporation.

THE SELFISH WOMAN (Lasky), July 10.—Cleo Ridgley and Wallace Reid are co-starred in this five-part Lasky production. Their acting, especially that of Cleo Ridgley, go a long way toward redeeming a rather weak story. Wilfred Buckland deserves praise for the excellent settings in this feature. For an extended review see page 800, of the July 29th issue.

UNDER COVER (Famous Players), July 20.—An adaptation of the famous play by Roi Cooper Megrue. It is an unusually strong and interesting production, a review of which will be found in another column.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

HOME, SWEET HOME (Pathe), July 17.—A Goldberg animated cartoon, in which mamma, a suffragette, leaves baby Sylvester in papa's care while she attends a meeting. Papa accepts an invitation to play poker with some friends, and baby treats his head to a bottle of hair tonic which has startling results. Very amusing. On the same reel with "The Caterpillar."

THE CATERPILLAR (Pathe), July 17.—On the same reel with the above, this study of the caterpillar includes various varieties and is intensely interesting and instructive.

LUKE, CRYSTAL GAZER (Phunphilms), July 24.—An amusing farce comedy in which Luke happens into the house of a spiritualist and substitutes for a pretty girl, whose place is behind the curtain. Discovered by a pal, Luke is hauled out and from here on quick action characterizes the picture. This will be found extremely amusing.

Pathe Exchange Inc., Specials.

THE SHADOW OF HER PAST (Gold Rooster Play), July 17.—A five-part production, featuring Lina Cavalieri and Lucien Muratore. The picture, which has been directed by Lucien Muratore, was made in Italy, exhibits remarkably beautiful photography, and various meritorious attributes. As a moving picture drama, however, it will be found lacking in some of the main essentials. The production is too much given to exploiting the personal beauty of Cavalieri rather than developing the dramatic possibilities of the story. A full review appears on another page of the magazine.

THE UPPER TEN (Balboa), July 31.—Chapter 3 of "The Grip of Evil." John Burton, who suddenly finds himself the tenth Lord Castleton, learns something of high finance in this number, which is even more tragic than its predecessors. The death of the old watchman and injury of the girl are vividly shown. The striking of the girl by the train is pictured with intense realism. So far the hero seems to have run entirely into the tragedies of life. The opening numbers, unrelieved by humor or love interest, make pretty strong screen diet.

Triangle Film Corporation.

MARRIAGE OF MOLLY-O (Fine-Arts), Aug. 6.—A story of Irish life and character with a deadening interpolation. Mae Marsh in the title role.

HIS WILD OATS (Keystone), June 25.—One of the dullest of the Keystone farce comedies, lacking the qualities that made them famous.

HONOR THY NAME (Ince), Aug. 6.—A strong story of Virginia family honor, saved by the desperate measures of a weakling boy's resolute father, characterized by fine interpretations of Frank Keenan and Louise Glaum and exquisite taste in treatment.

Universal Film Manufacturing Company

ANIMATED WEEKLY NO. 29 (Universal), July 19.—Scenes on the Mexican border, the funeral of Capt. Boyd, welcome of Warden Osborne on his return to Sing Sing, and views of man-eating sharks are included in this instructive number.

SPRING FEVER (L-KO), July 23.—A nonsense number, featuring Billy Armstrong, Louise Orth, Gertrude Selby and others. Park flirtations, a burlesque duel and acrobatics of various sorts are the main incidents. The humor is only fair.

ON THE HIGH SEAS (Imp), July 30.—An episode of the European war, by Harry Dittmar, featuring Wm. Garwood and Paul Panzer. The officers are at odds over a love affair. One is declared a traitor and is about to be shot, when the young wife obtains a reprieve. This is obscure in certain scenes, but not without a certain dramatic strength. It could have been made more affective.

CAUGHT WITH THE GOODS (Nestor), July 31.—A comedy number, by Ben Cohn, featuring Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Marcia Moore. Potts, the detective, does some good burlesque work. The manner in which the brewers are rounded up proves very funny. A good number.

A SOCIETY SHERLOCK (Victor), Aug. 1.—A light comedy number, in which Wm. Garwood plays Freddy Van Peyster, a would-be detective at a house party. He breaks the jar containing the missing necklace and saves the situation; also gets the girl. This is attractive and pleasing.

THE LUCKY GOLD PIECE (Imp), Aug. 2.—Ben Wilson and Edna Hunter appear in this comedy-drama. The story centers around a gold coin, given to a boy by a little girl at a party. He builds a fortune with it, and afterward, when he meets the girl, has the coin melted into a wedding ring. This is quite clever in plot and makes an attractive subject of the lighter sort.

REDWOOD LAND (Big U), Aug. 3.—A story of the redwood forests, by Ben Cohn. Two men are rivals for the girl's hand. She marries one and the other starts to complicate matters. At the end all results happily. The glimpses of the giant redwoods give the picture a good scenic background; the setting is in fact the strongest feature.

MY LADY'S MILLIONS (Laemmle), Aug. 3.—A two-reel number, by J. C. Brownell, featuring Hobart Henley and Catherine Colbert, both of whom do very pleasing work. The story is splendidly presented and the plot, while not strikingly new, works out with unusual convincingness. The scene in Central Park, where the girl reads the letter and slips a bill into the hero's pocket, makes a strong appeal. An unusually pleasing love story.

A DAUGHTER OF THE NIGHT (Imp), Aug. 4.—This number, written and produced by Francis Powers, features Agnes Vernon and T. D. Crittenden. It pictures a little too much of the seamy side of life to be really pleasant, though the ending is a happy one. It is a number of about average strength.

TILLIE, OR THE LITTLE SWEDE (Big U), Aug. 5.—A good story by Wm. V. Mong, featuring the author, Cleo Madison and others. Tillie, the Swedish girl just over, falls a victim of a thieving windmill agent, but later gets her money back and he gets a good beating. The scene in the wagon is unique and the number very entertaining as a whole.

KATE'S AFFINITIES (Joker), Aug. 5.—A clever character comedy, featuring Gale Henry as a maiden lady in search of a husband. Wm. Franey and Chas. Conklin play the rivals in good comic style. They turn out to be brothers and each abandons the lady in favor of the other, leaving her sadly bereft of any lover at all.

Universal Film Mfg. Company Specials

A SPLASH OF LOCAL COLOR (Gold Seal), July 26.—A pleasing two-reel number by Clifford F. Ivins, featuring Mary Fuller as a young authoress, who has been advised by an editor to get more local color into her work. She loses all means of support, is arrested on the street and taken to the night court. She meets there a stranger who believes in her innocence and marries her. Later he professes to be a burglar, but turns out to be the editor who had rejected her story. This contains a good flash of originality and is not so obvious as the average story. There are some absurdities in the handling, such as the manner in which the husband recovered from his serious wound without medical attention, but there is a commendable freshness about the plot.

FROM BROADWAY TO A THRONE (Red Feather), July 31.—A five-reel number, written and produced by Wm. Bowman, featuring Carter De Haven, Duke Worne, Malcolm Blevins and Yona Landowski. The hero is a prize fighter, who is knocked out in the second round. He dreams that he is smuggled to a European province and accepted as a prince. The fight settings are realistic and well staged. The foreign scenes contain considerable humor and color. The first three reels lead off rather slowly and the surprise when the hero awakens from his dream is just a trifle disappointing. The number is one of fair strength.

PEG O' THE RING, NO. 14 (Universal Special), July 31.—In this number Lund, Sr., dies after his wife has administered slow poison. Peg overhears the conspirators and learns something of her history. The clown comedy during the circus performance is the best feature of this instalment. In the last reel, Peg has another seizure and creates a panic in the circus. A fairly good number.

THE STATE'S WITNESS (Gold Seal), Aug. 1.—A strong three-reel subject, written by Walter Woods and produced by Henry McRae. L. C. Shumway, Marie Walcamp and Lee Hill play the leads. This depicts the experiences of a young northerner in the South. He quarrels with a cruel plantation owner. The latter is shot and killed by a negro he had beaten. The northerner is suspected of the crime and sentenced to prison. The midnight dash of the masked men, in automobiles, is the sensational feature. In this respect the incidents might have been based on the celebrated Frank case. At the last moment the hero is found innocent and the lynching averted. This is full of suspense and a successful offering of the type.

WHERE IS MY HUSBAND? (L-KO), Aug. 2.—A laughable two-reel comedy, featuring Dan Russell as a married man with a penchant for getting into flirtations. One or two scenes verge on the risque, but taken as a whole the production is filled with a good, healthy sort of humor and much of it is irresistibly funny. The fall from one room to another, the bomb-throwing and chase scenes are all well done. A first rate comic number.

WHEN THE MINSTRELS CAME TO TOWN (Victor), Aug. 4.—A two-reel juvenile, featuring Baby Early and many other children. They attend a minstrel show and afterward give a black-face performance of their own in the barn. They borrow the baby and leave the imprint of black hands on the bed. This creates some amusing excitement on the part of the parents. A first rate juvenile offering.

UNDER THE LION'S PAW (Bison), Aug. 5.—A two-reel number, introducing many wild animals. The cast includes Rex de Roselli, Colin Chase, Golda Colwell, and others. The animal importer, whose health is impaired, sells all his beasts but one lion. He releases the lion on the night his daughter plans to elope with the discharged superintendent. The life of the younger daughter becomes imperiled and the hero and girl save her. The plot is somewhat conventional, but contains some excitement and is fairly strong as a whole.

THE CAPTAIN OF THE TYPHOON (Big U), Aug. 6.—A two-reel number, by H. Ditmarr, featuring King Baggot as captain of a schooner. A homeless woman wanders onto his boat and he gives her a home for a week. In the meantime he tells the story of his unhappy love affair, in which a card cheat made away with his girl. It develops that the woman had also suffered at his hands. The first part of this number is very well presented, carrying a good sea story atmosphere. The close, where the captain throws the card cheat overboard and the womar follows of her own accord, will disappoint those who like a happy ending. A good example of the tragic type.

V-L-S-E, Inc.

SELIG ATHLETIC FEATURE NO. 3 (July 10).—This number of the series includes exhibition billiard playing by Chas. Morin and August Kickhofer, the interscholastic athletic meet at Staggfield, Chicago; Francisco Verri and Oscar Egg competing on indoor bicycle trainers, and a wrestling contest between Stanislaus Zybszko and Marion Plestina.

THE DARING OF DIANA (Vitagraph), July 24.—An unusually interesting five-part newspaper drama, written by Chas. L. Gaskill, and directed by S. Rankin Drew. Anita Stewart is the star, and the supporting cast includes Julia Swayne Gordon, Anders Randolf, Donald McBride, Lou Johnston, Chas. Wellesley, and other capable Vitagraph players.

World-Equitable.

PAYING THE PRICE (Paragon), July 24.—A well-made and an interesting dramatic picture, with Gail Kane in the leading role. She is finely supported. The picture is reviewed at length on page 806 of July 29 issue.

GAUMONT TO RELEASE SOME FRENCH FILM.

Owing to the Gaumont policy of never announcing any film which comes from Europe until it is actually in this country—because of the uncertainties of the war zone—several announcements which have given rise to interesting rumors in the trade are being withheld for the time being. It is known, however, that some big features from the Societe des Etablissements Gaumont are either about to be shipped or else already on the water. These are to be released in Mutual Service. They supplement the present Gaumont releases through Mutual.

From the French Gaumont Company have come such wonderful productions as "The Fall of Constantinople" and the stirring "Fantomas" series. It is understood that Mutual will now distribute some of the most successful of the French photodramas, selection having been made of those best suited for the American market. The advantage to the exhibitor of releasing film of this nature is readily understood. The exhibitor is offered nothing untried, nothing that has failed, but only photodramas which are recognized successes.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

"AN ANGELIC ATTITUDE" (Selig).

"An Angelic Attitude" is another of the Selig series of Western comedies featuring Tom Mix, the daring cowboy star. Tom Mix produced this comedy, which was written by Edwin Ray Coffin, and which carries a logical plot and a series of merry-making climaxes.

When Grace Williams arrives in the west to sketch some real western scenery, Uncle Daniel Miller, well along in years, falls in love with the pretty girl. When he discovers that Grace is spooning with his son, Tom, he interferes; in fact, the love making is constantly interrupted by the interference of father. Grace wishes to paint a picture and she induces Daniel Miller to pose as an angel hanging from a rope, which is tied to the limb of a tree. When father is thus made secure, Tom and Grace escape to seek a minister.

Scene from "An Angelic Attitude" (Selig).

"An Angelic Attitude" is enlivened by some daring horsemanship such as only Tom Mix can perform, and will be released Saturday, Aug. 5th.

"IN LUNY LAND" (Paramount).

The story of "In Luny Land" tells of Fanciful Fiddlesticks, a little boy very fond of fairy tales. To satisfy his desire, his uncle Wisdom takes him to the woods where really and truly fairy folks live.

On the way to their destination they drop in at a soda fountain, where Fanciful and his dog have an ice cream soda, while uncle takes a nut sundae, which seems to go to his head.

In the woods, uncle begins to read about a little fairy princess whose castle has its entrance in a big hole in one of the trees not far distant from where they are. Fanciful fancies that he recognizes the tree, and a moment later one of the fairy's workmen comes trudging along with a basket of wood on his back, followed by one with flowers.

Fanciful decides to take a peep down the hole, and when he does he sees nothing. Thinking that he might be able to stir things up, he takes a cobble stone and throws it in. He tries to get away, but a policeman grabs him.

The cop is very friendly with him and tells him not to be afraid; that the fairies like good boys, and if he stands by, he might see the fairy folk pass, as the Princess has just summoned her musicians and dancers. The scenes following are beautiful ones. Fanciful has the time of his life, only to be awakened by Uncle Wisdom, to learn that his trip to Luny Land was all a dream.

DOLORES CASSINELLI IN RACING PLAY.

With twenty thousand frenzied racing fans as the colorful background, the big scene in the revival of the great American Derby at Hawthorne recently, was played by Dodge, winner of the racing classic, and Miss Dolores Cassinelli, star of the Emerald Motion Picture Company.

Under the direction of Frederick J. Ireland the player appeared at the Derby in the garb of a gypsy princess to film her big scene in "A Song of Romany," a forthcoming feature release of the Emerald. As the great race horse was piloted to the judges' stand by Jockey Murphy, Director Ireland gave the word and "Darling Dolores" broke through the crowd surrounding Dodge. With cameras grinding busily, Miss Cassinelli, a vivid splotch of color against the satin coat of thoroughbred, petted and caressed the Derby winner oblivious to the frowning disapproval of the judges and her own shattering of racing traditions.

The floral horseshoe emblematic of Dodge's victory was placed across his shoulders by Miss Cassinelli and the scene brought to a climax with her arms around his neck, while the grandstand rocked with the cheers of the turf fans. Meantime Dodge seemed to enjoy his entrance to film stardom.

RED FEATHER RELEASE DATES SET.

Universal has scheduled for release as a Red Feather for the week of August 21 the Conway picture, "The Beckoning Trail," with Warren Kerrigan, and "The Woman Desired," a Red Feather, which will be released on August 28.

MARIE DORO STAR OF "COMMON GROUND."

The magic waving of the needle which converts one large hat into twelve distinctly different creations under the deft hand of Marie Doro is one of the interesting phases of "Common Ground," a Jesse L. Lasky photoplay made under the direction of William C. De Mille and released on the Paramount Program, July 27.

Of course there is a romance and it is a real, thrilling sort of a love tale in which this daughter of the slums fearlessly comes to the aid of the man she loves when he is beset by political enemies. He is a judge and the crooked politicians try to get control of him because he is too honest to suit their purposes. "The Kid," as Miss Doro is known, has seen enough of local politics in the slums, where she was raised, to know that there is no limit to the things that men will do to gain their own ends. So she puts her active brain against that of the politicians and battles them to the last ditch.

The judge has made the fatal mistake of attacking the leaders of the vice ring and the word is passed to the denizens of the underworld to "get" Evans. The judge is "framed" by the politicians and is removed from his office in disgrace before the Kid, realizing that she has been tricked into working against him, turns upon his enemies and forces the truth out of them. Of course there is another woman in the case and she is the stumbling block over which the Kid nearly comes to grief, but down in her hard little heart there is a real soft spot—which the judge unwittingly touches.

"Common Ground" is a gripping story written especially for Miss Doro by Marion Fairfax and contains several wonderful character studies in addition to the stirring story and the absorbing political and slum setting. The cast is a strong one even for a Lasky production, including as it does, Thomas Meighan, Theodore Roberts, Mary Mersch, Horace B. Carpenter and Veda McEvers.

"THE WAR BRIDE OF PLUMVILLE" (Essanay).

A satire on how every manufacturer in the country hoped to leap to fortune on war orders furnishes the vein for this three-act Essanay comedy. Effects above the usual in comedy have been obtained and the setting of a real foundry adds considerably to the backgrounds. "The War Bride of Plumville" forms three reels of smooth-running humor, free of slapsticks and resting on the satire of its situations for its laughs. Nell Craig appears as the village queen and daughter of the manufacturer who aspires to be a war bride. Ernest Scene from "The War Bride of Plumville" (Essanay).

Maupain in the title role is seen in something different than the heavy dramatic parts he usually portrays. Harry Dunkinson, always good in Essanay comedy parts, plays one of the swindlers who nearly gets away with the old man's money. The rest of the cast, a strong one, is made up of persons seen often in Essanay plays. The piece is well acted, well directed and is a comedy decidedly above average. It has been constructed with unusual care and will furnish neat entertainment for any group of spectators.

"FARMER AL FALFA'S EGG-CITEMENT" (Paramount).

When you were a boy back on the old farm, did you ever have to go out early in the morning and hunt for eggs? If you did, there is a great deal of pleasure in store for you in the next Paramount-Bray release, which is from the pen of Paul Terry. If you didn't, there is a chance for you to see what you missed.

Farmer Al Falfa's Egg-citement is a story about a wayward duck who breaks all records for laying eggs where they are not wanted. Al Falfa posts a notice commanding his fowl to stop laying promiscuously about the farm and confine the efforts to the nests, but the duck has ideas of her own, and just for spite, lays one on the ground before Al Falfa's very eyes; then she flies to the tree-top and as the farmer approaches, she drops another on the old gent's head and makes her exit before Al Falfa can get hold of her.

The old man after a weary chase falls asleep, and the little outlaw lays a few more eggs in his beard. Upon his awakening he finds the mess, and begins questioning the feathered tribe as to who committed the crime, but they all plead innocence.

To settle the question, he smashes one of the eggs to see what it contains, and to the astonishment of all, a little cow comes popping out, causing great fright and compelling all to take to the tall timbers.

"THE MARRIAGE OF MOLLY-O" (Triangle).

Mae Marsh is seen in another delightful character role in "The Marriage of Molly-O," an exceedingly picturesque, finely-acted Irish story released on the Triangle program. Quite apart from the characterizations given by Miss Marsh and by Robert Harron, who is seen as her leading male support, this Triangle feature is notable for the infinite care that has been taken in presenting the story in typical and realistic Irish settings. The story itself details a pretty love affair of the little colleen who is confronted with her mother after the death of her husband and father with nothing to stand between them and the direst poverty but a pig and a cow.

Miss Marsh plays throughout the entire picture with a keen appreciation of the character, and Robert Harron makes a capital young Irishman. The picture is particularly well photographed and the fantastic scenes which depict the visit of the fairies to the little colleen are not only unusual but decidedly realistic. "The Marriage of Molly-O" promises to be an exceptionally popular summer feature and establishes more firmly than ever Mae Marsh's position as a star in the film world.

GOOD MATERIAL IN "REEL LIFE."

The quest for the unusual of a magazine nature is being successfully maintained by the Gaumont company in its successive issues of "Reel Life," the Mutual Magazine in Film. July 30 will bring to the screen the thirteenth number of this single reel release. The greater part of the reel is devoted to gold mining in Georgia. Although it is not generally known, this southern state has been a consistent producer of gold since the days of the revolution. While in amount no great sum has ever been mined in any one year, yet until the discovery of gold in California in 1848 it was the only source of supply worthy of mention within the confines of the United States. The mines are located in the northern part of the state. The great statesman, John C. Calhoun, was at one time a mine owner.

On the same reel are pictures of fishing on the Jersey coast. As the sharks are now plentiful, spectators will be interested in a battle which resulted in the capture of a baby shark. A drum fish weighing 40 pounds is also landed in front of the camera. There are entertaining camping scenes. The reel is completed by views of "Four Fingered Joe," a celebrated southern negro, who is without a peer in the art of making palmetto leaf fans.

IVAN PREPARING SECOND ALL-STAR PRODUCTION.

Having completed "The Faded Flower," the first Ivan production to be made under that company's new policy of all-star cast productions, Director Ivan Abramson is now busily engaged writing a photodrama to follow this. The story of the new play will deal with a sociological subject as is Mr. Abramson's wont, and will point out some evil in every day life and its remedy. Immediately the scenario is completed, an all-star cast will be selected to enact the various parts required by the drama.

Preliminary scene plots having been already made, elaborate settings are being constructed in the Ivan studio so that immediately the scenario is finished and the cast chosen there will be no delay in the actual filming of the picture. Work on this feature is expected to begin about the 28th of July, and it will be finished in time to be released as the regular Ivan feature for September through the Ivan exchanges.

"THE MADONNA OF THE NIGHT" (American).

Strange adventures which befell a convent girl, who suddenly finds herself alone in a desert and later in a mining town, is the interesting story on which "The Madonna of the Night," a three-part American-Mutual drama for release August 3, is founded.

Nita Davis, a favorite of Mutual release, who in recent months has become exceptionally popular for her work in strong Western roles, appears in the part of "Mary Martin," the convent girl. E. Forrest Taylor appears in Miss Davis' chief support, heading a company of unusually clever players especially recruited for the filming of this production.

"The Madonna of the Night" is founded on a story written by Constance Crawley, long a star of American-Mutual feature releases, and Larry Peyton, who frequently appears in Mustang-Mutual releases. It was placed in scenario form by Karl Coolidge and screened by William Bertram.

The story concerns "Mary Martin," a convent girl returning to school after her summer holidays. Sitting on the steps of the observation car, she loses her slipper and leaps from the train to recover it. The train, however, speeds on, leaving her alone in the desert. Seeking shelter, she stumbles into a cabin where a band of drunken miners are celebrating Christmas eve. She is saved by "Philip Dean," a rich man's son exiled to the west and later marries him, after a series of strange adventures.

"THE RETURN OF EVE" (Essanay).

Playing one whole reel of consecutive scenes in one setting was the unusual stunt accomplished in "The Return of Eve," featuring Edna Mayo. The action of the whole fourth reel of the play transpires in a ball room. Naturally, a setting with such a bearing on the picture was necessarily a magnificent structure. It required more than two week to build and filled an entire studio at the Essanay plant. More than 300 persons—or the largest number ever used by Essanay in such a scene—appear amid this setting.

Scene from "The Return of Eve" (Essanay).

This five-act feature will soon be completed. President George K. Spoor of Essanay will offer it as one of the most artistic productions of the year, as no pains have been spared in obtaining the most beautiful settings and photography possible.

The story is decidedly clever and makes an ideal film play. The dainty beauty and simplicity of its woodland scenes lend a charm to the play aside from the acting. Most of these were taken in the dells of the Wisconsin River, one of the beauty spots of America. Eugene O'Brien appears in the principal supporting part to Miss Mayo.

"SHE WROTE A PLAY AND PLAYED IT" (Universal).

Many a crime has been staged right under that old Brooklyn Bridge back drop. All the Bowery girls in days of yore were wont to congregate under its spreading arch and sing "The Bowery, Oh, The Bowery," and "The Sidewalks of New York," while sitting on cotton bales and packing cases for atmosphere.

Look at those fearsome waves. Many a poor ruined girl,

Scene from "She Wrote a Play and Played It" (Universal).

many a dipsomaniac has cast himself into their cruel, green depths. That girl with the melancholy cast of features sitting on the packing case at R. U. E. is about to be thrown in by the villain. 'Tis a sad life at best. See, they have coiled a three inch hauser about her neck preparatory to the dastardly deed. Oh, that their foul intentions be foiled!

Even the scene shifters and stage hands take an interest in the stirring scene. See how they gather at advantageous spots to overhear the pronouncements of the heroine. By the way, that girl standing there on the dock in the evening gown is not a real society girl. She is Gale Henry, an actress, who works out at Universal City. In the Universal-Joker moving picture play, "She Wrote A Play and Played It," she takes the part of Miss Scribbles, a country girl who thinks she has a future as a playwright. She is seen appearing in her own play.

Gale co-stars in the picture, which will be released on August 12, with William Franey. They are supported by Milburn Moranti, Charles Conklin and Lillian Peacock. Allen Curtis produced "She Wrote a Play and Played It" from the scenario by Ben Cohen. Miss Scribbles' play, parodaxically speaking, is "so rotten that that it's good."

RIFKIN LIKES UNITY SERIAL.

Herman Rifkin of Boston, Mass., President of the Eastern Feature Film Corporation, who have purchased the rights for New England of the Unity Sales Corporation's sixteen episode serial, "The Yellow Menace" was in New York the past week and saw the concluding episodes of the serial.

"It is a great serial," said Mr. Rifkin, "and it will undoubtedly make a wonderful impression on both exhibitors and the public. The tremendous power of the theme must interest every man, woman and child, and appeal strongly to their patriotism. I congratulate the Unity Sales Corporation and my company upon being able to offer exhibitors so wonderful a picture, with every episode entirely finished so long in advance of the showing of the film."

"LITTLE EVE EDGARTON"—(Bluebird).

The Bluebird release for August 21 is based upon a serial story by Eleanor H. Abbott, that appeared, with great attendant interest, in Everybody's Magazine. The film retains the title of the serial, "Little Eve Edgarton," the name-role being assumed by Ella Hall, with Herbert Rawlinson especially engaged as her leading man.

Robert Z. Leonard prepared the scenario and directed the production. There is a guarantee of beautiful photography, for R. E. Irish performed the cinematography, the beauties of Scene from "Little Eve Edgarton" (Bluebird).

"The Crippled Hand" and "The Love Girl," earlier Bluebirds, attesting the skill of this expert cameraman.

Most of the locations were found at Coronado Beach, the fashionable California resort, and in the mountains of Southern California some particularly striking natural reflections of ruggedness have been secured. Particularly effective is the photography of a fierce storm on the top of a mountain, showing the heavy clouds of the impending deluge, the fierce winds that snap twigs from tree branches and bend boughs low in the fury of the storm.

Vivid flashes of lightning sear the black clouds, the winds come heralded by banks of dust and flying leaves, and then the cloudbursts deluge man and beast, driving horses in mad stampede down the mountain side, while the human beings find shelter in crevices of rocks, under giant trees or in caves formed in the mountains.

Coronado's famous hotel was used for many interior and exterior views—the broad verandas, massive parlor and rotund architecture and the beautiful grounds surrounding the hotels forming ideal settings for a story without a villain, without a murder or crime of any sort—but with an appeal to the heart, through the preliminary openings of bright comedy to be clenched with a gripping love incident of unusual sweetness.

EXCLUSIVE FEATURES APPRECIATED.

Letters of appreciation are coming in very fast to Moe Streimer, of Exclusive Features, Inc., from most of the Brooklyn exhibitors, expressing their appreciation of the fact that they are being treated fairly during the panic caused to the theaters on account of the infantile paralysis. The exhibitors are getting 50 per cent. discount, during the time that the order not admitting children under 16 years of age to moving picture theaters is in force.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Helping the Exhibitor.

SIX or seven years ago, when there was nothing by the Patents Company and Carl Laemmle on the making end, there was a rule of the Patents Company that nothing should be given the exhibitor other than his film and the bill for the same. Later he was permitted to buy lithographs that cost more than the fifteen cents a sheet that he paid, but even that was nothing compared to the help given and the help that manufacturers seek to give, and yet so little of real value is done by the heads. The exchanges are alive to their opportunities and to their responsibilities. They give the individual manager more help on one picture than he used to receive in the course of a year, and, being close to the ground, they give real help.

Take for example the form letter sent out by the Kansas City V-L-S-E. This is a four-page typewritten letter, the first of which was prepared for "The Battle Cry of Peace," by L. J. Scott, of that exchange. He does not use the extravagant adjectives of the company press agent. He tells plainly and simply what the film is. He gives the exhibitor the data that he can either copy or use as the basis for elaboration. It tells how to handle the preliminary work, both as to press work and direct solicitation, how to do the newspaper advertising, gives hints on novelty work and even how to do the post-press work. The same scheme, Mr. Scott writes, will be used for other extra releases. The Seattle V-L-S-E not only reaches the exhibitors, but Tom North is straining his wrist trying to whip the newspapers in his territory into line. The same holds good with other offices of this concern, with Metro, with Paramount, with Triangle and others, and yet none of these releasing combinations do really practical work from the home office. The home office turns out stuff to please the boss and the chief press man because they know no better. They do not seem to make any intelligent effort to give the patron (the Exhibitor) what he wants. They sell him heralds and go to some expense to get them up. They look pretty, but they are impractical. There is no room for other than the exhibitor's card, no space for the showing of other titles. They get out ready-set advertising, but this must all be used as cast. It cannot be added to or taken from without making a poor job. It is seldom that the description of the film gives the exhibitor what he wants to use. There may be a running story, but there is no adequate description. He must turn to the exchange for this. He is told his coming release is the most thrilling and gripping story ever made, but he is not told what it is that makes the stuff gripping or thrilling and he cannot tell his patrons what it means. Outside of this paper and the exchanges, the exhibitor knows no more about the subject of his books than the patron he is trying to coax into his house. The Universal does put out some good plan books for their serials, but there is no concerted effort made anywhere to tell the exhibitor the things he wants to know. He must turn to the columns of this paper or to the exchange. The men hired to do this particular work fall short, far short, of giving what is wanted. If all exhibitors would make a concerted kick to the home office, in the course of time some of the letters would come to the head of the concern instead of being referred to the press department, and much good would result therefrom. Mr. Scott's four-page letter is worth more to the exhibitor in real information than all the stuff that comes from the home office. The only help the home office gives is generally in the shape of stuff that helps to advertise the brand and make it impossible for the exhibitor to switch services. This is a good idea for the manufacturer, but it is rather trying to the exhibitor to be asked to pay a profit-showing price on something that benefits him only indirectly.

A Convertible House.

W. H. Warneford, of the Gem, Lawrenceburg, Ind., writes that his house has a roof so arranged that he can raise it in five minutes and convert it into a virtual airdome. It was thirty years ago that Pat Harris fixed the roof of the old Bijou theater in Washington so that it might be slid back in warm weather, and yet few photoplay theaters are provided with a movable roof, though the Marathon, Brooklyn, has such a device. They are very handy and a boon in warm weather. Mr. Warneford sends in his program for criticism, but there is not much to criticise. He follows the Kellette style of arrangement, but the program itself is not properly enclosed. If Mr. Warneford will have the program boxed with three or six point rule he will be pleased with the greater prominence the program will receive. He has evidently followed the model in Picture Theater Advertising, but here he uses so many trade advertisements that the program does not stand out. It will be necessary to make it prominent with rule. The typographical display is not good, but in justice to the printer, it should be said that the advertising spaces are so narrow that a good display is almost impossible. Each space is an inch and three-quarters and much of the display type must be the always ugly condensed stuff. The program is well printed, however, on good stock, with dated days and all the other good points. With the change mentioned Mr. Warneford will do well to let the present arrangement stand until he is ready to add four more pages and run some house and film chat. With all that advertising he should be able to do this presently, when he has shown his advertisers that the program will bring results. He can double the price and the space and make it eight or twelve pages.

An Optimist.

At this writing it would seem that George Editor Carpenter is an optimist, for he is talking about what to do for hot weather and at the moment it doesn't look as though there would be any hot weather this side of the grave, no matter what the chances may be in the other land. But he makes one capital suggestion that does not apply solely to hot weather when he says:

> Take a day off and sit on the back porch at home and play you were a motion picture enthusiast. While so engaged figure out just what appeals to you most. Then take the wife to your own show that evening and look at it through the eye of a patron. Forget for once that you are the boss and look at your show, the house, its appointments and the crew on the floor through the eye of the public.
> Then when you are the boss again just bear this in mind: Your greatest expense is your empty seats. Figure out the best way to fill them and keep them filled.

In another story he gives out this other chunk of wisdom:

> Don't spend more money in giving what some exhibitors call "a better show," which being interpreted by them means additional reels. If you increase the length of your show you run great risk in tiring your customers, for, as we have remarked before, motion pictures are designed for amusement not hard labor.
>
> Give your clientele quality, not quantity, and if you give them a high class show and still play to empty seats spend your money in advertising not in more film.
> This may sound like rank heresy for a film exchange to advocate such a policy because we are here to rent film, nevertheless, we insist that a seven-reel show is long enough for anybody, so spend more money in advertising in the newspapers, on the bill boards and through the mails.

He is there to rent reels, but he knows that there is no use trying to rent reels to a bankrupt, and he knows that the ten and twelve-reel man is just around the corner from the bankruptcy court, so he talks fewer reels in order to be able to rent those seven.

Also he seems to be getting letters from Jack Nash. We wonder how he does it.

Now a Time Table.

Walter H. Brooks, of the Auditorium, Coatesville, Pa., has evolved a time table form. His middle page is set as a whole with two wide panels for the program and a narrow column for talk. In the latter he now runs in full face this arrangement:

TIME TABLE

Afternoons

2:00 Short Subjects
2:45 The Feature

Evenings

7:00 Short Subjects
7:30 The Feature
8:45 Short Subjects
9:15 The Feature

Saturday

6:30 2-part Comedy
7:00 Pathe News
7:15 The Feature
8:30 2-part Comedy
9:00 Pathe News
9:15 The Feature

We try to follow this schedule. Subject to change.

This seems to work very nicely, better than Stanley Mastbaum's at whose suggestion the time table was set in. We like best the time table figured daily for the particular reel shown, but for a general table this does well.

Why Not?

A western exhibitor writes complaining that while he would be glad to use the ready-made cut and that advertisements supplied by the producing companies, most of them are planned to give too little room for his own announcement. "I use ———— each week along with three other reels," he writes. "If I use the cuts supplied by the ———— company, I am not able to announce the rest of the program in the brief box allowed for the house name. I want to use these cuts; in fact, I need them, but to work them into my space I have to cut my advertisement in two." We have frequently commented upon the use of part ready-made cut and part type in combination, but we are willing to suggest a remedy, as well—two remedies, in fact. These cuts should be made in two sections, top and bottom, the top portion carrying the announcement of the subject and the lower portion serving as little more than a tail piece, mortised for house name. These cuts should start to run down the sides with the top or bottom rule and taper off, or they should be so framed that standard brass rule can be used to gain a panel of the precise length needed. The American Type Founders work this latter scheme with several of their ornaments, the ornamental matter tailing into standard brass rule, and it would be as easy for cuts to be made that end with 2 to 6 point rule to be carried down the page to meet the tail piece. This would greatly increase the usefulness of the cut and perhaps increase the sales. For that matter, it would then be possible to supply stock tail pieces and furnish only the headings to be used in conjunction with these.

More Wilby.

Here is more good program stuff from R. B. Wilby. This should have as wide a circulation as his "phonograph" stuff of a couple of years ago, which is still going around.

MAKE IT HOME.

The word "home" in our language has a deep and wonderful meaning for which there is said to be no equivalent in any other tongue. It's a small word as words go, but despite its length it stands for more perhaps than any in this language; countless joys and pleasures, fond recollections and the place where our happiest hours have been passed. We want you to have somewhat similar feelings about the Strand, a theater which we tried to build and try to operate to give you every comfort and every pleasure.

And just as you feel privileged to make suggestions at home, so do we want you to feel that you may make them here. The Strand is actually yours. If there is anything you don't like, or any way we can make it mean more to you, we want you to say so.

Changed.

The Third Street theater, Easton, Pa., which has stuck to one program form for a long time, now changes over and uses something like its sister house, the Lehigh Orpheum did, but does not get as neat an effect. They should send over to South Bethlehem for an old copy and follow that style, which has proven good enough for many other exhibitors to copy. And when they copy, they should date the days in proper form. The change is a good one, save that they do not make it neatly.

Helps to Exhibitors.

The National Poster Company, Chicago, sends in samples of their lithographed streamers for various feature services including Triangle, Pathe, World, Metro, Paramount, Fox, Kleine and Mutual. These are ten feet long and thirty-two inches wide, two colors, and sell for only thirty cents each. They work well as a house banner, making it possible to paste on a stretcher or board and have a uniform display across the front or over the sidewalk, and they can be used, as well, where space permits, to top a bill board display of lithographs and hold the set together. At the price it is cheaper to have your own fresh banners than to hire painted cloth signs. The work is artistically done and the color combinations are striking and yet not too violent. The company writes it is supplying about half of the Chicago theaters now and has worked up a large business in other parts of the country and Canada through the medium of the small advertisement it carries in this paper, and it is planning to turn them out on a larger scale than ever. New paper is always desirable. There is nothing convincing to a house that is using second hand material, and this banner stunt is one of the most useful helps we have seen lately.

Celebrating.

The Cumberland, Brooklyn, has been aniversing, and got out a neat eight-page and cover anniversary program. There is only one foreign advertisement, a page for the piano house supplying the theater, a little talk about the house and its manager, Francis A. Magan, and the programs for the week, arranged as regular programs should be. The program pages are not as well set as the standing of the printers employed would suggest. A paneled page would have been better and more in harmony with the rest. An excellent cut of the house is shown, and it is a very handsome front at that. It might be suggested that a word of thanks for past patronage would not have been amiss. The house is spoken of, but there is no tribute to a loyal patronage and this is always in good form at festivals.

In Summer Dress.

The Lehigh Orpheum has cut down to a D. K. card for the summer, a slip 3 by 5½ inches with the titles, house name dates, but not dated days. It is mailed out in envelopes, but is a door knob because it is punched so that it may be hung up. The Crescent, in the Bronx, has also turned to a card for the summer, but uses post cards. With paper climbing up, it is safe to predict that others will follow the example.

A Filing System.

George A. Bleich, of the Empress, Owensboro, Ky., sends in his idea of a filing system, which we pass along, though we are not very clear as to what Mr. Bleich does with his material before it becomes live. He writes:

What might be of interest to a great many exhibitors is a method of one in clipping and filing press notices and reviews of films in order that they may be readily accessible when needed.

An ordinary ledger index is first used in which the matter is filed when clipped from the various sources embracing the trade journals, newspapers and the press stuff furnished by the producers. Obviously the exhibitor confines himself to his own programs.

Next a compartment about 12 inches deep by 12 inches high by about 18 inches in width, containing a pigeon hole for each day for two weeks is employed. This should be placed handily above one's desk. Now presuming your's is a daily change policy and that you have clipped your matter well in advance, you will turn to the ledger index and select therefrom all the items that cover your attractions for the forthcoming week placing same in the compartment in the shelves allotted to Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, etc., in their proper order. Your compartment cabinet needs to contain enough pigeon holes for two weeks because presumably one side contains the matter for the present week while the other is free to receive that for the forthcoming week.

This enables one to lay hands quickly and readily on the matter needed in preparing items for the newspapers, your house organ or your program. Adapt it and you will find it a very handy system.

About the best scheme would be to use folders such as are used for filing correspondence. These are numbered, say from one to one hundred. As the matter comes in it is clipped and placed in the proper folder. Long before the hundredth folder is full, number one is empty and its number can be reassigned to another subject. We like best, however, the scheme advanced in Picture Theater Advertising.

What is your system? If it's new, let's hear about it.

For the Cry.

The Nicholas theater, Council Bluffs, Ia., sends in some photographs of their special lobby for "The Battle Cry of Peace," together with a program. The photographs will not be reproduced as they are not deep enough in tone, but they show a very neatly dressed lobby with stacked arms and a stuffed eagle. Flags are used above the entrants with pennants at the sides. The screen was also draped in the colors. The program merely gives the cast, synopsis and a few facts about the film. It is well printed and well written, but it perhaps might have made a little more noise.

Anything.

The Lyceum, Monticello, N. Y., has not found a way to saddle stitch its issues yet, but it is improving the text. A recent issue announces that Canadian money will be accepted at face value, though Monticello is in the southern tier of counties. One effective stunt is a picture of the two theaters in Monticello. A new stunt is the familiar "hidden names." In this sentences are printed and by isolating a certain section the name of a popular photoplayer is given. No prizes are offered; the fun of the thing is its own reward; which is the better way.

Go to It.

If you have an officious censorship and your patrons complain, tell them about it. Here is a rather long extract from the Regent (Pittsburgh) program, that is just about the right way to handle things.

In justice to ourselves a word of explanation is due regarding "The Evil Thereof," the attraction at the Regent Monday and Tuesday, the 12th and 13th. As a starter, let us inform you that when the picture first went to the Board of Censors, it proudly acknowledged to 5,000 feet in length. When it came off the operating table and dragged its weary length to the various exchanges in Pennsylvania, it has lost just 20 per cent. of its length and about 90 per cent. of its strength.

Many of our patrons went away puzzled as to what it was all about. And the producer and the exhibitor gets the blame for the production when the real blame lies upon the Board of Censors. We have no quarrel with the personnel of the Board of Censors. Miss Wrenshall, the local representative of the Board, is most obliging, and a clean-cut little lady, but her duties are plainly set forth. It is the entire system of censorship which we are against, for there is no argument in favor of it that can be brought into the full glare of publicity and stand the examination. Then some doubtless noted that we advertised for Wednesday and Thursday, "The Scarlet Woman" and the posters read "The Worldly Woman." For why? Dear reader, had we not changed the paper in accordance with the Censors' dictate, it would have meant heavy fines and a court suit to defend. So you see that the exhibitor's business is not "all beer and skittles," as our friend Dickens said.

Wait until the patron is made to realize that lots of times the poorness of the picture is due to the censors and not to the producers and they will be making the censorial heads into billiard balls of the finest quality. Do not loudly declaim against the censoring of pictures. Just tell how it sometimes makes for poor programs and the public will do the rest. Practically every intelligent and universal campaign against the official interference has been successful. The trouble is that in most places there has been no concerted movement and abuse, rather than argument, has been the main feature.

Another Cinema Sheet.

The Thompson-Thanhouser Co., of London, sends in its booklet, rather late, but still welcome. It is a sixteen and cover issue with the stories of the films and plenty of short stuff for the house program about Thanhouser plays and players, together with notes from the various provincial branches. It is a sightly issue, on good paper and finely printed. It is issued monthly and covers the weekly releases for that period.

Starting in.

The Strand theater, evidently, at Muncie, Ind., since it speaks of "Muncie," gets out a neat program for its opening, with a Hennegan cover and sixteen inside pages. It calls it "the Strand Magazine and announces its permanency, though we have seen but one belated issue. It is well written, with some clip stuff from these pages and good original house talk, and probably it just happened that a scene from "The Feast of Life" was put alongside an advertisement for Bolte's delicatessen without a separating rule. One good column runs amusing clips from the rural papers. There is enough in the issue to interest and get the reader to digest the house talk. There should be somewhere in the front part of the book, preferably on a right hand page, a full program for the week. There is too loose a construction and the make-up jumbles text, program and advertising. Possibly this was left to the printer to arrange and he ran the pages to make for speed and ease in paging the type. It pays to take a little pains to get a layout that looks like a real magazine. The stuff is there. It lacks only arrangement.

Udells.

Dave Udell, of the Majestic, Paxton, Ill., likes to start a news story on the first page with a reference to the advertisement on the back page. One of his recent stunts in this line is a two-line head in conformity with the rest of the paper make up. It reads:

MRS. W. H. OPPIE DROWNED.

Mrs. W. H. Oppie of Chicago, who has been a visitor in this city for the past few days, was drowned yesterday at 4 o'clock, five miles southeast of this city. She and several Paxton friends were on a little outing when the sad accident occurred. They left West Ottawa road early in the afternoon in a large automobile to enjoy the afternoon among the trees and flowers. They spread a large table cloth near the bank of the Vermilion river, which has its source thereabouts, and were about to enjoy an impromptu feast when (Con. on back page, upper left hand corner.)

Following the reference over to the back page we find the continuation line at the top of the Majestic advertisement, set in two column measure. The continuation reads:

One of the ladies suddenly exclaimed, "My, I'm Glad Graustark is going to be shown in Paxton."

Mrs. Oppie fell back and was drowned in tears of joy. Her recovery was not as sudden as was expected but never-the-less she rallied in a short time.

"For goodness sake," she exclaimed, "it gives me great joy to know that I finally can see the play I have heard so much about. It was shown in Chicago for several weeks but the theater was so crowded I could not secure a seat."

Most of the Majestic advertisements are two tens, and the style is changed for each issue. Two of them are reproduced here to give a general idea of their layouts. Both are two columns wide and ten inches deep. We like particularly well the left hand advertisement, which plays up the house as a feature. Surely the play is the thing, but the proper plays can be identified with the right house and give the impression that the theater is what makes the plays good, and for that matter the play must be given in a suitable environment or it is not enjoyed.

Want a Design?

H. Z. Laws, of the Beach, Chicago, Ill., writes that he is changing the front of his two color program, lately described, and wonders if others would be interested in the designs he has had submitted. Might be a chance to pick up a design that pleases you cheaply without bother. Write him direct.

Mr. Laws sends for a picture theater advertising because we happened to mention it in a letter. We wonder how many others have overlooked the advertisement that has been running down in the southeast corner of the last page of this department for more than a year now. A staff man with one of the biggest advertising agencies in the country has been told off to do some photoplay theater advertising in the fall and he writes: "I've found time to spend some very profitable hours with that book of yours on advertising and it's some achievement. It's brimful of ideas, most of which are adaptable and suggestive at the same time. I doff my derby." Have you your copy?

Chautauqua.

Some one recently wanted to know how to work against or with the Chautauqua. Charles O. Brown, of the Manring and Amusu, Middleboro, Ky., offers a reply in a recent issue of his Reel News, in which he meets the local situation. Follow Mr. Brown and you are about right.

> Quite a little circulation is being given the rumor that we are opposing the coming chautauqua and that we are doing all in our power against it. This rumor no doubt originated through the fact that we have placed on sale a little book of tickets for the week beginning June 19th.
> Right here we wish to state emphatically that the rumor is absolutely unfounded. We also wish to state that we are in no way opposed to the chautauqua; on the other hand we favor it and are trying in every way possible to co-operate with it. In evidence of this we ask you to turn to our program page, in which you will find that we have arranged our hours of performances especially for this occasion. You will find that we are trying to interfere as little as possible with the hours of the chautauqua, both in afternoon and evening.
> We would have been pleased, had it been possible, to close down our houses entirely for chautauqua week. Our patrons probably remember we did this last year. But circumstances are different this season. In the first place we have a program that we could not possibly cancel. Our contracts with both Paramount and Triangle are not subject to cancellation. In the next place, were it possible to cancel, we would regret exceedingly to do so on account of the quality of the pictures booked. We have had the Billie Burke picture booked for three months and it would be at least another three months before we could get it again, were cancellation possible.
> Now in regard to the little books of tickets. Our reason for putting them on sale is simply this: We have noticed many times in the past when other attractions were in the city, that people seemed to forget entirely that there was such a thing as a picture show in the town. This is human nature—we can readily appreciate anyone's view under such conditions.
>
> The picture show is here to stay, at your service any time. The other attraction is here for a few days only, and of course everyone likes the change. We understand human nature, we think—and that's just why we put the little books on sale—just to remind people that the picture show that has served you so faithfully all the many past years is still here, plugging away, ever at your service.
> Many people would never have learned of the change in hours so as not to conflict with those of the chautauqua. Advertising the change would have done very little good. But by going from house to house selling the little book of tickets, everyone has been informed and we are all happy. We look for record-breaking crowds and we certainly hope the chautauqua will be likewise favored.

The coupon book in this connection is something new to us, and it looks like a good idea. The Chautauqua is a big noise in many sections of the country. Like the circus, it takes a lot of money from the regular amusements, but even the Chautaqua cannot object to this scheme when it is so clearly and nicely explained. If you have not had your Chautauqua visitation yet, try and report, please.

Got it from the "Kink."

Jay Emanuel, of the Ridge Avenue, Philadelphia, writes that his "free ticket" recently reproduced here, did not originate with him but with Julian M. Solomon, Jr., of the Morosco press department and known to his friends as "Kink Solomon." On the other hand—the hand used to advertise "The Mysteries of Myra"—that was his invention. Next time Mr. Emanuel comes to New York, if he will call around we will present him with a Fireman's shirt. That is better than a free ticket. His latest is, "Those who toil should see Those who Toil," which is a Lubin feature. Not at all bad for a man who only works after the show.

A NEW HELP FOR MANAGERS

Picture Theatre Advertising

By EPES WINTHROP SARGENT (Conductor of Advertising to Exhibitors in the Moving Picture World

A TEXT BOOK AND A HAND BOOK, a compendium and a guide. It tells all about advertising, about type and type-setting, printing and paper, how to run a house program, how to frame your newspaper advertisements, how to write form letters, posters or throwaways, how to make your house an advertisement, how to get matinee business, special schemes for hot weather and rainy days. All practical because it has helped others. It will help you. By mail, postpaid, $2.00. Order from nearest office.

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticised, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is inclosed.

Dreams of the Future.

VACHEL LINDSAY, the poet-author, in a recent letter touches most interestingly on his dream of the future. Like his valuable book on the photoplay, Mr. Lindsay advances theories that seem almost fantastic, yet there is real merit and no little common sense in the suggestion he makes for a photoplay school. He writes:

> If there is a Joseph Pulitzer school of journalism, there should be some photoplay magnate to remember your new learned profession in his will. The suggestion of a University might not be precisely the one, but certainly there should be some permanent headquarters, or museum, where every great film can be studied by serious students, with competent lecturers, etc. I never see a stunning piece of work without wishing that there was some way of keeping it on file where I could see it as often as I read my favorite poems.

This sounds absurd at first reading, but studying the subject, it seems wholly practicable. The student of literature can, at small expense, build up his working library and supplement this intimate collection with the public libraries. The student of painting can procure photographs for his home study and see the work of the masters by visiting the art galleries. The sculptor can study in the same way and music offers vast opportunities to its followers, but where can one make a serious study of photoplay? Where, for instance, can one study "Judith of Bethulia," "The Death of Mozart," "Cabiria," "Quo Vadis," "The Life of Moses," and other splendid examples? Not in the theater, save perhaps in torn and rainy prints that have endured since the first issue. Not in reissue, save only as they chance to come to a certain theater on a day convenient. The scripts from which these plays are made are probably non-existent to-day. Assuredly they are not available to the student.

Suppose that someone did endow a University with a chair of photoplay, and suppose that a man who knew his business and not a grafter was placed in that chair. Prints could be purchased and stored, to be run as occasion demanded. Copies of famous scripts could be bound and placed in a library for study. The student could see the film run and then, visiting the library, examine the script; perhaps even the test scripts and the final version. More might be done. A first print of the subject might be compared with the cut print as finally released. Special reels could be made showing studio methods, perhaps half a dozen of the better known directors could be induced to stage the same certain scenes written especially for the purpose, and these various versions shown in order that the treatment of the script in action might be understood. The cost would not be prohibitive. It might not even be great. The only trouble is that few men in the business give promise of dying rich, in spite of the millions they have made. Yet here, too, is the clincher to the argument. These men might have continued to acquire wealth if, five years ago, they had given proper thought and attention to production instead of to the exchange end; if then they had prepared to meet the demand for better stories that now has become imperative. Mr. Lindsay is a poet and therefore, supposedly, a dreamer, but he has outlined a scheme that some day must appeal to hard headed business men. There is a brewer's college, innumerable technical schools of all sorts. Why not the Lindsay Museum of Photoplay, where the real student can gain the same careful preparation that is afforded the brewers of beer, the growers of corn and the builders of bridges? It must come in time. Now is the time.

Humorous.

One of the funny things of the hot season is Maurice Tourneur's recent article in Motography entitled "The Play's the Thing." It seems only the other day that he was remarking that all he needed was a bare suggestion from the author; hardly a synopsis only. Now he remarks that he believes in "even greater reward for the creative genius who writes our plays."

Plot, Yes, But—

In writing comedy, plot is as essential as it is in drama, but be careful not to get so much plot that you have no time for the comedy. There must be a well defined argument to the story or it is not a story at all, but where all of the action in a drama is used to tell the story, by-play must be given greater prominence in comedy.

THAT SOLD SYNOPSIS.

(Concluded from last week.)

85—Larger view—Deane caressing Caprice, she nervous—Deane kisses her, Jack reaches her, angered, yanks Deane away, the men glare at each other. Caprice gazes with admiration at Jack—Deane turns away with sneer—Jack speaks—Cut.

SUBTITLE—"I'll thank you so much to give this to Mr. Edmunds. Tell him it was too late to stop. And for you—I—I wouldn't run away if I were you. It gets one in bad."

86—Automobile, showing party, signpost and Jack still watching. Girls laugh, Deane rather crusty, girls finally land a bundle at Jack. He turns, gets into car, backs back—looks up hill with others.

87—Road. Caprice walking along, lost in deep study—she turns, looks toward camera, startled that she is seen, turns, runs.

88—Back to Party—All laughing. Jack rather nervous—they drive away.

Note here how technique played its part; how the author's construction was used where it could be used; how the action was made convincing and the love interest advanced (because this is the first time that Jack has met Caprice), and his idea was not changed a particle:

76—Crossroads, with guidepost, shooting so we only see good good road—Auto drives in and stops—All look about—Jack gets out followed by Deane and look over post—They have lost way and don't know road—Shake heads—About to give up when girl speaks—Boys look at her and she points off and they see.

77—Road—Showing bad road—Caprice running along.

78—76—Men looking off—Look to girls and one says—"Call her"—Jack does.

79—77—Caprice runs on and stops, startled, holding doll.

80—76—All on—Jack calls Caprice to him.

81—77—Caprice on and looking off—Thinks and finally exits.

82—76—All on—Caprice enters and Jack speaks to her as Deane tells girls, "She's some looker, eh?"—They nod "yes" and as Jack points to signpost asking Caprice where road leads to, she replies:

Cut-in TITLE: "It don't go nowheres, it's been throw'd up for years. It's a road to nowhere."

(Back to scene)—Party laughs and Deane looks toward ground—Sees.

83—Closeup of ground where a fire had been built.

84—76—Deane looking down, stoops.

85—83—Closeup of ground at dead fire—Hand reaches in and takes piece of charcoal.

86—76—Deane rises from ground with piece of charcoal in hand—Exhibits it and climbs on seat beneath signboard to write.

87—Signboard—Closeup of Deane writing WHERE on signboard under NO to make sign read "Nowhere."

88—76—Jack talking to Caprice—She hides doll—He looks at it and takes off his hat.

89—Closeup of Caprice looking at Jack.

90—Closeup of Jack looking at Caprice. Smiling.

91—96—Full set—Deane finishes sign—Dismounts and talks to girl—Jack excuses self, gets bundle from car to give to Caprice—Deane comes to Caprice and tries to get fresh as Jack gets bundle and turns back, sees Deane, sore, rushes at him and pushes him away—They have angry words and finally Deane turns to girls and all laugh as Jack talks to Caprice who points off.

92—Flash of Edmunds' shack.

93—76—91—All on—Jack and Caprice exit as the rest look after them and kid about it.

94—92—Jack and Caprice enter—She tries door—Locked—Jack looks in window and she looks about.

95—76—All on—They look off and get sore and call off.

96—92—Jack and Caprice on—He looks off, then at watch and says to Caprice:

Cut-in SUBTITLE: "I wouldn't run away if I were you—Runaway girls get in bad."

(Back to scene)—Caprice nods head "yes" and Jack exits—She looks after him—Thinks—Looks back and smiles sweetly.

97—76—All on chattering as Jack enters—Girls sore and kid him about Caprice—He gets into auto—He tells them "Be quiet"—Stands up, looks back and tips hat.

98—92—Caprice waves bye-bye and turns away shyly.

99—76—As Jack puts on hat car goes out of scene, throwing him into seat with bump.

100—92—Caprice looks after car and sighs—Says "Ain't he grand"—Sits on stoop.

The THIRD Edition of

Technique of the Photoplay

IS NOW READY

This is virtually a new book under the old title. More than double the text and with an arrangement especially adapting it for the student. The most complete book ever written on the subject of scenario or photoplay construction.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT is an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstratd to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two or three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents in stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department: one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive editor should get a copy of these questions. You may be suprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Question No. 148.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Theater managers looking for high class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

What do you regard as the best safety guard or guards against panic in case of fire? When the law prescribes minimum age at which a man may operate moving picture apparatus what age do you favor? Give your reasons in full.

Roll of Honor on Question No. 141.

Question 141 brought out some remarkably complete dissertations on incandescent lamps. Wilson Hays, Barton, Md., for instance, sent in a thirteen-page well-written and very complete article; also there were others almost equally excellent. The publication of all that matter would, however, consume a great deal of space, and I do not believe it would serve any correspondingly good purpose.

The Roll of Honor consists of Joseph H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas; F. F. Bell, Palestine, Texas; Wilson Hays, Barton, Md.; Edward Marshall, Vancouver, B. C.; Manuel Nosti, Tampa, Fla.; C. E. Linstruth, Carthage, N. Y.; W. B. Allen, Edmonton, Canada; L. Pagenhardt, Westernport, Md.; Thos. J. Maloney, New Bedford, Mass.; Jamie McAdoo, Hamilton, Mo.; J. L. Arnold, Bellingham, Wash.; and one unsigned.

I have selected the reply of Brother Marshall as best suited to the requirements of publication.

Reply to Question No. 141.

By Edward Marshall, Vancouver, B. C.

The Question:

What do you understand by a carbon filament lamp? By a metallic filament lamp? By a Mazda lamp?

The Answer:

A carbon filament lamp is an electric incandescent lamp having for its light source a filament of some carbonized material which is made to glow in a vacuum by the passage of an electric current.

A metallic filament lamp is one having a metal wire filament. The metal usually employed in the manufacturing of these lamps is tungsten and tantalum, although many others have been experimented with. The method of making these filaments is complicated. After several processes the metal is reduced to a paste and forced through diamond dies, and thereby made into a very fine wire. Another process is: a tungsten layer is produced on a carbon core; that is, the core of the filament is of carbonized material and tungsten is plated on, as it were. When the filament is completed it is mounted in a glass bulb and a vacuum is formed.

Mazda is merely a trade name for a certain make of metallic lamp, just as it might be Osram, Laco, or anything else.

The Southern and Western Trip.

As announced some time ago, the editor will make a trip covering the entire south, west and a portion of the north next winter. It is necessary that announcement of the route be made at this time because once the itinerary is made up it will be impossible to make any changes. Until that time I can add cities or eliminate them. The first thing to find out is what towns desire to hear a lecture on practical projection. The lecture has already been heard and approved, and in many places enthusiastically approved by a large number of Operators' Unions and several Exhibitors' Leagues.

The Moving Picture World is bearing the expense of this trip and is doing so because it believes that a personal meeting with the Editor of this Department will afford many opportunities for discussion of individual problems that will supplement the work of this department of the paper and be helpful to many operators and managers in the points visited. Moving picture men everywhere are coming to realize more and more that the prosperity of the whole industry and of the individual theater owners and employees can be increased by a greater excellence of projection in our theaters, hence our desire to do what we can in this Department and through this lecture. It will cost those cities located on the main route nothing except the trouble of arranging the affair. The lecture is usually delivered at midnight, after the shows have closed. Some of the organizations serve a banquet, some a lunch, some make it a smoker, and some just a plain meeting . What form the meeting takes is immaterial to me. The only thing I insist on is that EVERY POSSIBLE EFFORT BE MADE TO GET A FULL ATTENDANCE OF ALL MANAGERS AND ALL OPERATORS IN EACH CITY.

This article may be taken as a direct communication to Exhibitors' Leagues and Operators' Unions in the cities named, and I shall expect to hear from those who want me to come. It is advisable, where possible, that Exhibitors' Leagues and Operators' Unions join hands in this affair, because it is of equal interest to both. Cities lying off the route can secure the lecture if they write within the next sixty days, but it will be necessary for them to pay the expenses from the nearest railway point. I make this offer because in one or two cases Operators' Unions, which presume their cities to be off my route, have asked me to come, and have voluntarily agreed to stand the expenses of a visit. The only expense in these cases will be the expenses from my nearest railway connection.

The main route as planned is as follows: Richmond and Norfolk, Va., Raleigh, N. C., Columbus, S. C., Augusta, Ga., Charleston, S. C., Savannah, Ga., Jacksonville, Miama and Tampa, Fla., Macon and Atlanta, Ga., Chattanooga and Knoxville Tenn., Louisville and Evansville, Ky., Nashville, Tenn., Birmingham, Montgomery and Mobile, Ala., New Orleans, La., Memphis, Tenn., Little Rock, Ark., Oklahoma City, Okla., Fort Worth, Palestine, Houston, Galveston, San Antonio and El Paso, Texas, Los Angeles, Santa Ana, San Diego, Fresno, Stockton, San Francisco, San Jose, and Sacramento, Cal., Portland, Ore., Tacoma, Seattle and Bellingham, Wash., Vancouver, B. C., Spokane, Wash., Boise City, Idaho, Salt Lake City, Utah, Pueblo and Denver, Colo., St. Joseph, Mo., and Omaha, Nebr.

From Omaha eastward my route will depend upon circumstances. I can go either via Des Moines direct, or I can go north via Sioux City, Minneapolis and St. Paul, and then back down, taking in Des Moines and eastern Iowa, including the Tri-City, up to Milwaukee, and thence east. That plan is not yet settled, and won't be until I hear from the organizations in that section.

As to the time for making this trip, I cannot tell yet, but the start won't be made until the latter part of October; that much is certain, the next sixty days being given over to making a final decision as to just what cities will be included. It is up to you, gentlemen. Let us hear from you.

Projection Fairly Good.

G. A. Yager, Anadarko, Okla., sends answers to four of the questions, and says:

> Things in this part of the country are in good shape, also projection is fairly good. I was talking with a member of the Oklahoma City local recently. He says the union is making very good progress. They have a school in connection, and he assured me that if you ever stopped over in Oklohama City you would be given hearty welcome.

Well, for the benefit of the Oklahoma City brothers, I expect to visit that city next winter if all goes well. I am always glad to receive reports of good projection. The answers to the questions will, of course, receive due consideration.

An Arc Fighter.

Harry Saulitch, whose address is 5th Infantry Hall, Empire, Canal Zone, which same will change to Chittenango, N. Y., care F. R. Cook, No. 40, after July 4th, says:

> I am an old arc fighter of the Canal Zone, and apply to you for assistance in procuring a position in any city of the States. Am now operating for the 5th Infantry, but must withdraw on account of ill health. Have had several years' experience previous to this, and am able to furnish good references as to ability. Excellence of work on the screen guaranteed.

I would be glad to help Brother Saulitch, but I am entirely out of touch with the job-getting end of things. I used to do a lot of that, but there were so many failed to make good that I gave it up. Brother Saulitch's address is given, however, and interested managers can address him and carry on their own negotiations.

A Few Remarks.

John Griffiths, Ansonia, Conn., says:

Just a few remarks with regard to article on Spherical Aberration, page 2234, June 24th issue. Figure 1 is an attempt to show the effect of spherical aberration in the secondary beam, as it exists in an exaggerated form in the primary beam. I say "an attempt" because I don't think Brother Martin has shown the rays in the secondary beam correctly. For instance: Between A A in the primary beam and the aperture we have five pairs of rays crossing the axis at different distances from the objective lens; therefore, instead of all these rays crossing the axis again at A' A' in the secondary beam, as shown, they are crossing the axis at different distances between A' A' and the screen. One pair which cross at or near the aperture will not meet again until they reach the screen. Had Brother Martin showed the rays correctly, he would have duplicated the idea conveyed in my own drawing, page 617, October 23, 1915, issue, in diagram No. 4, except that only two aberrated rays were shown in my drawing. Another discrepancy I note in Brother Martin's drawing is that, taking the extreme rays which reach the objective lens, they each come from the second exterme ary of the condenser, therefore when they rach the narrowest point of the secondary beam, which is the condenser, they should pass A' A' a considerable distance apart. However, the practical result of spherical aberration remains the same, viz.: uneven illumination at the spot. The effect due to spherical aberration is, however, considerably overrated. Spherical aberration has its advantages as well as disadvantages, the same as in certain classes of photography, where it is taken advantage of. Of course I mean as applied to the condenser system only. The advantage which I at least claim for spherical aberration in the condenser is that it blends any irregularity in the illumination of the crater. (I don't believe, Brother Griffiths, that this is altogether true, nor do I believe there is sufficient spherical aberration in a condensing lens of good quality to amount to much, and, while I may be wrong, I believe what effect there is is altogether bad. I cannot see that the possible blending action you speak of is going to overcome the ill effect. I grant, however, that with cheap, poor grade condensers, or condensers having uneven density the spherical aberration effect may be sufficient to work considerable damage to the ultimate result on the screen.—Ed.) The spot at the aperture is a little larger than the image of the crater would be through one point of the condenser, because each point of the condenser does not deliver the image of the crater to exactly the same position, the amount of displacement from a central point and an extreme point being about ½ inch. It is spherical aberration which causes this. (If you are right in your estimation of ½ inch, then I am wrong, but I do not believe you are correct, possibly except with a poor grade of condenser.—Ed.) If an operator will take out his slide carrier and punch a ¼-inch hole in a piece of cardboard about 8 x 4 inches, so that the hole will pass across the face of the condenser as he shoves the cardboard along, he will see his spot move and the extent of the movement will indicate the amount of spherical aberration present in the condenser. (Aha! That seems to be something of real, practical value, and something which any operator can make an intelligent test of for himself.—Ed.) This proves that the spot at the aperture is made up of a lot of smaller images incorrectly superimposed, and, answering our friend, Brother James, when he says the crater ought not to be in exact focus at the aperture, the harsh effect of an exact image of the crater is overcome by the effect of spherical aberration blending out the defects that may be present in the actual crater.

All right, Brother Griffiths. Mebby you are right, mebby so. I commented on your letter as I went along, but when I struck that test stunt I had a notion to strike it all out. We will let it go through as it looks, however, and I imagine a good many operators will be shoving a piece of cardboard across their condensers before long. I shall be glad to hear some of the results of these tests, and what operators deduce from the same.

They Sell in England.

B. F. Stevens & Brown, Trafalgar Square, London, England, says:

We have just sold the last copy of Richardson's Handbook we have in stock. Please send us a duplicate consignment by book post.

The editor was very much swelled up at a remark made by our London correspondent in a recent letter. He said, as nearly as I can remember the exact phraseology: "Thanks to articles purloined from the projection department by the English cinematograph trade papers, Richardson is the most trusted man in the projection field in all England."

It is, of course, highly gratifying to know that one's efforts are thus appreciated in lands across the sea. My Handbook is having an increasing sale in England, although from the English operator's point of view it is a very expensive book.

Cuts Out Its Heart.

C. E. Wheeler, Lebanon, Ind., writes:

The first thing I do when I get the World is cut its heart out—meaning, of course, the projection department—which I keep on file, and it's no wonder, because the department certainly has helped me very greatly.

That is all right, brother, but why not keep the whole paper? We naturally are mighty proud of the department, but still it is by no manner of means the whole thing, and there is oodles and gobs of other good stuff in every issue.

Orpheum Theater, Allentown, Pa.

The Orpheum Theater, Allentown, Pa., presents an example of an ideal fireproof playhouse. The usual bill comprises three vaudeville shows a day, with a reel of pictures between, before and after the same; also occasionally three or four-reel features are shown. The seating capacity of the house is approximately 1,300; prices 15, 25 and 35 cents. Distance of projection is 63 feet 4 inches, with a 21-foot 3-inch picture, which same is altogether too large. A much better general result would be had by cutting the size of the picture down at least 5 feet in width.

The current is alternating, and the management have installed a Westinghouse motor generator set for converting the three-phase A. C. to D. C. at 75 volts, which, however, necessitates the breaking down of the D. C. voltage to the value of between 50 and 55 required by the projection arc. The resistors this makes necessary are well ventilated, and have ten steps for adjustment purposes, thus allowing the operator to secure any light value he may desire within range of the apparatus. The motor generator is what is known as a "two-light" machine, meaning that it will carry the two arcs temporarily during the period of change-over, and during the period of warming up the carbons prior to the change-over. This set was run from 2 to 11 p. m. every week day and during one whole week, which means that the motor generator set was worked to its full capacity during all these hours. The result was, I am told, excellent. The Westinghouse Company puts out these sets in capacity varying from 2¾ to 6⅝ k. w. They are made for operation on any commercial circuit, both single, two and three-phase, and are designed especially for use in connection with motion picture machine operation. A medal of honor, the highest award obtainable on this class of apparatus at the Panama Pacific International Exposition, was granted these sets.

In the second view we see the proscenium arch and screen of the Orpheum. I would again suggest to the management of that very beautiful house the advisability of very largely reducing the size of the picture. The general result will be much better, and the eye strain from the front seats will be greatly reduced. However, that border ought by all means to be a dead black, but apparently is not, and in any event there is no border at the bottom. The Orpheum is otherwise too excellent and beautiful a house to be marred by such an error as this. The Orpheum is one of the Keith houses.

New York Operators Elect Officers.

Local Union No. 306 has elected the following officers: President, G. C. Edwards; Vice President, A. Brenner; Rec. Secretary, T. F. Costello; Secretary-Treasurer, Fred. Stuffregen; Business Agent, H. Mackler; Sergeant-at-arms, Chas. Marrato. Trustees, M. Berkowitz, Will C. Smith, H. Weinberger. Executive Board member, S. Myers.

The choice of the local seems to have been excellent all the way through. Costello is an old war horse, whose honesty, sincerity and energy no one questions. Stuffregen has been tried through a long term of years in the present position to which he has just been re-elected. Mackler was re-elected business agent. He is an efficient and a good worker. The only improvement I could suggest on Brother Mackler would be something in the nature of a self-starter; that is, his principal lack, but once he gets going he is a stem-winder. Edwards is a man well known to and well liked by New York operators. He is what might be termed a conservative, but I do not think there is any danger of his running conservatism into the ground, and I believe he will prove to be an excellent presiding officer. Brenner, vice president, is also well known and well liked. Will C. Smith of the Board of Trustees is assistant general manager for the Nicholas Power Company.

The record of the officers for the past year has been good, and the local has perhaps made more genuine progress during that time than at any other similar period of its existence. Let us hope the good work continues.

Cushman Lighting Plants.

Attached hereto is a photograph of the Cushman Light Weight Engine-Generator outfit, used by the "Honest Bill" road shows. I publish this picture because of the fact that I am told the Cushman outfit has a very good record, though I have not, as yet, had the opportunity of personally examining these engines and generators. Moreover, an outfit of this kind ought to be of interest to those who have been making inquiry with regard to generating outfits for road shows. The engine shown on the wagon is a 15 h. p., and an excellent idea of the size and shape of the Cushman equipment ordinarily used in theater installation is had in the second view, in which the tank is for water, the engine being of the water-cooled variety.

Unhonored and Unsung.

J. Reich, Jr., New Orleans, La., contributes the following:

Few of the many thousands of people who daily attend moving picture theaters have anything more than a faint conception of how much of the service they receive for their admission price depends upon one man, the operator, who turns the crank in his little fireproof room, usually just under the ceiling. They see only the picture on the screen. The man who makes it, like the poet, "unhonored and unsung." Nobody knows him. He walks in and out of the theater unnoticed in the crowd, though if he failed to walk in at the appointed hour there would be no show. The piano player may quit, the ushers may go on strike, and even the manager may take a day off, and yet the show can go ahead just the same, so long as there is a competent operator on the job. And his is no sinecure. In the blistering heat of summer he must sit constantly beside a powerful electric arc, and with unceasing care render upon the screen the work of the best artists in the land. If his work is well and skilfully done his is not the credit, but if an accident occurs and the show for a moment stops his is the blame. Before him is one of the most inflammable substances of commerce passing constantly under the terrific heat of the concentrated beam of the powerful electric arc. Dangerous as this condition is he nevertheless may not even so much as burn a hole through the film in years of service, but let an accident occur, as accidents will occur, no matter how great the care used, and the film catches fire. There is a flash. The fuse of the fire shutter cords "goes," every aperture in the room is closed, and he is left alone to battle the danger as best he may. The audience must not know there is a fire, as a deadly panic would follow. If anyone has to be burned it is he, and no one must know it. Blinded, perhaps, by the smoke, he nevertheless flashes the warning signal and the exits are manned, but quietly, so that no one knows. In another moment comes the "all right" signal. The danger is past. The operator has lost his hair and eyebrows, and his hands may be cruelly burned, but he smiles grimly, and says: "Well, anyhow, I saved the show."

Therefore, let us pay a little tribute of honor to the man behind the machine, alert and ready, master of the situation at any moment, who does his duty, and has done it even unto the death, without seeking or expecting the limelight to even so much as point in his general direction. And should, some night, the sign, "Just a moment, please," be flashed upon the screen, let us applaud instead of hissing, for the sign means that, while the operator has troubles of his own, he is on the job.

Non-Progressiveness.

In every one of the few instances in which an organization has failed or refused to make the necessary arrangements for a lecture, and I have investigated conditions, I have found that the lecture was sadly needed in that particular place. It is but natural that this should be so. The live-wire union, exhibitors' league or individual is always ready and willing to accept anything which even gives promise of adding to his store of knowledge, hence to his efficiency as a manager or operator. On the other hand, the manager or the operator who has little knowledge, and is unwilling to make the necessary effort to improve himself is, in the very nature of things, opposed to lectures on projection, to projection departments and to handbooks. That way lies exertion, and that is the very thing this type of "manager" and "operator" abhors with all of his soul. What cares he that his screen shows results a real manager or operator would blush with shame to look upon? What cares he that the splendid work of the producer is brought to naught upon his screen? What cares he that over-tight tension and over-speeding works permanent injury to the films by abraiding and straining the sprocket holes? What cares this type of operator that his union slide is followed by projection so rank that it is a disgrace to the organization? What cares he that he is wasting a third or a half of his light by wrongly matched up lens system or that—but what's the use?

I say "what's the use" because my experience has been that it approaches very nearly to a waste of time to argue with this particular type of man. He is a non-progressive. He corresponds to the element which, in the beginning of the public schools fought that institution tooth and toenail. He corresponds to the element which, in the beginning of the use of machinery, fought every improvement calculated to lighten labor to the very last ditch. If only half of the energy he expands in cursing the march of progress, and pulling back on the wheels of advancement were expended in the opposite direction he would accomplish a wonderful amount of good. As a matter of fact, however, this particular type of man is usually one who can only see one thing at a time, and he, unfortunately, has gotten the idea firmly implanted in his rather rusty brain that only one thing counts, or two things, rather, viz: the amount of money he gets and the amount of work he has to do to get it. His every effort is to expand the former and diminish the latter, and usually about two-thirds of the total effort is expended on the diminishing end. The only way in which this erroneous idea, which holds possession of his entire mentality can be even jarred, is by striking him square between the eyes with such a heavy and successive bludgeon of facts that even his non-progressive brain is shocked into action.

And you can take it from me, my brothers, that that is exactly the thing that has happened to a good many non-progressives who have listened to my lecture. Many men have, at the end of the lecture, come up, shook hands, and said: "Well, old man, I never realized these things until tonight."

It is not my purpose, in this article, to draw invidious comparisons, but in order to point the matter, in one city in New York state, the only city in all New England in which anything of the sort occurred, the operators' union did not have the common decency to reply to two letters, both of which I learned, upon unquestionable authority, were received by the local. This union, through one of its executive officers, told a committee of the Exhibitors' League that it "had no time to waste on projection lectures." Now, I have not actually witnessed the work in any houses of that city, though you can take it from me I am going to in the not distant future. I am told, however, both by exhibitors and operators in a nearby city, and by exhibitors and operators in the city in question, that projection therein is absolutely punk. In fact, the word they used to describe it was considerably stronger than punk, and, furthermore, I am informed that the present wage scale of the local is just a little more than fifteen dollars for a six-day week, though they are hoping to force into effect a schedule calling for the dizzy height of eighteen dollars per week of six days, with the tremendous sum of three whole dollars for a single day's work. For houses opening before noon, however, the new schedule provides that there must be two union men, the operator in charge to receive $18.00, and the second man T-W-E-L-V-E dollars per week. Well, that is pretty near the answer, is it not? And this is no village either, but a city of goodly size.

Exhibitors who are thoroughly acquainted with the situation inform me there are only three or four operators in the city who can, by any stretch of the imagination, be called competent, and this opinion was backed up by other competent testimony.

It is not a pleasure to speak thus of a body of operators, but when a local goes to the extent of being unnecessarily discourteous—yes, I may say ungentlemanly, in failure to even acknowledge a business communication, and under the conditions set forth deliberately says to the Exhibitors' League, who themselves attempted to fix the matter up in conjunction with the operators, that they "have no time to waste on projection lectures," which other locals have found to be of immense value, it is time a little good, hard, solid truth was told, and it is only regard for the exhibitors themselves prevents me naming the city.

In closing let me say that in this matter there is absolutely no personal feeling on my part. It would be a matter of great pleasure to be able to say good things about the local in question instead of what has been said, but there is a duty to perform in matters of this kind, however unpleasant the performance may be. I sincerely trust that the time may come when I will be able to reverse the entire foregoing as applied to the union in question and, for that matter, say nothing but good things of all locals, by reason of the fact that all locals deserve it.

Serious Error.

Recently it was my privilege to witness the projection of a star feature which is enjoying much popularity on Broadway. It is a photoplay of very genuine merit, too, and one which would hugely please Henry Ford, but its presentation is seriously marred by errors in the projection installation, due, I am told, to the producer himself giving instructions with regard to the equipment.

The current is D. C., yet the producer insists, was informed, upon the use of a two-wing shutter. There are places in this production where it is absolutely imperative that the speed of projection be brought down to normal, or even a trifle below normal, if the best results on the screen is to be attained. Particularly is this true at one point where the troops are marching. The operator appeared (to his credit) to be "on the job," and the speed was reduced until the flicker was very pronounced, yet, even so, the orchestra literally was compelled to play the march at what was very nearly ridiculous speed in order to keep up with the marchers. Nor was this all, for at every "light" scene in the whole production there was a flicker, which at times was sufficient to be decidedly objectionable.

Now this was all utterly unnecessary and uncalled for, because with an intermittent movement having a six-to-one speed, and a three-wing shutter placed at the dissolving point of the light ray, it would, under the condition present in that house, be quite possible to use a 50/50 shutter, or very nearly that, and the speed could then be reduced so that the orchestra could keep perfect time with the marching soldiers, without hurrying and without flickers, nor would the screen briliancy be in any way injured or diminished.

The producer in question is one of the most able we have. He has turned out work which is very nearly beyond criticism, but the projection of those same masterpieces is very evidently something he does not at all understand, nor could he hope to understand it without a long course of study and training.

He has incorporated a color scheme which did not appeal to me, as one of the audience, at all. To watch a blood red boat sink in red ink somehow did not appear at all exciting. It was merely absurd. Take my advice, Brother Producer, and leave the projection of your splendid work to those who know how to do it. Your able work as a producer is very, very greatly marred by the things I have named, though the color scheme itself might be open to argument. My opinion of that is expressed merely as an individual member of the audience.

An Excellent Explanation.

Ralph W. Martin, Los Angeles, Cal., sent in a reply to Question 118 which same related to the effect of the two-wing shutter and the three-wing shutter on 60 cycle alternating current. This reply should have been published, but was mislaid. I am publishing it now because it offers, in the drawings, a very lucid explanation of the matter in question. The part of the question referred to by the drawings and text is: "What is likely to happen if a three-wing shutter is used when the current is 60 cycle A. C.?" Brother Martin says:

> Figure 1 shows the wave of a 60 cycle A. C. It is taken for granted that the picture is run at the constant rate of sixteen frames per second and the calculations shown in Figures 1 and 2 are made on this basis. A study of Fig. 1 shows that the flashes of light which reach the screen through the shutter openings, represented by solid line, covers a period which includes three periods of maximum illumination at the arc. In fact, each flash contains three points of maximum illumination, which occur at regular intervals of 1/30 of a second apart. Consequently, whereas the effect upon the screen might be that of a little flicker, still it will be regular, or at regular intervals, and of equal intensity.
> Referring to Fig. 2, however, and observing the conditions as there stated and shown, it is noticed that the first flash of the shutter opening (solid line) contains two points of maximum, whereas the next contains only one, the third only one, the fourth two, and the fifth one. It, therefore, follows that the second, third and fifth flashes of light are of less intensity than are the first and fourth, but, more than this, each one of the flashes contain a somewhat different amount of light from that of its neighbor. This causes the illumination on the screen to pulsate at the rate of fifteen times per second, which rate is so low that the waving effect of the light is easily discernable to the eye, and is much more objectionable than that of the ordinary shutter flicker.

Brother Martin's calculations would have considerable more value if we knew the exact proportions of the shutter the calculations are based on. However, the idea itself is graphically shown, and I think can be readily understood by the average operator of today. Apparently the two-wing shutter calculation was not made from a 50/50 shutter, but by the use of a shutter having wings of unequal width.

More About Focussing.

Besides the purely mechanical errors that are liable to occur in focussing a cinematographic lens and which were referred to in a previous article, there remain yet others to which reference has not been made.

These come chiefly under two heads: First, the inherent errors of the lens; and second, errors in the methods of focussing.

Cinematograph lenses are not apochomatic, that is, corrected for light of all different wave lengths. If, however, they have been corrected for visual and actinic focus this is of no particular importance as the ordinary brands of film are only sensitive to the actinic blue and blue violet rays.

Without entering too deeply into the physics of light rays and their wave lengths, it is still important that we take into consideration some of their better known properties and discuss them with relation to the subject in hand.

We are all familiar with the brilliant band of prismatic colors which result from passing a ray of white light through a prism. The light waves may be compared to sound waves of different pitch and there are many light waves which are invisible to the human eye just as there are sound waves too low and too high in pitch to be audible to the human ear. The red end of the spectrum is the low pitch end, or long wave length end, and does not affect ordinary photographic emulsions except by greatly prolonged exposure, for which reason we illuminate our dark rooms with red lights, to which our eyes are sensitive while the film is not.

The actinic and visual rays are not two separate and distinct kinds of light, but are terms which are used to designate two different sections of the spectrum which overlap one another. The visual rays are those which we discern when we make the spectrum with a prism as has been described—the actinic, however, begin in the region of bluish green and extend far into the ultra violet, which, though invisible to the eye, extend for a distance beyond the visible violet several times the length of the visible spectrum.

If it were not for the fact that ordinary optical glass is practically opaque to these ultra violet rays, we would be let in for a tremendous lot of complications with invisible lights, which could fog our film without visible knowledge on our part. Most of us have a hard enough time to keep from fogging our film as it is, without having to take precautions against an invisible enemy, such as the X-ray photographer has to contend with. The X-ray photographer, or radiographer, as he prefers to be called, has to either keep his photographic materials at a long distance from his CROOKES tubes or wrap them carefully in sheet lead.

The invisible rays at each end of the spectrum are intensly interesting subjects to study and the readers of this article will do well in their spare time to get some popular books in physics and read up on the subject of light, where they will find fascinating facts that have no room here.

By means of certain dye chemicals, it is possible to sensitize ordinary emulsions so that they are not only sensitive to all the visible colors but to the infra-red as well and Sir W. W. de Albney has even photographed a kettle by the infra-red rays emanating from boiling water contained therein. Radiant heat and infra-red being practically synonymous and interchangeable terms.

Professor R. W. Wood, of Johns Hopkins University, one of the most distinguished of American physicists, has recently attracted much attention by ingeniously photographing the common objects about us, as well as the planets, by these invisible rays. As has been stated, glass is opaque to ultra violet light but quartz or rock crystal is transparent to them as is glass to ordinary light, but quartz and rock crystal are also transparent to ordinary light, so that in making photographs by ultra violet light, it is necessary to use a filter or screen to keep out the visible light just as one uses a yellow screen with orthochromatic plates to screen off the blue rays to which these plates are also sensitive.

Silver foil and bromine vapor confined in a rock crystal cell are opaque to visible rays, but transparent to ultra violet. Professor Wood also discovered that a black dye called nitroso-dimethyl aniline possesses this same property.

For the infra-red or heat waves a glass lens will serve, but again it is necessary to screen off the visible light, which can be done with pitch or thin sheets of vulcanite or a few other substances. A number of these interesting photographs by Professor Wood were published in the June number of the Popular Science Monthly.

It may puzzle some readers to know why we distinguish between visual and actinic rays if all the actinic rays with which we are concerned are also visible. The reason is not far to seek.

The blue and violet rays which comprise the actinic rays produce the strongest effect on a photographic emulsion and the weakest effect of any of the visual rays on the retina; therefore when we focus on the ground glass we are adjusting the image by the strongest visual rays which are the yellow and are unconciously disregarding the actinic or blue image, because it is overpowered and quenched to our eye by the more visible yellow rays. At the most, the difference is so slight, that while it may amount to considerable when the picture is magnified on the screen, it requires a powerful focussing glass and an extremely fine grained ground glass to perceive it with the eye. Suppose the actinic and the visual focal planes were 2/1000 of an inch apart, about the thickness of a thin cigarette paper, by theoretical calculations it would produce a blurring more than an inch in width in any sharp outline on the screen with a sixteen foot picture, considering the lens to have been used at F 3.5. Actually, for several reasons which have to do with the theory of development and light dispersion, it would be much more.

Ordinarily we would consider the edge of a cigarette paper as defining a sharp line, and yet the visible color fringe in the image on the ground glass for this same amount of error in correction would be only six ten thousandths (6/10,000) of an inch or less than one third (1/3) as thick as the cigarette paper.

Suppose on the other hand that your lens is absolutely correct and you are taking a scene which requires F 3.5 aperture and your error in focussing is two one thousandths (2/1000) of an inch, or less than one third (1/3) the thickness of the film, the amount of blurring will be the same.

With the lens stopped down these errors are reduced proportionally, but with a good lens, properly focussed, you should get just as sharp a picture of objects at the distance focussed on, at F 3.5 as at F 16.

Do not misinterpret this statement to mean depth of focus. It means that at F 3.5 and the lens focussed at sixteen feet (16 ft.) all objects in the range of the camera and sixteen feet (16 ft.) from it, should be just as sharp as those taken at F 16, but it does not mean that any object closer or farther away than sixteen feet (16 ft.) with the lens set for that distance will be as sharp at F 3.5 as at F 16.

Instead of using a ground glass or a piece of film for focussing, get a piece of first quality lantern slide cover glass, or better still, from the optician get a piece of "optical flat" and cut it the correct size to fit in the film race at the frame aperture.

Get an optician to rule the glass at right angles in squares about one-eighth to one-quarter of an inch apart with a diamond, making the lines as thin and fine as possible, and just deep enough to retain a spider web line of fine black enamel or lampblack when rubbed over the surface of the glass. If you have a fine pointed glazier's diamond you can do the job yourself.

When you have finished and wiped the enamel off clean, the cross lines should look like they were drawn with india ink and a ruling pen, but many times finer than could possibly be made with a pen.

Now you must have a focussing glass of fairly high power, preferably of the type known as a focussing loup, which is an achromatic magnifying glass set in a short tube with a screw thread for adjusting the focus. Place the ruled glass against the lower end of the loup with the lines outward and with it turned to the light, adjust the focus until the black lines are the sharpest. Now place the ruled screen in the aperture plate with the lines toward the lens and with the loup against the screen, focus the lens. You will see the image just as in an opera glass or telescope, except that it is upside down. When the image and the lines are in focus at the same time and the lines look like bars dividing the picture, your camera lens is in focus.

This is termed an aerial focus and as the human eye has a considerable range of focal adjustment or accommodation, as it is called, and could possibly focus on the aerial image even if it were not quite in the focal plane, the lines on the glass form a correct fixation point for the ocular focus and prevent it straying ahead or behind the proper plane.

If the focussing glass which you use for this is an achromat from a reputable maker and you can detect a prismatic fringe about any of the objects on which you are focussing, you may be sure that your photographic objective (your cinematographic lens) is not properly corrected. If so, sell it, give it away or return it to the maker, but don't try to take pictures with it.

"As good as gold." "As white as snow." "As fine as silk." Why do other papers in this field invariably try to compare with the standard of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD? There's a reason.

Music for the Picture

Conducted by CLARENCE E. SINN and S. M. BERG

Musical Setting for "Miss Petticoats."

Released by the World Film Corp., July 31.

(Suggestions prepared by S. M. Berg by special arrangements with G. Schirmer, Inc., Music Publishers, New York.)

THIS "Musical Suggestion Cue Sheet" is not designed to solve every possible musical requirement of the film, but is intended as a partial solution of the problem—what to play for the picture. It has proven to be of great assistance to the leader, not only by relieving to a degree the tedium of rehearsals, but by assisting materially in overcoming those conditions encountered when the film is not available until the hour of performance.

Musical Suggestion Cue Sheets can be obtained (free of charge) by managers from their local exchange in advance of the date of release, and a sufficient number should be secured to provide one for each member of the orchestra. This will afford to the progressive leader an opportunity to acquaint himself with the general character of the film drama he is to portray with his orchestra.

Together with the suggested music at the title or descriptive cues where it is to be played, the tempo or characteristic is given so that the leader can select or substitute any or all of the numbers from his own library, thereby avoiding any financial outlay though still carrying out the interpretation.

The timing of the picture is based on a speed of 15 minutes to a thousand feet. The time indications will help the leader to anticipate the various cues which may consist of the printed sub-title (marked T) or a described action (marked D). For instance: 2¼ T "Mrs. Copeland" is a sub-title and is printed reading matter on the screen. But 52 D "In the cabin of the Harpoon" is a description of action.

The scene of the story lies in a New England mill town on the coast. Agnes Renier lives with her grandfather on the old ship "The Harpoon" and works in the mill. She saves the life of Mrs. Copeland, the mill owner, who takes her as a companion. Guy, her nephew, has been secretly meeting Mrs. Courtleigh but is now attracted to Agnes. Mrs. Courtleigh becomes jealous and spreads scandalous reports about her. Mr. Courtleigh discovers his wife's infidelity, and with Guy, who has been ordered away by his aunt, she leaves for the city. Mrs. Copeland takes Agnes to Europe for a year. On her return, Harding the village minister who has loved her from childhood, wins her heart.

Note particularly: 25 Sailor's horn-pipe; 32¼ Piano only; 33½ Jig.

Time schedule: 75 minutes (five reels—about 4,000 feet).

The THEME selected is "When a Maid Comes, etc."—Friml.

The Organ.

How the Pianist Can Become an Organist.

By S. M. Berg and Norman Stuckey.

IT IS absolutely essential that the person desirous of becoming an efficient organist for interpreting moving pictures should first be a successful pianist. The finest organists have been and are equally good as pianists. Mendelssohn was a pianist, but he played the organ so well that he was looked upon as a virtuoso of that instrument. Much foundation technic can be done at the piano, and all students should have made sufficient progress with the works of Bach, Czerny and Cramer.

The organ is an interesting instrument for the novice to play on. Many different effects may be secured with the slightest effort, but to master the instrument in a skillful degree and become an expert accompanist for moving pictures is an art that requires much time, study and perseverance. Common sense and earnestness of purpose are factors that are also highly important. Strength is needed in every part of the body and the organ is not an instrument for the nervous person to meddle with. The more professional experience one has had, the better, especially theater and orchestra experience, for it is the purpose of the organist who plays for moving pictures to get as many orchestral effects from the organ as possible.

Every prospective student of the organ should have a copy of Sir John Stainer's valuable book "The Organ," that explains in detail the construction, its possibilities and contains as well progressive studies and exercises. It is advisable to study this book carefully before you attempt to play. You will understand the instrument and what experiments you attempt will then be from an intelligent standpoint.

At first, the array of stops, pedals and manuals is apt to confuse and discourage the beginner, and the mastery of such a complicated instrument will seem impossible to many. Don't be discouraged. Resolve to master the instrument, but to do this you must cultivate patience, for the organ cannot be mastered in a few lessons. Let your progress be slow and sure. Do not let a day pass that you do not gain something in a musical way from a technical and pleasurable standpoint.

The essentials of good piano or good organ technic are perfectly free movements of the fingers and wrist. In practicing for the organ, the student must take the greatest care to allow the arm to support itself quite freely. He must guard against any downward pressure of arm-weight, as this is fatal to all agility, which is highly important to successful organ playing.

The beginner who is not willing to devote time to practice will never become a successful organist. An athlete spends weeks training for an event. An organist should be willing to work; for work, the capacity for patient labor, is the keystone of successful organ playing.

There is much about an organ to hold the interest: its construction and variety of effects that may be obtained, but the beginner must not lose sight of the small details that make it possible to gain a big effect. Master the details and the big things will take care of themselves. An excellent idea to familiarize oneself with the organ is to make a rough sketch of the keyboard. Take this home and study it carefully and when you take your place at the organ the positions of many of the stops will not be foreign to you.

Being familiar with the organ is another important feature that the pianist must acquire, as many rapid changes are necessary when interpreting moving pictures. The organist cannot lose time fumbling for suitable combinations or experimenting with various effects. Have complete command over the instrument. Be familiar with it and learn its limitations.

Gibbon tells us that "every person has two educations—one which he receives from others, and one which he gives himself." The latter is better, though it often comes hard, but experience on the organ can be made easy if the beginner will realize that an intelligent understanding is necessary. The pianist who regards the organ as a plaything will lose in the end, for there is no limit to the demands of the organ for efficient and artistic playing. It is a difficult instrument to master and you must be willing to study its intricacies. The art of registration and the ability to perform a certain number of pieces, to the neglect of many of the important foundation principles, is often a fault of many beginners. The true legato touch should be mastered and it must be clear and even in quality. Nearly all students when practicing on the piano or organ use one-third more exertion than is necessary.

Do not be too anxious to play the organ. Nearly every person can make an organ sound, for by pulling a few stops the organ effect is responsive and usually pleasing to the listener who is ignorant as to what real organ playing is like.

The theory of music, including form, analysis, history, organ building, as well as harmony, counter-point, extempore playing, improvising, modulating, transposing as well as orchestration should be mastered if the pianist wishes to become an efficient organist for interpreting moving pictures. Learn to concentrate. This is important in music, and especially for organ practice. The mind must be centered upon the work. Otherwise with the many mechanical appliances of the modern organ, the pianist will lose sight of the most important points in an effort to gain a general effect.

You cannot produce pleasing effects until you have mastered the ground work necessary to the organ. Then you can impart an artistic touch to your playing; style can be developed with ease when you are in a position to execute difficult passages without exertion and effort

The succeeding articles will deal with the manuals and pedals, also registration and the various stops and combinations that are effective for playing moving pictures.

Why Photoplay Masterpieces Are Few By William H. Kitchell

The Rise and Fall of the Freelance Scenario Writer by One Who Hit Bottom

HOW long would the theatrical business last if every play was taken from a book or manufactured "behind scenes" by a salaried theatrical hack? How long will the motion picture industry last under the same conditions? Is it lasting?

Six years is not a long time, but it is long enough to look back upon and reflect that the rise and decline of the freelance photo-playwright has happened in that time. Go back three years. There was no yawp then from the studio proprietors and editors about the lack of ability of writers to write "continuity" into their scenarios. Plays sold on merit—and they sold. There were fewer studios—and fewer writers—and the outside writer of live plots found a ready market for his inventions, and an invitation to invent more. And there were better plays upon the screen.

What is wrong with the photoplay market?

Until two years ago, there was a ready source of income for the man who could originate a plot suitable for a photoplay. There was no bunk about "selling on synopsis," and no dearth of interesting plots. It was an open market. The scenario writer who had ever published a novel, or sold even a magazine-story, was looked upon as a "highbrow" and perhaps given an extra ten dollars upon his release-form as the deserved reward of genius. The writer who received $35 per reel bragged about it in print. Prices were lean, but there was a promise of future results and—there being a steady demand for his work—the freelance plot inventor was content.

True, then as now, the average studio proprietor considered the freelance writer an unnecessary evil; or, at most, an employee who belonged in the factory with the rest of the office force. Stage-plays are not written in theaters, nor magazine stories in magazine offices, but that made no difference in the perspective of the average studio proprietor. He had small regard for "moods," and he would have dictated the stuff himself out of his own head if he hadn't been too busy making money. Still, it was "boom-times" for the writer without a pull. Several tight-fisted studio proprietors had metamorphosed into philanthropists who were willing to fork over as much as $50 for a one-reel drama—providing it was good stuff and that the author was willing to give the philanthropist first-option on all future work.

Then came the war and the craze for features. A few of the writers were turned into studio hacks. The vast majority of those who had been given "encouragement" were dropped. It was thought that only a professional author with a reputation for writing a "best-seller" could handle a five-part feature—in conjunction with the studio hack, of course—and the professional novelist was invited in. He has seldom made good. Big prices have been paid for his work, and he has been coddled along from one inane bunch of padding to another in the hope that his "picture-eye" would open and that "something big" would come out of it that would put "Cabiria" into the discard.

Few "Cabirias" have been released in the last two years.

Six years is a short time for one of the great industries of the world to rise. Granted that the freelance scenario writer was only a cog in the wheel, he was a most necessary cog. The one essential lacking in the photoplay of to-day is originality of plot. A poor scene work-out can be altered, when necessary, by any studio writer capable of holding his job; but a "story" cannot be sensed by the originator in a 250-word synopsis nor has he the remotest chance in the world to make a dramatic plot out of a synopsis, anyhow. Let the writer of photoplay work out his scenes, and give him the opportunity of selling the result in an open market.

There is no open market. There has been none for two years—despite the bluff of the scenario editor who howls wildly every now and then that he is anxious to buy scenarios. He doesn't buy. In many instances he doesn't have to. It has been no unique experience for an "outside" writer the past two years to originate a unique "situation" or theme in a photoplay, to have his manuscript returned time and again, and to see his theme or "situation" released in recognizable form by three "reputable" studios in succession.

The scenario department in nine studios out of ten needs renovating from the top down. There are not enough editors, and too many studio hacks. There is a lack of new plots, and an over-abundance of presswork to boost them. Just now, the photoplay audiences are paying to see good acting—not good plots.

The "Saturday Evening Post" offers an ever-open market to the writer of good short stories. It has no "prize-contests," it does not advertise for manuscripts, it pays liberally for an accepted story and gives courteous treatment to the writer who shows promise—and it prints live stuff.

It is likewise prosperous.

Harris Gordon Engaged by Metro

HARRIS GORDON has been engaged to play an important part in the new production starring Emmy Wehlen, which will be made by Metro-Rolfe, under the direction of George D. Baker. Gordon was for two years with Thanhouser, playing leads in Mutual Masterpictures. He was with Reliance a year and a half, with Victor-Universal a year and also appeared with the Famous Players and with Solax. Among his best characterizations have been the part of Dorian Grey in "The Picture of Dorian Grey," Tom Tulliver in "The Mill on the Floss," "The Disciple of Nietzsche," "God's Witness," "The Oval Diamond," and "The Image Maker of Thebes."

Harris Gordon.

Mr. Gordon is a well known and popular player, and is well toward the top in the popularity contest of the Motion Picture Magazine. He was for five years on the speaking stage, appearing for the most part in stock, but occasionally playing in such productions as "Julie Bon Bon," with Louis Mann and Clara Lipman.

Mr. Gordon was born in Glenside, Pa., in 1884. He attended Cheltenham Military Academy at Jenkintown, Pa.

Motion Picture Educator

Conducted by REV. W. H. JACKSON and PROF. HARDIN LUCAS

DURING the National Education Association's great convention in New York City from July 1 to 8 there were several programs in which attention was given to the scholastic use of educational films. At the general sessions of the entire association in the huge assembly room of Madison Square Garden prominent mention was made of the vitalizing potentiality of the screen story as a force in public recreation and in other fields closely bordering upon the province of the school. At several of the departmental meetings in smaller halls scattered all the way from Columbia University (120th street) down to the Washington Irving High School (Fifteenth street) special papers were read with reference to the visual needs of pupils and the aids available in the form of films. Audiences of considerable size evidenced great interest in the various aspects from which motion pictures were considered. Whenever the topic was mentioned in the course of private conversation, a deep and abiding concern over the future of educational films was manifested. Although there were many other problems of moment before the convention, the association could not justly be charged with slighting our most recently developed aid to visual instruction, especially when the present apathy of the industry as a whole toward the schools is borne in mind.

In fact, if one recalls the eagerness with which many of the men who are prominent in the industry applied their energies and skill to winning over the Federation of Women's Clubs during a similar convention in New York a few weeks earlier, the apparent indifference of the industry to educationists becomes even more striking, not to say disconcerting. The truth seems to be that the women's clubs were noticed by the industry chiefly because of its realization of the danger of a broadside from the women's convention in favor of censorship; accordingly, conferences, dinners, special entertainments in picture theaters, and numbers of representatives of the industry in the audiences when motion picture topics were on the federation programs.

But the school folk have displayed thus far no leaning toward legislation hostile to the picture theater. Perhaps that is one of the chief explanations why their recent convention received such scant notice from the film interests. The fact remains that the number of representatives of the greater film producers in attendance at the various meetings of the National Education Association was distinctly negligible. There were no designedly educational film programs in the theaters, and the only showings of films that were claimed to be suitable for use in schools were arranged by a concern that is exploiting a narrow gauge machine. The major film interests were noticeable rather for their absence, their failure to show themselves awake and appreciative of the value of the opportunity which the schools of our country now constitute and will soon palpably become for those producers that are not too slow to catch step with the progressive educational tendencies of our day.

There is one other basis, however, upon which we may account for the conspicuous lack of co-ordination of effort to which I have just directed attention. Mr. Edison, it will be remembered, launched a few years ago an elaborate plan for the utilization of films in schools. I do not imply that he was by any means the pioneer in this field, but his case will serve well to illustrate my point. After very large amounts of capital had been invested in the enterprise, there came to the inventor and promoter a realization of the need of something approaching unanimity among the educators as to the kinds of "educational" films they would be willing to use. When his venture was finally allowed to lapse, he was quoted as having declared that before film producers could afford to incur heavy expenses of production the educators themselves would have to get together and agree upon the sort of films they want and will use on a basis of reasonable profit to the producers. It must be admitted that the educators have not yet arrived at a state of complete agreement upon the matter of form of films for scholastic use. Possibly the greater producing firms have decided to bide their time until such an agreement turns up among the educators. I venture to suggest that the good day will arrive much sooner if the leaders in education and in film production will do a little joint getting together. It is from the standpoint of that desideratum that the neglect of the recent convention seems so regrettable.

It were absurd to claim, as do some extreme advocates of visualization, that there was no topic anywhere in the thirty-six pages of the official program which could not have been made more clear and impressive by the use of film aids. But it would be fairly safe to assert that each of the shorter programs prepared for rendition at a sitting contained at least one topic which might well have been supplemented in that way. High praise was given to the motion picture by Mr. Warren Dunham Foster, department editor of The Youth's Companion, in his address on "Organized Recreation"; but doubtless he might have more fully convinced his audience had the screen been used as an aid in driving his message home. In like manner other addresses might conceivably have been rendered more interesting and more impressive. Topics that suggest themselves for such treatment as one glances through the program are: Adult Illiteracy, Country School, Public Health, Socialized Recitation, Vocational Education, Foreign Service, Teachers' Cottages, Chinese Education, Gary Plan, Play School, Story Telling, Dramatic Art in Kindergartens, Vocational Guidance, etc., etc.

Films were actually shown at the close of three departmental programs during the week, but in each case there was at least a slight percentage of advertising present or apparent as a motive for the exhibition. At the second session of the National Congress of Mothers and Parent-Teacher Associations a so-called vocational film was seen—ostensibly a three-reel demonstration of the possibilities of correlating school and business, but primarily an advertisement of a group of periodicals. The final session of the School Garden Association of America was the occasion for an address from the founder of the boy's garden movement, "extraordinary kinemacolor moving pictures" being one of the features emphasized in the printed program. At the meeting of the Department of Science Education on Friday in the American Museum of Natural History were exhibited the narrow gauge films above referred to and also several reels of standard pictures obtained by Sir Douglas Mawson's expedition in the region of the South Pole several years ago.

The program at which the idea of using motion pictures systematically in school work received most careful consideration was the one last mentioned. The meeting was in charge of a Committee on Visual Instruction, whose chairman, Dr. Edward W. Stitt, district superintendent of schools, New York City, presided. I cannot do better than quote parts of his opening address on "The Importance of Visual Instruction."

"This gathering today is to emphasize that in the future the province of the teacher shall include the realm of the eye as well as that of the ear.

"The following are suggested as useful ways to enlarge the plan and scope of the work: (1) Lantern slides for instruction purposes; (2) educational motion pictures; (3) stereographs for work in science, history and geography; (4) display of maps, charts and models in classrooms; (5) greater use of the blackboard by both pupils and teachers; (6) illustrations in reading books and text books generally; (7) souvenir postal cards and pictures from magazines and newspapers; (8) school exhibits displayed in accordance with approved methods; (9) educational museum in some central building and distribution of visual aids by municipal or state bureaus; (10) clay modeling, moulding in sand trays, etc.; (11) home-made apparatus in elementary science work; (12) visits to museums, art galleries, etc.

"Two hundred and sixty years ago Comenius set the first standard of visual instruction. A century later Pestalozzi advanced beyond the picture stage by insisting that teachers must either bring things into the school for study or take the children out of the school to see them.

"The advance of science has brought to the aid of the teacher modern methods of visualization of which the teachers never dreamed. The wonders of the stereoscopic picture by which objects stand out in three dimensions and seem to be solids as in nature show a wonderful advance over the ordinary pictures of text books. The marvels of motion pictures, bringing into the schoolroom actual reproductions of scenes from real life, mark a still further advance. The next step in progressive pedagogic development, however, will be a release from the passive reception of film reproduction by enlisting the active energies of the pupils, so as to awaken their self-activity.

"Through the modern improvements of pictorial education by means of stereopticon, stereoscope and motion pictures, we shall be able to bring the world into every schoolroom. It is the hope of our committee that this conference may result in adding to our practical pedagogy by emphasizing the advantages to teachers and also to pupils in the use of the many modern forms of visual education which are now available for classroom use."

I have the promise of an abstract of an excellent talk given by Miss Louise Connolly, of the Newark (N. J.) Public Library, in lieu of her paper on "Can the Moving Picture That Imparts Information Be Used to Educate?" which will be published in the N. E. A. volume of proceedings. Unfortunately, the attractive topic "Advantages of Portable Moving Picture Machines for City and Rural Schools" was not treated because of the absence of State Superintendent Alvin N. White of New Mexico. The work that the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures is doing in the selection of pictures for children's entertainments was explained by Mr. Clarence M. Abbott, assistant secretary of that board.

In the brief discussion which followed the formal program, harsh and sweeping criticism was voiced against all of the "educational" films thus far produced; obviously, had time permitted, it would have been fortunate if the film interests could have been adequately represented in such a forum. Let us be ready next time.

HARDIN LUCAS.

A NEW PORTABLE MACHINE.

The "Kinak," a new portable, is about ready for the market from the factories of the Kinak Company, of 150 West Fifty-fourth street, New York City. This machine, intended for the classroom, small lecture-room, the home and the Sunday-school, is well adapted to its purposes. Exceedingly light in weight and neat in appearance, with a strong and safe light, it gives a picture six feet by five and is intended to fulfil in a peculiar manner the especial features claimed for it. The Kinak Company is also preparing a special film, safe from all dangers of fire, and at an exceedingly small cost, making the accumulation of a library of good subjects a possibility by anyone. The company is also engaged upon the production of a camera of such a nature that the amateur may with ease successfully take his own pictures. The company has a concise yet explicit descriptive circular ready for distribution.

"BOOST, DON'T FLAY."

A Cleveland clergyman exhorts his associates to boost, rather than to flay, the moving pictures. This is always good advice; it is often easier to hinder than to help, to criticise than to commend. The good, if used, will often do more to help than to waste in drawing attention to the bad and thereby making it conspicuous. To draw too much attention to that which is questionable is to become sensational and leads to the advertising of that which it were better to cover up; "boost, don't flay." Many clergymen have been astonished in finding that the moving pictures contained more good than there was evil in them; they are now confessing that they have been so drawn to the critical side that they have been blind to the commendable side. Their discovery has been an eye-opener: the pictures have much good in them; they are valuable, helpful and instructive. Although somewhat slangy, the word "boost" is known to possess a certain definite, peculiar and purposeful meaning—"a meaning all its own"—and is well understood everywhere; it may therefore be occasionally well used.

This Cleveland clergyman, Rev. Mr. Bradley, finds many problems subject to solution by the help of the judicious use of the pictures with a proper application of the boosting power they possess. He finds they boost the dwindling strength of the congregations, first by their attractive powers, and then by their holding power. Many things attract but do not hold; the pictures are found to have this holding power in a very peculiar and especial manner.

To strengthen the waning power of the evening congregations, Mr. Bradley would gladly make fellowship with the moving picture people in some arrangement whereby they might both secure and divide the great moral good which he sees possible by such a co-operation, because, he says, he finds now that such a series of good and suitable pictures are available; that not only are they suitable, but it is a loss not to use them and become familiar with them and the good results they offer.

NOTES.

The Y. M. C. A. of New Castle, Pa., is using the moving pictures with good results and finds them an additional attraction with strong educational possibilities; they also increase the sociable aspects of the club by the special evenings devoted to the friends of the members. It finds the growth in interest amply repays every effort; the educational classes of the association are strengthened and increased also.

The high schools of Baltimore, Md., are now using the moving pictures with good results, the biological subjects giving especial satisfaction. A special director is in charge of the work, and they are proving that which we so often contend that for enlarged teaching powers the kinematograph is beyond question, and these schools are only others to awaken to this fact. They now report that the studies are as fascinating as they are instructive, thus again proving that study is now attractive. The films which gave them this experience are "The Life of a Flower," "The Metamorphosis of a Butterfly," "The Life of an Ant," "Life in Fresh Water Ponds" and "Mammals," one of the best lists with which to introduce pictures in schools. They have evidently been wisely advised.

* * *

From Kansas City, Mo., comes the account of the use of the educational pictures in a most exceptional manner. In the open air educational exhibitions they have advanced so far as to give illustrations of surgical operations on the screen—such operations as the cutting off of a leg and those of a nature more common to humanity in the ills which flesh is heir to—thereby familiarizing people with the sterner necessities of life in a way more advanced than even advocates of the educational picture had contemplated in public exhibitions. There can be no doubt, however, that they will become general and advantageous.

M. H. HOFFMAN TAKES A VACATION TRIP.

Ever since the Bluebird program was launched early this year, and during several weeks of preliminary arrangements, M. H. Hoffman, general manager of Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., has been working daily on about four hours' sleep nightly, the remainder of the twenty-four division of the day's time being devoted to "putting over" the program.

Last Thursday M. H. Hoffman decided to take a vacation. Boarding the Twentieth Century he spent a quiet eighteen hours and then plunged into the turmoil of the Chicago convention. His stay in the Windy City concluded, Mr. Hoffman will devote two weeks to visiting as many Bluebird exchanges as he possibly can reach before the time comes for him to return to headquarters.

"There's nothing like a soft, red plush car-seat for a pleasant vacation," said Mr. Hoffman, as he stood perfectly still for the first time in 1916 with his hand on the door of his office. "If I can make two towns a day on my trip I may be able to cover half of our exchanges and work in a nice little vacation on the side."

LUBIN TO PRODUCE "THE BARRIER."

Following the completion at a near date of "The Light at Dusk," the seven-part photodrama being produced by Edgar Lewis, leading Lubin director, which will be released through the V-L-S-E, work will be started by him on "The Barrier," one of the best novels ever written by Rex Beach, the well-known novelist.

"The Barrier" will be a stupendous undertaking. It is not yet decided how large the production will be, Mr. Lewis having decided that the story is of sufficient interest to first produce it and let the length take care of itself. However, if possible, it will be told in the regulation number of reels for feature release.

An all-star cast will be selected at a near date to play in "The Barrier."

Observations

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN

IT had always been the policy of the writer to uphold anything tending to the benefit of all branches of the motion picture industry whether it be the producer, the exchange man or the exhibitor, and to unstintedly condemn any and everything aimed at diminishing their welfare. Frequently occasion has been taken to treat with the subject of "extras" and on most of these occasions whatever has been written has been prompted by what was considered unfair conduct on the part of extras toward producers and their directors.

With the same impartial view which has characterized comments in the past, the writer now takes up the cause of the extra. To most people, even to those in the profession, the extra appears to be a most inferior creature on account of his or her inability to become attached to stock. In fact, many people who are not acquainted with the conditions of modern motion picture life considers the term extra synonymous with that of super, which is as wide from the latitude of truth as would be the statement that all stock members are stars.

The particular case which has caused this plea for the extra is that of a professional man who to oblige an agent went to a studio to tender his services. He reported for work at 8 A. M., and with only a half hour for lunch, was almost continuously employed till 11 o'clock at night, a day of 15 hours. For this service he was tendered the munificent sum of $3.50. It is difficult to approach any comprehension as to the method of reasoning that prompted this magnificent display of generosity on the part of the director of the company.

The old axiom "that the laborer is worthy of his hire" applies with equal force and effect to moving picture studios as it does to all other branches of business and the fact that by force of circumstances one may be obliged to tender his services to a moving picture studio in no way justifies a director or company in offering him starvation remuneration. If the extra's work is not satisfactory it is the director's province and duty to cut him out of the picture. But in this particular instance the question of unsatisfactory work cannot enter in face of the fact that the exra was almost continuously employed for 15 hours and the further fact that in the forepart of the day he was selected to play the heavy role as the director found he was not so provided, and in the latter part of the day he was allotted after putting hair on his face, to enact a comedy character. It may also be added that the agent who sent the extra to the studio was so chagrined when he learned the amount of work extracted for the agreed price that he volunteered to pay from his own pocket sufficient to make the remuneration a white man's price.

This subject is a timely one in view of the spirited movement now under way to consolidate and harmonize all branches of the moving picture industry. No better step in this direction can be taken than to promote a healthy cooperative spirit between producers and those who render services to them. Good pictures do not spring entirely from the work of the director, nor the advantages placed at his disposal by the producing company. No matter how well equipped a studio may be or how efficient the director, if the people playing the various parts, large or small, do not perform their work the picture must become a rank failure, therefore if this much is dependent upon the player, he is entitled to compensation proportionate to his share in his successful portrayal whether he be stock member or extra, and the producer or director who is so short-sighted, unreasonable, or unjust that he fails to comprehend this, should not be in the moving picture business.

While we realize that a director has the right to discriminate between a professional and a non-professional extra it must be insisted that the same discretion should be exercised on the matter of recompense. For instance, a director, very naturally, would feel more justified in assigning a part to a professional than in giving it to one not a professional, and his action may be greatly influenced by his knowledge of the professional; but should he assign the part to a non-professional and the player performs the work with satisfaction, there is no reason why he should not receive the same pay the director would have given a professional man. The point aimed at is to bring out that there are many clever non-professionals only waiting for an opportunity to demonstrate their abilities to portray any part that the director may assign to them.

While this is apparently a plea for the recompense of the extra, it is also intended to establish a feeling of fair play toward him and to more really justify his existence which is indispensible to the production of motion pictures. The experience of many producers and directors has shown that it is not the huge salary paid certain stars that makes the moving picture a success. Take, for instance, such pictures as "Quo Vadis," "Cabiria," "The Birth of a Nation," "The Battle Cry of Peace," and other recognized big successes, can it not be truthfuly said that were it not for the neglected extras, such spectacles could not have been called into existence, and it can with equal truth be said that the stars could be wiped off the firmament without militating against their realization.

There was a time when the suggestion that a producing company dispense with its stock players was received with ridicule, but of late years there has been a decided tendency to do so. This tendency is due, not to the inferiority of the players, but to the exhorbitant salaries paid some of them in contrast to the remuneration accorded others equally capable, in other words the movement is one of equalization. It has been realized by producing companies that many stock companies have been disrupted in consequence of the unfair discrimination in the matter of salaries, and the day is fast approaching when the photoplayers receiving enormous salaries must have something more to offer than the mere name. It does not follow that because an actor has been a Broadway favorite because of his wondrous voice and elocutionary power he is bound to become a shining light before the camera, and it is the realization of this that has caused many producing companies to turn in the direction of the extra field for players as services are required and perhaps from among them he can discover some one of them who can be developed into a true motion picture star. All this strengthens the appeal for a more just and better recognition of the extra and no producer or director looking to his own best interests can afford to underestimate his usefulness.

It is understood that the extra whose complaint formed the basis of this article intends to make a test of his case and the result will be watched with interest. Whatever the result may be it is hoped that publicity given to such matters will better conditions by making producers and directors more considerate and thus inspire the extra with more zeal and pride in his work.

ANITA STEWART MAKES HER DEBUT AS A SONGSTER.

Not so very long ago, a couple of Sundays, to be slightly more accurate, a member of The Moving Picture World staff in passing one of the leading churches of Bay Shore, L. I., was astonished to see in the church bulletin an announcement that served that evening to fill the building to overflowing, even the vestibule creaked under its load of extra chairs. This announcement read as follows, "solo by Miss Anita Stewart."

As aforesaid the people of the island town, when at last the evening came, flocked to the church in overwhelming numbers. Nothing seemed to matter much, the sermon passed in rather an indifferent manner, prayers were said, hymns were sung, and even a feature film with charming Anita in the lead played second fiddle to the flesh and blood edition of the Vitagraph star that sat in the choir loft, beneath its broad brimmed hat of soft gray. At last the moment for the solo arrived. Necks that had craned before now stretched themselves to their last limit when Anita stepped modestly forward to the railing like a real "honest to God" choir soloist and sang in the sweetest of voices a sacred song entitled, "Eternal Peace."

This, the minister told us, was the very first time that Miss Stewart had sung in public. Her voice is unusually sweet, and she sings with excellent taste. Needless to add her audience was delighted.

TAKE ALL NIGHT SCENES AT NIGHT.

The last word in realism is found in the Kalem Company's recent decision that hereafter all scenes in the "Hazards of Helen" supposed to occur at night must actually be taken after dark. This step has already resulted in extensive use of night photography in two "Hazards," and so striking is the effect produced that it is likely that Kalem will soon extend the rule to its other productions.

Australian Notes

"THE BIRTH OF A NATION" concluded its Sydney season on Friday last, the 9th instant, after a run of seven weeks. Since the reduction in prices of admission a month ago the "house full" sign has been exhibited every night. Altogether 160,000 people have seen the film in Sydney. The Theater Royal, where the picture was screened, has gone back to legitimate attractions. It was reopened by J. C. Williamson, Ltd., as a photoplay house a few months ago, showing first run Fox productions, but since the amalgamation of the firm with the Waddington theaters, the Fox pictures have been screened at the Strand, one of the finest picture houses in Sydney.

Raymond Longford, a prominent Australian picture producer, has returned with his large company of players from New Zealand, where they have been filming a historical subject. The working title of this picture is "The Mutiny on the Bounty," and its length will probably be eight reels. It deals with an early incident in Australian history, the mutiny of the crew of the ship "Bounty," carrying Governor Blight from England to New South Wales.

The story gives many opportunities for spectacular displays and the picture should mark a new era of production in Australia.

The second production of the George Willoughby Photoplay Company was released this week. It is a four-part adaption of the famous stage play, "The Woman in the Case," which makes a very suitable subject for the silent drama.

The picture was produced under the personal direction of George Willoughby, and is quite up to the standard of imported English productions.

The company is now filming the last scenes of its third release, which is entitled "A Pearl of the Pacific." This has a story with a South Sea Islands flavor. The story is written by Randolph Bedford, a prominent Australian writer.

Another picture was released this week by J. C. Williamson, Ltd. This is a film version of the famous stage melodramatic farce, "Seven Keys to Baldpate." The adaption, which is in four reels, is one of the best of recent home-made pictures, and the best effort of "J. C. W." to date. On the stage the play had a splendid dramatic plot, though the dialogue was humorous, and although the humor is not so pronounced in the picture, the dramatic story has been well developed, and it works up to the splendid climax.

When the stage version was produced some time ago by J. C. Williamson, Fred Niblo and Josephine Cohan appeared in the leading roles. They do not appear in the picture, however, Fred Maguire, a Victorian player, and Dorothy Brunton being the stars.

Miss Brunton has had a stage career of extraordinary success. Barely two years ago she had a small part in the comic opera, "Gipsy Love," and from this beginning she has now gained the position of the foremost comic opera artist in Australia. She is at present starring in "So Long Letty" in Melbourne, and has been chosen by Williamson, Ltd., to appear in that production in London.

The New South Wales Government is at present releasing a series of films dealing with the training of soldiers in the various camps within the state. Three have already been released, the first dealing with the training of infantry, the second with field artillery, while the third is devoted to the light horse section. Each picture has been taken by Burt Ives, the government photographer, and they are about the clearest topical films the writer has yet seen.

The pictures are also printed on non-inflammable film, the first time this has been used for Australian pictures.

The government has also given a private press screening of several educational subjects for world-wide exhibition. The best of these is a film visit to the Murrumbidgee Irrigation Area, in New South Wales. This is a gigantic scheme for the irrigation of what was once barren country. Scenes are also given of the huge Burren Juck Reservoir, which holds the water supply of the irrigation scheme. It is one of the largest works of its kind ever attempted in Australia. The picture was taken under the direction of Alfred Rolph, head producer for Australasian Films, Ltd.

Another picture, which I understand is to be given wide publicity in foreign countries, is a series of scenes taken at the German Internment camp at Liverpool, N. S. W. They show camp life among the enemy subjects there, and are very interesting.

Australasian Films, Ltd., have announced that they will shortly release "The Ne'er Do Well" and "The Battle Cry of Peace." The latter picture was known in England as "An American's Home," but it is improbable that this title will be used here. The same people are making big preparations for the first Chaplin-Mutual subject, which is due to arrive next month. C. L. Yearsley, the firm's publicity manager, says he is going to use some advertising stunts that will make Sydney sit up and stare.

The twelfth Triangle program consisted of "Cross Currents" and "The Edge of the Abyss;" the thirteenth, showing this week, includes "Daphne and the Pirate" (Fine Arts), "The Green Swamp" (Kay-Bee) and "He Did and He Didn't" (Keystone). This has been given favorable write-ups in all the Sydney papers which mention that the Triangle productions seem to be increasing in quality as time goes on. The public seems to think the same, as it is now difficult to secure a dress circle seat at the Triangle-Lyceum playhouse at the night sessions.

"The Moral Fabric," another Triangle subject, is the current screening at the Crystal Palace. "The Soul of New York," a Fox production, featuring Valeska Suratt; "What Will People Say" (Metro), with Olga Petrova; "Body and Soul" (World) and "Out of Darkness" (Lasky) have also proved good drawing cards this week.

"The Birth of a Nation" is having a very successful run in Melbourne at present. The big Griffith spectacle was advertised for a limited two weeks' run, but owing to the huge crowds who wished to view the picture the management decided to extend the run, and so the Town Hall was secured for a week.

Melbourne is going to see some big things in film advertising by Australasian Films, Ltd., as R. J. Dexter, from the Sydney house, arrived here this week. Mr. Dexter is one of the most prominent publicity men in the business.

Current screenings in Melbourne include "The Woman's Law" (Pathe), "His Picture in the Papers" (Fine Arts) and "The Iron Strain" (Kay-Bee), "The Puppett Crown" (Paramount) and "By the Governor's Orders" (Vitagraph).

TOM S. IMRIE.

Sydney, N. S. W., Australia, June 14, 1916.

"LET THE STAR FIT THE SCENARIO"—BLACHE.

Since Herbert Blache's thousand-dollar scenario offer was published. inquiries have been pouring into the Greater Blache Studios at Fort Lee, N. J., asking exactly what kind of five-reel dramatic scripts were wanted and the stars to be "fitted." Mr. Blache asks the Moving Picture World to answer the questions. "I have no special requirements—or restrictions—to lay down," states Mr. Blache. "I am looking for good ideas, no matter in what form presented. Just a synopsis may be submitted. I will find stars to 'fit' the plays I accept. I know this is reversing the usual process, but the play's the thing in my mind, and then the star."

SMALLEYS TO PRODUCE "IDLE WIVES."

Universal City, Cal., July .—Upon the completion of their current production, "Saving the Family Name," the Smalleys will start the picturization of James Oppenheim's noted story, "Idle Wives."

This photoplay will contain a notable cast. The beautiful new-found star, Mary MacLaren, will be featured with Phillips Smalley and Lois Weber, supported by Jack Mulhall, one of the Universal's late acquisitions; Grace Carlysle and many of the most noted of that company's stock actors and actresses.

This picture will be released in five reels and will add one more to the list of Blue Bird features which are taking picturedom by storm.

"DEUTSCHLAND" IN PICTURES IN THIRTEEN HOURS.

At 7 o'clock on the morning of July 10 the now famous German submarine, "Deutschland," arrived at the port of Baltimore after its history-making trip across the Atlantic. Thirteen hours later the Hearst International News Pictorial flashed upon the screens of leading New York theaters the first motion picture of this craft, its captain and valiant crew.

Princess Theater, Clifton, Ariz.

E. Brutinel Takes Over Two Picture Houses on the Wane and Brings Them Into the Limelight.

WHEN Emile Brutinel purchased the Princess and Empire theaters in Clifton, Ariz., in 1914, they were in debt and were poorly patronized. By the application of good business methods and sound judgment Mr. Brutinel managed to put them on a paying basis. It was hard work, however, for Mr. Brutinel to bring these two photoplay houses up to their present standard, but he is now enjoying the fruits of his labors. Before the time that Mr. Brutinel took them over the people of Clifton hardly knew that there were moving picture theaters in the city. They were not advertised and the entertainment was of a mediocre quality. Both houses are now advertised extensively and the admission price has been raised to 15 cents. Mr. Brutinel's patrons appreciate the improved quality of the shows and gladly pay the increase in price.

Emile Brutinel.

The Princess theater stands on the banks of the Frisco River in that part of Clifton called the South Side. It is probably the best location in the city for a theater as it catches the people from all directions. It has been completely remodeled and repainted inside and out. The fireproof operating room has been doubled in size and two motor-driven Simplex machines of the latest model have been installed. The inside painting is a cream trimmed with a pale pink ceiling. The outside is gray with white trimmings, and the general effect is most pleasing. Other adjuncts to this modern theater building are a large stage for road shows, pit for orchestra, balcony and women's retiring room. The seating capacity is 500. The chairs are removable as the theater is used for dances, basketball games, church services on Sunday and many other things, making the Princess the social center of the city. To add to the pleasure of its patrons there are large double doors on the right of the stage, an an extension has been run out over the river and here chairs are placed for resting between dances or after the show.

The ceiling is decorated with large clusters of lights, and two big ceiling fans. Between the windows on the sides are eight reversible fans and above each window is a pink fancy lamp globe to furnish just enough light to seat the patrons who are late in arriving. The front is decorated with two rows of lights covered with big white globes. Two big double doors on each side of the box office and an extension out to the railroad track aid in handling the crowds. The music is furnished by a Wurlitz orchestra piano.

Princess Theater, Clifton, Ariz.

The Empire theater stands on Chase Creek at the other end of Clifton. It was formerly called the Royal, but after Mr. Brutinel became owner he changed the name for the reason that the theater had changed hands so often and had undergone so many reverses that he didn't care to take any chances with the same name. It is constructed of brick and cement and both the inside and outside are artistically decorated. The wainscoting is of varnished mahogany. The seating capacity is 500 and the chairs are fine opera seats not removable. The aisles are covered with linoleum so that they can be mopped and cleaned each day. The front is white, decorated with electric lights, one row of colored lights being around the entrance arch and the other being around the box office. This arrangement creates a pretty effect at night and one that can be seen for a long distance.

A small stage has been built, which is used only for vaudeville attractions. On each side of the screen double doors have been placed for emergency exits. Above the doors are two large suction fans and along the sides are many fans and lights. The ceiling is high and there are a number of large clusters of lights suspended. An orchestra piano furnishes the music. The fireproof operating room is roomy. Simplex and Power's motor-driven machines are used. The Empire is one mile from the Princess.

Mr. Brutinel not only runs the regular program pictures but big state right features as well. In the latter part of last February both the Princess and the Empire theaters exhibited the Fox production entitled "Carmen," which featured Theda Bara. The business played to on the day that the picture was shown was remarkable, and it went a long way to stimulate interest in the kind of entertainment to be obtained at Mr. Brutinel's houses. "The Million Dollar Mystery" serial which was booked was also instrumental in bringing the Empire and Princess theaters into prominence. It was almost impossible to accommodate the crowds that swamped the houses to see each episode.

Eagle Theater, Lubec, Me.

Photoplay House Accommodates One-third of Population of Its Town—Plays to Good Business.

THERE was recently opened at Lubec, Me., a moving picture theater which enjoys the distinction of being the largest east of Bangor, and which is unique in that it will accommodate one-third of the entire population of the town which is between three and four thousand.

Moving pictures have been flourishing in the town for the past five or six years, but the hall in which they first made their appearance would accommodate but 350 patrons. The natural growth of the town and the increasing popularity of the moving picture soon outgrew the small house, however, and in spite of the deprecating remarks and doleful predictions of the townspeople the Eagle threw open its doors on Memorial Day evening to a capacity audience with the S. R. O. sign prominently displayed.

Eagle Theater, Luebec, Me.

Since that time it has answered the predictions of failure by keeping an average well beyond 500 nightly, while the old theater had also fair houses. Vaudeville is also seen at the Eagle. The theater is 60 x 100 feet, has a balcony holding 350, five exits, two picture machines, in a modern fireproof booth situated in the rear of the balcony, and the parquette floor seats about 700. The interior is painted a soft gray, with proscenium decorations. There is a wide stage. The owners are T. S. and J. A. Toft, and W. W. Baker, the latter acting as general manager.

PRODUCING "THE EVIL MEN DO" (Metro).

With a company headed by Edmund Breese, and including such prominent players as Ormi Hawley, Clifford Bruce, Evelyn Brent and other well known artists, Director Harry Revier is in a logging camp in the northern part of Maine, near Millinocket, making the exteriors for the big Metro feature, "The Evil Men Do," which is being produced by the Popular Plays and Players. Harry J. Cohen is in charge of the company in Maine. He arranged for the staging of many big outdoor scenes. One of these include the dynamiting of a log jam, a fight on a raft going down a swift flowing mountain stream, and several exciting fights in the open between the two stalwarts, Mr. Breese and Mr. Bruce.

Other members of the company in Maine include George Morrel, A. L. McArthur, George Harcourt and Florence Moore. Joseph Seiden is the cameraman and James Hussey, his assistant. Ira Willard is assisting Director Revier and George West has charge of the "Props." "The Evil Men Do" was written by Aaron Hoffman, and will be released on the Metro program August 14th.

"BEAUTY AND THE BEAST" (International).

The International Film Service, Inc., after a series of experiments, has just completed a photoplay, amazing in its magnificence, which displays the latest word in fashion, repeats an old story dear to the heart of every child and grown-up and shows scenes that have heretofore been denied the public.

"Beauty and the Beast" is the title of this latest triumph of the International. Everyone knows the pretty fairy tale. Its characters have been clothed in gowns of superb splendor.

To form a background suitable to this magnificance, the International secured permission from George J. Gould to use Georgian Court, his wonderful estate at Lakewood, N. J. Here n this spot of grandeur, unsurpassed in its natural and artifial beauty by any in the world, are laid the exterior scenes of Beauty and the Beast."

Many previous efforts had been made to secure permission o pose moving picture scenes in this fairyland. But Mr. Gould refused to listen until he had read the scenario of Beauty and the Beast." He then succumbed to the pleadings hat this fairy tale should be staged in a veritable fairyland, nd granted permission for the pictures to be taken. It will e the first opportunity ever afforded the public of an intimate iew of the most beautiful, costly and widely-known private state in America.

The interior scenes were especially constructed to fit in with he architectural beauty of Georgian Court, at the same time etaining their mythical accuracy.

Miss Mineta Timayo, who, before she became a motion picure actress, was the favorite model of Charles Dana Gibson, as been selected for the role of the Sleeping Beauty. The owns worn by Miss Timayo and her legions, whom she sumons after she is awakened by the kiss of the Prince Charmg, represent a fortune in cash.

"Beauty and the Beast," which was written and staged by . E. Hancock, will be released exclusively by the International Film Service, Inc., on August 7.

"SOME MEDICINE MAN" (Universal).

Here's a still of the brand that the Moving Picture World sed to get by the thousand back in 1908 in the good old days hen Carl Laemmle seriously considered the advisability of olding Mary Pickford and Tom Ince over for another week in e old Imp company.

In those days the director put a few crows' feet on some heese-cloth and called it an Indian tent. Then he got some irnt sienna grease paint and made Indians out of his extra en. The cowboys came in over the top of the hill to the scue of the prairie schooner and the beleaguered immigrants and the cowboys finally pursued the Indians toward the setting sun ad lib.

The scene we have here is from a burlesque of the old style Indian moving picture, which will be released on the Universal program under the Nestor title, "Some Medicine Man," on August 11. The picture was made by Universal Director Roy Clements from the story by Eugene Lewis, which in turn was scenarioized by Fred Myton. Pat Rooney plays the leading role. He is seen in the foreground breathing into the Big Chief's ear trumpet. Jean Hershalt, Clyde Bensen, Peggy Coudray and Edward Sedgwick appear in support of Rooney.

MOUNTAIN SCENERY IN "SEE AMERICA FIRST" (Gaumont.)

Since Baedeker has called Delaware Water Gap one of the fifteen scenic marvels of the United States, it was only natural that the Gaumont company should include it in its interesting series of American points of interest, "See America First." This has been filmed by a Gaumont cameraman and will be released August 9, as a Mutual Picture. The view from some of the numerous promontories along the mountain paths has few equals east of the Rocky Mountains. One of the prettiest pictures taken was of the Delaware river as it is seen for miles winding its way to the sea.

The entire region abounds in beautiful mountain brooks, falls and cataracts. The slopes are heavily wooded, and there are lavish displays of mountain laurel and rhododendron. These make for beautiful screen pictures, and full advantage has been taken of them.

Joined with the Delaware Mountain Gap in popular interest is that interesting playground known as the Pocono Mountains. It has also been pictured for this Gaumont release. The salient features in these 300 square miles of scenic beauty have been culled for screen review. Those who have never seen these mountains will be attracted by their unusual beauty, and those to whom they are familiar will enjoy looking again upon their varied charms.

LOUISE LOVELY IN "THE GRASP OF GREED."

The Universal announces that Louise Lovely will be starred in "The Grasp of Greed," a five-reel Bluebird feature production in which she will be supported by Jay Belasco, Lon Chaney, Gretchen Ledered and C. N. Hammond. The play is from the novel by H. Rider Haggard, "Mr. Meeson's Will."

"THE CRIMSON STAIN MYSTERY" (Consolidated).

The first four episodes of "The Crimson Stain Mystery," the new serial which is being produced by the Erbograph Company and will be presented by the Consolidated Film Corporation, of which O. E. Goebel is president and Ludwig R. G. Erb, treasurer, have been completed and the first episode will be ready within the next few days for a showing to the trade. The first episode is filled with excitement, and gives a glimpse of the strange workings of the mind that conceived it. It starts off with a punch in every foot, and the interest is running at white heat when the second reel ends.

T. Hayes Hunter, who is directing the picture, is working night and day on it, and already has begun on the second episode. The picture will be in sixteen episodes. The work of Maurice Costello and Ethel Grandin who are playing the leading roles, it is safe to say, never showed up to better advantage, nor never before had a vehicle in which they could, to such a large degree, give play to their exceptional talents. A new Vampire woman, who was secured from Russia, whose name is Olga Olonova, will be seen in some startling work. She is cast as one of the Crimson Stain progeny, and appears to wonderful advantage in many of the studio scenes.

Miss Olonova lays claim to being the most perfectly formed Vampire in the world. She is a young woman, just twenty years of age. She claims that she comes from a race of Vampire women, whose lineage traces back for nearly two thousand years.

HALLBERG INSTALLMENT AT BOYS' CLUB.

The above institution, after careful investigation, decided that they would spare no expense in making their motion picture projection the best that money could buy. They have placed their order with J. H. Hallberg, of New York, for one of the latest model Power's 6-B machines, together with a Hallberg 20th Century motor generator, of 70 ampere maximum capacity, for converting alternating into direct current.

MELIES MANUFACTURING COMPANY MAKES STATEMENT.

In view of an impression which may have arisen the Melies Manufacturing Company has issued a denial that it is suing the General Film Company. It asserts that the interests of the Melies Manufacturing Company and of George Melies are the same and that neither is connected in any way with any other concern with a similar name.

SPEEDING UP THE MAIL.

It is not necessary for the populace to ponder any longer how it is possible to mail a letter at 2:30 o'clock one afternoon and know that it will be read in Chicago by 10 o'clock the following morning; for in one of the forthcoming releases of the Paramount-Pictographs, the magazine-on-the-screen, the public is given an excellent visualization of how Uncle Sam does his interior business, all for the price of a two-cent stamp.

MOSS PICTURES MADE BY HORKHEIMER.

The features now being produced by B. S. Moss, which include "Boots and Saddles," "In the Hands of the Law," and "The Power of Evil," were produced by the Horkheimer Bros., at their studio in Long Beach, Cal. Messers. Horkheimer Bros. are authorities for the statement that the pictures that they have produced for the B. S. Moss Motion Picture Corporation excel in all their previous efforts in the producing line.

WILL START PACIFIC COAST EXCHANGE.

In response to the requests for direct bookings from scores of exhibitors in southern California, the National Drama Corporation has established a "Fall of a Nation" film exchange for that territory, with Jordan Dixon of 1401 Northwestern avenue, Los Angeles, in charge.

"HONOR THY NAME" (Triangle).

"Honor Thy Name," the Triangle feature scheduled for release on August 6, brings Frank Keenan and Charles Ray together as co-stars. The combination is a particularly happy one, as both men work well together, and the strong, rugged characterizations for which Mr. Keenan is deservedly popular, and the youth and virility of Mr. Ray's work is an excellent contract. Louise Glaum is particularly well cast in the leading female role and acts with a keen appreciation of the possibilities of her part throughout the entire story.

"Honor Thy Name" is a story of a Southern gentleman who, having had his fling as a youth, settles down to dignified respectability in the waning years of his life. Of course, the spectacular climax of the story is one of the chief features of the play, but that aside, the story is worthy of the best that is said of motion pictures, because of the remarkably fine acting contributed by every member of the cast. The story is staged with a view of getting full value from each of the dramatic scenes. It is realistic both where the action transpires in the South and where it takes place in New York.

A point of considerable interest in "Honor Thy Name" is the extensive use of the new lighting effects, hints of which have been given in several recent Triangle plays. There is also a development of the old-fashioned term fade-in, which adds not a little to the value of the picture and is certain to arouse the interest of moving picture fans.

GATHERED BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS

St. Louis at the Chicago Convention

Giebler Crosses the Mississippi to Look Over the Big Show and Lets Us In on Some of the Bunch With Whom He Meets Up—Casual Thoughts on Near-Performing Bears and Queer "Exhibits."

By A. H. Giebler, 236 Vanol Building, St. Louis.

ST. LOUIS was pretty well represented at the Chicago Convention. We didn't get there until Friday, and we missed some of the home-town folks who came and went early, the same as we missed seeing Carl Laemmle and Clara Kimball Young lead the grand march at the ball. But we did see a few things.

We saw Barney Rosenthal of the Universal Exchange hobnobbing with Carl Laemmle and General Manager Hoffman at convention headquarters, and later at the exposition, shaking hands with many people. Chicago is Barney's home town, and he knows just lots of folks up there. We also saw him at the Hotel Sherman with a bag in his hand—with all the joy gone out of his voice and his famous smile faded to a woebegone look because he would have to travel back to St. Louis in an upper berth. Poor Barney!

We saw Pearl White. "Pearl," we said, "you are from Missouri."

"Greetings," replied Pearl, "but who accused me of that?" "Your biographers and the press agents," we answered. "Almost everything they say about me is wrong," she said with a doleful look. "When I got here they gave me some pictures of myself, with a little biography printed on it, that said I was born in A-n-t-i-o-c-h, but it's all wrong. I don't even known how to pronounce a town like that, let alone being born in it."

It's a shame to take liberties with a girl's' native heath in that way, but Pearl is some girl, and she's from Missouri all right even if Antioch can't prove anything on her, and Missouri is proud of her.

We saw E. W. Dustin, of the International Exchange, and he seemed to know everybody, and everybody seemed to know him. We'll back Dustin as one of the best known film men in the country. He's got a lot of this stuff they call personality in his system. It radiates and makes people want to shake hands with him and slap him on the back and call him Eddie. He told us about "Him" and the whole bunch of International managers taking a long drive in the country Sunday, chaperoned by Manager of Exchanges Berger. Had a big time? Oh my, yes.

We saw and heard Dr. Demko of the Shenandoah on South Broadway. We saw him at the exposition having a good time, and we heard him the next day when he got a telegram saying that some heavy-handed person had gone into his airdome after his place was closed for the night, and walked off with two projecting machines, just like that. We offered the optimistic suggestion that he ought to be glad they hadn't taken the benches and side walls, but Doc refused to be comforted, and took the first rattler back home.

We saw Lillian Walker and she smiled at us. "Of course, you don't remember us," we said, "that's just a convention-al smile."

"Oh, yes, but I do," she responded. "You are a newspaper man from St. Louis, and the Moving Picture World correspondent, and you gave me a copy of your paper with a nice picture of me in it two weeks ago in New York." Now that warmed our heart, and isn't that some remembering for a little girl like Lillian, when she meets so many people all the time?

We saw Hector Pasmezoglu, of the Congress theater, on Olive street, and his party twice out on Argyle street, giving the Essanay studios the once over, and later at the Coliseum. We never realized before how much Hector resembles a well known star, and we had a notion to start the rumor that he was John Barrymore, and give him a taste of being mobbed for photographs, and "Please sign your name on this," but we didn't.

* * *

We saw Manager Wolfberg, of the General Film Exchange, and he was absolutely one of the busiest men on the ground. This was due to the fact that he was the only General manager, outside of the Chicago continent, to attend the convention. He told us about taking a few hours off to go to a ball game, but as this was on Sunday, it was excusable, and besides, it was some game!

* * *

We ran across Harry Beaumont, the Essanay director, who is a native son, and is about as well acquainted in St. Louis as he is in St. Joseph, where he was brought up.

* * *

We saw stars exhibited to the crowds at the Coliseum like so many performing bears, and we felt that this sort of thing is not good. The multitude likes it. They come "for to admire and for to see," and they saw and admired, but they also said things; they criticised. Your fan—fanatic, if you like—forms an exalted opinion of his screen favorites. They represent romance, idealism, to him. He likes to think they are not like other folks. We all talk of realism, but we don't really want it. The world is full of stories, comedies, dramas and tragedies of real life, but they are all sordid. We read books and go to the play to see and hear ideal stories, and we naturally imbue the actors with the same idealism, and when the players hobnob with the hoi polloi they lose all their charm; the mystery, the idealism, is dispelled. The players are most pleasant people, but they are human, and the other humans are not pleased when they find it out. If all the stars were kept away from the public they would be more valuable to the producers and to themselves.

We saw S. J. Baker, manager of the St. Louis Bluebird offices, and Mrs. Baker. Baker took us up to the exchange managers' meeting, presided over by General Manager Hoffman, and gave us a peek at the scene. Busy looking bunch. Cranberry merchants didn't have a thing on that gathering.

* * *

We saw Fred Beecroft, of the Dramatic Mirror, and he almost wept when he told us about what the unkind Chicago newspapers said about his straw hat. It wasn't such an awful looking hat, either.

* * *

We saw John Gentner, of the Retina theater, at Twentieth and Market. In fact, Gentner was the first home-town citizen we did see. "This is a great show," he said, and he was certainly getting both eyes full of it. We saw Fred A. Keller, manager of the Mutual offices. In fact, we lamped him at the same time we saw Gentner, but as John is the biggest, we saw him first. Keller was in high spirits and taking things in with enthusiasm. We didn't see him but the once, and suppose he went back early to the grind. He's a bear for work anyway, Keller is.

* * *

We saw Sam Lears, of the Lears Theater Supply Company, and he seemed to be acquainted with everybody in Chicago, and people called him "Sam" there just as they do here. We made the rounds of the Coliseum with him, and while he seemed to be interested in the stars and exhibits he didn't really get warmed up until we came to the Power and Motiograph exhibits, where there were several machines made up in blue and white enamel. Sam got all fussed up over these machines, and ordered the whole bunch shipped down to his place in St. Louis.

We didn't see Joe Mogler, but we know he was there, because every time we would ask anybody about St. Louis people they would say: "Oh say, did you see Mogler? He's here." So we are sure Joe was there and feel safe in reporting the fact.

* * *

We did get to see Spyros Kouras, of the Lafayette, however, and Harry Strickland, road man for the General exchange.

We saw Mr. and Mrs. General Public come up to the doors of the Coliseum by hundreds and plank down their fifty cents, and we couldn't help wondering "where they got off," if a little slang be allowed.

* * *

Inside the building there was little to interest the man from the street, apart from a star that would appear and twinkle at a great distance for a brief interval. Of course, Mr. and Mrs. G. P., by spending six afternoons of their time and as many dollars, could have the pleasure of looking at as many of the stars as had chosen the same time to appear as they had, if the police allowed them to get within seeing distance.

Exhibitions of this kind are very good for producers, distributors and exhibi-

May Refuse Sale on Personal Grounds

So Declares Federal Trade Commission in Decision on Complaint of Unfair Competition—Also Says It Is Not Illegal to Refuse to Sell to More Than One Exhibitor in a City—Shifts Among Exchangemen.

By Clarence L. Linz, 635 Tenth Street Northeast, Washington.

AN interesting ruling has recently been handed down by the Federal Trade Commission at Washington, which may have a decided bearing upon similar questions arising in the motion picture business. The commission was requested to declare to be unfair competition a refusal to sell under conditions embodied in the following: "Conference Ruling No. 48. Unfair Competition. Refusal to Sell. On application for the issuance of a complaint, it was alleged that a corporation engaged in the manufacture and sale of goods in interstate commerce refused to sell to the applicant certain commodities manufactured by it. It was further alleged that this refusal to sell was made at the direction of an officer of the corporation complained of, who was also the president of another corporation competing with the applicant. On investigation it appeared that the refusal to sell was made on personal grounds and was not made for the purpose, and did not have the effect of restraining interstate commerce. Held, That a refusal to sell, made solely for personal reasons, without the purpose or effect of restraining interstate commerce, is not a violation of any law which the commission is authorized to enforce."

Some time ago the commission also held that a refusal to sell to more than one exhibitor in the same city was not illegal. It had been alleged that a distributing company had refused to supply the applicant for a complaint with films on the ground that another exhibitor in the same city had been given the exclusive right to exhibit the films of this distributing company. The commission held that under ordinary circumstances, and in the absence of intent thus to accomplish an unlawful purpose, neither the Federal Trade Commission act nor the Clayton anti-trust law prohibits a corporation dealing exclusively with one firm in a given territory, and a refusal to supply others in such territory is not unlawful.

Shifts Among Exchangemen.

Some rapid fire changes have been taking place in Washington's film world of late, and as a result Pathe loses C. O. Moss, who formerly traveled for that company in Virginia and at one time through North Carolina, for he goes to the Unicorn Film Corporation as manager of the office he is to open in Charlotte. Mr. Moss broke into the motion picture business with the old Warner's Features concern and continued with Sidney R. Lust when he bought out the United Film Service, which followed the former. About a year ago he joined the Pathe exchange here, and it is with a great deal of regret that the members of the latter part company with him.

Mr. Moss is succeeded by George W. Smiley, another well known film man of wide experience. He has handled all ends of the business and has been in it for many years. Of late he has been traveling for Fox out of the Washington and Pittsburgh offices, and it was his desire to do his traveling between points nearer home. He has covered a large portion of the ground in Maryland and Virginia, as well as North Carolina, and the exhibitors in this territory will be glad to see him again.

Another change brings about the transfer of Warren A. Kline, who has been manager of the local office of the Unicorn Film Service Corporation, of 434 Ninth Street, Northwest, since its establishment some months ago. Mr. Kline goes to Harrisburg, Pa., to open another office for the corporation. He also operates a theater in that place and will be more at home, although disliking to sever the friendships he has already made among the exhibitors here.

It is said that Mr. Ford, of the Philadelphia office, will succeed Mr. Kline temporarily, and that William Mack, at present roadman out of this office, will be made manager upon the completion of certain road work he now has under way.

At the Moore Theaters.

Tom Moore is getting a great deal of pleasure out of his new automobile and has just returned from an enjoyable trip which carried him along the Atlantic Coast line.

Charles Plunkett, who has been manager of the Plaza, has been placed in charge of the Strand. He is succeeded by William Moore, a brother of Tom Moore, owner of both houses.

Antonio Massino, chief operator at the Garden, has been relieved from duty in the National Guard of the District, because of defective vision.

James Hamilton, chief operator at the Strand, has returned to his post after a three weeks' illness.

Young Joins Kleine-Edison.

Joseph L. Young, formerly manager of the Favorita theater, on H street, near First street, Northwest, has joined the sales force of the Kleine-Edison Company, succeeding to the position made vacant through the resignation of Marx S. Nathan, who has returned to Wilmington, N. C., to re-enter the advertising business. Mr. Young, for a short while, has been connected with the Philadelphia office and has been transferred to Washington.

Triangle Looking Over the Field.

Arthur Lucas, of the Triangle, has been in Washington looking over the field with a view to establishing headquarters here to take care of the southern territory. It is said he has selected an office in a new building on Tenth and H streets, Northwest, and that it will be opened on or about the first of August. It is understood that J. H. Butner, who is manager of the Philadelphia office and under whose jurisdiction this territory comes, will be sent here for the purpose of getting the new office into working order.

Broussard Enlightens His Fellow Senators

In Plain Talk to the Sub-Committee of Finance Committee, Louisiana Man Explains How the Theater Men in Doubtful States May Retaliate on the Tax Question—Holds Up Before Them the All-Powerful Slide.

By Clarence L. Linz, 635 Tenth Street Northeast, Washington.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Senator Robert F. Broussard, of Louisiana, has taken up the cudgels on behalf of the motion picture exhibitors of the United States and appeared before the members of the sub-committee of the Senate Finance Committee having in charge that section of the general revenue bill applicable to motion picture and other theaters, amusements, etc., to tell them of the hardship worked upon these and how such unfair taxes can be eliminated without loss of revenue to the government.

He told them that the retention of this schedule in the bill might reverse conditions and in turn work a hardship upon members of Congress where states and districts are doubtful. In the District of Columbia, he said, the exhibitors already have six distinct taxes to pay; other states are very likely in the same position, and it is going to come to a point where another nickel will have to be added to the price of admission to meet this heavy taxation. Suppose, he asked, the exhibitors should flash slides upon the screens of the theaters throughout the country telling their patrons the extra nickel is required to meet the taxes, will not the people hold it against the members of Congress who voted for a law that squeezes this extra nickel from their pockets ?

It is said the members of the committee sat up and took due notice. Senators Kern and Johnson, the latter chairman of the sub-committee, are having their own troubles in their own states by reason of the opposition that has sprung up against their re-election.

It seems that there is a considerable quantity of merchandise that comes into the United States either in a raw shape and intended to be refined or to form a part of some other manufactured articles. The finished product is then exported to some other country. Now, when this material enters the United States in the first place it is assessed with duty at the rate provided in the tariff law. The money so collected is set aside and when the goods are exported that money is refunded. During the first three months of 1916 there was refunded in this manner the sum of $5,000,000, with the expectation that this sum will be increased to $20,000,000 during the full year. It is Senator Broussard's suggestion that that section of the tariff law providing for these payments be repealed, the money thus saved to the Treasury to be considered instead of the $4,000,000 or more that will come from theaters, the $30,000 that comes from the circuses and the $200,000 that will pour in with liquors and cordials.

Congress needs jogging up. It rests with the motion picture interests as to whether or not they will sit idly by and let a law be placed on the statute books that will put them to such heavy expense.

tors of pictures, but the man not connected with the industry should be allowed to stay away and keep his fifty cents to spend at the box offices of the theaters to see the pictures of the stars on the screen and not the stars themselves.

We saw one of the most interesting exhibits at the Coliseum, a man peeling potatoes with a patent dingus which he was willing to issue to the spectator for a small fee. The act was very good, and there was no fake or trick photography or double exposure or anything like that. The man was there in the flesh actually peeling potatoes. It was an exact duplication of the highly educational and inspiring demonstrations that are held at five and ten cent stores and on street corners all over the country, and the management of the exhibition is to be congratulated on securing such a timely and fitting exhibit. It seemed peculiarly appropriate at a moving picture exhibition.

We did not see a man trying on patent non-binding suspenders, nor one of these chaps who holds up a big wooden foot and show you how quickly corns can be removed by using Dr. Fakem's corn salve, but of course a few things had to be left out. Art is so great that all of it cannot be gathered together under one roof at the same time.

Buffalo Screeners Install

Also Entertaining Visiting Film Men—Willats Wins Scenario Prize.

By Joseph A. McGuire, 5 Lewis Block, Buffalo.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—Much enthusiasm marked the installation of the 1916-17 officers of the Buffalo Screen Club at the last meeting of that organization. Among the guests were out-of-town exhibitors who were in Buffalo to attend the Shriners' convention. The entertainment, after the installation, was in charge of W. A. V. Mack, manager of the General Film; Ira Mosher, manager of the Palace Theater, and A. C. Willats, of the Buffalo Evening News. After President Christoffers of the club and the other officers were duly installed there followed a luncheon and vaudeville features.

The Shriners were delighted with the entertainment and promised to spread the fame of the club in many parts of the country. Visiting Shriners enjoyed open house at the club rooms during the week. The wives of the Shriners also made use of the club rooms.

Willats Wins Scenario Prize.

President Christoffers of the Buffalo Screen Club and Messrs. Mack, of the General, and Brandon, of the Mutual, were judges in a scenario contest conducted by the Buffalo Evening News. The first prize of $100 was awarded to A. C. Willats of the News. His scenario was entitled "Hunting Hy-Enas." The contestants are all on the News staff.

The feature of Mr. Willat's scenario is the efforts of a News reporter to run down a political grafter. An aeroplane and other sensational means are used by the reporter to rush the news to his paper. The piece will be produced for the News by a leading company. Curtis aeroplanes will be used in some of the scenes, which will be laid along Niagara river. Pictures showing every department of the News will be shown on the screen. The rush incidental to an "extra," as well as an old fashioned printing press, will be other features.

Dooley Goes to Syracuse.

J. M. Sitterly, of the Popular Film Exchange of Buffalo, has appointed Thomas Dooley in charge of the company's branch office at 225 Bastable block, Syracuse. Mr. Dooley was formerly connected with the Greater New York Film and the V-L-S-E.

Unicorn Reports Business Good.

"Despite the very warm weather and the tendency of the public to visit the lake and river resorts instead of moving picture theaters at this season of the year, our business is quite satisfactory," said H. E. Hughes, manager of the Buffalo offices of the Unicorn Film.

Film Men Visit in Buffalo.

Shriners' week attracted many exhibitors to Buffalo and a number called on Manager Christoffers of the Mutual Film. Among the visitors were M. C. Gibson, manager of the Mozart theater, Elmira; Dave Cohen, of the Symphony theater, Binghamton; Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Armstrong, of the Armstrong opera house, Norwich, Pa., and Mr. and Mrs. F. C. Peters, of the Majestic theater, Hornell, N. Y. A caller at the Paramount office was Mr. Tait of the Avon theater, Utica, N. Y.

Franklin a Public Benefactor.

"A Shirtwaist Balcony" is the latest innovation introduced by Manager Franklin of the Lyric theater, Buffalo. In connection with this plan Mr. Franklin has just made this announcement: "Feeling that the men have as much right to be comfortable as the women, men will be permitted to doff their coats and make themselves as comfortable as they please in the Lyric balcony. Also ice cold orangeade and pure water will be served gratis."

Theaters Close for Summer.

Charles P. Gilmore has closed his Richardson theater, Oswego, for the summer. The house will open in the fall. The Lyric theater, Jamestown, recently opened for a week, but is now closed on account of the hot weather. This house plays vaudeville and moving pictures.

Buffalo Sees Williams Comedy.

Gus Mohme, representative of the Biograph company, reecntly gave a special screening of Bert Williams' new comedy, "A Natural Born Gambler," for the benefit of several Buffalo exhibitors.

Davis Makes Buffalo Look Up.

Manager Davis of the Elmwood, Buffalo, has obtained special advertising advantages from his plan of flying kites to boom his current attractions. The kites are large and well handled and the advertising matter can be seen from distant parts of the city.

Western New York Notes.

Work on the new Strand theater, Ogdensburg, is being rushed and the house may be open to the public in September. Rushing the construction work has detracted nothing from the handsome architecture of the building.

W. Scott Mattraw, manager of the City Opera House, Watertown, has gone to New York to have a tryout in some of the moving picture companies. Mr. Mattraw has met with success in amateur theatricals in Northern New York.

The Common Council of Norwich has been requested by ministers there to enact an ordinance prohibiting the showing of moving pictures, theatricals or vaudeville performances in Norwich on Sundays. The ministers have been engaged in the present fight for three months. H. L. Brown is their attorney.

Louis McCarthy, a former Watertown resident, has been acting at the Lasky and Universal studios in California. He was formerly in the real estate business in Watertown.

A protest against the showing of moving pictures in which cruelty to animals is depicted has been entered by the Jefferson County, N. Y. Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

Rotarians Declare for High Class Films

International Convention at Cincinnati, Attended by Many Exhibitors, Also Suggests That Days Be Set Aside for Children's Programs.

By Kenneth C. Crain, 610 First National Bank Building, Cincinnati.

THE convention of the International Association of Rotary Clubs, held in Cincinnati during the week of July 16, was interesting to at least a few moving-picture exhibitors in more ways than one. Various moving pictures of the "stunts" which were so plentiful during the convention were taken for local and nation-wide exhibition, of course; but there were two distinct features of interest aside from this. One was the meeting of the moving-picture exhibitors' section of Rotarians, held on Tuesday afternoon, June 17, and the other was the move in favor of cleaner pictures made by the Berkeley (Cal.) Rotarians. The section meeting, which was of nearly two hundred, held by men in various lines of business, was preceded by a luncheon at the Hotel Sinton, following which the moving picture Rotarians, to the number of a dozen or so, adjourned to Rotarian Charles Weigel's Alhambra theater, on West Fifth street, to enjoy a good show. Mr. Weigel, as the Cincinnati Rotarian, was in that capacity vice chairman of the meeting of the exhibitors, and was actively engaged during the entire week in the duties and pleasures resulting from the presence in the city of the big convention. The resolution of the Berkeley Rotarians pointed out the danger to the morals of the young lying in unclean pictures, and called upon the convention to place itself on record in favor of pictures of the better type. It was urged that managers of all moving picture theaters set aside certain days for programs designed especially for children, and that care be used in selecting such programs.

Combining Motion With Still Photography.

Cincinnati.—A unique phase of possible competition between moving pictures and still pictures has arisen in Cincinnati, following the recent announcement that William Schuster, a local commercial photographer, has been thinking of adding a moving picture department to his studio, on account of the technical facilities already available there. The Cincinnati Motion Picture Company, Clarence Runel's well-known enterprpise, which has for several years been doing excellent work in the news and commercial moving picture fields, promptly indicated that in case the Schuster project worked out it would take steps to enter the commercial field in dry plate work. The equipment at the company's plant is more than adequate to ordinary photographic work, and Mr. Runey himself is an expert photographer, so that the venture would have every chance of success.

McMahan & Jackson to Expand.

Cincinnati.—The firm of McMahan & Jackson has been so successful during the past few months in handling special features here and elsewhere that it is contemplating further enterprises in that field. Basil Cohen, a representative of the firm, was in Cleveland recently on the trail of several features which the firm is thinking of acquiring, and in the meantime the booking of attractions already owned or controlled by McMahan & Jackson continues at an active rate.

"Shoes" Goes Strong at Lyric.

Dayton.—The Bluebird production of "Shoes," a film dramatization of a story which appeared in Collier's Weekly not long ago, was seen at the Lyric a few days ago, and created much discussion. It was one of the most impressive attractions shown at the Lyric during the summer, and the management, advertising it widely, pulled large houses.

Theater Project Progressing.

Youngstown.—C. W. Deibel, who recently announced his intention of building in this city one of the handsomeset moving picture theaters in Ohio, has organized the Federal Holding Company. It is incorporated with a capital stock of $200,000, and the incorporators, besides Mr. Deibel, include A. E. Adams, L. J. Campbell, Richard Garlick and R. C. Steese. It is understood work will go ahead rapidly on plans for the house, and it is now definitely determined that the theater will be built along the lines previously announced.

Schad Using Much Advertising.

Sandusky.—The management of the Schad theater has adopted a clever and effective means of advertising the attractions coming to the house, a short column in the daily paper headed, "Schad-E Tips," being the medium. Gossip about the attractions, in a breezy tone, makes the advertising very readable.

Bar Fine Arts Censorship Trailer

Portland Board Justifies Act by Plea That Its Appearance on Screen Would Disturb Public Peace—Active Campaign Against Present Law Started on July 16—Butte Wins Big House That Portland Loses.

By Abraham Nelson, 601 Journal Building, Portland, Ore.

PORTLAND, ORE.—The tyrannic power of moving picture censorship was conclusively proved by an act of the Portland censor board which caused exhibitors, exchange men and lawyers and citizens who were apprised of the board's act to voice a protest against Portland's censorship such as has not been heard here before. That act was to cut from Triangle's "Mystery of the Flying Fish" an anti-censorship trailer which reads as follows:

"We protest against censorship. The whole system of American freedom is based upon the liberty of any citizen to print, picture or speak anything he chooses, subject only to the peril of the law if he abuses that liberty to print, picture or speak anything unlawful."

The board's reason for ordering the elimination of the anti-censorship trailer was that it would disturb the public peace!

"Think of the significance of that act of the censor board," said F. M. Simonton, treasurer of the Oregon Motion Picture Men's Association. "It seems that our autocratic censors seek to prohibit us from expressing our grievances against them through the great medium of expression, the motion picture. It means more than censorship autocracy; it means censorship tyranny. It means more than a censorship of pictures from standpoints of immorality, indecency or obscenity; it means the curbing of public protest of the wronged by the iron heel of the party in power. It means more than American censorship as we have been taught to tolerate it; it means Russian censorship that would rankle in the heart of the lowest serf."

W. W. Dugan, Jr., a Portland attorney, before whom the facts were laid, was amazed that the censors should exercise their power in such a palpably un-American manner. "For a governmental body to bar from exhibition to the people a film protesting that governmental body is palpably undemocratic and atrociously un-American," he said. "The right of revolution is inherent in our citizens. A protest against such a censorship as Portland has would undoubtedly disturb the public peace, but the censor board's own acts demand such a protest."

Campaign Against Censors Starts.

The campaign for a reasonable and appealable censorship ordinance started July 16. Copies of pamphlets describing the motion picture men's grievances were distributed to the patrons of the photoplay houses and they were asked to sign petitions addressed to the city's commissioners asking them to pass an ordinance from which there could be an appeal. Anti-censorship slides were distributed for exhibition in the theaters. The campaign is being conducted by the Oregon Motion Picture Men's Association.

T. & D. Back to One a Week.

Commencing July 16 with "The Ne'er Do Well," the T & D theater went back to one change a week. This was originally the policy of the house. Manager Leonhart says the present market cannot supply really big features any oftener than that that will be appropriate for exhibition in Portland's largest photoplay theater.

Censorship Loses Theater to Portland.

Portland.—Declaring that Butte had been selected for the site of the new $200,000 Jensen & Von Herberg theater in place of Portland because of Portland's inconsistent censorship, J. G. Von Herberg did not mince words in expressing his attitude toward the Portland censor board during his recent visit here from Seattle. He left for Butte to attend the ground-breaking for the new house.

Lawrence Fits Out Road Show.

Portland.—E. R. Lawrence, an old-time Portlander, and more recently an exhibitor in Grants Pass, was in Portland recently, gathering equipment for a road outfit he is going to use on a circuit of five towns in the vicinity of Grants Pass. He has an automobile which has been equipped with a specially-constructed generator to supply his light. The towns on the circuit are mining towns and he plans to carry a three-piece orchestra with him which will furnish music for a dance after the show. While in Portland he purchased an Edison machine from Pete Sabo.

Heard on Portland's Film Row.

Hugh Rennie, branch manager for World Film at Seattle, and Joe Baum, road man for the same concern in this territory, were recent visitors.

H. H. Brownell has resigned his position as road man for Pathe out of Portland.

Ed Myrick of the Columbia has a hard time keeping a full staff of blonde girl ushers. Esther Murray and Dorothy Maloney are the latest to desert to be married.

J. G. Sill, cameraman, returned recently from a trip through the Olympics, where he photographed 4,000 feet of beautiful scenery. He is now en route to Alaska, where he contemplates taking 10,000 feet.

Among the visitors at the exchange were: Cap Kuhn, Kuhn theater, Lebanon, Ore.; E. M. McGann, Grand theater, Sheridan, Ore., and Mrs. Lyman Ward, Grand theater, Camas, Wash.

Pictures at Lumber Camp

Spokane Capitalist Says His Employes Will Have Highest Class of Films.

By S. Clark Patchin, Spokane.

SPOKANE, Wash.—An innovation for lumber camps in this section has been announced by Judge A. L. Flewelling president and manager of the Milwaukee Land Company, which has numerous lumber camps in the Idaho forests east of Spokane. He is arranging to have moving picture exhibition rooms established at the camps.

"It will no longer be necessary for woodsmen employed by our company to come to the city to see the latest wrinkle in moving picture attractions," said Judge Flewelling, "for we will build a moving picture house for the men. We have decided upon this diversion for the employes because we feel that they are entitled to amusement and to the very best. We propose supplying nothing but the highest class of pictures and to have constant renewals of programs."

Sarah Truax Gives Recital.

Sarah Truax, who is Mrs. Charles S. Albert of Spokane, has just returned from Los Angeles, where she spent part of the winter playing before the screen and arranged a benefit dramatic recital for Spokane soldiers who, as members of the National guard, enlisted and are now on the Mexican border. The recital was given Thursday night, July 13, in the Davenport hotel, and was largely attended. Miss Truax gave dramatic selections.

Lull in Censorship Fight.

There has been somewhat of a lull in the moving picture censorship ordinance fight between exhibitors and the city commissioners the past few days, but it is now thought that it will be settled within a few days when a new ordinance eliminating the race riot feature is to be introduced. Intimations have been given by the exhibitors that if a suitable ordinance is adopted and the former ordinance repealed the referendum will be dropped. Ministers are favoring censorship even in their sermons. The Rev. D. W. Ferry, who is chief boy scout commissioner, praises the advancement made in moving pictures, but claims that clean plays should be demanded.

Stilwell Adding Comforts for Women.

C. E. Stilwell, manager of the Class A theater, has just completed the installation of a women's rest room and dressing room. He has also had a large mirror placed just inside the exit of the theater where women can see to fix their hats straight and make any other minor arrangements that it will not be necessary to visit the dressing room to make.

A Correction.

By a mistake in the historical sketch of Spokane Moving Picture Theaters in the convention number of July 15, I mentioned Frank T. Bailey as president of the Liberty Amusement Company, when it should have been L. W. Hutton.

Calgary Strike at End

Compromise Effected by Union Accepting Returned Soldier Operators.

By E. C. Thomas, 821 Rogers Building, Vancouver.

CALGARY, Alberta.—The strike involving the union operators employed at several moving picture theaters has at length been brought to an end, and a situation which threatened to become serious has been definitely overcome. This strike has attracted unusual attention through the fact that the men put in to replace the striking operators were returned soldiers, and union circles were deeply stirred not only in this city but throughout the entire Dominion, for fear that war veterans, with the patriotic sentiment of the country behind them, would take the places of union employes in many branches of trade.

So important was the settlement of the local trouble considered that many prominent labor men were moved to come to Calgary, and there have been many conferences between the local exhibitors and the visiting union officials, including C. E. Shea, international president of the I. A. T. S. E. As a result of these conferences it has been agreed that the returned soldier operators will join the I. A. T. S. E. and Moving Picture Operators' Union, and that the houses in which they are employed will be placed in good standing.

New Theater for Soldiers.

Vernon, B. C.—W. A. Wilkinson of the Empress theater and the Kamloops Opera House at Kamloops, B. C., has erected a substantial theater building here, to assist in the entertainment of 8,000 soldiers encamped here during the summer months. The new theater represents a considerable investment, and Mr. Wilkinson plans to maintain the house permanently, playing picture programs exclusively. The seating capacity is 600.

Over Half of Town Sees Chaplin.

Stevenson, B. C.—Conclusive evidence that Charlie Chaplin's appeal is not confined to any particular race or color was furnished here recently, when S. Oyama, manager of the Strand theater, catering principally to Japanese, ran "The Floorwalker." In this town of 1,200 people, 648 saw the picture during the three hours it was run at the Strand. The Strand seats 290.

Winnipeg Building Operations.

Winnipeg, Man.—The building permit covering the alterations to the Lyceum theater calls for an expenditure of $15,000, and the work of enlarging and improving the house is now in progress. A permit has also been taken out for a new picture theater on Corydon avenue, to cost $15,000.

Canadian Soldiers Being Filmed.

Vancouver, B. C.—Under the supervision of Sir Max Aitken, the Canadian official eye-witness at the front, a pictorial record dealing with the Canadian soldiers in France is now being made, and the films thus secured will be exhibited in the United States and Canada in the near future. H. E. Knobel has been named as the official photographer, and several other cameramen will also assist in the work, making daily exposures of the various activities of the men from Canada.

MONTREAL NOTES.

MONTREAL.—E. L. Perry, of Philadelphia is the new manager of the St. Denis theater. Mr. Perry has inaugurated a new policy there. The French stock company is out. First run Paramount and Triangle pictures, too, will be shown.

The Imperial is showing three first-run features a week—Paramount, V-L-S-E and Metro.

H. W. Conover, manager of the Imperial, has engaged the Fadettes Ladies' Orchestra of Boston to play for the feature films. In addition they give a half-hour concert, both afternoon and evening, which is proving a great drawing card. This is their fifth week.

C. B. Price, Canadian general manager of the Mutual Film Company, has installed an advance booking system in all the branches in Canada.

C. St. John Brenon has resigned as local manager of the Fox Film Company. He is succeeded by Harvey A. Day.

Ernest H. Horstmann of Boston was in Montreal for a few days.

M. Bernstein of the Standard Film Company has joined the Famous Players' Company and left for Vancouver.

ITEMS FROM THE DAKOTAS.

Wimbeldon, N. D.—R. Clendening is manager of the new moving picture show which has been opened in the Beaudoux block.

Grand Forks, N. D.—The Royal theater has installed a new Power 6B Cameragraph.

Mitchell, S. D.—An ordinance proposing to abolish the penalty for Sunday picture shows is up before the City Council of Mitchell. There is strong opposition, but the measure has been passed to second reading.

Lemmon, S. D.—Manager Lew Fein has had many improvements made to the Marcus theater, including an inclined floor, new Motiograph, new chairs and redecorating.

Minot, N. D.—The Grand theater has been leased by Manager Vincent J. Quinn of the Lyceum theater, who plans to remodel it for theatrical attractions as well as the larger photoplay features.

Robinson, N. D.—Wick brothers are constructing an opera house here.

Belfield, N. D.—Martin Brotte and Carl Peterson are erecting a moving picture theater here.

Portland, N. D.—The Family theater has been leased to J. C. LaBell and Edward Fore.

Berkeley Cuts $60 Yearly from Theater Tax

W. S. Roney, of the Berkeley Theater, Calls Mayor's Attention to Existing Inequity —City Council Acts—Construction Soon to Begin on San Francisco's Big Market Street House.

By T. A. Church, 1507 North Street, Berkeley.

BERKELEY, CAL.—Through the personal efforts of W. S. Roney, proprietor of the Berkeley theater, a reduction in the monthly license fee paid into the city treasury by moving picture houses has been secured, the former tax of $10 having been cut in half by the City Council. Shortly after taking over this house in the spring Mr. Roney addressed a letter to the Mayor and called his attention to the fact that moving picture houses were still classed with traveling shows and that they were more heavily taxed than other business enterprises in the city. In replying the Mayor suggested that a petition to the City Council would probably be effective and one was accordingly drawn up and taken to the other exhibitors, all of whom signed it. When the matter was presented to the City Council it was suggested that the license fee be done away with entirely, but the city treasurer objected to this and it was cut in half.

Theater Plan May Be Abandoned.

San Francisco.—The plan of E. M. Frazier to erect a large moving picture and vaudeville house on Stevenson street, with an entrance from Market street through a long lobby and covered bridge, may be abandoned, owing to the opposition of property owners.

H. I. Krause, Business Getter.

San Francisco, Cal.—When the San Francisco branch of the International Film Service, Inc., was opened one of the first things that Manager H. L. Knappen did was to gather a force of assistants with experience in the Western amusement field. No sooner had he been given the position than he got in touch with H. I. Krause, who had worked under him when he had charge of the Pathe Exchange at Denver, and within a short time Mr. Krause was on the Coast.

The experience of this traveling man in the exchange business has been limited to a little more than a year, but in this time he has risen to a commanding position and is regarded as being one of the best men on the staff of the International, having acquired the unique distinction since working out of this office of never leaving a town without having made a booking. He has a very winning personality, makes friends quickly, and his advice has proven so reliable that many exhibitors leave booking details entirely to him.

H. I. Krause.

Mr. Krause has charge of a portion of the Northern California territory, all of Nevada and a portion of Utah. He left San Francisco a few weeks ago on a trip through his entire field and will establish a sub-office at Salt Lake City, over which he will have charge. There are about 125 theaters in this territory which will be served through the San Francisco office.

Edward H. Kemp Makes Long Trip.

San Francisco.—Edward H. Kemp, who handles the Motiograph projection machines in this territory, with offices in the Commercial building, and who also does commercial developing and printing as well as camera work, left recently on a trip on which it is hoped to secure some very interesting moving pictures. He has gone to Trinidad, Col., and from there will journey through the land of the Cliff Dwellers to Albuquerque, N. M., making part of the trip on horseback. Business at the local office will be carried on as usual by his regular office force.

Pastime Theater to Be Closed.

San Francisco.—The Pastime theater, located on Market street, near Fourth, on the site recently purchased by the Market Street Realty Company, will shortly close its doors forever, the tenants of the big building having been notified to vacate the premises by the end of July. It will not be long before actual construction work will be under way on the big theater planned by this concern, contracts for the steel work having aready been let at a price slightly in excess of $85,000. The Pastime is one of the last two of the five-cent moving picture houses in this part of Market street.

Grand Theater Remodeled.

San Francisco.—The Grand theater, one of the oldest moving picture houses in the Mission District, has had a new front installed and other changes made to bring it up to date in both appearance and comfort. This theater was recently taken over by R. A. Floodberg and associates.

William Citron to Visit New York.

San Francisco.—William Citron, manager of the San Francisco Fox office, plans to be in New York late in July to confer with the officials of this concern.

Queen Theater Being Improved.

San Francisco.—The Queen theater, on Polk street, conducted under the management of Henry Frohman, is being remodeled and enlarged at a cost of several thousand dollars. When this work is completed the house will be one of the finest in that section of the city. The entire front of the house is being remodeled and the stage is being extended to the rear about 40 feet, a lot fronting on Sacramento street having been leased for this purpose. The aisles in the house are to be widened, changes made in the seating arrangement and new equipment installed where it is found advisable.

California News.

Santa Rosa.—The fine new moving picture theater being erected for C. W. Reavis is going up rapidly and early in the fall will be in shape for the opening. Mr. Reavis formerly conducted the Berkeley theater.

Los Gatos.—A moving picture house is being erected here by H. Marshall, of Oakland. This will make two houses for this city.

Kerman.—The Commercial Association of Kerman is conducting a moving picture show one day a week.

Fruitvale.—S. C. Matthews has opened the Diamond Photoplay theater and is showing features.

NOTES FROM NEBRASKA.

Kearney.—The Crescent theater has been razed and construction started on the moving picture house which F. G. Keens will erect for P. H. Hoppen, who operated the Crescent.

Nebraska City.—The Empress theater has been closed for the summer. While it is idle Manager Blakeslee will have it remodeled.

Wichita Sunday Opening

Six Thousand Names Already Secured to Petition Asking for Plebiscite to Decide Question—Business Conditions Improving in Corn Belt—Joplin Mayor Enforcing Fifteen-Minute-to-Reel Rule.

By Kansas City News Service.

WICHITA, KAN.—The moving picture exhibitors have already secured more than enough names to the petition asking for an election on the subject of Sunday shows; and it seems certain that the people will be given a chance to vote on the subject. Some of the opponents of Sunday shows made the charge that many signers didn't know what they had put their names to. The exhibitors killed that canard by going around to every one of the signers and giving him a chance to withdraw his name. Nineteen names were canceled, out of the total of more than 6,000—and that is a smaller percentage than usually changes its mind after assuming a definite attitude. The managers of the vaudeville houses are not joining in the movement for Sunday opening, and the election will therefore probably be on whether moving picture houses shall show on Sunday. There are, in fact, one or two exhibitors who seem to think that they would be better off without Sunday shows, but so far they have not been active against the movement to keep open on Sunday.

Wichita hasn't had Sunday moving pictures for several years—not, in fact, since William Barry left. He used to open the Marple on Sunday once in a while and was often arrested therefor.

Ted Morse Getting Along.

"They" all know Ted Morse—by "they" meaning both exhibitors and exchange men, in the Kansas City territory. Ted Morse used to help around the Yale exchange in Kansas City during the ancient history of five or six years ago. He took a flier in another line, but came back. He traveled for the General out of Kansas City for two years, and last May cast his lot with the World. He is now doing fine work for Richard Robertson, manager of the World at Kansas City. Ted knows every exhibitor in Kansas by his first name—and they all call him "Ted." Doesn't make any difference whether he expects to sell 'em or not, he calls on them and keeps acquainted. Finally, they hand him a little one, and later a big one.

Ted. Morse.

Matters Looking Up in Corn Belt.

Kansas City, Mo.—The extremely hot weather for two weeks in July put a crimp in the business of many exhibitors, and here and there in the small towns, as well as in the cities, houses were closed to await more favorable weather. In the country the occupation with harvest and farm work also acted to reduce patronage. A heavy rain shortly after the middle of the month was greeted with delight by all exhibitors and exchange men, for it was badly needed for corn and other crops, and to freshen up the grass. It meant real money, for not only did it guarantee good production of crops, but it put the people into a good humor, and they felt more like spending a few cents for the picture shows. It laid the dust and cooled the air—and generally was a most welcome and salutary rain, despite the slight damage done by the accompanying wind.

The Chautauquas of Kansas and Missouri are now in full swing, with their natural detraction from the business of the moving picture houses. Some of the exchanges are cordially acquiescing when the exhibitors suggest a week's cancellation of features, realizing that it's hard to buck the Chautauquas in small towns. Other exchanges are urging the exhibitors to maintain their big features just the same, and get some of the crowds that come to town.

"I figure that I am playing safe to let an exhibitor off for a week," said one manager. "He's sure to be sore if he takes the feature and loses money. He can't be sore at me if he cancels and wishes he had kept the feature. So I let them slide through the Chautauqua engagement with little stuff. They always come back."

More Power to Joplin Mayor.

Joplin, Mo.—Mayor Hugh McIndoe, of Joplin, has learned that one feature of the ordinance regulating motion picture theaters is not being observed, and he has written to the exhibitors asking that they pay more attention to it. This is the section that requires films to be run at no faster rate than 1,000 feet in 15 minutes. Complaints have been made that pictures are being run nearly twice as fast as that, to the detriment of the eyes of the spectators. The speed of the comedy pictures will not, however, be interfered with, when the exaggerated pace of objects is a feature of the fun.

Kansas Governor Entertains Children.

Topeka, Kan.—Arthur Capper, governor of Kansas, has every year for the past ten years entertained the children of Topeka on his birthday, July 14. The past two years the entertainment has consisted chiefly of free tickets to moving picture shows. This year was the biggest of all, and more than 7,000 children enjoyed his hospitality. There were ice cream cones to start with, and then the strips of tickets for the moving pictures were given out. Special programs had been provided by the exhibitors, the shows starting at 9 o'clock. Tickets were so printed and distributed that the crowds were scattered among the ten theaters during the day. The theaters were crowded with the children until 5 o'clock in the evening, after which the free admissions were not good.

Robertson Pushing Brady Pictures.

Every large town in the Kansas City territory is now running Brady-Made pictures—and the prospect is that they will get wide booking in the smaller towns in the fall. The exhibitors are cashing in on the fever of authorship aroused by the Brady contest. But they foresee that after the contest is over and the resulting pictures released, there will be even stronger interest in the productions, on the part of the public, which will want to see these extraordinary features. In Kansas City Richard Robertson, manager of the World office, has joined with the exhibitors of the Brady-Made pictures in co-operative advertising. Mr. Robertson pays for the display heading which tells of the pictures and gives the names of the actors; the dozen or more exhibitors pay for their various sized spaces to give the subjects and the dates.

Willis Wood to Put on Stock.

Joseph H. Gilday, manager of the Willis Wood theater, announced recently on his return from New York that the Willis Wood would put on a season of stock this fall. This theater has been running pictures for two years. It is one of the most beautiful theaters in the west, and a large sum was spent on adapting it to moving pictures. It is now running "Gloria's Romance" and will complete this series this summer. Mr. Gilday engaged the stock company while in New York.

Bowles Strong on Novelties.

George Bowles, publicity man of the Universal, at Kansas City, gets up something novel every week or so, to attract the attention and arouse the interest of the exhibitor. It would take a book to describe all his devices. But one recent exploit had such large returns in orders that it should not be omitted. This was a series of postcards. They went by post, though they were 6 by 11 inches in size. A double rule down the front cut off the address side from that for comment, and the comment was brief, a teaser to cause the recipient to turn the card over. One said, for instance, "If you're sound asleep and snoring, it's time to turn over. Well, turn this over anyway." There was probably 100 per cent. of reading of these pieces of mail, which could not be said for circular letters.

Personals.

E. H. Wachter, manager of the Fox, at Kansas City, is taking a short run over the territory of Southern Missouri and Eastern Kansas. Wachter likes to get out himself once in a while.

Jack Brainard, formerly manager of the Wichita office of the Mutual, is now assisting F. L. Kiltz, manager of the exchange at Kansas City, doing the work that E. C. Mills used to do.

Missouri and Kansas Doings.

Trenton, Mo.—Byron Sherwood is remodeling his theater here.

Camden, Mo.—L. Stiles is enlarging his theater.

Concordia, Mo.—George Beach has bought a Power 6A machine, which will be put into service when the present work of enlarging the theater is completed.

Wellington, Kan.—F. E. Runnell, who leased the Isis a month ago, is having an excellent business through the summer. He is making good with features, running "Peg o' the Ring" and the "Iron Claw" at present.

Wellington, Kan.—Chris. Glamann is decorating the Majestic.

Arkansas City, Kan.—J. Roy Burford has had special frames built to accord with the artistic front of his Rex theater, for mounting posters and advertising.

Hutchinson, Kan.—Fred Savage has installed on the De Luxe theater an electric sign that is a wonder. This sign is some 10 feet high and 25 feet wide, erected on top of the second story of the building. The word "De Luxe" is on top; below it are tapestry effects in scintillating lights, and below them is a great American flag that waves. Nobody comes into Hutchinson without having his eyes drawn to that sign. The streets of this city are extraordinarily wide, the street on which this theater is located being more than 100 feet.

Kansas City, Mo.—"The Grip of Evil" is breaking records already, before it has been shown. Howard Jameson went out from the Pathe office recently and booked it in seven towns, the notable part of the book being that three theaters in Wichita took it.

Indiana Happenings

By Indiana Trade News Service, 803 State Life Building, Indianapolis.

Frank Irwin of Liberty has sold the Union theater of that city to Mrs. Bert Shriner. The business will be managed by Harry Shriner. The Gem theater, operated by Mr. Shriner, will be closed. Mr. Irwin will go into the moving picture business in New Paris.

The Old Trails theater, Centerville, has changed hands three times within the last month. W. D. Cook sold out to Charles Porter, Charles Porter to J. B. Davison, and Mr. Davison disposed of the show to James Burton Wharton, of Richmond. Mr. Wharton is a hustler and is expected to make the Old Trails theater even more popular than it has previously been.

The Holmes Brothers of West Terre Haute are building The Holmes theater at 213-15 Paris avenue. The house is just two doors west of the theater being operated by the Holmes Brothers at this time.

C. H. Hess of Plymouth has sold the Lyric theater, Columbus, to the former owners, Frank Clevenger and Dr. W. T. Irvine. The house will be renovated and new equipment added. The former owners announced that a strictly five-cent show will be operated.

Manager Charles Sweeton of the Orpheum, Evansville, put on a Guardsman Day program and devoted 20 per cent. of the gross receipts to a fund for the National Guardsmen. Evansville recruiting had been backward and Manager Sweeton's action was particularly timely and of a distinct local help in bringing the recruiting up to the quota for Evansville.

John Hepp, owner of the Star theater, Booneville, has been sued for $10,000 for alleged slander. The suit was filed by R. T. Hutchinson, a former employe, who charges that Hepp accused him of setting fire to his theater.

Albert Metzger, manager of the Fairy theater, Knox, charged with violation of the Sunday law, was acquitted by a jury after four minutes deliberation. This opens the way for Sunday shows in Knox.

The Rialto theater, Indianapolis, has been opened. The new house is at the intersection of three streets at the busiest downtown corner. The interior is striking. It probably has the largest number of lights in use of any theater in the state. A Seeberg piano is being installed.

Sherman Welsch and Glen Wolfcale of Bluffton have bought the American theater at Elkhart.

The Circle theater. Indianapolis, which is in course of erection, was recently subjected to a test with bags of sand weighing 180,000 pounds.

The Crossland-Gilmore Company of Marion has incorporated with $20,000 capital stock to run a moving picture theater. The incorporators are E. P. McClure, Lizzie Crossland and H. A. Crossland.

Modern Theater for Lima.

Lima.—The De Luxe Theater Co., recently incorporated here with a capital stock of $10,000, is planning the construction of a moving picture theater along modern lines. A. Ritzler, Ira E. Wright and others are interested.

Censorship In Wisconsin

Supervising Authorities in Seven of Sixteen Largest Cities of Badger State.

By Frank H. Madison.

MADISON, WIS.—Moving picture shows are regulated and objectionable films can be censored by seven of the sixteen largest cities of the state, according to statistics compiled by the University of Wisconsin, extension division. The cutouts and rejections of Chicago serve as a guide for Racine authorities and the chief of police has power to suppress any picture he believes objectionable. The same working plan is supposed to rule in Kenosha and Marinette. In Superior a policewoman has charge of regulating the theaters. Milwaukee and Madison have boards of censors.

A comparison of license fees also was made by the University.

Racine charges $50 a year for shows at 10 cents and over; Marinette, $50; Superior, $25, and $50 if 20 cents or more is charged; Oshkosh, $100 for theaters seating 500 or more, or 20 cents a seat a year for [illegible]aller houses. Kenosha reported no fees.

Refuse License to Varsity and Pastime.

Madison.—Because there were too many pictures "For adults only" was one of the principal reasons for refusing a license to the Varsity theater on State street. The Pastime theater on West Washington avenue also was refused a license. Both are owned by R. H. Karn. He recently purchased the Varsity theater from R. L. Thatcher.

Gregory-Mahler Now the Badger.

Milwaukee,—The Badger Photoplay Corporation was the title selected at the reorganization of the Gregory-Mahler Film Company, 510 Edison street. Steps were taken to complete the initial release, "The Bold, Bad Pirate," and with plans for a number of other productions it is hoped to soon have two companies at work. These new officers were elected: President, T. W. Sheriffs, president of the Sheriffs Manufacturing Company; vice-president, A. T. Hummel; secretary and treasurer, E. M. Fable; general manager, O. A. Thomas; general director, R. D. Clifton; superintendent of laboratory and chief cameraman, R. Carn. Henry H. Rodenstab was appointed counsel.

Majestic Takes Over La Crosse.

La Crosse.—L. L. Koppelsberger, Harry L. Colman and Frank R. Schwalbe, stockholders of the Majestic Theater company, have purchased the La Crosse theater from M. F. Gage for $51,500. Koppelberger will manage the new house, using theatrical attractions, but will remain as manager of the Majestic, which is to become an exclusive picture house.

Heeman Shows Real Civic Spirit.

Portage.—When Manager William Heeman of the Majestic theater learned that Judmon & Avers of the Home theater were to show the Milwaukee Journal's films of the Wisconsin National Guard for the relief of guardsmen's dependents he closed his own house for that night. The pictures were shown under the auspices of a local committee.

Wisconsin Brevities.

Gillett.—The Gem theater has been opened with moving pictures.

Stoughton.—Charles Guelson, proprietor of the Lyric theater, and Charles Bacon, proprietor of the Globe theater, have jointly leased the auditorium for a year and will give moving pictures and theatrical performances there.

Dunbar.—Mr. Woosencraft has started a moving picture show here.

Eau Claire.—The Profit-Sharing Theater company of this city has filed at Madison an amendment to its charter changing its name to the Eau Clair theater company and reducing its capital from $50,000 to $40,000.

Milwaukee.—A new moving picture theater is announced by Thomas Saxe. It will open about December 1 in a building to be erected at 416-430 Grand avenue and will seat 2,000.

Racine.—The Bijou theater took advantage of the interest in things military and had the Zenith Motion Picture company of Chicago make a local photoplay, "Secret Orders, or Battery C in Action." The film ran two days at the Bijou and the soldiers had charge of the ticket sale.

Nashville Exhibitor Through With Serials

W. H. Wassman Says That While They Are All Right in Residential Neighborhoods It Is Different When Catering to Transients.

By J. L. Ray, 1014 Stahlman Building, Nashville.

NASHVILLE, Tenn.—W. H. Wassman, the man who brought motion pictures to Nashville, and who operates at present two of the largest houses in the city says he is not a believer in serials as a drawing card, and has booked his last one.

"The serial is well enough for the suburban house where the same crowd is in attendance every week," he says, "but as an uptown attraction I find that it does not meet with the same favor as the regular program. I have had first choice in a wide field of serials during the past few months, but have unrestrictedly turned them down, with one exception. Am running at one of my houses at present the Billie Burke serial, which was booked largely on the strength of the star's reputation. I am of the opinion that the serial is losing favor, and wish to reiterate my statement that I am through with them."

Mr. Wassman's viewpoint is upheld by a number of the Nashville exhibitors, who feel that the serial for the uptown house is losing grace with the motion picture public.

Sundays Tight in Chattanooga.

Chattanooga.—Following the defeat of recent efforts to open the Chattanooga picure houses on Sunday comes a knockout blow to Sunday baseball from Attorney-General Whitaker of Chatanooga, who holds that the Sunday games would conflict with the state nuisance act, and that prompt intervention by the authorities would follow any attempt to play ball on that day.

Knoxville Man Secures War Films.

Knoxville.—Earle Harrison, writer and photographer of Knoxville, who has been in the thick of the Belgium and French battles, is back in Tennessee with a number of good war films which have not been seen in this country. Mr. Harrison is well posted on the war, having served on the staff of the London Mail, and also of the London Sphere. Special exhibitions have been given in Knoxville, and the Lyceum of Chattanooga booked the pictures for a feature attraction, raising prices to fifteen and twenty-five cents.

Parthenon Equipment at Auction.

Nashville.—The Parthenon theater, a handsome feature house, formerly operated by the Parthenon Amusement Company, Ira Lamb, president, has been closed down for several weeks following the appointment of a receiver. The reason for the ultimate failure of the house is attributed to its location, which is out of the theater district. The equipment was sold at public auction by Trustee Beasley on July 10 to the Cresent Amusement Company, including all fixtures, a complete generating outfit, and two Power 6-A projecting machines, for $1,250. The lease will be disposed of privately.

Shorey Runs Newspaper Weekly.

Knoxville.—Under the caption of "Gay and Queen News," Manager G. N. Shorey is running a weekly department in the Knoxville papers, giving publicity to his houses. He uses five columns across, consuming in all about three-quarters of a page, to exploit the forthcoming programs, with a number of cuts to lend color to the solid matter.

All Nashville Programs in One Organ.

Nashville.—Each Saturday "Amusement News" is issued, which contains programs for the following week at all Nashville photoplay houses, together with a number of synopses and notes. The paper is a four-sheet, published by Harry Anderson, a local advertising man.

Detroit Considers Film Ordinance

Drastic Measure Regulating Handling, Storage and Sale of "Inflammable Liquids," But Aimed at Exchanges and Theaters, Is Referred to Committee—News In and Around Vehicle City.

By Jacob Smith, 503 Press Building, Detroit.

DETROIT, Mich.—A new city ordinance amending the present one regulating the handling, storage and sale of inflammable liquids and directly aimed at the theaters and motion pictures exchanges was introduced into the Detroit common council on Tuesday, July 18, and has been referred to the ordinance committe. It is one of the most drastic ever introduced as affecting the motion picture industry. Its salient points are as follows:

Before any firm can start an exchange he must file full particulars with the department of buildings, giving particulars as to load of floors, weight of film to be stored and other information, and must then pay a license fee of $10.

Vaults must be of fireproof materials, doors must be of iron and must open directly into rooms used for examining film. Vaults must not have a capacity for more than 750 cubic feet.

Safes shall not exceed 150 cubic feet.

Two hundred reels of film weighing not more than 1,000 pounds in the aggregate may be stored in cabinets, but no one cabinet shall contain more than 50 reels, or 250 pounds. When two or more cabinets are used, they shall be in a separate room with outside ventilation and inclosed by fireproof partitions with fire doors of the corridor type.

Each container for film storage shall be provided with a pressure relief vent opening to the outside of the building, directly through an exterior wall, or through a separate stack with walls of reinforced concrete or brick at least five inches thick and shielded at the top. Each pressure relief vent shall be protected against the weather by thin glass painted a dark color or by other incombustible fragile material in a sash arranged to open automatically in case of fire by the use of a fusible link or theremostat placed inside the film container.

The outlet of each vent shall be located at a point above the roof.

There should be no ventilation of vaults other than a pressure relief opening, discharging directly to the outside of the building. Blower systems circulating air in the vault are objectionable, even after every reasonable safeguard has been provided. Each room in which motion picture films are stored shall be provided with mechanical ventilation in a manner approved by the department of safety engineering.

It shall be the duty of the department of buildings, under the provisions of this ordinance, to see that all fire escapes and exits fully comply with the requirements of this ordinance and the building code.

No films shall be stored in any building used for a theater or place of assemblage except such number as is necessary for the running of a motion picture showhouse for one day, and these shall be stored in containers provided for in this ordinance and the same shall be stored in the booths provided for by ordinance state regulation. The number of film so stored shall not exceed twelve.

Buildings now occupied for film exchanges that cannot be made fully to comply with the provisions of this ordinance may be granted an extension of time to satisfy the spirit of the ordinance.

In addition to other provisions of this ordinance the printing, developing, examining and repairing and operation of exchange rooms shall be governed by the following requirements:

(a) Shall have outside ventilation and separated from each other and the remainder of the building by tight partitions of fire-resistive material, with all door openings provided by self-closing fire doors of the corridor type and all window openings protected by standard self-closing fire windows.

(b) Such rooms shall be used neither for storage nor handling of combustible materials other than the films. There shall be no electric wiring on the examination tables.

(c) The number of reels of films not in metal cans shall be limited to twenty in a single room at any one time. The number of reels in the examining and repairing room awaiting attention shall be limited to ten for each operator.

Rooms having more than twenty films not in metal cans during rush hours shall be subdivided by partitions of fire-resistive material with all door openings protected by self-closing fire doors of the corridor type.

In each exchange room approved vaults should be utilized for temporary storage and sorting of films in cans while being handled.

Each reel of film shall be kept in a separate metal can with tight-fitting cover, except when in use.

All scrap or waste shall be kept under water, to be kept separate from paper waste, and must be removed once a day.

MOTION PICTURE MACHINES AND BOOTHS.

They shall be safeguarded with the requirements of paragraphs 38 (U) and (V) of the National Electrical Code. The booth may be omitted if the machines are in a separate room inclosed by incombustible partitions with all door openings protected by self-closing fire windows. If more than five machines are in one room, each machine shall be separately inclosed in an approved booth.

Electric motors if used should be preferably of the induction type, without commutators, or if of the direct-current type, to have entirely inclosed commutators. All wiring and current controlling devices must be of vapor proof construction.

Only hot air, hot water or steam heat shall be used. The heating pipes should be preferably overhead attached to the ceiling.

Smoking and carrying of matches shall be strictly prohibited.

All buildings containing more than a total of fifty reels or films, 250 pounds, shall be equipped with an approved system of automatic sprinklers. Each room shall be equipped with at least one approved hand fire extinguisher. At least one pail of water and one pail of sand for each vault, safe or cabinet in use.

The provisions herein contained also apply to motion picture studios.

Upon the passage of this ordinance the mayor shall appoint one citizen engaged in the storage and handling of films as a member of the Board of Rules for Inflammable Liquids. Such person shall have had at least three years' experience in the handling of films.

Grand Circus Files Bankruptcy Petition.

A voluntary petition in bankruptcy was filed on July 19, in the United States District Court of Detroit, by the Grand Circus Theater, 301 Woodward avenue, of which Arthur W. Blankmeyer is president and general manager. Total liabilities of the theater are scheduled at $18,929, and assets of $28,000. The lease on the building was valued at $20,000, and the equipment at $8,000.

Detroit Notes.

Abe Siegel, formerly with the Fox and Bel film exchanges, is now traveling in Michigan for Mutual.

The Michigan Metro Film Corporation, now on East Jefferson avenue, has leased part of the second floor of the building at 71-75 Broadway, and will move to the new location as soon as contractors complete alterations, probably about the middle of August. This makes two film exchanges in this building, the other being the Triangle Film Corporation.

"How Britain Prepared" started an indefinite engagement at the Detroit opera house on Sunday, July 23.

H. A. Taylor is now vice-president and manager of the Lakewood theater, at Lakewood and Oneida avenues, Detroit. The other offices of the company are John Cutler, president, and Bertha E. Cutler, secretary and treasurer.

Despite the tremendous and record-breaking heat for two weeks starting July 10, Detroit houses did a satisfactory business, exceeding even expectations. All managers are looking forward to a big fall business. By October Detroit will unquestionably be a city of 800,000 population.

M. S. Bailey, manager of the Detroit Universal Exchange, attended the annual Shrine conclave at Buffalo the week of July 10th.

The Del-The Amusement Company, which is erecting a theater on Mack avenue, Detroit, has increased its capital stock from $75,000 to $125,000.

Constitution to Aid Weekly

Atlanta's Big Journal to Co-operate With Pathe News Service.

By A. M. Beatty, 43 Copenhill Avenue, Atlanta.

THE Pathe News Weekly will in future have the benefit of the active co-operation of the Daily Constitution and its hundreds of news representatives in the South. With the view of bringing its southern service up to the standard of its world-wide feature the Pathe company has completed arrangements with the Constitution through which the cameramen of the Pathe will be able to gain many hours' time in reaching the scene of news developments in any section of the South. Pictures of all news developments of general interest in Georgia, Florida, Alabama and Tennessee will be given special prominence in future runs of the Pathe company's news weekly.

Committee Kills One Sunday Bill.

A blue-stocking bill introduced by Representative Neill in the Georgia Legislature which would have prevented Sunday moving pictures for charity or any purpose whatever, was voted down by the committee. Representative Neill was noncommital as to whether another bill along the same line, but less strenuous, shall be forthcoming.

Atlanta Personals.

George Allison is attending a convention in Chicago of the managers of the International Film Service.

"Where Are My Children?" has crowded the Piedmont theater all during the week. William Oldknow, of the Consolidated Film Company, has been looking after the details.

L. S. Levine, district manager of the Fox Film Corporation, is in New Orleans for a short business trip.

U. T. Koch, manager of the Bluebird, is making a trip over his territory, and reports business splendid.

James Calnay, manager of the Grand theater, is preparing to produce a number of photoplays in Atlanta, and is advertising for a number of actresses and actors. The plays are to be produced with local talent.

Baltimore Letter

By J. M. Shellman, 1902 Mt. Royal Terrace, Baltimore.

To Restrict Playing of Anthem.

AN ordinance which was approved by Mayor Preston of Baltimore, on July 7th, 1916, has been made to regulate the manner and place in which the national anthem may be sung or rendered. The reasons for the ordinance as given are because "The Star Spangled Banner" is recognized as the national anthem, because it was composed in Baltimore City, and because the rendering of it in connection with other compositions tends to lower the esteem in which it should be held.

It is provided that the anthem shall not be played, sung or rendered in the City of Baltimore in any public place, or at any public entertainment, or in any theater or moving picture hall, restaurant or cafe, except as an entire and separate composition or number, without embellishments of national or other melodies, nor shall "The Star Spangled Banner" be played at or in any of the places mentioned for dancing or as an exit march; and whenever and wherever practicable, the musicians, performers or other persons shall stand while playing, singing or rendering "The Star Spankled Banner." Any person violating the provisions of this section shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof before a court of competent jurisdiction of this state shall be fined not more than one hundred dollars.

Captain Koenig Declines Big Offer.

Harry Woods, resident manager of Loew's Hippodrome theater, Eutaw street, at Baltimore, was the recipient of a short worded but large intentioned letter last week from Marcus Loew, owner of the Loew vaudeville circuit, in New York. Mr. Woods' instructions were to interview Captain Paul Koenig of the German submarine Deutschland, and make him an offer of $1,000 a day for three days, to appear for five minutes a performance at the American theater in New York City. This offer was made for immediate acceptance on the part of the Captain. The Captain declined to accept the offer, but thanked Mr. Woods for the invitation to visit the Hippodrome.

Academy Manager Recuperating.

Harry A. Henkel, manager of the Academy of Music, North Howard street, is now at his home recuperating from an operation for appendicitis.

New Unicorn Service Exchange.

The Unicorn Film Service Corporation has made arrangements to locate an exchange in this city. Palmore & Hommand, 412 East Lexington street, who have been engaged in the moving picture supply business for some time, will distribute the pictures for this corporation. It is understood the supply business will be carried on in conjunction with the exchange service.

Submarine Crew Entertained at Garden.

Manager George Schneider of the Garden theater, Lexington street, near Park avenue, entertained the officers and crew of the submarine Deutschland as his guests on the evenings of Wednesday and Thursday, July 12 and 13. After the submarine men had enjoyed the performances on both nights they were taken out to supper by Mr. Schneider. As they entered the theater on each night nearty welcomes were tendered them by the audience. Captain Koenig's picture and that of the Deutschland were flashed on the screen and when the resonant chords of "The Star Spangled Banner" were played, all stood, as well as when "Die Wacht Am Rhein" swept through the house. When the latter was rendered the U-Boat men sang the song in German.

Germans Take Notes on "Britain Prepared."

On Tuesday night, July 11, it was noticed by those present that two officers from the German submarine Deutschland were present at Ford's opera house to view the motion picture entitled "How Britain Prepared" which is running at that house. Both men paid strict attention to every phase of the picture, and when that part of the film showing the big gun called 'Mother" and the use of the periscope was exhibited they hastily took several notes.

Wells Hawks a Baltimorean.

Wells Hawks, who has gone to Chicago to accept the position as personal manager and literary secretary for Mary Pickford, was formerly a Baltimorean. He managed the Academy of Music on North Howard street, this city, for some time, and only gave that up to become the head of the publicity force of Charles Frohman in New York.

Gilmore Talks Animated Cartoons.

W. J. Gilmore, representative of the Mutt and Jeff Film Company, handling the animated cartoon service, has been in town for a week or so and is meeting success with his bookings. Mr. Gilmore was formerly associated with the General Film Company in New York.

Premier of Lewy Picture.

On Saturday night, July 15, a premier screening of the one-reel comedy picture made by Harry Lewy, the Baltimore cameraman, for George Joekel of this city, was given at the Great Wizard theater. This picture is essentially an advertising film and a number of the exterior scenes were taken on the Gunther estate in Guilford. A number of persons were present at the exhibition.

Slide Aids Armored Car Fund.

In the endeavor which is being made in Maryland to raise money for an armored car for the Maryland militia all the moving picture theaters are giving their hearty co-operation. Between the programs of pictures a slide is flashed on the screen urging people to contribute to the cause. The slide which is being used was designed and made by Harry Lewy.

Architect Selected for McHenry Theater.

Architect Oliver B. Wright, 1123 Munsey building, has been selected by the recently incorporated McHenry Theater Company to draw up plans for the $75,000 picture theater to be erected by this company at Cross and Light streets. This theater will be planned after the Majestic theater in Detroit and the New Victoria theater in Buffalo. A large organ is to be installed.

Censor Stone Has Time for Politics.

William F. Stone, former Collector of the Port and at present minority member of the moving picture censor board, has been appointed sergeant-at-arms for the great Republican meeting which will be held in New York on July 31, to notify Charles E. Hughes that he has been selected by the G. O. P. to be its candidate for the Presidency.

Lotz New Head of General Film in Boston

Succeeds E. J. Farrell, Who Has Been With Organization for Seven Years—Frank D. Stanton Assumes Charge of the Fenway—Send State Films to Bay State Soldiers.

By William Flynn, 80 Summer Street, Boston.

TWO very important changes as to the management of local moving picture businesses took place this week. H. E. Lotz of New York, former district manager of the General Film, came to Boston as manager of the Boston office and general supervisor of the New England district. He succeeds E. J. Farrell, who for the past seven years has been with the General Film, and has been New England manager since he returned from Atlanta, Ga., some months ago, where during the winter he was in charge of the South district of the General Film Exchange.

The change in the management of the General Film Exchange came as a surprise in Boston, as no intimation of Mr. Farrell's leaving the General Film service had been received among the exchangemen. Mr. Farrell is now on his vacation and none of his Boston associates know just what plans he has for the future. He is probably one of the best-known film exchange men in New England, having been in the business in this district for ten years. Mr. Lotz comes to Boston from the West.

Another important change in management is at the Fenway theater, one of Boston finest moving picture houses. Frank D. Stanton, until recently on the road for the V-L-S-E in the New England territory, takes charge of the Fenway, succeeding Stanley Sumner, who has had the management of the house since it opened some six months ago. Mr. Stanton assumes his new duties on Saturday with a complete knowledge of all the details of the business. He was formerly manager of the Franklin Park theater, where he made a marked success. The Fenway is located in the heart of the Back Bay district of Boston.

Managers See "The Yellow Menace."

Manager Herman Rifkin of the Eastern Film Company is very busy these days handling the New England booking of "The Yellow Menace," the sixteen episode serial starring Edwin Stevens, being distributed through the Unity Sales Corporation. The film was given its first showing in Boston this week to over one hundred and fifty managers from all parts of New England at the Majestic theater.

The managers were enthusiastic. Mr. Rifkin is placing the rights for publishing the story of "The Yellow Menace" with New England newspapers and the serial story will be run in conjunction with the film story. The first episode will be released September 14.

Metro Exchange Nearing Completion.

The Metro exchange building on Church street is rapidly nearing completion. It will be one of the largest and finest appointed film exchanges in New England. Another month will see the exchange opened and doing business.

Bay State Soldiers to Have Films.

Moving pictures supplied by the Commonwealth of Massachusetts are to entertain the State troops now on the Mexican Border The films were made about two years ago for the Board of Panama-Pacific Managers for Massachusetts and were shown daily in the Massachusetts house at the exposition in San Francisco last year. It is believed that the authorities, once they have the projectors on the scene, will see that some live professional and up-to-date films are imposed in the program for the entertainment of the guardsmen.

Pittsburgh Screeners to Hold Outing

Four Hundred Exchangemen, Exhibitors and Attaches Are Expected to Get Together on July 30—Rex Buys Another House—Latrobe's Paramount Opens—Pittsburghers at the Convention—Petz Sells and Buys.

From Pittsburgh News Service, 6016 Jenkins Arcade, Pittsburgh.

PITTSBURGH, Pa.—Arrangements are being completed for the first summer outing of the Pittsburgh Screen Club, to be held Sunday, July 30, at Wexford Park. The affair is looked forward to as one of the most enjoyable social events of the year in local film circles. Four hundred exchange men, exhibitors and employes are expected to attend, and a number of special cars have been chartered to convey the crowd to the picnic grounds from 8 a. m. to 10 a. m. An interesting program of field sports will be carried out, including two baseball games. Dancing and a basket dinner in the grove will be other features of the day. Motion pictures are to be made of the entire outing. Slides advertising the affair have been prepared and are being shown in various houses throughout the city. The Summer Outing Committee, appointed to arrange this and other outings in a series to be conducted by the Screen Club during the warm months, is composed of Charles Seltzer, chairman; Max W. Herring, P. A. Mansfield and John Long.

Rex Adds Another Link to Chain.

The Rex Amusement Company, with business offices at 6017 Penn avenue, has added to its chain of handsome theaters in the Pittsburgh district the Cameraphone theater, at 1600 Fifth avenue. This concern, of which Mark Browarsky is manager, now controls four houses, and is said to be on the lookout for several others in the city. The Rex chain already consisted of the Rex theater, in the East Liberty section; the Victoria, in Center avenue, and the new Orpheum, recently opened at Forbes street and Murray avenue, in the Squirrel Hill district. The latest acquisition of the film is known as the outer Fifth avenue Camerophone theater, to distinguish it from the downtown Camerophone and the East Liberty Cameraphone. The house has been rented by Mr. Browarsky for a term of years at a total rental of $30,000. It is to be closed for two weeks and is being redecorated and improved with new equipment at a considerable expense. The best feature pictures obtainable will be shown daily at the Cameraphone under the new management, as the same high standards will be maintained as at the other Rex houses. One of the improvements to be inaugurated, with the reopening of the theater will be an eight-piece orchestra.

Latrobe's Paramount a Fine House.

The new Paramount theater was thrown open to the public of Latrobe, Pa., several days ago, and made a splendid impression. The house, which is owned by Peter Lampropolis, is said to be the finest between Pittsburgh and Johnstown. It is up-to-date in every way and has a seating capacity of 1,000, including a spacious balcony. The building itself measures 100 by 50 feet and is of fireproof construction throughout. The exterior is quite attractive, while the interior combines the highest degree of good taste and comfort. Entrance to the auditorium is had from a well-arranged lobby, from each end of which wide stairways lead to the balcony seating 480 persons. The main floor of the auditorium has 520 seats, with wide aisles. All approaches and aisles are covered with sound-absorbing rubber.

The decorations are in old rose and the color scheme of ceiling, walls and hangings is most harmonious. Nicely appointed rest rooms are provided for women. Emergency exits at the rear of the theater are furnished for both the first and second floors, the balcony extending along both sides in ornamental style. A very efficient ventilating system has been installed. The projection booth is equipped with two motor-driven Simplex machines. The music is supplied by an eight-piece orchestra at the evening shows. Paramount and Triangle features are run and the admission price is 10 cents for the first floor and 5 cents for the second. The house manager is E. E. Rutter, formerly of the St. Clair theater, Greensburg, Pa.

Miller's Olympic Hit by Fire.

The Olympic theater, operated by Charles H. Miller, at Weirton, West Va., was damaged by fire recently to the extent of about $1,400 and the loss of six reels of film. The blaze broke out in the projection booth during the performance, but the audience left the house without confusion and there was no one injured. Repairs are being made and damaged equipment replaced, and the Olympic will be reopened in a week or so. Mr. Miller has announced that his new house in Weirton is well under way. It is planned to have it completed and ready for opening about November 1. This theater will be of modern construction and one of the best in its section of the state. The building will measure 100 by 40 feet and is to cost about $14,000. The seating capacity will be 600. Mr. Miller's new house will be the home of big feature pictures in Weirton.

Summer Shows Arousing Antagonism.

A strong sentiment exists among exhibitors of the Pittsburgh territory against the inroads of the outdoor summer picture shows, particularly of the traveling variety, and there is talk of introducing into city council an ordinance taxing airdomes at a figure which would offer protection to the permanent picture houses. M. Feitler, proprietor of the Elmore theater, and a member of the board of governors of the Pittsburgh Screen Club, is an advocate of the proposed measure. Discussing the matter, Mr. Feitler said: "Itinerant retail merchants are obliged to pay a heavy tax when they open temporary quarters in the city, for the protection of the regularly established merchants. Why should not this policy be extended to the picture business?"

Quality Takes Over the New Film.

The New Film Corporation, 402 Ferry street, Pittsburgh, has passed out of existence and the entire stock of films has been taken over by the Quality Film Company, 404 Ferry street. A. H. McClelland, manager of the retiring concern, has assumed the position of sales manager of the Quality. Captain McClelland is one of the best known members of the local film trade and is president of the Pittsburgh Screen Club. His acquisition by the Quality Film Company is therefore a valuable one.

Pittsburghers Enjoy the Convention.

While attending the Chicago convention of the Exhibitors, the Pittsburgh delegation took a most enjoyable part in the celebration of Seeburg Day and were handsomely entertained by Charles Seltzer, head of the Seltzer Music Company, of this city, agents in this territory for the J. P. Seeburg instruments. The party took luncheon at the state restaurant, covers being laid for twenty in the Pennsylvania booth. A tour was then made of the Seeburg factory, where the manufacture of organs was watched with great interest.

The following made up the party: Past National President Fred J. Herrington and Mrs. Herrington, Past National Secretary James Delves and Mrs. Delves, James Smith, Miss Smith, Mr. and Mrs. Oliver McKee, Mr. and Mrs. William Fitz, A. J. Barthell, J. W. Shearer, Jerome Dawson, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Krissler, Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Kliehm, Miss Anna McNally, Ben Zerr, Charles Maird, Joseph Campbell and Charles Seltzer.

Ketchum Takes Jeanette's Princess.

The Princess theater, Jeanette, Pa., has been purchased from Harry H. Petz by W. H. Ketchum, who disposed of his Palm Garden theater, on the South Side, Pittsburgh, about six months ago. Mr. Ketchum will remove to Jeanette about August 1 and look after the management of his new house personally. The Princess has a seating capacity of 470 and is modern in every respect. Universal service is used, including Red Feather and Bluebird features.

And Petz Takes Portage's Grand.

The Grand theater, at Portage, Pa., has been taken over by Harry H. Petz, who has just sold his Princess theater at Jeanette. The house is closed for repairs but will be reopened in the near future. Mr. Petz is one of the pioneers in the exhibiting business in Western Pennsylvania, having operated houses in the vicinity of Pittsburgh for the past twelve years. The continued success of the Grand is therefore assured. Fox, Bluebird and Triangle features will be shown.

New 1,200-Seat House for Latrobe.

Plans are being made for a new theater to be erected at Latrobe, Pa., on the site of the Showalt theater. The old house, which was located on the second floor, is to be torn down within the next few months by its owners. The new theater will have a seating capacity of 1,200 and is to be completed by next spring.

Rogina Enters Exhibiting Business.

The Crescent theater, 5107 Butler street, Pittsburgh, has been sold by Charles Brizel to Frank Rogina, a newcomer in the exhibiting business here. Alterations are to be made during the next few weeks and the house will be enlarged considerably. Mr. Krisel will re-enter the local film field with another theater, but his plans have not yet been fully decided upon.

Coyle Beautifying His House.

The Coyle theater, Charleroi, Pa., has been redecorated in a tasteful manner by the owner, R. S. Coyle. The McCreery Company, of Pittsburgh, carried out the work of decorating and refurnishing the beautiful interior. Mr. Coyle reports business as very good.

Business Quiet in New Orleans

Exhibitors Meeting Situation by Improving Quality Rather Than by Lengthening Program.

By George M. Cheney.

NEW ORLEANS.—Business is mighty dull. That's the complaint of the exhibitors in this territory. They expected to have a dull month in July, but they didn't expect the degree of dullness that the situation has developed. There are so many counter attractions locally that it's got to be a mighty strong program to wean away the nickels and dimes. Canal street exhibitors are going strong on feature programs. The complaint is not so much from them as from the less fortunate suburbanites. Because of the very dullness of the situation and because of strong competition, there have been a number of suburban changes. Who is it broaching this subject of closing up moving picture theaters all over the country in July? Certain New Orleans exhibitors would like to get his name and address. They would co-operate willingly in this movement—some of them, at least. Thank Heaven! however, motion picture proprietors here know something about meeting a situation, and are not offering any extra reels to bring patrons. They harp on quality, and are pretty fair harpists at that.

S. T. Stephens a Big Man.

One of the biggest men, both in size and in standing in his community, is S. T. Stephens, manager of the New Orleans office of the Mutual Film Corporation. Mr. Stephens is affectionately called "the daddy of New Orleans exchange managers," and he well deserves that title by reason of his long service in the Crescent City. Other titles bestowed on Mr. Stephens includes that of "Colonel," and this latter title bids fair to stick, inasmuch as Mr. Stephens was marshal of the moving picture division in the recent New Orleans preparedness parade.

S. T. Stephens.

Mr. Stephens saw long service with the Fox Film Corporation in New Orleans. Mutual then dangled a tempting offer, and Fox sent a man out of New York to New Orleans to induce Mr. Stephens to stick. But the Mutual offer proved so attractive to Mr. Stephens that he went over to that company. On the day that he did, Fox employes in New Orleans made up a substantial purse and presented Mr. Stephens with a handsome silver token, along with a request that he continue as their manager.

Before long Mr. Stephens will celebrate his first year with Mutual in New Orleans.

Pearces Sign Up Mutual Specials.

Hunter Bennett, sales manager of the Mutual Film Corporation, has just left town after an extended conference with S. T. Stephens, manager of the local Mutual stronghold. It had to do with a big advertising campaign that Mutual is to launch in this territory in connection with its new features. Incidental to Mr. Bennett's visit, it was announced by Manager Stephens that the Pearce Enterprises had signed for Mutual Star productions. This is an important bit of news to this territory, as the Pearces are generally closely watched by other exhibitors and all the exchange men. Mr. Stephens is to go to Birmingham, Ala., very shortly, to look over the situation there with a view of opening a sub-office to take care of Mutual's fast-growing business in the Southern territory.

Changes in Management.

There have been a number of important changes among the smaller houses.

Henry Friedenberg has leased the Tulane Airdome, 3211 Tulane avenue, to Frank Nicilosi. The Tulane Airdome is about seven years old, is in a good neighborhood, and was rebuilt following the tropical storm of September, 1915.

L. Billiet & Son have reopened the College theater, 327 St. Charles street, after it had been closed down for a number of weeks. The theater has taken on first-run General service.

The Beverly theater, 110 North Jefferson Davis parkway, has been reopened by H. L. Wood and W. W. Valloft. They have installed opera chairs and other conveniences, and will start off with the Triangle program.

The Star theater, a big house at Cortez and Cleveland streets, recently erected by John Sheppard, has passed to new management, composed of W. M. Rose and F. F. Goodrow. Mr. Goodrow is a well-known former exchange man.

Glantzberg Typhoonizing 'Em.

Paul E. Elder, local representative of the Typhoon Fan Company, is Typhoonizing several local theaters, a hotel and the plant of the Nola Film Company, producers of Nola films. Three large Typhoons have been installed in the Triangle theater, the largest picture house in the city. Typhoons will be used in the Nola studios to make life more bearable for the actors. These contracts were secured by President Ernst Glantzberg of the Typhoon Fan Company, who visited New Orleans recently. It was announced in these columns a few weeks ago that Sam Cohn, of the Metropolitan Cooling & Ventilating Company, Nola building, was the Typhoon agent for New Orleans. Mr. Glantzberg has requested that it be announced that Mr. Elder is the sole New Orleans representative.

J. E. Pearce Caught in Hurricane.

J. Eugene Pearce, supervising head of the Pearce Enterprises, is back in New Orleans, mighty glad to be back alive, in fact. With a happy party on board, Mr. Pearce a few weeks ago sailed his yacht Spitfire away to the Florida coast. He was caught by the hurricane of last week which devastated the Florida coast. For a time it was nip and tuck, but the Spitfire proved stanch and port was made safely.

Century Opens in Newark

John Blum and M. Markowitz Head of New Jersey Exchange.

By Jacob J. Kalter, Newark.

NEWARK.—The Century Feature Film Exchange has just been organized here by John Blum, one of the oldest film men in the city, and M. Markowitz. The company was organized for the purpose of renting motion picture films, machines, etc. The concern has on hand a large number of features. Besides booking much of their own stuff, the Century has been appointed New Jersey state representatives for some of the large producing companies.

John Blum started in the picture business through the exhibiting line, owning three theaters and as many airdomes. After making his "pile" in the exhibiting end of the business he decided to enter the exchange. He opened the Royal Feature Film Exchange, which, after booking both Mutual and Universal pictures, sold out to the latter concern. Mr. Blum was then offered the managership of the Greater New York Film Rental Company, for which company he worked two years until it sold out to the General. The Empire Feature Service was then started by Mr. Blum in the Strand building.

Mr. Markowitz is a New Yorker who has also seen much service in films. He came to Newark several months ago, and in a remarkably short time has won the confidence of exhibitors. Until the formation of the Century Mr. Markowitz had an office in the Strand theater building as the New Jersey agent for Green Features. The Century will continue to act as representatives for the Greene and Pioneer pictures.

Marbach Opens Exchange.

Newark.—The Apollo Feature Film Exchange has been organized by Otto Marbach at 54 Strand theater building. Mr. Marbach was formerly connected with the Royal Feature Film Exchange.

Paralysis Injures Business.

Newark.—The epidemic of infantile paralysis, which has been spreading rapidly throughout the state, has practically demoralized the theatrical business in New Jersey. In Newark on the recommendation of the Board of Health, all children under sixteen are excluded from all amusement places. This order has especially injured the moving picture exhibitors, and not since the introduction of moving pictures has business been so poor, or conditions so bad. Many theaters have been forced to close up thus far, and it is only a matter of time that others will have to follow suit. Everyone is hoping and praying for relief from the epidemic.

Community Theater for Newark.

Newark.—According to an announcement made by Uzal H. McCarter, Newark's much-desired community theater is assured. The theater, which will seat about 550, will be located in the new memorial building, which will be erected as a permanent memorial of the city's two hundred and fiftieth anniversary.

Shubert Changes Name.

Newark.—The Shubert theater of this city is to be known in the future as the Broad Street theater. Although the Shubert is the home of the largest legitimate attractions reaching Newark, it sometimes shows moving pictures, when the feature is something extraordinary.

Rosenberg Interested in Theater.

Asbury Park.—The St. James Theater Company, Inc., has been formed with Henry Rosenberg, Helen L. Bergen, and Henry Sincer as incorporators. The registered office is at 300 Cookman avenue, and the authorized capital is $100,000.

Savoy, Asbury Park, Incorporated.

Asbury Park.—The Savoy Theater Company, Ltd., has been incorporated under the laws of this state with an authorized capital of $50,000. The registered office is at 718 Mattison avenue, Asbury Park. The incorporators are Helen L. Bergen, H. Sincer, and Henry Rosenberg.

Film Delivery Company Formed.

Newark.—Charles S. Jamison, who resides at 382 Hunterdon street, has filed as the trade name of his film delivery service, The General Delivery Service. The offices are at 288 Market street. The purpose of the company is to transport picture shows and films.

New Theater at Amarillo.

Amarillo—A theater is under construction at Amarillo. As soon as completed it will be in charge of John Jones, who recently managed the Crystal theater at Greenville. The opening day is about Aug. 1.

Minneapolis Council Protects Old Houses

Holds Up Application for Building Theater in East Hennepin Avenue on Theory It Would Injure Exhibitors Now Doing Business—Local Film Men to Hold Outing—Minneapolis at the Convention.

By Perry S. Williams, The Tribune, Minneapolis.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—One of the most perplexing questions involving the moving picture and the city council arose here several days ago, and owing to the inability of the special council committee considering the case to reach a verdict the problem still remains unsolved. Briefly, the question was whether the council had a right to keep an applicant for a moving picture theater license from losing his money and causing the proprietors of other theaters in the neighborhood to do the same, or whether it should grant his permit regardless of the theater field in the district in which he would operate.

The question was raised on the point of moving picture ethics when L. J. Blumberg, Jr., applied for a license to operate a theater at 320 East Hennepin avenue. Alderman Hawley of the Second ward and the moving picture men near the location sought by Blumberg for his film venture were as one when it came to believing the granting of another license for a show house in the neighborhood would mean that some one of the exhibitors would go "broke."

The alderman took the stand, however, that the council could not concern itself over the return from an investment in the case of any application for license. Alderman Getchell was opposed to his colleague's view, while Alderman Robb, chairman of the license committee, took a neutral stand, and the committee was deadlocked. For the present, at least, the proprietors of theaters already established on East Hennepin avenue are winners, but Blumberg asserts he is not through, and this interesting problem may be solved at an early session of the license committee of the council.

Engler to Open Crystal.

Minneapolis.—E. Engler has been granted a license to re-open the Crystal theater, 305 Hennepin avenue. The Crystal has been closed since May, when J. Barnet, former proprietor, was denied a renewal of his license when the Humane Society placed charges against him. Barnet testified for Engler, asserting he would have no interest whatever in the Crystal if Engler were granted a license to operate it.

Film Men to Hold Picnic.

Minneapolis. — Minneapolis exchange managers and their road men have decided to hold a picnic and out-door athletic celebration on August 2. The place for the meeting has not been chosen, but the town most favorably mentioned by the film men is Parker's Lake, Minn. If the scheme goes through the exchanges here will grant a half-holiday to their employees. Some of the committees appointed were: Committee on arrangements, W. H. Stafford, L. V. Calvert, Harry Rowe and W. J. Egan. Athletic committee, A. A. Hixon and J. L. Johnston. Publicity committee, T. E. Mortensen, W. J. Egan and J. L. Johnston.

Baseball games, running races and freak events will be on the program. "Wet" goods will be tabooed and the women and children are invited. It is planned to have one ticket cover all eating and traveling expenses.

Minneapolis at the Convention.

Minneapolis.—Minneapolis delegates to the big Chicago convention and exposition traveled to the Windy City in a special car. Among those who made the trip were: A. I. Steffes, C. W. Sawin, H. E. Friedman, S. A. Louis and Mrs. Louis; J. E. Moore, Manie Gottlieb, D. G. Rodgers, J. V. Bryson, A. A. Hixon, J. L. Johnston, T. J. Hamlin, W. J. Egan, D. W. Chamberlain, L. A. Horn, J. G. Gilosky and Mrs. Gilosky; C. E. Van Duzee, Harry Green and Mrs. Green; J. F. Cubberly, Harry Rathner, A. Warner, C. W. Campbell and Mrs. Campbell; Oliver A. Rowe and Harry L. Muir.

Jones to Direct "Civilization."

Minneapolis.—H. A. Jones has been picked as general stage director for "Civilization" by the Supreme Feature Film Company here. Conrad F. Rose has been appointed to the staff and is doing art work on the same production.

Winona Closes to Children.

Winona.—In order to help stem the tide of infantile paralysis which threatens to overrun the country the moving picture theaters of this city have been closed to all persons less than sixteen years of age. It is believed by the local health authorities that much danger of being exposed to the vicious malady will be removed in this manner. The theater men have complied with the order.

Westcott to Manage Peerless Office.

Minneapolis.—The new Peerless Film Company, which will have headquarters in this city, will have as its manager E. A. Westcott, one of the best-known men in the Northwestern moving picture field and a man of wide training in the business which will fall under his control. Incidentally he is one of the oldest film men in Minneapolis.

Pictures for State Guardsmen.

Minneapolis—Mrs. Edmund Pennington was leader in a movement which has sent a complete moving picture outfit to the camp in Southern Texas of the First Regiment. A new run of films will be sent down every week.

Territorial Suit Over "The Spoilers."

Minneapolis—"The Spoilers" is due for a considerable airing in court, judging from the indications that come up here, following a brush before the courts in Iowa. While showing the feature recently at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, the Friedman company was served with papers in a suit for receivership and accounting by the Gates City Feature Film Company of Kansas City, which claims a prior right to the picture. When hearing was called the Gates City firm had withdrawn its suit and filed a counter petition in the cross suit of the Friedman concern. This matter will be thrashed out before the United States District Court.

The Selig Polyscope Company also has brought suit against the Gates City concern in the Federal courts of Iowa, asserting that the request for impounding the films and the accounting was an infringement of copyright.

INTERESTING ILLINOIS ITEMS.

By Frank H. Madison, 623 South Wabash Ave., Chicago.

Miners Quit Rum for Pictures.

Taylorville, Ill.—Jelsyville, one of the new mining towns on the Chicago & Illinois Midland Railroad, is to have a photoplay house instead of a dramshop. Joseph Dozier is remodeling his saloon building into a moving picture and vaudeville theater. Joseph Morfine will be associated with him in its management.

May Discover That a Theater Is No Toy

Lewistown.—Dr. J. A. Ray, local philanthropist, has purchased the Gem theater in this city and turned it over to his children to do with it as their intellectual powers direct. It is hoped to make the photoplay a vital factor in the community development.

Theater Making Too Much Money.

Pittsfield.—A prevailing opinion that Burr Swan's picture show at the opera house is making excessive profits led to a proposal in the city council to charge a license of $1.50 a night. The motion lost. It was suggested that a conference be had with the picture show management to decide what was reasonable. While discussing the photoplay matter two aldermen grew warm and one left the hall, announcing he would resign.

Accident in Gallery of Airdome.

Rockford.—If the outdoor exhibitor is his brother's keeper he should remove all trees near his place. A limb with three boys on it gave way as they were watching the show at the Airdome theater on Charles street and one of the youngsters suffered a broken leg.

From Over the State.

Dallas City.—The Princess Flora is the euphonious title of the new moving picture theater which S. R. Taylor has opened in the Knights of Pythias block.

Holcomb.—A moving picture show has been opened at the Masonic hall by Bain & King, who will give performances every Friday night.

Lincoln.—Harry White succeeds Fred Wade as manager of the Princess theater, which is owned by Belaski & Schneider. Vaudeville has been discontinued, and for a while at least nothing but pictures will be used.

Chenoa.—Charles E. Hawkins of Mahomet is remodeling the Rex theater, which he recently purchased from Arch C. Howard.

Peoria.—Edwin L. Barker, founder of the Barker-Swan Film Service, has resigned as president of that company and taken a position with a moving picture company.

Springfield.—Secretary of State Stevenson has issued a license to the Fort Dearborn Photoplays, Inc., Chicago. Capital, $5,000. Incorporators: O. Y. Baker, Thomas O. Gibbs and H. Hannan.

AROUND ABOUT MINNEAPOLIS.

Red Wing, Minn.—The Auditorium moving picture theater here has passed under the management of Axel Neilson.

Superior, Wis.—This city is now assured a $100,000 vaudeville and moving picture house. The plans and specifications have been turned over to the contractors by the Cook Amusement Company.

Little Fork, Minn.—The moving picture theater at this place has been taken over by A. V. McNeil and W. R. Deteker.

Wimbloden, N. D.—The new photoplay theater in the Beadoux block here will be managed by R. Clendening.

Norfolk Has Censorship Bill

Virginia City Theater Men are Actively Opposing Measure—Otto Wells Says Police Now Have Powers.

Norfolk, Va.—Motion picture exhibitors of Norfolk are facing legislation in the council providing for a board of motion picture survey or censorship, such an ordinance having been proposed in the Board of Aldermen by its president. The proposed committee will have a membership of five, appointed by the judge of the Corporation Court, three upon his own initiative and two upon the recommendations of the League of Mothers' Clubs of Norfolk.

Local exhibitors are up in arms over the proposed ordinance, well knowing it will place additional hardship upon them, and feeling that there is absolutely no need for censorship of this sort.

Otto Wells, Harry Hofheimer, Mr. Rohr and others interested in the local industry have issued statements condemning he enactment of this legislation. Mr. Vells, who is the general manager of the Vells interests here, rightfully contends hat the mayor and chief of police have ufficient authority now vested in them o suppress any objectionable pictures, nd that the motion picture business is ot run for children. The Wells houses o not cater to their trade, as the pictures hey show are usually too deep for them n much the same manner as the books hat fail to interest children because of heir inability to understand their mean- ng. Mr. Wells further states that their usiness is run in a proper manner and ndecent pictures are not exhibited.

The idea of the proposer is to secure rotection against the "raw stuff" that e declares is embodied in many of the ictures shown in Norfolk. He declares hat recently several films were presented ere which should not have been allowed o be shown in the theaters, that they ere a disgrace and a reflection upon the ommunity.

In and About Cleveland

Kramer Buys the Ray Theater.

Cleveland.—The Ray theater, Prospect venue, near East 9th street, which has een operated for two years by the Fire- roof Theater Company, has been pur- hased by F. H. Kramer, jeweler, who eld a perpetual lease on the land. The roperty is held at $125,000.

The new picture full of lively action and good clean omedy.

Winchester Bars Children from All Theaters

Kentucky Town Authorities Taking No Chances on Epidemic of Infantile Paralysis —State Fire Marshal Active in Formulating Theater Regulations.

By G. D. Crain, Jr., 1404 Starks Building, Louisville.

LOUISVILLE, Ky.—Reports received from Winchester, Ky., were to the effect that Isaac Browne, of the City Board of Health at Bowling Green, Ky., had ordered the moving picture theaters to bar all children under fifteen years of age from the theaters on account of the alleged epidemic of infantile paralysis. At Winchester one isolated case was reported, and the city authorities did bar children from the theaters. However, this order did not come from the State Board of Health, which merely advised local authorities throughout the state to consider the advisability of restricting the assembling of children in places of amusement, schools, street cars, trains, etc. A special bulletin was issued by the State Board, but no specific orders were given on the subject. A rumor got out to the effect that the State Board had issued such orders, but investigation on the part of Louisville exhibitors has proved that the rumor arose from misinterpretation of the bulletin issued at Bowling Green. However, at Winchester the city authorities have issued orders which even bar children from attending picnics and the public parks. A few cases have been reported in Louisville, but no action has been taken or is likely to be taken by the local authorities.

Kentucky Adding Theater Regulations.

Frankfort, Ky.—State Fire Marshal Pannell has called a meeting at Frankfort, Ky., to be held shortly for the purpose of adopting drastic regulations for the protection of the public in moving picture theaters, public schools, etc., and in the handling of explosives, inflammable materials, etc. The regulations will prohibit aisle blocking in theaters and specify the character of fire escapes, exits, aisles, ventilation, moving picture booths, electrical equipment, wiring, etc., and the manner of storing and handling films, etc. People who will be affected by the order will be given a chance to present their side at the hearing. The regulations will also include handling explosives, oils and inflamables of various kinds in other lines of business. Louisville exhibitors do not expect that the regulations will have much bearing on the local theaters, but will undoubtedly have considerable effect on small theaters in isolated districts.

Rozelle to Be World Film Officer.

Louisville, Ky.—Announcement was recently made in this city to the effect that Logan A. Rozelle, a well known local business man, had been appointed assistant sales manager of the World Film Corporation, and would go to New York on August 1 to take up his duties. He recently retired from the position of special superintendent of the Oliver Typewriter Company, with which company he has been connected for fifteen years. Mr. Rozelle came to Louisville from Franklin, Tenn., and has been here for eight years, handling the district agencies from Louisville.

Fourth Avenue Increases Capital.

Louisville, Ky.—Amended articles of incorporation have been filed by the Fourth Avenue Amusement Company, increasing its capital from $75,000 to $95,000. The company operates the Alamo theater, one of the largest and finest in the state. Fred J. Dolle is president.

Strohman Entertains Newsies.

Louisville, Ky.—Henry Strohman, manager of the Baxter theater in the Highlands, had as his guest all of the news carriers and street hustlers in the Highlands to carry for the Louisville Herald at a special program arranged especially for the newsies. A special five-reel film entitled "Sunshine Dad," and "Tons of Fun," a comedy featuring "Fatty" Arbuckle, were on the program.

Louisville News Notes.

Henry Guthrie, head of the Aladdin Film Company, recently returned from a trip to New York, where he saw a number of large film men, and viewed the new picture of "Civilization" at the Criterion. Mr. Guthrie returned with a bunch of interesting live gossip concerning film men, theaters, etc., in the Empire city. Shortly following his return he went to Chicago to get in for the last day or two of the Exhibitors' convention.

With the thermometer hovering around the century mark in Louisville attendance at the downtown theaters has not been up to the standard since the middle of the month, though the airdomes and parks are getting a fair run. Some of the exhibitors have taken advantage of the present dull afternoons to view a few ball games. In fact the boys had a regular party out at Eclipse Park a few days ago when Fred Dolle, Joe Steurle, Louis Steurle and some of the other leading exhibitors were present to see the Colonels of the American Association administer a drubbing to the tail-end Brewers.

Kentucky News Notes.

Lexington, Ky.—B. J. Tracey, John E. Eliott and F. G. Stilz of this city have filed articles of incorporation of the Alhambra Amusement Company, listing a capital stock of $20,000, divided into $15,000 of preferred stock, and $5,000 worth of common. The limit of indebtedness is fixed at $25,000. The new company will take over the Alhambra theater at Richmond.

Lynnville, Ky.—E. J. McCuan will shortly start a moving picture show. The building has been secured, a machine purchased, and the only delay is in getting an engine and other electrical equipment to generate power.

Hellier, Ky.—W. D. Bartley and H. Cockill are about ready to open a moving picture theater in the Mullins building.

Bowling Green, Ky.—J. P. Masters, manager of the Princess theater, has secured the services of Jack Hanes of Nashville, Tenn., to handle the big photoplay instrument which was recently installed in the theater. This music has proved very attractive to the people of the city.

Berea, Ky.—The management of Berea College has arranged to have a free moving picture show in Berea Chapel every Saturday evening for the students and also for the public. The first performance consisted of a Chaplin comedy and a travelog picture. There is no regular picture house in the little town.

Louisville, Ky.—The Adger Amusement Company, with a capital stock of $2,000, has been incorporated by Adger Wall of Chicago, E. L. Wall, Chicago, and Charles Buete of Louisville. The stock is all subscribed for.

Hopkinsville, Ky.—The example of the City Commissioners in placing the ban on carnival shows has had its effect all over the state, many cities adopting similar regulations. As a result this form of amusement will be forced into other fields, and the exhibitors of moving pictures will have things nearly all their own way when it comes to controlling amusements.

BIOGRAPH.

GOLD AND GLITTER (Reissue, July 31). The cast: The old brothers (William J. Butler and Walter Lewis); the girl (Lillian Gish); her sweetheart (Lionel Barrymore); the husband (Elmer Booth); the wife (Grace Lewis); a lumberman (Harry Carey); girls (Dorothy Gish and Gertrude Bambrick).

As the husband leaves for the lumber regions, his wife gives him a memory message to be opened after his arrival. Attracted by a maid, cherished by the love of two old brothers, he forgets it until some time later. The message serves its purpose, however, for through it, after a thrilling experience, the maid learns the true value of the man's love, while he in his turn, goes back to his waiting wife and finds there, along with his shame and regeneration, his heart's desire.

THE HOUSE OF DISCORD (Two Parts—Aug. 1).—The cast: The daughter (Dorothy Gish); the wife (Blanche Sweet); the husband (Lionel Barrymore); the wife's sweetheart (Marshall Neilan); the groom (Antonio Moreno).

In her youth the mother was saved from the fatal mistake by an accident, but it caused her years of separation from child and husband. It had occurred primarily through her self-righteous sister-in-law's domination and interference. A like fate and downfall threatened the daughter, now reaching maturity. The mother's insistence separated the child from her environment. Love and understanding did the rest.

LUBIN.

THE PRICE OF DISHONOR (Two Parts—Aug. 1).—The cast: Colonel Lyon (Melvin Mayo); Kate Lyon (Velma Whitman); Lieut. Frank Waring (L. C. Shumway); Capt. John Eliot (George Routh); Faith Emory (Eleanor Blevins); Joseph Sutton (George Berrell); Grady (Gordon Murray). Written and directed by Captain Wilbert Melville.

Kate, the daughter of Colonel Lyon, of the East Indian Service, is loved by Lieutenant Frank Waring, the paymaster, and Captain Eliot, of the Ordnance Department. She prefers Frank, and they are engaged. Eliot is induced to gamble by Grady, a cock fight promoter, and soon he is heavily in debt. Grady threatens to expose him. Kate is visited by Faith Emory, an old friend, who is going to the interior of India as a missionary. Faith meets Frank, and congratulates Kate on her choice. Eliot, in desperate need of money, steals some from the payroll, and in fear of discovery, hides the money in Frank's gloves. When a search is made, the money is found and Frank is ordered to his room to await trial. Kate impulsively denounces him.

A new consignment of ammunition is received. Eliot tests it and finds that it is worthless. Instead of reporting the matter, he visits the company's agent, and accepts a bribe, as the company would lose important contracts if the truth leaked out. Eliot, elated, pays his debts. He makes love to Kate, and she, in pique at Frank, consents to marry him. Kate receives a letter from Faith, which is brought by a native convert. The letter states that Faith is very ill, and would like Kate to send her medicine. Kate receives permission from the Colonel to go to Faith's relief. She is accompanied by several sepoys, who take with them some of the worthless ammunition for their rifles.

A few hours later, Eliot is awakened from a drunken stupor in a dive by the sound of natives in the next house. He hears them tell of a plan to attack the missionaries. He goes back to the post, and informs the men of what he has heard. He is half way sobered when he learns that Kate has gone to Faith's cabin. He rushes to the ammunition room, and discovers that the soldiers have taken the worthless ammunition. The Colonel calls a number of men to ride to Kate's relief, and again the worthless ammunition is being taken. Eliot, unable to stand the strain any longer, breaks down and confesses. The Colonel is distracted. He rushes the soldiers off with full supply of ammunition, and has Eliot confined in the guard room. Frank, learning what has happened, begs the Colonel for a chance to redeem himself, and is allowed to depart with the men.

Meanwhile, Kate has arrived at Faith's cabin, and the attack is made. The soldiers discover that their rifle cartridges do not go off, and they have to depend upon their revolvers. The attacking natives surround the cabin, and the little body of defenders is gradually reduced. When Frank and the rescuing party finally come up, only Kate and Faith are alive. Eliot, his conscience sorely tormented by the terrible consequences of his dishonorable act, writes a note which fully exonerates Frank, and then kills himself. On the way home, Kate is ashamed to look at Frank, but when they reach the post, and the true state of affairs is known, she is only too happy to place Frank's ring on her finger again.

KALEM.

THE GREAT DETECTIVE (July 18). The cast: Ham (Lloyd V. Hamilton); Bud (Bud Duncan); Mrs. Worry (Ellen Godsay); Her husband (A. Edmondson).

Ham—with his 999 disguises—is called on by Mrs. Worry to keep an eye on her husband. Armed with a photograph of hubby the two set out on a riotous sleuthing career which ends with a bang when they find hubby at dinner with another fair lady and send the news to wifey.

A WATERY WOOING (July 19). The cast: Flossie (Ethel Teare); Her aunt (Mytra Sterling); Tom (Victor Rottman); The professor (Gus Leonard). Directed by Harry Millarde.

Tom is not in favor with Flossie's aunt though the latter lady thinks he is just right. Tom's fertile brain forms a scheme and by a fake rescue of Flossie from the ocean waves he gets in the good graces of the stern aunt. But when the next day finds aunty in peril herself the truth comes out—Tom can't swim.

Professor Spoofledoo is this time on the job and saves aunty. The latter crafty widow then claims him for her own, but the professor would much rather bestow his ardent attentions on Flossie. The tangle is finally straightened out as it should be—with the professor and aunty in each other's arms and Tom and Flossie wandering along rosy paths.

A DOUBLE ELOPEMENT (July 21). The cast: Sis Hopkins (Rose Melville); Prof. Doolittle (Henry Murdock); His sister (Olive West); Skull N. Bones (C. D. Peruchie); Mr. Higgins (Richard Purdon); the maid (Frances Nemoyer). Directed by Robert Ellis.

Sis, is the maid in the Higgins home, adjoining that of Prof. Doolittle, a physical culture specialist. Sis takes up the study of 'fysical culture' with disastrous results, for her throwing out of the medicine ball renders the Doolittle maid a subject for hospital treatment. Sis is then loaned to the Professor's establishment. On that night the perfect maid had planned with her pal to get away with the family plate.

Sis and the Professor plan an elopement, the Professor's sister and Skull N. Bones, the local undertaker, plan the same thing, the pal arrives to carry out his plan with the maid, and detectives who have heard the maid's delirious talk in the hospital, appear to frustrate the scheme. Naturally there is a mix-up of considerable proportions with a goodly share of laughs before matters are straightened out.

IN DEATH'S PATHWAY (No. 89 of the "Hazards of Helen"—July 22). The cast: Helen, Lone Point operator (Helen Gibson); Dick Benton (P. S. Pembroke); Eleanor Burkett (Pearl Anibus); her father (G. A. Williams); Guy Warren (George Routh). Written by S. A. Van Petten. Directed by James Davis.

Burkett, superintendent of the Western Railway, opposes his daughter's friendship for Dick Benton, one of the company's lawyers, favoring the latter's fellow-worker, Guy Warren. Warren succeeds in putting through a scheme which results in Dick's discharge. The lovers plan to elope and enlist the aid of Helen. But Eleanor's father learns of the move and wires ahead to police officials to board her train and arrest her while he follows in his special. By a daring leap from a handcar to the train Helen succeeds in warning Eleanor of her peril, but is too late and Helen and Dick are forced to stand idly by while Burkett starts on the return trip in his special, carefully guarding Eleanor.

While Pembroke and Helen speed in an auto on the road alongside the track they suddenly see the engineer and fireman of the special flung to the ground by a bursting steam valve. Their warning cries unheard by the passengers on the special, Helen decides on a desperate course and they take a short cut, bringing them to a bridge over the tracks before the wild train. Pembroke climbs over the railing and allows his body to sway in mid-air, while Helen drops until she has only a perilous hold on his feet. As the speeding train whizzes by beneath she abandons her hold and lands atop the tender. In a few seconds the train is brought to a stop. Helen's pleading combined with the evidence of Dick's courage soon breaks down Burkett's stubborn will and the lovers are happy.

ESSANAY.

THE CHIMNEY SWEEP (Two Parts—Aug. 1).—The cast: Joyce Wynne (Joyce Fair); Jimmy (Tommy Harper); Col. Wynne (John Cossar); Donalson (Fred Malatesta).

Jimmy, the waif, sees Joyce while cleaning chimney in Col. Wynne's magnificent home. He believes her the most beautiful girl he has ever seen. He clips a curl while she sleeps and leaves a note explaining that he "tuk the kurl bekawse yure the purtiest gurl I ever saw." Donaldson, the colonel's close friend, adopts Jimmy, who grows up into a well-educated young man. Joyce likes him immensely, but he has a rival, Carl Bellou. Jimmy writes a note to Joyce informing her that one of her suitors is the little chimney sweep who has striven ever since to make himself worthy of her. He tells Bellou about it and the latter hurries to announce himself as the chimney sweep. "I had hoped it was Jimmy," she tells him, and Jimmy enters in time to hear her words. He had the ring with him.

VERNON HOWE BAILEY'S SKETCH BOOK OF PETROGRAD AND SCENIC (Aug. 2).—The capital of Russia, which has for centuries reflected the glory of the czars and been the pivot point for the merging of the far east and the far west, a dividing line of Oriental and Occidental civilization, has been pictured in these motion drawings with all the skill of this renowned artist. The mysterious palaces of the equally mysterious city have been caught by his photographic eye and transferred to the screen. The architectural beauty of the Romanoff possession—possible to the richest family in the world—were all sketches before the outbreak of the war. The drawings have now been completed and in the film offer an excellent study of the old St. Petersburg, which added new features to its history by the recent change in its name. By contrast, 500 feet of Western America scenic share the reel with the sketches.

THE WAR BRIDE OF PLUMVILLE (Three Parts—Aug. 5).—The cast: Sallie Plum (Nell Craig); Ezra Plum (Ernest Maupain); Frank Hazard (Edmund F. Cobb); Captain Dalziel (Ullrich Haupt); Sargent, his accomplice (Harry Dunkinson); Amanda Plum (Florence Oberle); Judge Pendlehurst (Hugh Thompson).

The principal industry of Plumville is the Plumville Iron Works, of which Ezra Plum is president. Sallie Plum, his daughter, is the sugar plum of Plumville. Frank Hazard, foreman of the works, realizes this. Two strangers arrive in Plumville. It is apparent to both that Ezra is some plum; further apparent to Dalziel that Sallie is an exceptional plum as plums go, and also apparent to Sargent that Amanda, the aunt, isn't such a bad plum at that.

The strangers pose as foreign buyers with a war contract and Ezra falls hard. Frank, who is sweet on Sallie, and Judge Pendlehurst, who has more than a platonic affection for Amanda, suspect the nowcomers, but they have Ezra trimmed for $25,000 before the city detectives reach Plumville. Ezra Plum collapses, Sallie Plum takes back Frank's ring and Amanda Plum starts a quarrel with the Judge, proving that the old affection has returned. And now there's joy in Plumville, and the Plumville Iron Works hum merrily manufacturing—cast iron hitching posts.

VIM FEATURE COMEDY.

WILL A WOMAN TELL? (July 26).—Wifey gossips and stirs up the neighborhood. Hubby determines to teach her a lesson, and, having prepared her mind by pretending to be greatly worried, sends her to bed with the injunction not to look out of the window facing the woodshed. Her curiosity gets the better of her, and she sees hubby bury something in a hole under a tree. That night he talks in his sleep and confesses a murder. Next morning as soon as she thinks he is gone she confides in a neighbor, who informs the police. The "crimnal" is arrested and taken to the scene of the crime, where the box is dug up. On the lid is the inscription: "You can't keep a secret, but you can keep this." The laugh is on Wifey, and we hope she is cured of her propensity to tell everything she knows.

HUBBY'S RELATIVES—(Aug. 2).—Lothario has many girls and is pursued by creditors. He falls in love with a new girl and marries her, having told his creditors that she is wealthy. His old flames read of the marriage and descend upon him. Likewise the creditors come to collect. Hubby in despair introduces them as his cousin, sisters, uncles, aunts and other relatives. He gets them out of the house, but they become suspicious and return. After he has exhausted every effort to keep the facts from wifey he is exposed.

VIM.

THE HEROES (July 27).—The cast: Plump (Babe Hardy); Runt (Billy Ruge); Schoolmaster (Bert Tracey); sweetheart of Plump and Runt (Ray Godfrey); Circus Agent (Joe Cohan).

Day succeeded day in one happy sequence for Plump and Runt. Occasionally they caught the drift of their teacher's meaning; often they did not, but what matter? Had they not beanshooters, tacks and other little things with which to annoy him? Was not Ray the object of their youthful passion, also a member of their class, and did they not rob every orchard for her delectation?

One day the circus arrived in town and then began the trouble. Fascinated by the tales of the flashy agent, Ray vanishes and Plump and Runt are left alone. They take up the trail and at last locate the circus in a distant town. To their horror they recognize Ray as the High Diver as she stands poised for her terrific drop through space. As she hits the water her lovers also dive in and pandemonium reigns. Down comes the tent, over goes the tank, and the villainous circus man counts more stars than ever were in the firmament as the reunited trio set out for their peaceful country home.

WHAT'LL YOU HAVE? (July 28).—The cast: Pokes (Robert Burns); Jabbs (Walter Stull); Bartender (Robin Williamson).

Jabbs' steady customers try to persuade him that Robin, the bartender he has just discharged, is a member of the Black Hand organization and decide to perpetrate a little joke on him. By the time Pokes appears in the barroom and proceeds not only to eat all the free lunch, but even to get away with a cigar and leaves nothing in the line of cash behind him, Jabbs is willing to believe that perhaps the Black Hand is really after him. After Pokes' meeting Robin on the street and purloining a watermelon from him he seeks refuge in Jabbs' saloon. Jabbs is so scared that he runs for assistance. While Jabbs is seeking help Pokes makes himself at home in the saloon, sampling everything in sight. When Jabbs finally returns to the cafe with police aid Pokes is having the time of his life. When the police order Pokes to come outside he threatens them with the watermelon and the police, believing that it is a bomb, open fire on him with their revolvers. The bullets hit the beer kegs behind which Pokes is hiding, with the result that the entire place is wrecked and both Pokes and Jabbs are deluged with the streams pouring out of the kegs.

HUMAN HOUNDS (Aug. 3).—The cast: Plump (Babe Hardy); Runt (Billy Ruge); General Debility (Bert Tracy); his wife (Ray Godfrey); Count de Lummox (Joe Cohan); Countess Mudge de Lummox (Mudge Cohen).

With the secrets of a nation entrusted to his care, General Debility cautiously places them in his bureau as his charming friend, the Countess Mudge, enters his room. Her fascinating manner entirely puts the old chap off his guard and she discovers the hiding place of the papers. The old General's wife, tired of his everlasting flirtations, decides to divorce him and with the divorce papers calls on the famous detectives, Plump and Runt, to serve them.

At the same time the General discovers that his valued plots are missing and also employs Plump and Runt to find them. Not gifted with any great amount of intelligence our two worthies manage to muddle things up in splendid style. They find the plots, mistake them for the divorce papers, are themselves robbed, and finally blunder into the right course, owing to the indecision of the female mind, as the General's wife, changing her mind in regard to the divorce, and returns to them the missing plots which she fondly imagined were her divorce papers.

WAIT A MINUTE (Aug. 4).—The cast: Pokes (Robt. Burns); Jabbs (Walt. Stull); Jane Higgs (Helen Gilmore); Robin (Robin Williamson); his sweetheart (Ethel Burton); her sister (Edna Reynolds); Thirsty Norton (Harry Naughton).

Jane Higgs is admired by Pokes, who tries in every possible way to win her affections but to no avail. Jane is not only the village constable but also the head of the Fire Department, and the local Justice of the Peace as well. Being suddenly called to assist the sheriff of the adjoining county, Jane appoints Pokes as her substitute to take charge of the office in her absence. Jane has scarcely departed when Pokes receives word that Bad Jabbs is shooting up Thirsty Norton's Cafe. Putting on his police hat, Pokes starts off to capture Jabbs, but one look at the bad man and Pokes seeks refuge back in the office and emerges only at the call of fire from a nearby barn.

While busy at the fire, Robin rushes in and demands that Pokes act as justice of the peace and marry him immediately. Pokes quits the fire and proceeds with the wedding service, but the call for help coming again from the dance hall stops the marriage while Pokes again rushes forth. Then the various calls coming for Pokes that are part of the duties of the many offices he holds keeps him rushing madly in all directions. He finally discovers that Robin has eloped not with his real sweetheart, but with her older sister who has disguised herself in Ethel's clothes. However, now that he has a couple of young people in front of him, Pokes is determined to fulfill the duties of the justice of the peace and is going to marry them regardless of Robin's vehement protests.

By a clever scheme Pokes succeeds in capturing Jabbs and putting out the fire in the barn and proudly returns to the office with his prisoner. When Pokes arrives at the office, he finds that in his absence Jane has returned with Robin's real sweetheart, Ethel, and has already performed the wedding service. Moreover, instead of being praised for his daring capture of Jabbs, he sees his admired Jane clasp the bad man to her bosom and proclaim him as her long lost husband. Picking up the presents he has given Jane, Pokes, heartbroken, wends his weary way over the hills to another village.

KNICKERBOCKER STAR FEATURES.

THE SAND LARK—(Three Parts—July 28). The cast: Joe Manley (Henry King); Jenny Sayer (Margaret Landis); Her Father (Henry Stanley); Chester Hoover (Charles Dudley); Helen Wright (Joyce Moore); Her Husband (Norman Luke). Direction H. M. & E. D. Horkheimer.

Jenny, the sweetheart of Joe Manley, a fisherman, finds a weeping woman on the sands and brings her home. A child is born, and Jenny, who has promised not to reveal the woman's presence, is placed in a compromising position when her sweetheart returns.

The woman flees and meets a man, who takes her to a neighboring beach resort. Joe follows, believing the woman is Jenny, and on discovering his mistake forces the man to go with him to marry Jenny. The woman meets her husband, from whom she is estranged, and takes him to see their child. Reconciliation takes place after the man and Jenny's paralyzed father are burned to death in a fire caused by the paralytic as an act of vengeance.

THE CONFLICT—(Three Parts—July 24).—The cast: Paul Gilbert (Charles West); Nell Gail (Fritzi Brunette); Harold Morgan (Jack Pickford); Alice Morgan (Vivian Reed); John Barnison (Frank Clark); Allan Newell (Harry Lonsdale). Written by Rosa Raymond. Directed by William Robert Daly.

Allan Newell, rector of the fashionable St. Paul's Church, informs Paul Gilbert, a rising young minister, that he, Newell, is planning a trip abroad and would like Gilbert to succeed him as rector of St. Paul's. At the same time Paul Gilbert receives a letter from a friend asking him to occupy the pulpit at Seamen's Bethel, located in the slums of a great city.

The Rev. Gilbert is in love with Alice Morgan, sister of Harold Morgan, and he is torn betwixt the ambition to occupy the fashionable church and what he believes to be his duty in the Master's cause, namely, to take charge of the humble Bethel. Finally he informs his betrothed that he will decline the rectorship of St. Paul's and devote his life to the seamen's mission. "You cannot expect me to follow you into the slums," exclaims Alice, and she breaks the engagement.

Down near the Seamen's Bethel Nell Gail, an orphan, is the owner of the "Oasis" saloon. She accidentally meets Harold Morgan, who falls in love with the girl. In the meantime Paul Gilbert has plunged into his work among the rough seamen and the benefits of his labors in the Master's vineyard are shown when the "Oasis" saloon loses much of its income.

When Morgan visits the saloon in hopes of meeting Nell Gail he becomes involved in a game of cards. One of the players is caught cheating. A shot rings out and the man falls lifeless. Morgan is arrested, charged with murder. At the trial it appears that Harold Morgan is to be convicted of murder.

Bill Boyle, a water front bully, as the trial progresses, endeavors to escape from the city, and is injured from a fall from a freight car. Taken to the hospital, he confesses that he is the real slayer of the man in the saloon. He writes a note to Paul Gilbert, confessing that he did the deed.

The Rev. Gilbert arrives with the note just in time to have the trial postponed for further investigation of Boyle's confession. It is later found to be the truth. Alice Morgan finally realizes that she loves Paul Gilbert. She is also grateful because of his friendship to her brother in time of need. Ultimately there is a double wedding, in which Harold Morgan and Nell Gail and Alice Morgan and Paul Gilbert take the matrimonial vows

THE OLD MAN WHO TRIED TO GROW YOUNG (Three Parts—July 31).—The cast: Rodney Graves (Al. W. Filson); George Harding (Chas. H. West); Doris Keene (Vivian Reed); Dr. Ceneri (Harry Lonsdale); Mrs. Keene (Eugenie Besserer). Written by Malcolm Douglas. Directed by T. N. Heffron.

Rodney Graves, millionaire merchant, and George Harding, his secretary, are both in love with Doris Keene, a young girl interested in charitable work. Graves, well along in years, is not in the best of health. He gives the girl every attention, and even signs a check for $4,000 for a charitable institution in which Doris is interested. Doris, however, has no love for the elderly millionaire, thinking only of George Harding.

Dr. Ceneri, a charlatan, knowing of Graves' longing for youth, takes advantage of the millionaire's declining [illegible] and offers to sell him an elixir which will bring back his youth. The engagement of Doris Keene and George Harding is announced.

The charlatan calls at the millionaire's home with the elixir hypnotizes him and then dyes Graves' hair brown. When Graves awakens he really believes that at least thirty years have fallen off his shoulders. With this belief comes the ambition to win Doris. He proposes and is rejected. He vows to be revenged upon George Harding, his secretary.

Graves makes it appear that Harding has absconded with the payroll of the company, and the young secretary is arrested and placed in jail. Graves then goes to Doris and tells her that he will have Harding released from prison, providing she marries [illegible]. Doris resolves to sacrifice herself for her sweetheart, and marries the millionaire.

In the meantime, the elixir carried by Graves is exhausted, and as the influence of this powerful drug wanes, he is seized with heart pains. When Doris, his bride, scorns his love, Graves shouts to her that George Harding is innocent of any crime, and that it was a scheme of his to gain possession of the girl. Then he is again seized with a paroxysm of pain and falls lifeless. Graves' butler overhears his confession to his bride. Harding is released from jail because Graves' confession frees him of any guilt.

AN ANGELIC ATTITUDE (Aug. 5).—The cast: Tom Miller (Tom Mix); Grace Williams (Victoria Forde); Daniel Miller (Joe Ryan). Written by Edwin Ray Coffin. Produced by Tom Mix.

Al Matthews writes to his old friend, Daniel Miller, that a young lady wishes to come west to sketch some real western scenery, and will arrive at Miller's ranch within a few days. Daniel Miller is well along in years, but when Grace, the artist, appears at the ranch, visions of matrimony again come to the old gentleman.

Tom, Daniel Miller's son, also admires the pretty girl. It does not take long for Tom and Grace to fall in love, but their love-making is constantly interrupted by the interference of father. Grace wisnes to paint a picture, and she induces Tom's father to pose as an angel hanging from a rope which is tied to the limb of a tree. When father is thus made secure, Tom and Grace escape to plight their troth uninterruptedly.

FIGHTING INFANTILE PARALYSIS (July 27).—This subject will be released in place of "Creating Life from a Dead Leaf," which was originally scheduled for release on that day. On the same reel will be a cartoon comedy entitled "Jitney Jack and Gasolena." A synopsis of this latter subject was printed on page 836 of the July 29 issue. "Creating Life from a Dead Leaf" will be released at a later date.

DORSEY TRAVEL PICTURES (Imperial India Part 4 Rough Riders of India Aug. 3).—In this picture some of the field sports of India are shown. First there is an elephant race. These animals, though very large and awkward, can travel at a terrific rate. Next sword practice is shown. Horsemen, riding at full speed, cut a sheep in two in one stroke, a feat requiring great skill. Other feats of horsemanship are shown, such as pulling a peg and piercing the heart of a great manikin. A camel race affords much amusement.

Some native troops in a sham battle perform remarkably well. The cavalry in particular give a very spectacular performance. Then some Nautch girls are shown. These are the Geishas of India and command enormous salaries. They are pictured in some of the dances which made them famous.

NESTOR.

CAUGHT WITH THE GOODS (July 31).—The cast: Reggie Smith (Eddie Lyons), his father (Hart Gamble); June (Lee Moran). Written by Ben Cohn. Produced by Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran.

Because Reggie is prone to look upon the liquor when it is red, white and blue, father severely scores him, and his patience reaches a climax when he is presented with a bill for damages Reggie has inflicted on a poor, inoffensive restaurant. Reggie is in love with June, his father's ward, and she reciprocates his affection.

Reggie arrives home early one morning—to be exact, at 3 A. M.—and is confronted by his angry father. Father calls him a grafter, and, flaunting the bill of damages before him, tells him to leave the house and not return until he has paid the bill. June intercedes, but father is obdurate and Reggie is thrown out. He spends the night on the lawn, and is awakened the next morning by a paper being thrown in his face. Idly looking over it, he sees where a man who knows the elite and club life can get a job, and he decides to try for the place.

The Association of Stevedores are wrought up over the advance of beer from five to ten cents a can. There is untold suffering among them, and they secure the services of Detective Potts to advance their cause. Thus it is that Reggie and Potts meet, for Potts has inserted the advertisement.

Unknown to Reggie, his father is head of the graft trust that advanced the price of beer. The members meet each night to plan new schemes, but Potts and Reggie discover the meeting place and make a raid. The last to come out is Mr. Smith. Recognition follows, and upon being allowed to leave, Smith "makes good" with both Reggie and Potts.

Reggie is enabled to pay off his bills, and as he has proven his father to be the biggest grafter of all, is allowed to return home and bask in the smiles of June.

LAEMMLE.

PARTNERS (Aug. 3).—The cast: Stuart Kingsley (Howard Crampton); Kate (Catherine Calvert); Donald Grant (Hobart Henley); Silas Gray (Marcus Moriarty). Written by John C. Brownell. Produced by Hobart Henley.

Kate is the only daughter of Stuart Kingsley, head of the Gasoline Trust. Just before riding one morning she asks her father for spending money and he gives her a hundred-dollar bill. Kate tires while riding that morning and decides to rest in a little summer house in the park. On a bench in the little house she sees Donald Grant fast asleep with a letter from his mother. She is so touched by the letter that she slips the hundred dollars in his pocket.

Later Donald goes to a cheap restaurant and happens to sit next to an old inventor. The old man tells him that if he had $100 he could perfect his machine for making a substitute for gasoline. Donald is interested, but says he cannot help him. Imagine his surprise when upon putting his hand in his pocket to pay his check he finds the hundred dollars. Donald agrees to help the old man with his new-found wealth.

Two weeks later the machine is perfected and one of the leading papers publishes an article telling about the invention. Kingsley reads the article, which predicts the downfall of the trust. He hands the paper to his daughter and she is surprised to read that Donald Grant with a hundred-dollar bill, which he claims the fairies gave him, has bought a half interest in the invention. A meeting of the trust is called. Old Kingsley calls up Donald and tells him to come at once to hear their proposition. When he comes great pressure is brought to bear on him to sell out for a small amount. But he refuses to sell for less than a million dollars.

Meanwhile Kate cannot resist the temptation to go to Donald's office and offer her congratulations. Donald is not there when she arrives, but the old inventor goes for him. While he is gone she amuses herself by writing some of the sentences in the letter from Donald's mother. Donald comes in and seeing the lines realizes that this must be his benefactress. So he says that since she is the one who has made the whole thing possible she must become a partner.

When Kingsley again tries to buy the invention he says he can do nothing without the consent of the third partner. But when Kingsley finds that his own daughter is one of the partners he takes an interest in it himself. The last scene shows Kate, Kingsley, the inventor, Donald and his mother all prosperous. It is not hard to guess that Donald and Kate will become partners for life.

JOKER.

KATE'S AFFINITIES (Aug. 5).—The cast: Kate (Gale Henry); Maxine (Lillian Peacock); Bill (Wm. Franey); Charlie (Chas. Conklin); Lovejoy (Milburn Morante).

The friends of pretty Maxine and her fiance, Lovejoy, consider Maxine's old maid sister, Kate, a "lemon" and Kate has never had a beau until her photo is seen by plain, sober-going Bill, who promptly falls in love. They are "affinities" and all goes well until Charlie, a sailor, home from a long voyage, meets Kate at a picnic. Thereupon, Charlie falls in love with Kate, also. Kate has the time of her life with the new experience of playing off one man against another.

But Charlie and Bill quarrel and a duel is arranged. Bill is hit, but his life is saved by a locket containing his mother's picture, which he always carried over his heart. This locket brings out the fact that Charlie and Bill are long lost brothers. Privately, each decides to sacrifice for his brother and goes away, leaving a note for Kate, telling her he has given her up for brother's sake. This is the end of Kate's matrimonial hopes, for there were only two brothers in that family, which exhausts Kate's possible affinities.

VICTOR.

A SOCIETY SHERLOCK (Aug. 1).—The cast: Freddy De Peyster (William Garwood); Vera Van Zandt (Irma Dawkins). Adapted by Norbert Lusk. Produced by William Garwood.

Vera Van Zandt, a society girl, gives a week-end party. Freddy De Peyster, one of the guests, musters sufficient energy to propose to Vera, who tells him that the man she marries must be a hero. Freddy gets hold of a volume of Sherlock Holmes, which he eagerly devours.

The next day Vera receives a valuable necklace from her father as a birthday gift. On leaving the parlor that evening Vera forgets to take her necklace with her. Lenora, one of the guests, suggest that they hide it so that she won't be so careless with diamonds. It is hidden in a vase on the center table. The loss is discovered and Vera's father informs the police.

The police learn of the young man with the monocle, and Freddy, who is sleeping upstairs and who is under suspicion of being the culprit, is rudely awakened from his slumbers and rushed down into the parlor in scant attire. The police jostle him against the center of the table, causing the vase to fall. Freddy adjusts his monocle and there amidst the debris of shattered glass glisten the elusive diamonds. Thus Freddy has proved himself a veritable Sherlock, and in the final scene we see Vera crowning her hero with the necklace.

WHEN THE MINSTRELS CAME TO TOWN (Two Parts—Aug. 4).—The cast: Girl (Baby Early); Boy (Frank Butterworth); Father (Seymour Hastings); Mother (Kathryn Griffith). Produced by H. C. Matthews.

Mother and Father take the children to see the minstrel show. All the usual stunts are performed, much to the disgust of the parents and to the delight of the children. That night they dream of darkies and end-men.

The next day the children decide to have a minstrel of their own. So all the kids in the neighborhood are summoned and told to forage for material. When all the junk is collected they decide that the garage is the logical place for the stage. The car is their only obstacle, so they start it to get it out. But no one knows how to stop it and the auto goes sailing down the street. The blackening of the faces is at first a puzzle, but shoe blacking and stoveblack solve the problem. Then a baby is needed for a part in the play. So little brother is stolen from the cradle and his face blacked.

In the meanwhile father has been phoned that his car was found meandering through the streets, and when he gets to the police station to see about it mother phones that baby has been stolen. He rushes home with the whole police force and the thieves are found in the garage, having the time of their young lives. The picture ends with a view of little Frankie in the tub getting the world's most thorough scrubbing.

L-KO.

DINTY'S DARING DASH (Two Parts—Aug. 2).—The cast: Dinty (Dan Russell); his wife (Katherine Griffith); I. M. Trubbell (Bert Roach); his wife (Belle Bennett).

Dinty was hard to discourage in his coquettishness, and he flirted desperately, and without the least embarrassment to himself. Unfortunately he was unlucky in one of his flirting excursions, as he picked out a lady whose husband had the nastiest temper and was the most unreasonable when he got angry, of any flirt discourager alive. Husband gave Dinty a fair and gentlemanly warning and fate was against him until he discovered that he was unintentionally taking a bath in the wife's bath tub. Also he discovered that husband was in the near vicinity with two Krupps, and that the means of exit from the bathroom led right past husband.

How flirts miraculously escape, how innocent people get mixed up in pursuits they don't want to, and how some people live through terrible experiences was proven here. The result of it all was that Dinty tried to escape on a street car in his kimona. The conductor was willing, the motorman was unwilling and Dinty was unwilling, but husband was close behind with his trusty Krupps, and Dinty just naturally had to keep going or perish from a shot in the excitement. The chase eventually stopped, but it stopped when the street car conductor stopped in the middle of a railroad crossing when a train was due to pass. The only thing that got stopped was Dinty's inclination for flirting. The crash was heard for miles and several policemen lost their dignity trying to escape from the onrushing train. As Dinty went up on a sliver from the cowcatcher he remarked that flirting does not pay.

THE YOUNGEST IN THE FAMILY (Aug. 6).—The cast: Father (Gene Rogers); Mother (Elsie Cort); Daughter (Lucille Hutton); The Suitor (Bert Roach).

She was a young thing and her father thought her too young to be married, but, as is always the case, she thought she knew better and so her clandestine meetings with her sweetheart, an adventurer. He was nothing more than a janitor, but with his fine looks and clothes he impressed her very much. Her father had a janitor who got fresh with the head janitor and father fired him, but father made a sad mistake when he left the safe open and the said janitor grabbed all the kale in sight and skipped with it without the least compunction.

Daughter was married and they were getting along fine on father's money, when she happened to read an article wherein it stated that poor Mr. Broke was busted and had to pawn his furniture to buy bread and eats. She went to hubby and asked him if father and mother could not enjoy their old age with them. Being a good-natured fellew he readily consented to their spending their reclining years with them in their magnificent home. They arrived, but it was a sad reception father got when he looked into the eyes of his deposed janitor, now his son-in-law. Father took a wallop at him and son-in-law raced from the house into jitney and away, with father and the cops in hot pursuit.

BISON.

UNDER THE LION'S PAW (Two Parts—Aug. 5).—The cast: Hamilton (Rex de Roselli); Grace, his daughter (Golda Colwell); Blanche, little daughter (Clara Horton); George, superintendent (Colin Chase). Scenario by Harry Schenck. Produced by Jay Hunt.

Hamilton, a victim of paralysis and owner of a menagerie where animals can be bought, sold and exchanged, has a superintendent under his employ who is in love with his elder daughter, Grace. She loves him, too, but unknown to her father. One day while putting an animal through some stunts the trainer is caught and Hamilton is taken with a stroke at the sight, this being his second attack. He realizes that the next attack will probably mean his end, and he thinks, too, that by selling he will rid his daughter of the superintendent. He sells the menagerie, but keeps his pet animal, a wild and vicious lion, which he takes to his private residence and places in a barn.

Some time later his little daughter, Blanche, is playing around the grounds of his home when young George, the superintendent, happens to spy her and asks her to take a note to her sister unknown to her father. Blanche consents, but in trying to deliver the message she is stopped by her father, who takes it from her. The father is very angry. He locks Grace in her room and the mother, going on a visit, takes Blanche with her, leaving her with her aunt, who lives a short distance away. The father then decides that he will have the animal meet George that night, instead of his daughter, thinking that that will keep the superintendent away for good.

He then turns the animal loose and waits for the arrival of George, but in the meantime Blanche runs away from her aunt's and arrives home and is confronted by the animal. Father, seeing this from the window, is attacked with the third stroke of paralysis. George arrives in time to save little Blanche's life. Grace breaks away from her room, helps rescue her little sister, while her mother tends to her father. Between George and Grace they manage to fight the animal back into the barn. They return to the house and al lare reconciled.

BIG U.

REDWOOD LANE (Aug. 3).—The cast: Pelette (Al. MacQuarrie); Martin Langley (Jack Nelson); Gladys (Lucille Young); Her Mother (Mrs. Jay Hunt). Written by Ben Cohn. Produced by Jay Hunt.

Pelette, a guide of the tree country, and Martin Langley, a camp foreman, are both suitors for the hand of Gladys. Martin is finally accepted and marries the girl. Pelette tries to be brave about the matter and when the two leave on a short honeymoon trip he builds a house for the two and has it completed when they return.

But daily witnessing the happiness of the two is quite too much for Pelette and after a brave struggle with himself he starts drinking. One day while in an intoxicated condition he chances to be near a stream where Gladys is bathing. The desire for the girl comes over him once more and he approaches her stealthily until she finally hears him. They struggle and he is almost on the point of getting the best of her when Martin arrives and watches spellbound.

The girl manages to elude her assailant and rushes to the edge of the cliff, falling over the side into the water. This awakens Pelette and he catches himself just in time to prevent his going after her. The two men seek her out on the shore below and Martin, with the right of possession, wildly pushes the other man aside and carries the unconscious girl home, where later she revives and it is found that she is not seriously injured. She forgives him, but Martin is obdurate. But finally, because of the pleadings of the girl, he, too, forgives the man who loved and lost.

TILLIE, THE LITTLE SWEDE (Aug. 5).—The cast: Tillie Olsen (Cleo Madison); Nels Ormsted (Charles Gunn); Andy Dix (W. V. Mong). Written by William V. Mong. Produced by Cleo Madison and William V. Mong.

Andy Dix, a windmill agent, is on the way West on a fast train. His seatmate seems to be in distress and Andy asks her what the trouble is. The girl, Tillie, answers him in Swedish, which he is unable to understand. Dix makes the acquaintance of Olaf Hanson, who is also on the train. He learns that Olaf is a Swede and he tells of Tillie. Olaf talks to Tillie, who is happy to meet a countryman, and he learns she is on her way to the middle West, where her father is seriously ill. Olaf asks her about funds and Tillie tells him she is all right and displays a large roll of bills.

Tillie's first night in a sleeping car is very uncomfortable; she cannot sleep, and twice she thinks some one is watching her, but is not sure. Finally she doses off. When she awakes her money is missing and she hears Dix leaving. She suspects him and follows out. Dix sees he is followed and takes a taxi. Tillie follows. He finally eludes her and Tillie misses her train. She wanders about the town until exhausted. At last she finds the Swedish Welfare League, who take care of her.

Her father is, meanwhile, worrying over the non-arrival of his daughter. He had received word that she was on her way, but the train arrived without her. Nels Ormsted cheers the old man up. Finally they receive word of Tillie's whereabouts and learn that she is on her way to the farm. Nels is ordered to meet the train. Dix is in the country selling windmills and has been doing very well. After securing several orders he sets out for the station.

Nels meets Tillie, who has started to walk to the farm, and the two become acquainted—Tillie tells him of her troubles and how Dix stole her money. They meet Dix walking on the road and Nels makes him return the money. There is a happy meeting between the father and daughter, and the sight of Tillie acts as a tonic on the sick man. Through the days of harvesting Nels and Tillie are together often and their interest in each other grows with the passing days.

THE CAPTAIN OF THE TYPHOON (Two Parts—Aug. 6).—The cast: Angus Steele (King Baggott); Tom Steele (Wallis Clarke); Captain Morton (Howard Crampton); Bess, his daughter (Edna Hunter); The Girl (Beatrice Allen). Written by Harry Ditmar. Produced by Henry M. Webster.

Angus Steele, captain of the Typhoon, is sitting in his cabin in port when he hears a fight on deck. He rushes up to stop it and sees under a tarpaulin a girl shivering from the cold. He carries her into the cabin and is prompted to tell her his story. Twenty years before Angus was in love with Bess, the skipper's daughter. One day the old man is brought home dead and Bess turns to Angus for protection, though she does not love him.

Then Tom, Angus' brother, returns from a drunken brawl. Bess, who has not seen him for many years, falls in love with him. Tom, seeing that Bess does nto love him, agrees to the match and leaves the town forever. In the years that have passed Tom sank lower and lower. He was supported by Bess, but finally decided that it was not worth while to stay with her. So he leaves and Bess commits suicide.

At last the time comes for the ship to go out—and the waif's happiness is over. Then Tom rudely comes on board to ask for money. Angus refuses and as they argue the girl recognizes Tom's voice. She runs to him and says she knew he would return. When he flings her aside Angus gets so angry that he attacks Tom and throws him overboard. Then the girl turns on Angus and says she loved Tom and that she hates him. And as the ship sails to sea Angus is standing on the bridge looking wistfully at the disappearing lights of the city.

RED FEATHER.

FROM BROADWAY TO A THRONE (Five Parts—July 31).—The cast: King (Walter Belasco); Jimmy (Carter De Haven); Billy (Duke Worne); Bess (Miss Marvel Spencer); Princess Corinne (Yona Landowska); Heldone (Frank MacQuarrie); Marlex (Malcolm Blevins); Emissaries (Albert MacQuarrie, William Canfield and T. D. Crittenden).

"Battling" Jimmie, a fighter and a dreamer, is preparing to meet "Killer" Briggs in the prize ring. It is the chance of Jimmie's life, because the winner of the fight is scheduled to meet the champion. It is not merely the glory Jimmie is after, but a purse as well, for if he wins the fight he will be in a position to marry Bess. On the afternoon before the fight "Silent" Billie, a newspaper reporter with out a job, presents Jimmie with a lucky coin which has the general appearance of a royal emblem of some art. The emblem was given to Billie by his foster father, Herman Marlex, an eccentric old musician and writer.

Marlex catches Jimmie wearing the emblem and he tells Jimmie that the emblem is the key to a throne. He goes on to tell Jimmie a wild story of how twenty years before he kidnapped the heir apparent to the kingdom of Magonia and brought him to this country. He tells Jimmie that Billie is the kidnapped prince. Jimmie is impressed by all this until the arrival of Billie, who tells Jimmie that the story is Marlex's hallucination.

The fight is held that night as scheduled. In the second round Jimmie receive a blow that knocks him unconscious. As the referee begins to count him out, Jimmie dreams that he loses the fight and returns home. He writes a letter to Bess telling her that he is now broke and that he intends leaving New York and stay away until he makes good. The room of old Marlex is just across the hallway from Jimmie's room. Jimmie hears a noise in Marlex's room. He goes into the hallway and listens. It appears to him that the three emissaries from the King of Magonia are in Marlex's room and are demanding of Marlex that he place the kidnapped prince in their hands. When Marlex learns that the emissaries intend to rob him of the reward he refuses to inform them of the prince's whereabouts. The emissaries bind and gag Marlex and throw him into a closet. Jimmie breaks into the room at this juncture. The emissaries see the emblem upon his sweater front and take him to be the king.

He arrives in the Kingdom of Magonia, and tries to explain to King Felix that he is not the prince. The king will not believe him. The arrival of the alleged prince throws Heldone, pretender to the throne, out of favor. Heldone organizes a conspiracy which ripens into a revolt against the king. In the meanwhile Bess is hired by Princess Iona of Magonia, who is visiting the United States. She accompanies her to Europe. The princess meets Billie and convinces him that he is the real prince. Thereupon the princess, Billie, Bess and Marlex leave for Magonia.

They arrive at about the time when the revolt breaks. No sooner is their amazement at seeing Jimmie upon the throne over than the revolutionists break into the palace. There is a terrific fight and Jimie is knocked senseless from a blow from a sword. Jimmie's consciousness returns and he finds himself in the prize ring. He has just been counted out. Right then and there he decides to accede to Bess' request to go into vaudeville with her. They plan to get married at once.

THE STATE WITNESS (Three Parts—Aug. 1).—The cast: Walt Kendall (L. C. Shumway); Edgar Douglas (Lee Hill); Ethel Rodney (Marie Walcamp); her father (E. N. Walleck); her mother (Helen Wright). Adapted by Walter Woods. Produced by McRae.

The Kendall brothers, Luke and Walt, own a cotton plantation; they have leased their swamp pine section to a lumber company. Edgar Douglas, a northerner, is the local manager and foreman of the saw mill. Douglas objects to the way the Kendalls treat their colored help and offers his protection and a position to any negro who has been abused. This causes bad feeling between the northerner and the Kendalls, and when several negroes take advantage of Douglas' offer and leave the plantation during the cotton picking, the hostilities are opened. In the fight that follows, Walt Kendall is beaten.

Ethel Rodney, a young southerner, a neighbor of the Kendalls, arrives in time to witness the fight. She is interested in Douglas, and knowing that serious trouble will follow this outbreak, induces him to come to her home until Walt's anger has subsided. Arriving at her home, Ethel leaves Douglas seated on the porch, while she dresses for dinner. A ring at the telephone in the hall summons her.

The message is from her father in town. He wants some memoranda in the desk under the telephone. In getting it, Ethel finds her father's revolver and pushes it well back out of sight. After giving her father the information, she returns to her room. A second ring at the telephone is answered by Douglas. Ethel hears him talking excitedly; he then runs into the hall. A search of the desk drawer shows the revolver gone. She mounts her horse and rides toward the sawmill, hoping to overtake Douglas. Just before rounding a bend in the road she hears two pistol shots. A moment later she comes upon the body of Walt Kendall, her father's revolver beside the body. Douglas is arrested and Ethel is forced to become the "State's witness" against him. He is found guilty, but his lawyer seems confident that he will secure a new trial. Luke Kendall fears a new trial would be granted, so gathers together some of his friends, "fixes" the sheriff and prepares for a lynching. First they burn the sawmill. The illumination attracts the attention of Ethel and she goes to the phone to call the sheriff. But the wires have been cut. Moving the desk in an endeavor to see if the 'phone trouble was in the house wires, she is startled to find on the floor her father's revolver. A break in the back of his desk drawer had allowed it to drop on the floor when she thrust it out of sight. And there it had lain during the trial, the principal piece of evidence that convicted Douglas.

With the evidence Ethel mounts a motorcycle and starts for town. Her one hope is of beating the lynchers, who have convinced the sheriff of Douglas' guilt. She passes the lynchers, is fired on, wounded, but never slackens her speed. She arrives in time to place her evidence in the hands of the sheriff, who summons his deputies. There is a brisk fight and the lynchers are beaten off. Later a negro named Sam Daw confesses that he obtained Walt Kendall's pistol during his fight with Douglas and after being beaten by Walt, shoots him. Ethel and Douglas go North after his acquittal for the wedding tour.

A LUCKY GOLD PIECE (Aug. 2).—The cast: Bob Dunn (Ben Wilson); Frederick Bruce (Charles Ogle); Marion Bruce (Edna Hunter); Little Bobbin (Sherry Tansey). Written by Jessie McAllister. Produced by Ben Wilson.

Bob Dunn while making the rounds of his book factory loses a lucky gold piece. It is found by a girl in his employ, who brings it back in spite of the fact that she needs the money very much herself. Bob then tells her why he values the coin so highly.

Years before, when he was a street urchin, he happened to pass a house where a lawn party was being given for a little girl. It was the little lady's birthday and her father had given her a gold coin as a present. All the children shunned the boy because he was poorly dressed, but the child gave him some cake and felt so sorry for him that she made him take her gold piece. Giving the gold piece as security, he went into business and prospered.

In the meanwhile the Bruces had lost all their money and were forced to leave their fine home and live in poorer quarters. When Bob finishes his story the girl tells him that she is the one who befriended him as a child. After her father's death, she says, she was forced to earn her own living, and so came to work in the factory. Bob is delighted and at once proposes to Marion. They have a wedding ring made out of the gold piece and the last picture shows Bob placing it on her finger.

WHICH WAY? (Aug. 4).—The cast: The Man (William Lowery); the Woman (Agnes Vernon); Sunbeam (Doris Baker); Old Sailor (Frank MacQuarrie); the Father ("Doc" Crane). Written and produced by Francis Powers.

The child, about eight years of age, known as Sunbeam, is fathered by an old seaman in poor health. The home is the tenement slums of a big city. She sells papers or flowers, runs errands, etc., to help buy food and medicine for the home. A young and enthusiastic settlement worker meets her and begins to grow fond of the girl. By chance, she meets a gaudily-dressed young woman of the street, and the latter's sweetheart, a fast youth on the downward path. She unconsciously influences this young couple to lead better lives.

The couple, having had a quarrel over jealousy and gambling, have wandered despondently to the river docks, intent upon suicide, each unaware of the other's purpose. They are saved from the attempt by Sunbeam, who suddenly meets them as she comes up the stairway from below the dock, where she has been sent by her foster-father to summon an old sea friend to his bedside. Sunbeam tells the young couple that her father is very ill, and they follow her to her home, where, after the arrival of the old sea friend, the father dies. The young couple ask the settlement worker if they may care for Sunbeam. The old sea friend is willing, but suddenly wants to know who they are and who will vouch for their respectability.

The young couple hang their heads, as the old sea friend indignantly claims Sunbeam and takes her away to his curious old home under the docks. The young woman cries, and the youth comforts her; he whispers to her a proposal that they get married. The young settlement worker, understanding their mental distress, marries them and starts them along the straight road of life. Sunbeam dies some time later and the settlement worker tells the mourners that Sunbeam, perhaps, was sent as a Soul child to lead others to a better life.

THE ADVENTURES OF PEG O' THE RING, NO. 12 ("On the High Seas"—Two Parts—July 17).—The cast: Peg (Grace Cunard); Doctor Jr. (Francis Ford); Doctor Lund, Sr. (Marc Fenton); Mrs. Lund (Jean Hathaway); Flip, the Clown (Pete Gerald); Marcus, the Hindoo (Irving Lippner).

As this episode begins the chance acquaintance of Dr. Lund, Jr., has just been knocked on the head by the river pirates. Their only protection being thus removed, Peg and Dr. Lund, who have sought safety on the after deck of the pirate vessel, are in imminent danger of being recaptured by the harbor pirates, but Dr. Lund's friend recovers consciousness quicker than his asailants expected, and sneaks up behind them with a revolver. This turns the tide again in his favor, and after the three jump to safety and swim to the small launch on which Dr. Lund pursued the pirate vessel.

In the meantime the circus people discover Peg's absence, and trace her to the dock. As they reach it the launch lands, and for the first time in months things seem to have straightened themselves out. Dr. Lund offers the hospitality of the circus to the young man who has so staunchly stood by him, and much to his own relief, he hands over Peg's much-fought-over letter to Peg, who turns it over to Flip. This action is seen by Marcus and another member of Mrs. Lund's gang. Flip hides the leter and starts to dress for the performance, but before the time for the curtain to go up he falls from a trunk and badly sprains his ankle. The manager threatens to fire him if he is not in condition to play that night. Peg comes into Flip's dressing room, and, learning of his accident and the danger in which he stands, she offers to play his role. She dresses as a clown.

Peg makes a big hit as a circus clown. When her act is over, and she is about to run into Flip's dressing-room, she is kidnapped. The girl's absence is discovered, and Dr. Lund, Jr., is the first one to pick up a hot trail. He discovers her in an unoccupied house near the circus. In his attempt to rescue her he is knocked unconscious. In the excitement, Peg escapes. She runs to the gateway entrance and hides there. The ruffians catch a glimpse of a white figure running outside, and, supposing it to be Peg, one of them fires a shot, bringing down the figure. In the uncertain light they have killed the owner of the house. When they discover their error they decide to tie up Dr. Lund so that he will not be able to escape when he recovers consciousness and make a getaway, but their plans are frustrated, for Dr. Lund works his way to the window which he broke and on the jagged glass which still remains in the frame he cuts the cords which bind his wrists.

Peg has been able to make good her escape, but unfortunately for her, the hour when her strange inheritance frequently takes possession of her approaches and she becomes for the time being a jibbering, irresponsible maniac. Her shrieks arouse two ruffians who follow her. When they discover that it is Peg they resolve to put an end to her at once. As Peg perches on the brink, her pursuers close in on her. She threatens to throw herself off the brink, but they only laugh and draw nearer. As they are about to lay hands upon her she makes the crazy jump and crashes down thirty or forty feet, landing bruised and cramped on a shelf rock, but fortunately restored to her senses. As the crooks look down upon her they hear Dr. Lund behind them and hide in a crevice. With one look over the rock Dr. Lund sizes up the situation and runs to the nearest habitation for a rope.

The ruffians, seeing both of the objects of their warfare together, and in such a precarious position, decide to put an end to them. As the episode fades out they are seen hacking at the rope which is all that lies between Dr. Lund and his companion and either starvation or destruction on the rocks below.

PASTURES GREEN (Two Parts—July 24).—The cast: Bruce Blake (Al Vosburgh); Helen (Vivian Rich); Minette Leday (Josephine Phillips); Uriah Sharp (George Periolat); Collins (George Ahearn. Scenario, Nathan P. Oakes. Directed by Carl M. Le Viness.

Bruce Blake belongs to the idle rich and is a constant source of worry to his people because of his escapades. As the story opens, he is waking up in his room after a night of more than usual gayety. His head troubles him, and suspecting that as usual he has committed some deplorable foolishness, he calls his faithful valet, Collins, and demands to be informed of the events of the night before.

Collins modestly tells him he proposed to the sprightly French dancer, Minette Leday, that was all. But it was enough. The vivacious little French woman would be wise enough to hold him to his promise. What should he do? Collins has a farm in the mountains. He suggests that Bruce go there under the name of Collins, to escape the search Minette would surely make for him. As Collins, he goes, but the night of his departure, Minette dies mysteriously. Linking up the mystery of her death with the fact of Bruce's disappearance, the police start a hunt for Bruce and the newspapers spread the story broadcast..

At the farm Bruce falls in love with a dairy maid and just as he reaches an understanding with her the detective arrives to arrest him for the murder of Minette. Simultaneously with this, the city newspaper appears upon the scene with a story that the dancer died of heart failure and that the search for Bruce has been called off. Of course, happiness reigns and is none the less supreme when Bruce discovers that his pseudo dairy maid is really Helen Blair Coble, the daughter of a millionaire, who sought the precincts of a country village for romantic reasons, desiring to be loved for herself alone.

OUT OF THE RAINBOW (Three Parts—July 27).—The cast: Donald Lowrie (Edward Coxen); Vivian Conroy (Leona Hutton); Marion Wayne (Lizette Thorne); Dick Martin (Jack Farrell); Elsie Martin (Hazel West); Bob Gray (George Ahearn); Carl Lambert (Joseph Beaudry); Arthur De Lysle (George Field). Scenario written by Anthony W. Coldewey. Directed by Thomas Ricketts.

Donald Lowrie, a popular young business man, has been misunderstood in his casual attentions to Vivian Conroy, who assumes a proprietary interest in him, which becomes amusing to their friends. Dick and Elsie Martin, a young married couple, are entertaining their cousin, Marian Wayne. Upon her introduction to Donald, the mutual attraction between Marion and Donald is so pronounced as to call forth the exhibition of violent jealousy on the part of Vivian. In the brief period of her visit, Marion is thrown constantly into the society of Donald by her friends, much to Vivian's discontent and Donald's satisfaction. They soon become engaged and smothering her disappointment, Vivian is forced to congratulate them.

Unconquered, however, Vivian still schemes to secure Donald for herself. She pays a society actor to attend a reception to which all the young people are invited. While Marion is placed in a position where she can see all that goes on, the actor, Arthur DeLysle, impersonating Donald for a moment, caresses Vivian among the shrubbery and Marion listening, hears Vivian address words of endearment to the supposed Donald. An estrangement results. Marion flings back the ring to Donald. Vivian cheers him and marries him.

Later on, DeLysle, the actor, goes broke and demands money of Vivian. She pays him, but realizing that she has not made Donald happy, she feels guilty. In the meantime, Marion goes into charity work and meeting Carl Lambert, a kindred spirit, agrees to marry him though she tells him of her real love for another and of her disappointment.

Before the marriage can be performed, De Lysle blackmails Vivian again. She refuses to pay him; he assails her and in the ensuing struggle, she receives a mortal wound. Almost with her last effort she writes two letters of confession—to Marion and to Donald. She is forgiven, there is a reconciliation between Marion and Donald and a new joy dawns at the end of the rainbow of hope.

WHEN JERRY CAME TO TOWN (Aug. 4).—The cast: Jerry (George Ovey); Hank (George George); father (Louis FitzRoy); Nellie, his daughter (Claire Alexander); Bill (Ray Lincoln); constable (Gordon MacGregor); ice man (Harry Jackson).

Jerry sees a village cut-up tormenting a young woman, who is loaded down under the weight of a heavy basket of groceries. Jerry lands on the youth's head with a brick, preventing any further trouble and then he carries the basket for the girl. Arriving in town, Jerry learns that his friend is the daughter of the town grocer. The father needs a strong young man to help about the store and Jerry lands the job. Jerry's attention directed at the girl more than to his work arouses the wrath of the storekeeper and the two get into a fight. Jerry hides in a barrel and soon he is a captive when the old man nails the lid on, not knowing that Jerry is inside.

The "cut-up" having told of the attack made upon him by Jerry to the constable, a search is started for Jerry and the grocery store is searched. There is no trace of Jerry. Jerry tries to release himself from the barrel and in so doing attracts the attention of the constable and several others, who think the store haunted and they rush out. Jerry then frees himself.

The father and the constable hide in the big ice box believing Jerry will return. They are detected by the new clerk who locks them in and then proceeds to make love to the daughter. In the meantime the constable and father are frozen stiff and when the ice man arrives and opens the big refrigerator the two fall on the floor.

Jerry and the girl are having a delightful time, while some of the customers build a fire in a stove and place the two frozen victims on top to thaw them out. Revived, the father hears Jerry singing and with the constable and others he makes ready to capture Jerry.

They burst in upon Jerry and the girl and there is a general mix-up. During the uproar Jerry makes his escape and bidding the frightened daughter a hasty good-bye, he starts a dash for freedom. Led by the constable a mob gives chase after Jerry, but the fleet-footed little fellow gains and out-distances his pursuers, while back at the store the angry father uses his razor strap effectively on his daughter.

PURITY (American—Seven Parts—July). The cast: Virtue and Purity (Audrey Munson); Thornton Darcy (Nigel de Brullier); Claude Lemarque (Alfred Hollingsworth); Evil and Luston Black (William A. Carroll); Judith Lure (Eugenie Forde); Pandora (Josephine Phillips); Beauty (Meta Drinkwitz); Truth (Marie Van Tassel); Love (Ellen Howard); Music (Mary Dunham); Drama (Alice Anrooney); Art (Hazel West); Maiden and Youth (Walalce MacDonald and Nell Franzen; Shepherd (Ashton Dearholt).

Thornton Darcy, an idealistic poet, is at work upon an allegorical poem which he calls "Virtue." He devotes the first part of it to picturing the idyllic state of the earth prior to the advent of evil in which Virtue is the world's guiding spirit. Virtue is represented by a nude female figure, artlessly adorney with filmy drapery. In the second part he introduces the Greek myth of Pandora, who releases Evil on the world.

Finishing his work for the day, Darcy falls into a light doze and upon awakening discovers that his dream girl, Virtue, has come to life in the person of a young woman clad in a simple home-made dress kneeling on the bank of the stream gathering flowers. They become acquainted and he learns that her name is Purity Worth, and that she lives near the woods in a humble secluded home. She makes an instant appeal to Darcy as he does to her and they repeat the meeting in the woods, with the result that they fall in love and are engaged, in spite of the fact that there is no immediate prospect of marriage, owing to Darcy's reduced circumstances. Darcy is unable to sell his poems, and the publisher will not print them for less than five hundred dollars.

Claude Lamarque, a painter, strolling in the woods, sees Purity bathing in a stream. He later succeeds in meeting Purity and makes her an offer to pose for him. She refuses, but accepts his card. Purity receives word from Darcy that he is ill in bed and begging her to come with him. His final effort to publish his book of poems has met with refusal.

Unselfishly seeking to aid him, she goes to Lamarque, secures five hundred dollars in advance with a promise to repay him by posing for him, and earning money from other artists, and at once turns the money over to the publisher to bring out Darcy's book. She binds the publisher to secrecy. Darcy is confined to his bed with a siege of illness, and is only saved from death by the happy turn. Purity guards from him the secret of her share in it.

In the meantime, she poses regularly for Lamarque. Through his interest in her he secures an engagement for her to pose in imitation of marble statuary at a fete given by a fashionable young widow, Judith Lure. No sooner is Darcy's book published than it excites instant attention and praise, and he becomes the lion of the hour.

In the meantime, Luston Black, an acquaintance of Lamarque, having caught a glimpse of Purity posing for the artist, has become infatuated with her. He assumes that because of her position as a model he will have an easy conquest. But Purity, despite her innocence, senses his base motives and spurns him.

Darcy, accepting an invitation to visit Lamarque, comes into the studio while Black is pressing his attentions upon Purity. He thrashes Black, who taunts the poet with the fact that his fiancee is posing in the nude. Darcy will not believe it. Purity acknowledges the truth. Darcy will not listen to Purity's explanations and casts her off. A short time later the poet sees Lamarque's finished picture of "Virtue." Darcy is quick to read the great truth that the picture is intended to convey and upon learning that Purity was the instrument through which his poems were published, hastens to her. They are happily reunited.

FATE'S DECISION (Two Parts—Aug. 5).—The cast: The Husband (William Clifford); The Wife (Margaret Gibson); The Flirt (Claude Mortonson). Directed by Charles Swickard.

The husband, a middle-aged and prosperous business man, is burdened and worried with the care of his enterprises and so deeply engrossed is he in his affairs that he does not show his wife the consideration she expects. Many dinners at home are not graced with his presence and the wife dines alone. As she does not understand business or appreciate its demands upon her husband's time, she attributes his seeming neglect to waning love.

On a shopping expedition with a female friend, her companion suggests luncheon at a tango tea garden. Here the young wife is introduced to The Flirt and she enjoys her first sensation of being flattered by a strange man. The first experience leads to other visits to the garden by the young wife and she is soon on friendly terms with the flirt, but, of course, without taking her husband into her confidence. A day arrives when the husband is unexpectedly called out of town and as he plans to leave that same night, he calls up his home and notifies his wife to have his bag packed and ready. They planned to attend the theatre that evening and the wife reminds the husband of this fact, suggesting that he postpone his departure until the next day, arguing that the theatre engagement is more important.

The husband, worried, and his mind upon a possible big loss of business, is rather curt in his treatment of his wife's attitude, an act which she can only assume is a further demonstration of his neglect. Her association with The Flirt has been merely foolish up to this time. He made attempts to have the young wife permit him to visit her at her home during the absence of her husband, but without success.

Piqued, the wife resolves that she will not miss the theatre and decides to ask The Flirt to act as her escort. She does not phone the invitation on account of the servants in the house, but dispatches it in writing by a telegraph messenger. After an early dinner, the husband prepares to leave for his trip, but the young wife becomes conscience-stricken and pleads with him to take her along. He assures her that it is impossible under the circumstances.

The husband is about to enter his auto on the way to the depot when he witnesses an auto accident only a short distance from the house and orders the chauffeur to drive to the assistance of the victim with all possible speed. Arriving at the scene they remove an unconscious, bleeding man, from under the wreck and take him to the husband's home. The wife, more determined than ever to accompany The Flirt to the theatre, descends to the lower floor of her home to await his arrival. She reaches the reception hall just as her husband and the chauffeur carry in their burden and place the body upon a divan. The husband orders the butler to phone for an ambulance and he searches the unconscious man for papers which might lead to his identity, while the wife and maid try to do what they can for the victim.

The wife bathes and washes the blood-smeared face and is horrified to recognize the features of The Flirt. Suppressing a wild scream, she falls fainting into the arms of her husband, who has witnessed her agitation. The husband carries his wife to her room, while the ambulance surgeon enters, examines the body of The Flirt and pronounces it lifeless. In the bed room, while the maid is attending the wife, the husband again reads the letters he removed from the body of The Flirt—the letter written by his wife inviting a strange man to escort her to the theatre. Looking pityingly at his wife; realizing why she wanted to accompany him on his trip at the last moment; and awakening to the fact that he has been leaving her too much alone, he sets fire to the letter. When it is consumed by the flame, he gently takes his wife into his arms.

SECRET OF THE SUBMARINE (Chapter 11—Two Parts—July 31).—Hope and Cleo sinking to their death in the quicksand call for help. Hook hears them and with the aid of a grapevine pulls them safely to the bank. Mahlin and Satsuma are thus foiled in their attempt on the lives of Hope and Cleo. Olga and Morton, who are being pursued by the police for the theft of Smith's aeroplane, hide the machine in among some trees and escape. Hope, Cleo and Hook start back to the city. The mountains where these events have been happening have been infested by bandits. The cowboys of the Bar X ranch are in pursuit of them. They capture one and promptly lynch him. They continue their pursuit after the bandits but accidently wound Olga, who with Morton has heard the noise of the chase, and fearing they are the objects of it have been hiding in the brush. The cowboys take the wounded Olga and Morton to the ranch house.

Hope back in the city receives a telegram from the U. S. Naval Board congratulating him upon his success in obtaining the key to the secret of the submarine. And now that Hope and Cleo have the Philosophy, the book that they now know contains the secret. Romero tells them that he had taken the book with him on a hunting trip and lost it in the mountains. Hope and Cleo realize that the secret is forever lost. Hope consoles Cleo with the thought that it was through the hunt for the secret that they had learned to love each other and he would rather have her than have succeeded in obtaining the secret. They decide to marry immediately.

Mahlin and Satsuma have been ordered by the Black Council, representing the secret service of their governments, to report the reason for their failure to obtain the secret of the submarine. They attend the meeting and are threatened with death unless they obtain the secret within four weeks. Hook buys a parrot as a wedding present for Cleo and gets into serious trouble.

In Washington, a special meeting of the Naval Board is being held to discuss the situation arising between U. S. and a foreign government which is liable to lead to war. They congratulate themselves, however, that in a few weeks Lieut. Hope will have obtained the secret of the submarine, which will enable them to successfully protect themselves against an attack from any other country. As they are congratulating each other on the country safety, a telegram is handed to them from Lieut. Hope, stating that the book with the secret has been lost. Confusion reigns and the country faces the most dangerous situation since the days of the Civil War.

MUSTANG.

THAT GAL OF BURKE'S (Two Parts—July 28).—The cast: Tommie Burke (Anna Little); Arnold Blake (Jack Richardson); Charles Percival (Frank Borzage); Mr. Burke (Dick Lareno); Mr. Burke's New York sister (Gordona Bennett); Mabel, her daughter (Queenie Rosson). Directed by Frank Borzage.

Tommie Burke is a tomboy, and she can braid a hackamore, rope a steer, ride a broncho, or do any of the things cowboys usually accomplish. Arnold Blake, son of the wealthiest cattleman, is her companion on many wild rides and innocent escapades.

Away back in the backbay district of Boston, Charles Percival is starting for the west, without the farewells of an uncle and two stern maiden aunts, who feel that he has disgraced them forever by his reckless habits. About the time he arrives at the Burke ranch, the latter receives his New York sister and her daughter Mabel. Percival accepts a job on the ranch.

Mabel soon monopolizes Arnold Blake, and Tommie finds more congenial company in Charles Percival. There are numerous opportunities for the portrayal of character and the presentation of scenes distinctively western. A strong comedy feature is injected by Charles writing to his relatives in the east that he is kidnapped by Indians and held for ransom of $5,000. With the money thus secured, he buys a half interest in the ranch and by an exchange of love secures a controlling interest in Tommie.

VOGUE.

BUNGLING BILL'S DRESS SUIT (July 30).—The cast: Bungling Bill (Paddy McGuire); Elsie (Elsie Greeson); her sweetheart (Arthur Moon); her father (Jack Gaines).

Moon, at the time of his uncle's death, receives as his share of the estate, an old dress suit. Considerably disappointed he sells the suit to a second-hand clothing dealer for a sum with which he buys some flowers for his sweetheart, whose birthday it is. While dickering with the clothing dealer, Moon's sale is overheard by Jerry, a crook, who must have a dress suit to get in the house that night, where a reception is being held in honor of a girl's birthday, and this girl is Dolly, Moon's sweetheart. Through his accomplice, the maid in the house, Jerry is to make a clean-up, but in order to avert suspicion, he must have the dress suit. Consequently he steals it from the clothing dealer, and after a chase he gets into his room. There he is examining it when his upper neighbor, Bungling Bill, falls through the floor on him and steals the dress suit while Jerry is unconscious.

Bill is in possession of the suit, finds therein a letter telling him that a lawyer named Daniels has a will, which leaves him a mighty sum. He accordingly presents himself at the lawyer's office in the dress suit and is treated royally. The lawyer invites him to the reception that evening and there Bill has quite a time in playing up to the lawyer's daughter. Moon, having found out from the father of his sweetheart, who is Bill's lawyer friend, that he is good for nothing but manicuring boulevards, resolves to elope with Dolly that night at seven thirty, which is the time the maid has told Jerry to be on hand to rob the house, complications set in and Bill is exposed as a fraud when Jerry is eventually captured. Bill is forced to take refuge in his dingy room, where he resolves that dress suits were never made for him, and he cuts it off, revealing himself in the garb which fits his work better. Moon is restored to the fortune Bill accidentally fell into, and he wins Dolly, the lawyer's daughter.

REEL LIFE, NO. 11, "How France Prepared" (July 16).—One of the big surprises, from a military standpoint, of the bloody struggle now being waged in Europe, has been the wonderful stamina displayed by the French soldiers. Under the guise of sports for boys, France, as far back as ten years ago, began training her youths for just such an emergency as confronts them now. "Physical Education by Means of Sport" was the term covering the efforts of France to restore her sons to vigorous manhood. These pictures were taken under the official Quarrying marble, the views of which were taken at Carrara, a town in Central Italy whence comes the wonderful marble noted for its texture and beauty, is another interesting subject treated in this release. Although marble has been quarried in Carrara since the time of Cæsar, the supply still seems inexhaustible. How auto thieves work, showing the methods pursued by these persistent law-breakers, and the various schemes devised by owners to prevent robberies, furnishes the third of the interesting subjects presented in this release.

REEL LIFE, NO. 12, "Shows Coal Mining" (July 23).—How anthracite coal is mined, shipped, prepared and made ready for household use is one of the interesting subjects in Reel Life No. 12. Every phase of preparing coal for commercial and domestic uses is shown on the screen. These pictures were taken at Lansford, Pa., in the heart of the hard coal mining district at one of the most important collieries in that section. A new insight into the multitude of activities in connection with the mining of coal is obtained from this interesting film.

Another subject of interest is called "A Day in the World's School House," and shows how the largest correspondence school in the world conducts its business. The ramifications of teaching students in every country by mail are clearly explained by means of the camera.

The third division of the film gives a series of pictures depicting the breeding of seagulls. The Reel Life photographer made a special trip to an island off the Massachusetts coast, where the sole industry is the raising of seagulls, to obtain these pictures. Views of the whole life of the gull from the egg to the adult were taken.

In the special release See America First there is another instalment of the United States Department of the Interior motion pictures of National parks. The park at Crater Lake, Oregon, noted for its natural splendor and pictorial beauty, is shown in this release. The sides of the crater are two thousand feet high and when the reflection is seen in the deep clear mountain lake at the bottom it appears as if one were looking straight down for twice the distance from the cliff to the water.

MUTUAL STAR PRODUCTION.

JUDITH OF THE CUMBERLANDS. (Signal—Five Parts—July 31).—The cast: Judith Barrier (Helen Holmes); Creed Bonbright (Leo. D. Maloney); Blatchley Turrentine (Paul C. Hurst); Uncle Jeptha Turrentine (Thomas G. Lingham); Pony Card (William Brunton); Nancy Card (Clara Mosher); Andy Turrentine (Harry Lloyd); Jeff Turrentine (Sam Morje); the marshall (G. H. Wisschussen).

The story treats of an ancient mountain feud in which Creed Bonbright, who lost his father in a fight with a rival clan, tries to educate the sturdy mountain men to respect the law instead of disregarding it. He is loved by Judith Barrier, the niece of Uncle Jepp Turrentine, the leader of a rival clan. Judith is also loved by Blatchley Turrentine, a distant cousin, who runs an illicit whiskey still in a cave on Uncle Jepp's property. He hates Creed and swears vengeance upon him. Andy and Jeff, sons of Uncle Jepp's, are engaged with Blatch in making moonshine whiskey.

Creed is elected Justice of the Peace and the day of the election Andy and Jeff are arrested by the Marshall for having contraband whiskey. Creed endeavors to have them freed at the request of Judith. He is unsuccessful. Blatch hearing of the arrest summons the members of the clan who attack the jail and escape with the prisoners to the mountains. On their return Judith gives a party to which Creed is invited. Blatch and Creed quarrel, and while the party is in progress the Sheriff's posse comes for the prisoners. They escape and Blatch and his friends suspect Creed.

The gang waylays Creed. In a struggle between Creed and Blatch he is thrown over a cliff but is uninjured. He plans to create the impression that he has been killed, and aided by his friends a charge of murder is brought against Creed, who is arrested. Creed pleads self-defense, but the mob in the town incited by Blatch's friends plan to lynch him.

In the meantime Blatch who has been hiding in the cave where the still was situated crawls out at night to call on Judith. He proposes to her and she agrees to marry him if he will ride into town with her then. When they arrive in the town she snatches his gun and forces him to show himself to the crowd who are about to hang Creed. Creed is freed. Judith drives away with Blatch after persuading him to postpone the wedding.

Blatch bent upon revenge plans to kill Creed. Judith overhears the plot and goes to warn him. As he approaches the rendezvous of the gang, Judith shoots his horse from under him. The shot arouses the gang and Blatch, stepping out on a ridge, is mistaken for Creed and shot by one of his friends. With Blatch out of the way peace is established and Creed and Judith are married.

BEAUTY.

GAMBLERS IN GREENBACKS (July 26).—The cast: Jed Smithers (John Sheehan); Grace Jonsin (Carol Halloway); Hop Jonsin (John Steppling); Slim (Dick Rosson).

Jed Smithers was the country boy who had knocked them dead in New York with his famous art. He had become the social lion over night, but work was bearing on his tired brain and nothing seemed to please him. In his studio he carelessly swung his brush on the canvas, in spite of the beautiful model on the pedestal, he could not get to going right. She tried to soothe him, but Jed was plumb disgusted and decided to go out into the "wilderness" of a city park.

"Hop" Jonsin was a big politician, whose side graft was making spurious greenbacks. Hop had swung a big deal for his crook pals. Hop's daughter, Grace, had been selected as the model to go on paper money. Hop had engineered the deal himself and felt that it should be easy to dope up bum currency when he had the model right in his house. His pals were overjoyed, but not his daughter. She told him she was going out for a stroll; but Hop was wise and sent Slim Jim, who, by the way, loved Grace, to shadow her.

When Jed sat in the park and saw Grace being bothered by Slim, he came to the rescue. He invited her to his studio for tea. Slim shadowed them. When he had found where Grace had gone, he rushed back to Hop's and told him. Hop smiled, for he knew that Jed would be inspired and paint the girl's picture. Why not let him and then—steal the painting and get back the girl.

Jed was inspired with Grace and demanded that she pose for him. When the picture was finished, Hop and his gang stole the picture and the girl. Like a bolt from the clear sky came a clew. Jed had painted a picture for Cheops, a meat magnate, who paid him with currency he had that day taken in at the counter. Jed took one look at the face on the greenback and rushed to the police station. Here he was informed that the greenback was spurious, since the issue had not yet been put out by the government. Investigations were made and the police located Hop's joint.

The raid on the place was made. Grace took refuge in a closet. The crooks were overpowered and rushed out—but Jed had been floored and lay immovable on the table. Grace crept from her hiding place and discovered her artist lover! She revived him and he pressed his suit, but Grace refused to allow him to marry the daughter of a counterfeiter and a crook. They were thinking it over when Jed's hand touched a secret spring and he opened a cache that let a black box fall on his head. The contents scattered all about. Jed discovered a document and read it. It was the will of Jiminthin Simkins, stating that "Hop" Jonsin should take care of little Grace Simpkins!—conclusive proof that Grace was not "Hop's" child. The lovers embrace as the feature ends.

A GERM GEM (July 30).—The cast: Septimus Flux (Orral Humphrey); Pemina Flux (Jo Taylor); Brother George (Joe Massey).

Septimus Flux was a student of the germ. He was a nut on the subject. He always carried a thermometer, magnifying glass, antiseptic fluid, etc., with him, and whenever he came to an object or a person foreboding the presence of more germs than necessary, Septimus would kill them with his dope. Like the law of the opposites was Pemina, the wife of Septimus. She always let in too much air, mixed too much food, etc. Septimus spent what time he had to spare keeping Pemina from making a germ-haven of the house and herself. Septimus was engrossed in his laboratory work when Pemina came rushing in with a telegram. Septimus disinfected it and carefully fingered it as he read that George, Pemina's brother, would soon be on a visit to them. Septimus immediately ordered the guest room disinfected and all the germs waylaid. It was done.

George arrived. He was a speedy chap with a desire that ran to pleasure. He embraced Pemina on his arrival and there was a sounding smack when their lips met. Septimus went wild as he calculated the germs transferred from one to the other. He argued with George and showed him the benefits of the sanitary kiss, but George couldn't see it. Pemina confided in George the fact that Septimus was a germ-nut. George did a little quick thinking and then told Pemina that she needn't worry, he would cure the old chap.

Working in his laboratory, Septimus suddenly felt a draught. He drew his thermometer, turned around, and discovered George standing behind him. Septimus started to spray the air with antiseptic but George forestalled him with the information that they were going out. Septimus held back but George was firm, and taking the old fellow with no little force led him from the house.

They went into a taxi, opened the doors, in came the air, and while Septimus raved, George did everything possible that the old fellow didn't like. Finally they came to a park. Septimus pleaded with tears in his eyes that they get out of the auto and inhale sufficient oxygen to offset the germs they had so far taken in. George wondered. Then acceded.

They started to stroll the park, and while so doing pased two pretty damsels. George made their acquaintance and introduced Septimus, who held away, lest he be infested with the germ. They suggested a stroll, and away they went. George cuddled close to his friend, but Septimus held aside. They came to a refreshment parlor. Septimus couldn't indulge, but his lady friend managed to get close enough to him to insist, so Septimus fell.

The rest was then different. The man who had once been so fearful of the germ, now proceeded irregardless of it. He even forgot that he had the germ of a wife at home and his actions were very much out of place for a married man. George merely smiled until things became a little too serious, then he bundled Septimus into a cab and took him home. And when Septimus arrived home he kissed his wife! She was surprised, and wondered. She asked George, but George would never tell. And so it come to pass that Septimus Flux gave up the study of germs.

MYSTERIES OF MYRA (Episode No. 12—"The Elixir of Youth"—Two Parts—July 10).—An old and ugly man and woman, possessed by demon spirits, receive from the High Master, a drop or two of the "Elixir of Youth." They are transformed into a handsome young man and young woman. In return for the Elixir, the man and the woman go out to destroy Myra, aided unwillingly by Varney.

The woman pretends that she is a psychic, and calls on Alden to investigate her powers. Meanwhile, Varney tells Myra that Alden is not true to her. To prove this Varney leads her within range, by field glasses, of Alden's window. The woman manages to get Alden into her arms near the window. Myra sees this, and is convinced for the time being that Alden is false to her.

She faints. The man whose youth was renewed, and in whom is an infernal spirit, takes charge at this point, sends Varney away, and hypnotizes Myra. He commands her to meet him on the grey rocks at midnight. She revives, sees the handsome stranger with surprise, and is glad to have him escort her home.

At midnight the post-hypnotic suggestion works. Myra gets out of bed, goes to the seashore, meets the handsome demon lover at the grey rocks, and with him, walks out on the reflection of the moon over the water.

Meanwhile, Alden, whose suspicions have been aroused, awaits the return of the woman, for something she has left. When she does return, he forces her to stand over the Pentagram, which dispels the charm of the elixir of youth, and causes her to become, in a moment, the old hag she was in the beginning of the episode. Before releasing the woman from the Pentagram, Alden forces the plot from her. He then dashes off, followed by his servant. They jump into a motor boat, equipped with a powerful searchlight.

The Demon lover, after Myra has walked with him far from shore, wakes Myra from her sleep-walking trance, and demands that she yield herself to him. Myra refuses. He steps out of the moonlight, and lets go of Myra, who sinks into the water and is about to drown when Alden arrives in his motor boat. Alden rescues her.

MYSTERIES OF MYRA (Episode No. 13—"Witchcraft"—Two Parts—July 17).—While out horseback riding, Myra runs across an old woman, whom the neighborhood knows as a witch. Several boys have been teasing the unfortunate woman, but Myra drives them away. The witch in her gratitude shows Myra a glimpse of the fairies, after which she starts for home.

The Master, hearing of this, forges a letter to Myra, from the old witch, inviting her to call that night, and see more fantastic fairies and other sights. Myra persuades Varney, whom the Master has ordered to be on hand for the purpose, to drive her out to the witch's cabin in his car. Near the cabin, Varney allows himself to be overpowered by the Black Order men, who are hiding outside. But he manages to push her into the cabin, and hand her his pistol.

She learns from the witch that it is all a plot of the Black Order. Myra defends the cabin with her pistol, shooting one of the Black Order men. They cease trying to break in, but set the cabin on fire. Myra, in a fainting state, manages to communicate with a sleeping telegraph operator, who, under her telepathic suggestion, sends a real telegram to Alden, begging for help.

While the house burns, Alden and the police start to the rescue in the police motor patrol wagon. The witch has a little underground escape from her house. Through this, she and Myra escape. But it is not long enough to help them much, and they are observed crawling out into the woods, and promptly pursued by the Black Order men.

In a little clump of dead trees, some of which are like forms of persons, they are surrounded. The old witch beglamours the pursuers, so that Myra looks to them like a birch log lying on the ground, and she, herself, like an old gnarled tree, in a sort of human shape. But the Black Order men are not to be fooled. They suspect the resemblance of the stump which the old witch has turned to, and cut it with a large knife. The stump turns into the old witch, and pleads for mercy. To save her own life, the witch points to Myra. The Black Order men are about to pounce on the birch log, which turns into Myra, when Alden and the police drive away the Black Order men, and rescue the girl.

"MYSTERIES OF MYRA"—(Episode No. 14)—"Suspended Animation"—Two Parts—(July 24.)—Myra is kidnapped and taken into a farmhouse, furnished, but not inhabited at the time. Varney and one of the men who helped in the kidnapping, revolt at the idea of murder, which the Master has planned. They manage to slip a note to Myra to change the milk cups and pretend she is poisoned. This changing of the cups is done in an entirely new way. She pretends to be poisoned; the wicked woman who tries to poison her gets the real poison, discovers the substitution, follows Myra around the room, and is about to kill her, when the poison paralyzes her hand, and Myra escapes.

But the Master is coming, so Varney and his friend have to hide the wicked woman, and place a clamp on Myra's pneumo-gastric nerve, hiding it under her hair, at the base of her skull. This pressure on the nerve and hypontic passes, induce a state of suspended animation, which deceives the Master into thinking her dead. The Master orders her body sewn up in a bag, to be taken with him to the Lodge. Varney and his friend manage to sew up the body of the other woman; but have to leave Myra in suspended animation.

Alden, Mrs. Maynard, Alden's servant and the chauffeur are guided to the farmhouse by a blindfolded psychic, whose specialty is finding things. Arrived there, they are unable to make sure whether she is dead or alive. All Alden's skill fails to revive her. The psychic finder spells out the words "pneumo-gastric nerve." Alden then finds the clamp and revives Myra. The Master in his den opens the back to dispose of Myra's body, and to his dismay finds the body of the woman he hired. In a conflict with Varney's friend, the latter is killed.

How Many Times Do You Want to Pay for your electrical apparatus?

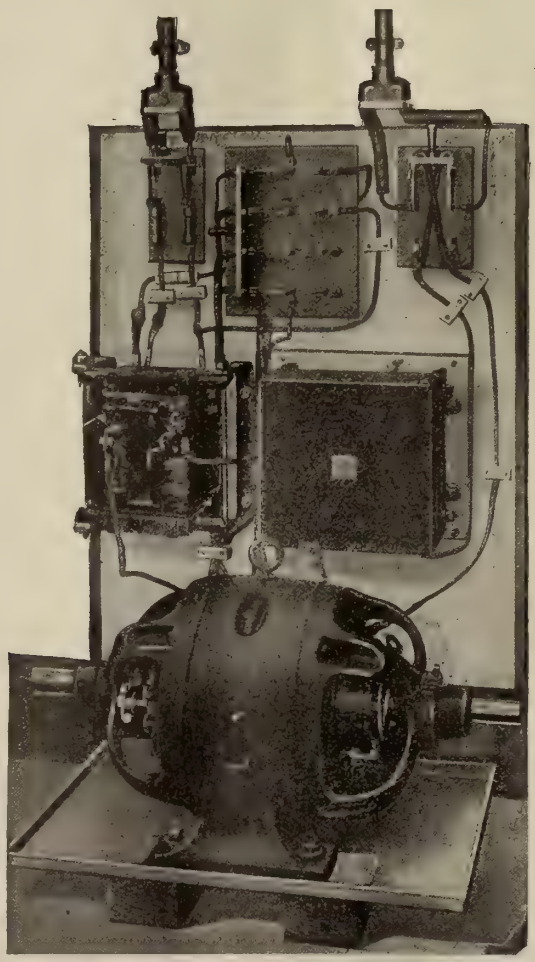
Look out for the debt you contract and are bound to pay when you buy delicate or untrustworthy apparatus. Repairs are costly,—we call it buying the apparatus twice.



Wagner WHITE LIGHT Converters

Don't forget the effect on your patrons—interrupted pictures, provoking delays, while you connect up some make-shift, and then the probable use of the eye straining, current wasting alternating current, while repairs are made.

These are facts founded on actual experience and the operator or theatre manager who has been through them is the strongest advocate for dependable quality apparatus, users of the Wagner, Quality White Light Converter.

Phyllis Page is the daughter of a plodding mill-worker. There has just been a strike and, as usual, the strikers get the worst of it and go back to work until the next outbreak. Phyllis does not belong to this life where the best achievement is three meals a day and a place to sleep; she has ambitions. She wants to become a miniature painter. So she goes to New York.

Upon arriving in the city she soon learns that the plodders are not confined to a small mill town. She secures a place in a department store, and with the little saved from her scanty wages she studies art with an old professor quite as poverty-stricken as herself. He tells her she has real ability; and with a couple of years' training abroad unquestionably would win recognition.

Then she attracts the attention of Reyburn, a wealthy lawyer who chances into the store with his wife. He offers to send her abroad if he may work his will with her. And, as the price seems enough, she yields. Three years later, as the result of her studies abroad, she has become famous. Society flocks to her, and among the fashionables is Reyburn's wife.

Mrs. Reyburn forms an instant liking for the young artist and insists upon her coming to their home. Phyllis is strongly drawn toward the woman she has wronged, but tries to keep away. But Mrs. Reyburn insists, and she becomes a frequent visitor. Then Mrs. Reyburn tries to arrange a match between Phyllis and her handsome young brother; and sure enough, the young people fall in love.

Then Reyburn intervenes. "You are not the woman for him," he tells her. "If you marry him you will be cruelly deceiving him and my wife." Phyllis pleads for her happiness. "You'll tell!" she exclaims in sudden fear. He slowly shakes his head. "I won't tell, but you will."

THE HALFBREED (Fine Arts—Five Parts—July 30).—The Cast: Lo Dorman (Douglas Fairbanks); Teresa (Alma Reuben); Sheriff Dunn (Sam De Grasse); Curson (Tom Wilkinson); Winslow Wynn (Jack Brownlee); Jack Brace (George Beranger). Directed by Allan Dwan.

Lo Dormante, or "Sleeping Water"—called by white men Lo Dorman—is a halfbreed Indian. He has been raised by an old botanist who has a cabin in the Carquinez woods; but now that the old man is dead, Lo finds that white men will have nothing to do with him. So he goes to live in a hollow tree deep in the forest.

In the mining camp, close at hand, Winslow Wynn, a free-and-easy Baptist preacher, has arrived with his pretty daughter Nellie. Nellie is a butterfly, shallow and insincere; but half the male population of the town is in love with her. Even Lo is in love with her; and his interest is returned by Nellie in a way that leads him to hope that he may marry her.

Meanwhile, Teresa, a dance-hall girl who has stabbed her lover and is fleeing from justice, seeks refuge in the Carquinez woods and finds herself before the habitation of Lo. He takes her in and gives her shelter. To get a dress for her he begs one from Nellie. Wearing this dress, Teresa is seen by a suitor of Nellie and mistaken for her.

Nellie has a great curiosity to see the home of Lo, so takes the stagecoach from her home to the village at the other side of the wood. Descending at the border of the woodland, she ventures along the trail. She is seen by the suitor who previously took Teresa to be her; and convinced that Nellie is meeting Lo clandestinely in the woods, he goes home and tells her father the scandal. Lo has by this time found the insincerity of Nellie and the true worth of Teresa; but he saves Nellie's reputation in a thrilling sequence of scenes and wins his own happiness.

GOD'S HALF ACRE (Rolfe Photoplays, Inc.—Five parts—July 31).—The cast: Blossom (Mabel Tallaferro); Henry Norman (J. W. Johnston); Rose Norman, his wife (Helen Dahl); Bess Norman, his sister (Lorraine Frost); Perry Westley, his friend (Richard Neill); Prof. Sterling (John Smiley); Parker, Superintendent at Rainbow's End (Daniel Jarrett); Lucy, "the Dragon" (Miriam Hutchins). Scenario written by June Mathis. Directed by Edwin Carewe.

Henry Norman, a successful novelist, is engaged in writing his new book. He decides that he must delve into real life for his material, as his previous work has been too idealistic. The new book is about aged types, and his friend, Perry Westley, gives him an opportunity to live for a while at a home for the aged called "Rainbow's End." There is an excellent reason for Westley's sending him away from home. Westley is in love with Mrs. Norman, and is paying her attentions.

Ignorant of the true condition of affairs, Henry takes up his temporary residence at Rainbow's End. More interesting than all the aged types is the forlorn young maid-of-all-work, Blossom, who, scarcely more than a child in years, is old before her time. Henry laughingly calls her "The Little Old Young Lady." In her Henry finds the inspiration for his book. She tells him all about her aged charges, and aids him in gathering material. Another who feels the charm of the stranger is Lucy Hargreaves, the matron, commonly known as "The Dragon." In spite of her ugliness, she is determined to make him love her.

But Henry's thoughts are concerned only with his work. A letter brings him tickets from a playwright friend to attend the opening of a new play. He throws the tickets into the wastebasket, but seeing the wistful expression on Blossom's face he asks her to accompany him, intending to write a chapter on "The Little Old Young Lady in Society." She is overjoyed. Henry's wife and Westley are also at the premiere, and Rose Norman, seeing Blossom with her husband, decides that the time has come for her to run away with Westley. Blossom found a page of Henry's manuscript, in which a proposal of marriage is made to "The Little Old Young Lady." She thinks it is meant for her, and before saying good-night to him, she asks, innocently, "When are we going to be married?" Henry is obliged to tell her that he is already married. She creeps upstairs, to cry herself to sleep, when she is confronted by the angry "Dragon," who drives her out of the house.

Henry goes home, only to find that his wife and his false friend have eloped in an automobile which is shortly struck by lightning. Both are killed. Blossom takes refuge in God's Half Acre, an asylum for crippled children presided over by Cynthia Huckaby, and she helps Cynthia with the children. Time brings her an opportunity to save the life of Henry Norman's little son, and in this way Henry finds her again. He promises to make her over into a young young lady, instead of an old young lady, and then writes the last words of his new novel, "They lived happily ever after."

THE FADED FLOWER (Six Parts—July) —The cast: Mary Hill (Rose Coghlan); Lillian (Marguerite Snow); Wilbur Mason (Arthur Donaldson); Anne (Alma Hanlon); Henry Parker (Edward Mackay). Written and directed by Ivan Abramson.

Wilbur Mason, an elderly millionaire widower, father of Anne, an only child, proposes to Lillian Hill, his stenographer, who accepts him, because of his declaration that he will devote his fortune to restoring the sight of her blind mother. Lillian, in the presence of Henry Parker, a struggling playwright, introduces Mason to her mother as her future husband. Parker, who thinks himself in love with Lillian, imagines his heart is broken. Mason, after the honeymoon, engages a renowned specialist whose operation upon Mrs. Hill is unsuccessful. Lillian now sadly realizes that her sacrifice was in vain. She becomes cold toward Mason.

Two years later Lillian and Anne meet Parker of whose great success they have read. Parker and Anne fall in love with each other. Lillian at Anne's suggestion, inviting him to call upon them. Parker does so hoping to meet Anne, but finds Lillian alone. Lillian gives Parker a rose from among those plucked for her that morning by Mason, who knows her love for them and who, unseen, witnessing her act, concludes that Lillian's love for Parker is the cause of her indifference toward him. His jealous rage becoming ungovernable he makes his presence known and orders Parker from the house, first tearing from the latter's coat the rose given him by Lillian. Mason thereafter repeatedly charges Lillian with being false to him and in love with Parker.

Parker meeting Anne, accompanies her to the gateway of her home, where she leaves him. Mason discovering him there alone believes that Parker has clandestinely met Lillian, whom he later upbraids, again thrusting the rose before her. Lillian, as the result of Mason's accusations, becomes grief stricken and ill. Despondent she leaves her husband's home and returns to her mother where she fades like roses in the autumn winds.

Mrs. Hill, fearing for her daughter's life, goes to Mason who is moved by her heart-broken and anguished appeal. He accompanies her, repentant and remorseful, to Lillian's bedside which he reaches in time to receive with her expiring breath the pardon for which he pleads and to hear the doctor pronounce her dead. Crazed with sorrow, scarcely hearing the doctor's words, Mason is about to lift the coverlet from Lillian's face when he is stricken with paralysis.

Later at his home he weeps in secret at sight of the now faded rose which to him has become a symbol of Lillian. Repenting his mistake, he bids Anne send for Parker and consents to their marriage. Troubled by his conscience, Mason's overwhelming woe permits him no rest, and he goes at dead of night to Lillian's burial place, carrying with him roses which in life she so dearly loved, which he tenderly places over her dust. "Lilian, my faded flower," he cries, "you died a martyr to my unfounded jealously. May your soul find peace in the Kingdom of Heaven."

WORLD-EQUITABLE.

MISS PETTICOATS (Peerless—Five Parts—July 31).—The cast: Agatha, Miss Petticoats (Alice Brady); Guy Hamilton (Arthur Ashley); Mrs. Sarah Copeland (Isabel Birwin); Rev. Ralph Harding (Robert Elliott); Hank (Johnny Hines); Mrs. Worth Courtleigh (Lila Chester); Captain Joel Stewart (Ed. M. Kimball). Written and directed by Harley Knoles.

Miss Petticoats, a young mill worker, lives with her grandfather. Her mother eloped with a French count who neglected and abused her and shortly after the birth of Miss Petticoats, died. Miss Petticoats' parentage is the subject of gossip in the village.

She stops a runaway and saves the life of wealthy Mrs. Copeland, who rewards her by giving her a position as secretary. Guy Hamilton, Mrs. Copeland's spoiled nephew, resents Miss Petticoats' entrance into the home, fearing she might share some of the inheritance which would otherwise be his. Mrs. Worth-Courtleigh, a young married woman who is in love with Guy, is jealous of the girl, fearing her power over Guy.

Guy is gradually attracted to Miss Petticoats and takes her about, making Mrs. Worth-Courtleigh very jealous. Mrs. Worth-Courtleigh spreads reports of the girl's parentage and her relations with Guy and Miss Petticoats is subsequently snubbed by all, and when she questions Guy, he makes an insulting proposal that they go to the city together. Mrs. Copeland, who alone stands by and believes in Miss Petticoats, denounces Guy for his infamy. Mrs. Worth-Courtleigh's husband learns through a letter of his wife's infidelity and after a scene, she and Guy leave together for the city.

Mrs. Copeland and Miss Petticoats leave together for France, where Miss Petticoats meets her paternal grandfather and is acknowledged by him just before his death, making her the heiress to his title and fortune.

Harding, a young minister who has been in love with her since childhood and who had preached the sermon that drove Guy and Mrs. Worth-Courtleigh from the village, because of their treatment of Miss Petticoats, had afterwards resigned his pulpit and devoted himself to social welfare work. He meets her again, but despite the fact that she is rich and popular, she is not happy, so he endeavors to interest her in his welfare work. Together they go to see Mrs. Worth-Courtleigh, who is dying, and she confesses her part in ruining Miss Petticoats and in weakening and demoralizing Guy.

Guy tries to renew friendship with Miss Petticoats, but she scorns him. Harding, who has loved her all the time, in spite of all that has been said against her, tells her of his love and they are married.

THE MISHAPS OF MUSTY SUFFER (No. 6 of Series 2, "Strictly Private"—July 26).—Musty hunts wild horses in the bad lands of New Jersey, and by putting salt on one's tail, he catches a fine specimen. He sells it to a farmer after recommending the animal as an educated horse. But the animal refuses to stay in the stable in which it is locked, and breaks away to join the fascinating Musty. Now that Musty has a horse he begins to have ambitions. He wishes for a cabby's suit and a nice sea-going hack, and behold, who suddenly appears but the fairy tramp, Musty's guardian genius. The fairy's wand causes the wished-for raiment and vehicle to become Musty's.

At nightfall comes rest for the weary. Musty appropriates a stable over which is a room designed for human occupation. He retires in the latter, but awakens to find his trusty steed in bed with him. In answer to Musty's inquiries as to how he got there, the faithful animal shows how he rigged up a pully with a plow for a counter-weight. He descends to the ground floor in the same way and Musty soon has him in the harness.

Musty gets a slightly inebriated customer, whom he drives almost a quarter of a block to what he assumes is the customer's home. He carries him to the second floor, opens a door and pushes the customer through. The door, it seems, is a false door opening into space, and the customer falls to the ground. Consequently, when Musty comes out of the house he finds the man outside again. He repeats the operation several times, but finally becomes disgusted and hangs the alcoholic one on a telegraph pole, after accepting all his money as remuneration for his services.

When the horse finally becomes mutinous and balky, Musty has a brilliant idea and builds a fire under him. The horse moves all right, but only far enough to draw the cab over the flames. Then he balks again. But Musty is undismayed. From the recesses of his cab he fishes a fireman's suit and a hose and extinguishes the blaze. The horse finally starts, and when Musty reaches a convenient point of observation, he mounts to the upper deck of his sea-going hack and sweeps the horizon through his spyglass. While he is thus occupied, a careless autoist strikes the cab, carrying vehicle, horse and all out from under Musty and leaving our hero hanging in a tree. Musty, however, has had the presence of mind to grab the wireless apparatus attached to the hack, and as the picture fades sends out the call of "S. O. S!"

PARAMOUNT.

COMMON GROUND (Lasky—Five Parts—July 27).—The cast: The Kid (Marie Doro); Judge Evans (Thomas Meighan); James Mordant (Theodore Roberts); Doris Mordant, his daughter (Mary Mersch); Burke (Horace B. Carpenter); Mrs. Dupont (Florence Smythe); Housekeeper (Mrs. Lewis McCord); Jones (Dr. Keller).

The Kid, a product of the slums, is employed at an artificial flower factory as an expert "slipper-on." She possesses a monstrosity of a hat which is the envy of her companions wherever it appears, and the Kid loves it. Judge Evans, a young man of unapproachable character, takes up his residence in the tenement district in order to unearth the man at the head of the vice ring composed of social and political parasites. The man in reality is the father of Doris Mordant, a girl to whom Evans is engaged.

Realizing that he must "get" the Judge, or be ruined himself, Mordant, assisted by unscrupulous politicians, arranges a plot in which the Kid (whom the Judge has discovered in the tenement where he himself lives), evidently accosts a man on the street. She is taken into Judge Evans' court and, to prove his assertion that "there is some good in all of 'em"—the Judge tells the Kid to select five companions and he will send them all to his farm for three months. Mordant frames up a scheme to send with them a woman of the streets, and provides her with money and a camera. At the farm, the Kid discovers the girls plotting to secure a compromising picture of the Judge and the woman, but they persuade her to keep still by telling her they will "queer" Evans' engagement to Doris and then he will turn to her, and the Kid's love is so great, she finally acquiesces.

Following his trial and disgrace, the Judge falls ill and the Kid cares for him. He learns to love the child of the slums, and her devotion to him is as pitiful as it is sincere. The Kid believes the Judge is pining for Doris, and with her companions, whom she forces into telling the truth, goes to the District Attorney's office and before Mordant, Doris, Evans and others, makes a clean breast of the whole affair.

Evans' love for Doris is dead and he turns to The Kid, declaring his love. She is taken to the home of a competent woman for one year. Every month the Judge receives a photograph which shows the metamorphosis of both hat and girl. At the end of the year Evans goes to claim as his own the girl who saved him from ruin, and finds her the embodiment of refinement and simplicity.

Percy is an effeminite man. His wife is sick and tired of his gentleness and wishes that her husband was as strong as Casey, their next door neighbor, whose favorite pastime is beating up his defenseless wife. When Percy is injured in an automobile accident, the doctors have to resort to blood transfusion. The only person available, whose blood is fit to be transfused is Casey, and as Casey is willing, the transfusion takes place.

After the operation Casey is as meek as a lamb and Percy has inherited the cave man instincts of the Casey family. This pleases Percy's wife immensely, until he decorates her with a couple of black eyes, then she is not so well satisfied with her strong husband. A fortune descends on Percy. The fortune is encased in an iron safe and descends from the nineteenth floor of a building, alighting gently on Percy's noble brow. Blood transfusion is again deemed necessary by the physicians, but Percy's wife has had enough of the Casey blood and is perfectly satisfied to take her chances on his life.

HESPER OF THE MOUNTAINS (Vitagraph Five Parts—July 31).—The cast: Ann (Lillian Walker); Barnett (Donald Hall); Raymond (Evart Overton); Baker (Donald MacBride); Munro (Denton Vane); Kelly, a miner (Robert Gaillard); Nora, his wife (Rose E. Tapley); Mackay (Templer Saxe); Claire (Josephine Earle). Written by Hamlin Farland. Directed by Wilfrid North.

"But, Sis, father gave you the name of Hesper in honor of these Hesperean Mountains."

"Oh! call me Ann and let me forget these pesky mountains and everything connected with them."

This is just one of many similar conversations between Louis Rupert and his sister, whom we will call Ann. Since being forced, by the trend of circumstances, to leave her home in the East and come West with Louis, Ann had plainly shown her disapproval of the country, its customs and its rough men, who, in her mind, fell far below the cultured men of the East.

When Raymond, foreman at the ranch where she is stopping, is shot, Ann nurses him back to health, but after his recovery she treats him coldly. Seeing that his presence is distasteful to her, Raymond leaves to form a partnership with Kelly, an old miner, and try his luck at prospecting in Sky Town. Later, Ann goes to the same town in search of Louis, who followed the foreman. She begins to admire Raymond's character, but conceals her admiration, and when he ventures to propose marriage, refuses him.

The miners, under the leadership of Jack Munro, a reckless character, form a union and when the mine owners refuse to accede to their demands, go out on strike. On seeing Ann, Munro conceives a strong regard for her, and Ann is attracted to him. When she learns his true character, her opinion of Western men suffers another severe jolt, and she refuses to associate with him. Raymond, not in sympathy with the cause of the miners, refuses to join them, and his efforts to bring about arbitration between the miners and the owners are discouraged. After having attempted to arrest the ringleaders of the disturbance and having failed, the sheriff returns to town and starts organizing a posse to protect the mine owners' interest.

The strike is rapidly coming to a head, and when Raymond reiterates his refusal to join the strikers, they show their indignation by blowing up his shaft house, thus leaving him almost bankrupt. This comes at a time when he can least stand the loss, as he has just struck "pay dirt." Expectant of the arrival of the posse, Munro, a former West Point man, is constantly drilling the men, and gradually whipping them into some semblance of order. When the posse finally starts for Sky Town, the miners are well trained and equipped and able to withstand an attack from a formidable army. Raymond sees what tragic results a meeting of the two factions would produce, but is unable to prevent the battle, until Ann suggests kidnapping the leader, knowing that they will not continue without him. This Raymond and Kelly set out to do, after sending a hurry call to the Governor for the militia. Munro is subdued and thrown into an empty freight car, from which he manages to escape after some time, and rejoin his forces. At their head once more, Munro rallies his men, but just as the two armies are clashing, the troops are seen approaching and the terrified miners disperse. Disgusted with them, Munro, in a drunken fury, determines to fight them single-handed, and meets his death bravely facing a hail of bullets from the posse.

Louise gives Raymond enough money to start anew, and later when he proposes to her she accepts on condition that he call her Hesper instead of Ann.

THE LIGHT AT DUSK (Lubin—Five Parts—July 31).—The cast: Vladimir Krestovsky and Mr. Krest (Orron Johnson); Nataska (Mary Kennevan Carr); Mrs. Krest, his American wife (Sally Crute); Olga, his daughter (Hedda Kuszewski); Nicholas, Olga's sweetheart (Robert W. Frazer); Frances Farrel (Evelyn Terrill). Author, Anthony P. Kelly. Director, Edgar Lewis.

Vladimir Krestovsky, a Russian peasant of unusual physical and mental prowess, harkens to the call of America and, leaving his wife, Nataska, and his year-old baby, Olga, behind, makes the journey and secures work in the steel mills of Pittsburgh. From a position as a laborer, he finally works himself up to be one of the great financial factors of the world.

His wife in Russia has not heard from him for many years and knows nothing of his success. He shortens his name of Krestovsky to that of Krest. Then commits bigamy by marrying the daughter of one of the social leaders in the country. In the meantime, over in Russia, his daughter, Olga, has grown to womanhood. She is wooed and won by Nicholas, a kindly young Russian peasant. After the wedding, determined to seek their fortune in the new world, the three of them, Olga, Nicholas and Nataska, depart for America.

Krest's American wife dies. His mind, as he sits by her bedside, takes him back to the Street of Forgotten Days when he bid Nataska good-bye. The voice of conscience preys upon him and he endeavors to seek diversion in art. He purchases the original of Hoffman's famous painting of "Christ and the Rich Young Man." Arriving in America, Nicholas and Olga secure work in one of Krest's mills in Pittsburgh. They live with Nataska in a miserable tenement house. A baby is born to Olga, and she, in her weakened condition, returns to work. One day she is severely injured. Nicholas sits beside his wife. He realizes that with her death will also come the death of their offspring. A peasant from another part of the tenement urges Nicholas to appeal to the "Big Boss" Krest himself. Nicholas determines to do so and starts out.

In the meantime, Krest has arrived home. The painting has been hung, and he is puzzled as he studies the face of Christ; he wonders where he has seen it in real life. Without a storm has begun to gather, and far up on a distant hill, the stranger appears in a silhouette against the threatening sky. Slowly and peacefully he comes down into the house of Krest. To Krest's startled questions the Stranger replies that he is one who has come to show him the error of his ways. The Stranger takes Krest into the tenement house, shows him the living conditions of the people who work for him. Then the Stranger shows him into the home of Nicholas and shows him Olga and the baby both dead in bed. Then they go back to the home of Krest. On entering, Krest struck by the Stranger's manner and appearance, compares him to the figure of Christ in the painting, and the sub-conscious mind within him forces him to tell the Stranger that it seems he knew him in the long ago. Then the Stranger informs him that he did know him, and asks him if he cannot remember, centuries ago—and the scene goes back to Jerusalem. Krest is the reincarnation of the Rich Young Man, the Stranger is the same Christ, who, centuries ago, had urged the Rich Young Man to go sell all he had, give to the poor and to follow him, but the Rich Young Man could not think of giving up his immense wealth and had left Christ with the beggars.

Then the scene comes back to Krest's library. Christ, for the Stranger is Christ, then tells the penitent Krest that, though he did not heed him then, to heed him now, and he tells him that perhaps he did not understand him then, that he did not mean for him to sell everything he possessed, but rather that he should take that which he did not actually need and use to benefit his fellowmen. The Stranger makes the sign of the cross, and disappears.

In the meantime, Nicholas has been hastening to Krest's home. The storm breaks without and Krest awakens with a start. He crosses to the windows to shut them. Nicholas has arrived, but the butler refuses him admittance. The rain has drenched him and he stands there. Krest, who has crossed to shut the windows, peers at him. The sight of Nicholas, who looks so much like Christ, staggers Krest, who wonders if it has all been a dream, and watches Nicholas disappear into the storm. Realizing it is really a human being, he calls the butler and bids him bring Nicholas back. Krest questions him and then tells him that he is anxious to see conditions as they really are. He goes back with Nicholas to his home. On the way Krest secures a doctor to care for Olga, never suspecting that it is his own daughter and son-in-law whom he is benefiting.

Arriving at the house, the doctor and Nicholas cross to the bedside of Olga, who, much to Krest's relief, is still alive and has a chance of recovering. Krest notes the terrible living quarters of the people, and determined to investigate farther. He starts into the kitchen, where he comes face to face with his wife. Without a word, Nataska crosses to his side, and he takes her into his arms, and so the rejuvenation of Vladimir Krestovsky takes place.

How Much Does It Cost You To Give Your Patrons Fresh Air?

An inefficient system of ventilation is a black eye to your theatre and your profits. The leading motion picture houses realize this fact. Many of those in the larger cities have already bettered their service and increased their patronage by installing

Sturtevant
(REG·U·S·PAT·OFF·)

Ventilating, Heating and Air-Washing Systems

The Sturtevant System is the blower or fan system of heating and ventilation in its most perfect form. It is always positive in action and independent of the weather. You can get Sturtevant quality and dependability only in the Sturtevant System. Equipment for every size theatre and building.

Sturtevant Propeller Fan

Sturtevant Propeller Fans may be installed in wall, window or ceiling without other support.

Sturtevant Ready-to-Run Fans in five sizes are ideal for ventilating the ticket and operator's booths.

If you will send a statement regarding your ventilating and heating problems we will have our engineers offer suggestions as to the proper remedy. Mention size, seating capacity, location of balconies, doors and windows. Include a rough floor plan if possible.

Stand outside your theatre and see how many people come out mopping their perspiring faces---

"All in" from POOR AIR

Poor air accounts for more vacant seats than poor films.

Good air is the secret of summer success in the movies.

"GLOBE"
VENTILATORS

will help you pack your house every night.

They draw off the close, hot, stuffy air. They operate without drafts—are absolutely noiseless—no moving parts to get out of order and they are rain-proof.

Cost little to install—nothing to operate, and work effectively in all kinds of weather.

Put the STANDARD ventilator ("GLOBE") on your theatre and fill those vacant seats this summer.

Let us tell you all about this Summer-Profit-Maker for the Movies.

Opportunity Knocks but Once

A New Invention Revolutionizes an Industry.

A basic patent has just been granted by the United States Patent Office covering a new machine for the projection of moving pictures.

It can be manufactured at a cost that will make competition by any standard machine on the market impossible.

It works upon an entirely new principle—that of manipulation of the light, as opposed to the manipulation of the film in present machines.

Its principal feature is its simplicity, coupled with the small amount of precision work needed.

It has no shutter and the movement of the film is continuous; thus eliminating all the mechanism of the intermittent movement.

The projected picture is flickerless, owing to the fact that the shutter is eliminated, thus allowing a greater percentage of light to reach the screen.

A demonstration by a working model will be given responsible parties by appointment.

Address all communications to—

L. G. M., care of M. P. W., 17 Madison Avenue, New York City

The "Full House" Problem

With the ever increasing advance in film production should go improved methods for presenting those pictures to the public.

Theatre-goers, educated to better and finer productions are becoming more discriminating every day; and in the final analysis it is the public that makes or breaks your "house."

Special screens, high grade projection machines, first run films, cannot give "box-office results" if your light is poor and inefficient.

Compensarcs will enable you to get the right kind of light irrespective of the kind or quality of your current supply.

Compensarcs will give a steady light, a bright light, a clear white light—the light that projects those good pictures your critical public demands—the light that goes a long way towards solving the "full house" problem.

Write us for descriptive literature of our Compensarcs.

Dear Sirs:-

Thinking that it might be of interest to you to know, I beg to advise you that after a most rigid test of from twelve to fourteen hours a day since the opening of the Rialto Theatre eight weeks ago, our Power's 6 B Cameragraphs have proven so satisfactory that we have this day installed three additional machines of the same model.

We have now in operation five Power's 6 B Cameragraphs in this theatre, three are in use in the main projection room, as also a Power's Dissolving Stereoptican Lantern, and two in the private reviewing room, which by the way is quite a model room, being 30ft wide and 75ft long.

We pride ourselves in having the most modern and up-to-date theatre on the Pacific Coast and it is therefore natural that we would want the best for our projection room. We also want you to know that in buying our equipment for cash, the question of price, terms or any other inducement did not enter into this decision on our part in any way, and both the Power's 6 B and Stereoptican won out on their merits.

This letter is an unsolicited expression of my opinion of your products, and wishing you continued success, I beg to remain,

Yours very truly,
Howard J. Sheehan
Manager.

JAFFERY

By WILLIAM J. LOCKE

"A PERFECTLY BUILT MARVEL OF PHOTOGRAPHIC ART"

Directed by

GEORGE IRVING

This play has been selected by

WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST

as the

First Feature Release of the International Film Service

How the Reviewers confirmed Mr. Hearst's Selection

. . . it must require an enormous amount of confidence for a director to set out in the face of many failures deliberately to screen another Locke novel—one, too, which presents more difficulties than did the others, and which is really in many ways a more delicate and fragile piece of work.

Director George Irving, however, had, besides this self-confidence, a thorough understanding of technicalities, a knowledge of dramatic construction, and a well developed sense of the beautiful. One learns these things about the director from viewing his picture.

And so we are glad of his self-confidence and we congratulate him on his picture.

All the delicacy, all the humanity, all the appeal and all of the interest possessed by the original story are transferred to the screen here without any visible loss. The finished whole is a perfectly built marvel of photographic art. It is one of the finest pictures in months; we would be scarcely exaggerating if we said it was the very finest. A long search through the memory might bring to light one or two which equaled it, but we sincerely doubt if it could bring out any which surpassed it.

The story is told in a direct, easy way; situations are built up carefully and by admirable degrees; there is no suddenness, no carelessness, no haste in its telling. No scene is undeveloped, and none is over emphasized. The big moments make one gasp for breath, the smaller moments enthrall one by their sheer beauty of direction, acting and setting. The settings in every scene are perfectly suited to the action and impressive in themselves. The few spectacular scenes in the play are splendidly handled. The photography is of the very best.

Altogether a picture very much out of the ordinary; a picture which will please the most critical; a picture which will fill houses; a picture of which its makers can be proud.

MOTOGRAPHY

The somewhat difficult feat of doing justice to the work of William J. Locke in picturizing one of his novels has been accomplished by George Irving, who directed the production of "Jaffery" for the Frohman Amusement Corporation. "Jaffery" is a delightful enough novel to have become one of the most popular products from Mr. Locke's gifted pen and to succeed in imbuing a screen play with its charm is to make a motion picture of broad appeal and distinct merit.

To begin with, the producers approached the rather ambitious attempt to picturize "Jaffery" judiciously, intelligently. C. Aubrey Smith was engaged for the title role, the work of scenariolizing the book was placed in the very competent hands of Anthony Kelly and Mr. Irving apparently was given a free rein to do everything he deemed necessary. The result of this is that the Frohman Amusement Corporation now offers a vastly attractive picture. . . .

MOVING PICTURE WORLD

"Jaffery"

Excellent Adaptation of Locke Novel Is Made by the Frohman Amusement Corporation.

Reviewed by Lynde Denig

Appropriately cast in every role, flawlessly staged to create the atmosphere of one of William J. Locke's most popular novels and directed with rare skill by George Irving, "Jaffery" occupies a certain place among the best of current productions. It is the type of picture that exhibitors want but seldom find—a picture with a story that is not insipid, yet instead of depending upon abnormal sex relationships, possesses charm and romance and leaves an unquestionably wholesome impression. Several of Locke's works have been treated successfully on the screen, but in no instance has the spirit of the author been more completely realized. . . .

DRAMATIC MIRROR

Closely following the plot of the Locke novel from which it is derived, the film version of "Jaffery" is in every way a notable screen achievement. The action is swift, and at no stage does the picture drag or lose its interest. An excellent cast, capable directing, and clearly defined, artistic, photography form a combination which entitles the production to rank with the best. . . . The picture from first to last is unusually attractive and merits a hearty reception by film patrons. P.

MOVING PICTURE NEWS

. . . They are intensely human narratives, and this same description applies to "Jaffery," the picture, produced under the direction of George Irving.

"Intensely human narrative" calls for careful production, accurate settings and a good cast; these have all been provided, and the net result is a film of more than usual importance. The cast includes such prominent and capable people as C. Aubrey Smith, Florence Deshon, Eleanor Woodruff, Paul Doucet, Ben Hendricks, and, by no means least, George Irving, himself. . . . All in all, an elaborate production has been provided, considerations of trouble and expense evidently have not weighed heavily.

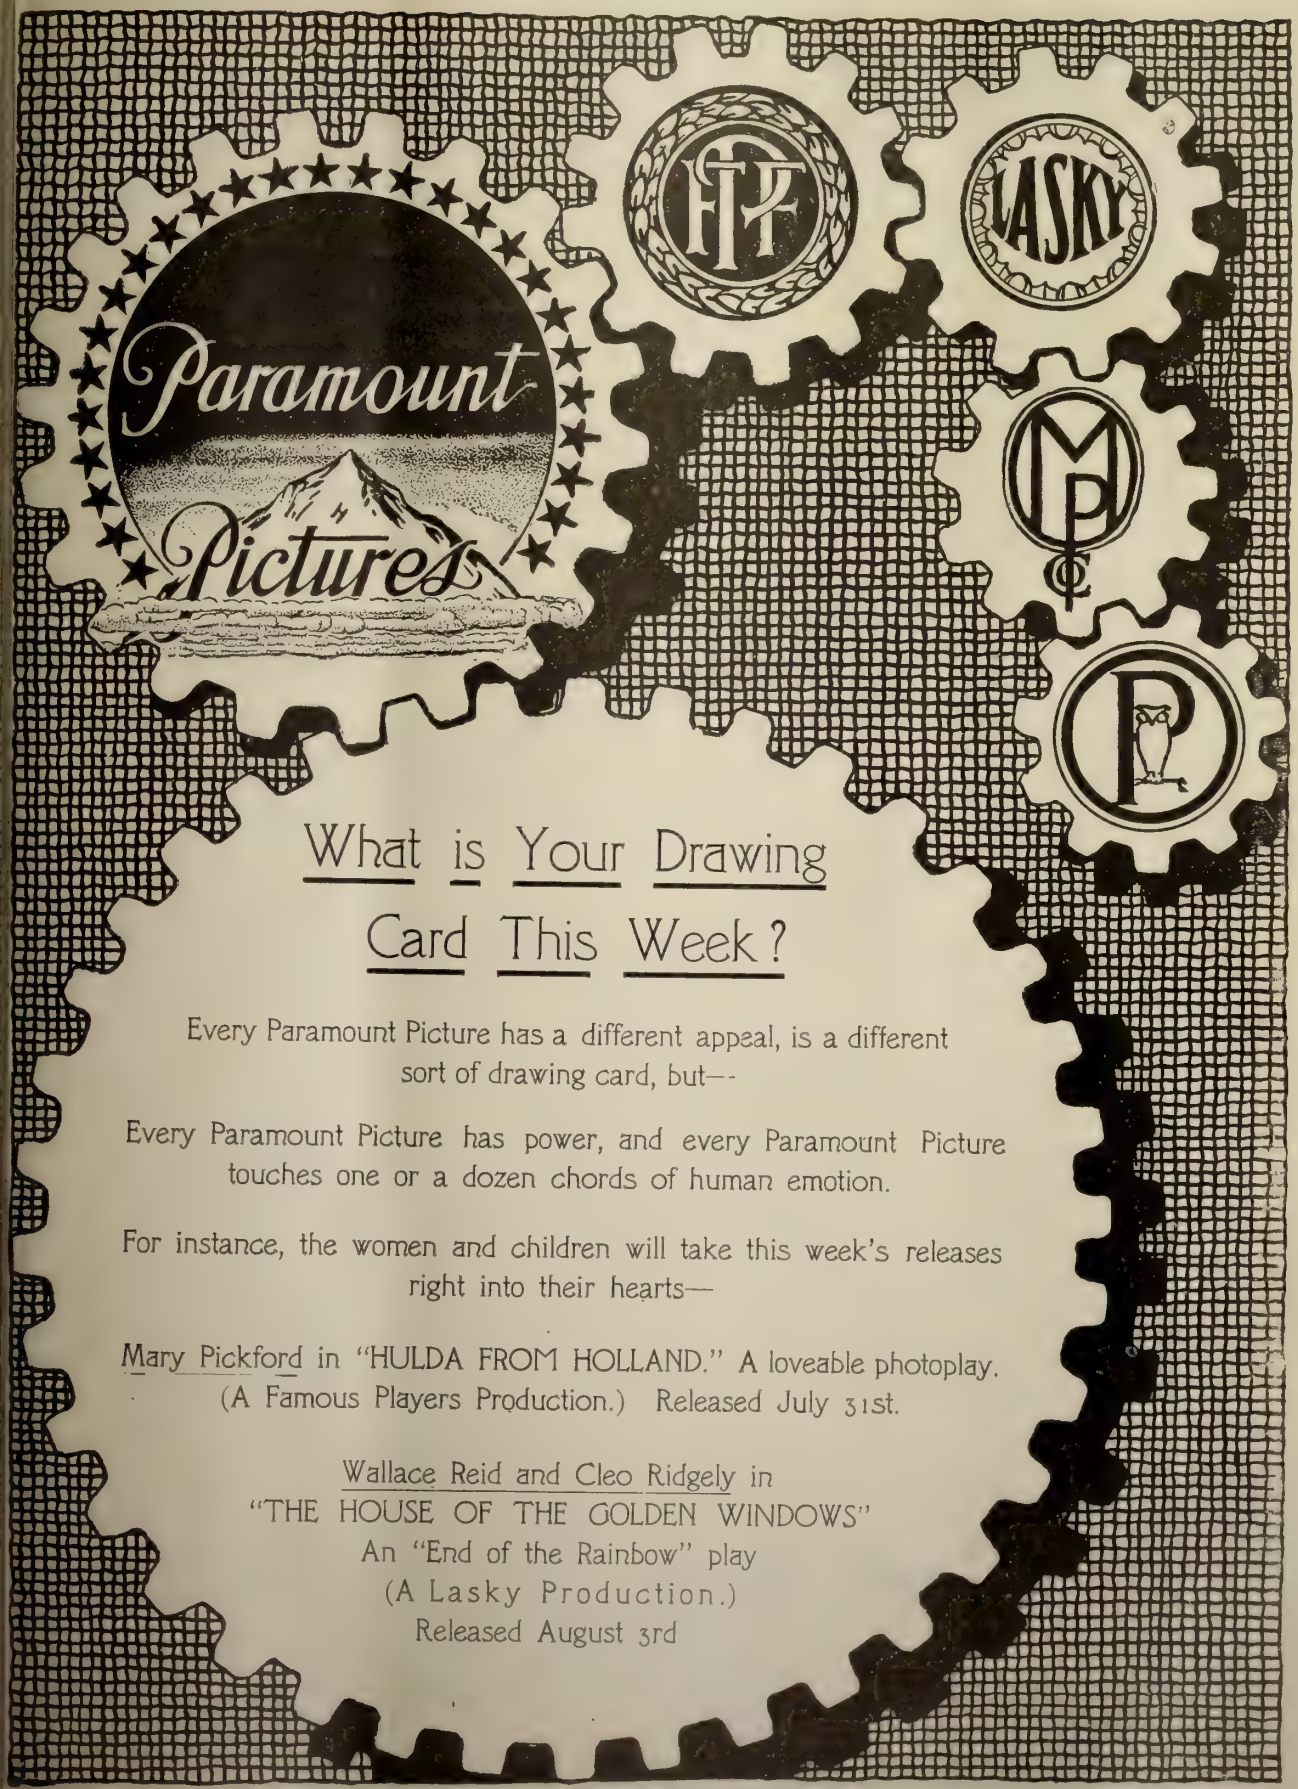
The Paramount Plan makes the exhibitor the biggest cog in the wheel.

The Paramount Program is designed to serve him with 104 great feature productions a year—two every week.

It was the guarantee of Paramount that these 104 pictures of high quality would be available that made possible the financing and building of 90% of the big motion picture theatres in America.

That guarantee of consistent quality and absolute reliability means as much to you in your field as to the Strand in New York or the Coliseum in Seattle.



What is Your Drawing Card This Week?

Every Paramount Picture has a different appeal, is a different sort of drawing card, but--

Every Paramount Picture has power, and every Paramount Picture touches one or a dozen chords of human emotion.

For instance, the women and children will take this week's releases right into their hearts—

The Courtin' of Calliope Clew

This two-part "Mustang" drama, featuring Frank Borzage and Anna Little, is an intensely interesting film story of "prairie schooner" days. The love story is delightfully carried amid scenic splendor.

Directed by Frank Borzage. Released August 11.

The Little Troubador

A two-reel "Flying A" drama with Vivian Rich and Alfred Vosburgh in a "Cinderella" story with a strong punch. As the ragged little girl escapes from her "Simon Legree" master and plays her way into the heart of the rich old man, Miss Rich's acting evokes silent sympathies for all who are oppressed.

Directed by Carl M. LeViness. Released August 7.

The Power of Mind

This three-part "Flying A" drama is a psychological photoplay, strongly portraying the advancement of a theory of hereditary evil overcome by a mental process known as imagination. Edward Coxen and Lizette Thorne, in the principal parts, present the story in a telling manner.

Directed by Thomas Ricketts. Released August 10.

Billy Van Deusen, the Cave Man

Carol Halloway, John Steppling and John Sheehan in a one-part "Beauty" comedy that is a corker. Billy's application of the cave-man theory only destroys the young authoress' hero ideal, amidst ludicrous situations.

Directed by Archer McMackin. Released August 9.

Too Bad, Eddie

In this one-part "Beauty" comedy, Eddie is a bankrupt editor who wishes to marry the small-town heiress, and stalls his creditors with this appeal. His is a sorry end, as told in the film. Orral Humphrey is featured.

Directed by Orral Humphrey. Released August 13.

SOME LIARS

Directed by Rube Miller; released Aug. 13

Rube Miller and Ben Turpin play the parts of two characters who are arrested and put in jail for thirty days; when they return to their wives, the tale born of their virile imaginations entitles them to the sobriquet—"Some Liars."

These VOGUE comedians have produced two thousand feet of comic film under this title, every foot of which is a riot of fun and laughter.

Miller and Turpin are unexcelled laugh-makers; they are crammed full of fun; and those who patronize theatres exhibiting VOGUE COMEDIES know, when a VOGUE fun film is announced, they are going to see the cleverest comedians known to the screen in farce plots that are clean, amusing and the best photographed.

Arrange TODAY to Show VOGUE Comedies in YOUR Theatre —

Gentlemen:

In this present day and time when the exchange and the exhibitor have not fully realized that their interests are identical, it gives us great pleasure to say that both the quality of service released through the V-L-S-E and your method of handling same are all that could be desired.

The open booking policy of the V. L. S. We ascribe no small part of our success to the V-L-S-E booking method, and we sincerely trust that our relations will continue as mutually pleasant and profitable when we move into our new $50,000 house next October.

With very kind regards, we beg to remain

HAVE you considered the significance to the whole industry, of the BLUEBIRD policy of "The Play's the Thing?"

Do you realize the tremendous power of the great Saturday Evening Post advertising campaign and its influence on public opinion?

Moving pictures are criticized more freely and more severely than newspapers, magazines, books or stage plays. People attracted by the name of a favorite star see her or him all too frequently in a poor play, ill-suited to the star's type or ability. They don't like it and they say so, and go to moving picture theatres less frequently.

The people know this and they are learning from the BLUEBIRD advertising that a new era is dawning for them; a positive assurance of first class, delightful entertainment; a big play, perfectly cast and acted.

If you are not familiar with all the details of the BLUEBIRD plays and policy, you will find it good business to write immediately to your local BLUEBIRD Exchange, or to the

His only enemy—
PREPAREDNESS!
The last two years have shown that all the preachments of human brotherhood, all the boasted morality of mankind, vanish when the hatred and passion of nations are aroused.
Only the strong are safe. As we love peace, our homes, our country, so must we be strong to defend them.
The Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Masterpiece
"THE BATTLE CRY OF PEACE"
continues, after a year's unprecedented success, to play to capacity houses everywhere.
The truth it expounds is unanswerable. The terrific portrayal of the crime of weakness, the blindness of those who will not see, has aroused the millions, and they demand again and again, that the picture be shown.
Almost 5,000 exhibitors have found it the biggest money-maker ever released. The coming Presidential campaign, built around the very question of Preparedness, will mean an ever increasing opportunity for exhibitors to earn a big profit from "The Battle Cry of Peace."

Facts and Comments

THE price of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD sold on the newsstands, will be fifteen cents per copy beginning on September 2d. The great increase in the price of paper and other added charges are responsible for this increase in price. There will be no increase in the rate of subscription. The reader who will send us his subscription not only will receive his copy earlier than the reader who depends on the news dealer but he will save more than 100 per cent in money.

EVERY day brings protests against the endorsement of Federal censorship to this desk. A typical "kick" comes from a prominent exhibitor in a large Pennsylvania town. This man conducts a first-class theater and edits a creditable little publication for his patrons. Says our friend and reader in an article in his program-magazine: "If the manufacturer agrees that a Federal Board of Censors is necessary then he immediately admits that he will turn out pictures that ought not to be shown. . . . If he says that HE is all right but the other man is the one who must be censored, then he is putting on the 'Holier-than-Thou' attitude, and no thinking man or woman will support a person who publicly says he is without a blemish, but that his competitor is probably open to suspicion." We confess that this looks to us very much like a dilemma for the advocates of censorship who must impale themselves on either horn thereof.

OUR recent protests against the overpaid and unconscionable star who runs away with the lion's share of the profits, leaving producer and exhibitor sadly guessing, has awakened echoes from scores of readers. They urge us to keep on "hammering away at this intolerable evil." A better understanding between exhibitors and producers is all that is needed to check the rapacious demands of the stars.

* * *

WHAT this industry needs badly among other things is a properly organized Bureau of Statistics and Information. We earnestly hope that the new National Association of the Moving Picture Industry will call such a bureau into being at an early date. The MOVING PICTURE WORLD does not cater to the general public. Nevertheless it is overwhelmed day after day with inquiries by mail and 'phone and in person. Even if these numerous inquiries were prompted by mere idle curiosity it would be good policy to answer them. They are not all prompted by mere idle curiosity. On the contrary, there are many men and women who are engaged in important civic and social work who feel the lack of authentic information on the all-absorbing subject of the motion picture. Then there are men and women who may be interested from an investor's point of view. In maintaining such a bureau of authentic information at its highest possible point of efficiency the industry not only performs a duty toward the public but serves itself as well. The more knowledge the less ignorance; the less ignorance, the less prejudice.

* * *

AT LAST accounts there is a hope at least of the new tax on motion picture theaters being beaten in the Senate. The tax it will be remembered is to consist of one-half of one per cent. on the gross receipts of every motion picture theater. Many senators in response to protests from exhibitors and producers have announced themselves against the tax. Senator John Sharpe Williams, of Mississippi, went on record as saying that he was very much in favor of the tax. He is reported to have said that he wished he "could tax all the motion picture theaters out of existence." The distinguished senator has long been in his decline and we wish him no harm. His case is respectfully referred to the second vice president of the National League, who hails from the senator's own state.

* * *

MOTION picture men in this state of New York owe it to themselves to enter into a reckoning with the authors of the Cristman-Wheeler censorship bill vetoed by Governor Whitman. We are glad to say that the campaign against the re-election of these two men has been started.

Exhibitors Accused

By Louis Reeves Harrison

IN THE midst of play poverty, at a time when it is becoming difficult to obtain strong and entertaining stories that have not already been told on the screen, the producer complains that exhibitors will not show this specific kind or that specific kind of a photoplay, no matter how high the quality. This complaint, in reality an accusation, may have a slender foundation, but it does not look reasonable that any intelligent exhibitor should stand in the way of a bright and varied program, and I have yet to meet one who offered any kind of limitation or obstruction to superior quality of product.

We may expect to find narrow-minded men in all branches of the business, men limited in experience, in sentiment, in mental view, in scope of selective taste, because of individual disposition or habits, but the exhibitor's experience is broadening. He is brought into touch with mixed audiences. He talks with the wise and the unwise. He gives close attention to critical reviews which discriminate, which are written honestly to tell the truth, rather than dishonestly to provide material for publicity departments. The exhibitor studies both audience and product.

The exhibitor who studies both audience and product knows as well as any one in the business that there is a wide variety of taste to be satisfied in a mixed audience, whose members do not complain so much of this or that specific kind of a story, especially if it has an intrinsic charm with delight of treatment and interpretation added, as they do of this or that inferior quality, or general inferiority such as producers have been releasing in constant repetition and imitation. Accusing the exhibitor looks like a thinly-veiled excuse.

That excuse is as old as the art of production. Long before some of the large producers of today were in existence, the exhibitor was blamed for the poor quality of releases shown on the screen. It was said that he only catered to low tastes, the inference being that his own was not very high. Hundreds of exhibitors testified to the contrary. They demonstrated beyond the possibility of doubt that they were denied even the right of selection by a program arrangement which compelled them to show a lot of inferior stuff in order to obtain that of merit. The only way to get a prize was to buy a whole package.

Methods of business combination and trade compulsions have succeeded so far as principal commodities, grown or manufactured, are concerned, but never in any high form of art. Here is an art largely devoted to picturing, instead of printing, of life stories, strong, entertaining, or of vital significance, and no exhibitor has gone on record with a complaint of this or that kind of story, strong, entertaining, or of vital significance when it is artistically pictured. Nor has it ever been demonstrated that he objects to what his audience wants.

Marching a lot of soldiers up and down in a meaningless way is not unlike the old cowboy and Indian chase that came near destroying interest in moving pictures. No exhibitor can be blamed for not wanting that kind, even if the big war plays now showing have broken all records of popularity. The whole country is aflame with war preparations, and the romance and adventure of war are bound to become more and more popular. Their picturesque backgrounds and swift action will be used in some brilliant stories. The exhibitor may not so much object to "war stuff" as to "raw stuff" having no other excuse than war.

It has been said that our national prosperity has made us stupidly sordid as a people, content to "eat, sleep, propagate and rot," dead from the neck up so far as world progress is concerned, mere cattle incapable even of self-defense. That such is not the case is being shown by a sudden rousing of spirit in all parts of the country. The columns most read in our papers, the books most read in our libraries, the favorite subjects of conversation are those pertaining to war and measures of self protection, even when that protection means an exhibition of impatience with a gang of ignorant murderers and thieves living next door.

Widespread recognition that we may be compelled to play a part in the great world drama now being enacted, that the security we now enjoy must be preserved with honor, has aroused a new spirit in our people. If this spirit results in higher national efficiency, systematic physical training and nobler manhood, the pictured story must respond to that deep feeling. What the people are thinking about prepares a ground of receptivity for stories of high merit on that subject, and all live exhibitors know that a part of their program may well be devoted to superior stories on subjects of the day.

From an author's point of view, I would never inject military action of any sort into a story where it was not needed for the proper development of that story. On the other hand, if the exciting movement and tense situations found in war time were essential to story structure and interest, they would go in, or the story would not go on. Only through skill and harmony of arrangement, certainly not by distortion and disarrangement, can beauty of story, to say nothing of its strength, be even approached. All that originates with the author.

I would like to have evidence that exhibitors, especially those who are calling for bright, new and original stories, are trying to stifle authorship in any way. I have one good reason to believe that exhibitors are doing nothing of the sort, that they never have tried to cramp the originator of bright and entertaining stories, and that reason is that producers have rarely gone to professional novelists and playwrights for new material, preferring to rely on studio-revised materials from less costly sources. Proof of it lies in the fact that they have only just begun to encourage high-class authorship for the screen by public announcement of good pay for the work.

A large part of the outlay for screen production has gone to the director and the interpreter of the screen story, allowing comparatively little for the author of it, effectually barring the very men who are equipped by nature and training to do creative work of the highest order. The exhibitor has done a vast amount of good by insisting upon a higher quality of performance. He has materially helped to bring about the approach to a better understanding between author and producer that is coming strongly into notice at the present time.

Many alleged complaints of exhibitors can be traced to an old and familiar source—as long as there is an inefficient salesman on the road complaints of that nature will be manufactured and sent in as an excuse for his lack of ability to market a product of unusual merit. Given a powerful or brilliant new story, well worked out in the scenario, pictured on the screen with imaginative charm by a director of artistic ideals and comprehension of types, the exhibitor will be the last to complain. He is in business to suit his audience.

The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry

By W. Stephen Bush.

THE National Association of the Motion Picture Industry has started well. At the very go-off it began with a policy of work. The results of its meeting in the Hotel Astor have been reported in all the principal newspapers of the country. It was well and necessary to give notice to the politicians. The notice has been given. The whole country has been informed that the motion picture men have at last gotten together in a solid and harmonious body and they are no longer the prey of every grafter, pseudo-reformer and spoils-hunting politician.

Nothing but praise goes to the five branches of the industry who have acted so intelligently and promptly in the election of their directors. Each class is represented by men well known in the industry. All have records of achievement to their credit. All are engaged in active work and all are acquainted with conditions in the industry in general and they are thoroughly at home in their own respective branches. The organization is not as complete as it might be and as no doubt it will be. One or two of the great groups in the industry are not represented. Perhaps the failure of the Board of Trade has made them hesitate to join in the new organization. We hope that these gaps will speedily be filled.

We hope for much from the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry because for the first time in the history of the business the exhibitor is given something like adequate recognition. For five years or more the Moving Picture World has consistently pleaded for a larger influence of the exhibitor in the councils of the industry; we are naturally gratified to know that events have justified the logic of our plea and that our advice has been heeded. The idea of giving the exhibitors a representation of two on a board of directors of ten was among other causes fatal to the Board of Trade.

It is well once more to emphasize the fact that the new organization will deal in a direct and immediate way with only the external problems of the industry. The organization was formed first and foremost for the purpose of fighting the common foe. The new organization will not attempt to settle the internal problems of the industry. It will indeed be a conciliating influence, it will bring all branches of the industry into closer touch with one another and we are sure that a spirit of tolerance and forbearance will be created among all the branches of the industry. We will get better acquainted all around and we will look with more sympathy upon our neighbor's troubles and difficulties. We earnestly hope that many internal differences will be settled by arbitration acceptable to all. In the last analysis, however, each branch is a strictly self-governing body; the interests of the various branches may and often must be divergent if not conflicting. It would be foolish to expect that a majority of one branch will ever accept the dictation of another branch. The individual and collective sense of fairness will help to solve and adjust internal differences.

Time has wisely been given to the directors living at a great distance from New York to come here and attend the meeting which, on the sixteenth day of August, will elect officers and create and organize the machinery of the new organization. The delay was unavoidable, but we surely hope it will be the last delay.

We know that the exhibitors all over the country are anxious to do their share as soon as the signal is given. No organization in the industry ever started under more favorable auspices than the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

Our Duty to Our Readers

By W. Stephen Bush.

THE race for publicity in the motion picture journals begins to resemble a speed contest in a psychopathic ward. It is suggestive not merely of woeful misconceptions, but of positive mental unsoundness. If the Moving Picture World were to print all the stuff that is sent in here our paper bills would soon exceed the speed limit and we would in the course of a few weeks lose most of our readers. Any person who gets around among exhibitors and who has even a faint idea of what is going on knows that the papers which cram their columns full of thinly disguised but heavily padded puffs are rapidly losing what few readers they had.

There is nothing that provokes and irritates the average reader more than piles upon piles of puffing. He will not read junk of this kind. The man that is sending it out may be convinced that it is all highly valuable matter and entitled to the best position in the paper, but I can assure him that he is fearfully mistaken.

It is only the paper with either no circulation at all or with a pitiably small circulation which can afford to open its news and editorial columns to every demand of the publicity man and the press agent. The Jayville Bugle will give a page or two to the most trivial event in Jayville, but its circulation is strictly confined to the limits of Jayville. The whole issue of the cheap paper without an honest circulation isn't worth ten lines in a paper like the Moving Picture World, which has both the circulation and the confidence of its readers. The text of the Moving Picture World belongs to the readers and the editor only holds it in trust for the readers. He is responsible to them.

To our way of thinking motion picture journalism, like every other kind of journalism, is a great independent and beneficial influence. If journalism is true to its conscience and to its best traditions it will place the service to its readers above every other consideration. When a newspaper or a trade publication sells its news columns and its editorial pages in return for advertising two deductions may be made with absolute and mathematical certainty: First, the paper has either no circulation at all or it has a pitiably small and insignificant circulation. Second, it will sooner or later be repudiated and rejected by the reading public. It may fool itself, it may fool and it often does fool the advertiser, but it cannot for any length of time fool the readers.

The Moving Picture World offers to its advertisers by far the largest circulation. This fact has been proved by a dozen tests made by firms and persons in no way connected with this paper. The slightest inquiry will reveal this fact anywhere in the forty-eight states in the Union. In addition the Moving Picture World offers to its advertisers the prestige and the confidence that are born of many years of good reputation. An advertiser who is seeking results and who is guided by reason will want nothing more.

ONE of our British contemporaries asserts that most of our exhibitors here are "hyphenated" Americans. We do not know what evidence our esteemed contemporary has collected to warrant its assertion, but we must confess frankly that we have noticed nothing of the kind here. Perhaps the telephoto lens of our esteemed contemporary is in need of repairs, it may have been "seeing things." Nothing in the way of a hyphen is visible in the exhibiting ranks, at least not visible to the naked eye.

Death of William T. Rock, Pioneer Picture Man

One of the Distinctly Successful Men in the Business Passes Away—Had An Eventful Career

WILLIAM T. ROCK, pioneer motion picture man, and for many years president of the Vitagraph Company of America, died at his summer home, Oyster Bay, New York, at 10 o'clock of the morning of Thursday, July 27. The immediate cause of death was heart failure, following an acute attack of diabetes, from which complaint he had been a sufferer for some time, but which did not take a serious turn until about three months ago when the first acute attack was experienced. Though rallying from that attack Mr. Rock failed steadily until the time of his death.

The deceased was about sixty-two years of age and leaves a widow, a son, John B. Rock, who has lived in Chicago for several years, and Mrs. C. A. Willet, wife of "Doc." Willet, a well known motion picture man. The funeral services were held at the city home of the deceased, Ocean avenue, Brooklyn, N. Y., at 2 o'clock Sunday afternoon, July 30. It was attended by a large number of the friends and business associates of the deceased. Among those whose presence was noted were J. Stuart Blackton and Albert E. Smith, formerly associated with Mr. Rock in the Vitagraph Company; George Kleine, J. A. Berst, H N. Marvin, C. O. Baumann, William Wright, W. W. Irwin and Ira M. Lowry, of various producing companies, and Leroy D. Ball, attorney.

Of the working staff and players of the Vitagraph Company there were many present, and tear-filled eyes testified the grief that was quite general among those who had worked with "Pop" Rock in the years of old Vitagraph prosperity during which most of them had occasion, at one time or another, to experience the quality of his generosity. Among the more prominent were Charles Kent, William Shea, David Montgomery, Tefft Johnson, Charles Burton, Sam Spedon, E. G. Hedden, W. T. Watkins, Victor Smith, Mr. French and Lillian Walker; also Maurice Costello and Larry Trimble, one time Vitagraphers.

The officiating clergyman was Rev. Louis H. Johnston of the Congregational Church of Patchogue, N. Y. The pall bearers were J. Stuart Blackton, Albert E. Smith, H. N. Marvin, T. B. Ackerson, Louis Stauch and M. Sollinger. Of the immediate family present were the widow, Mrs. Florence Rock, Mr. and Mrs. John B. Rock and Mr. and Mrs. W. T. Willet.

Interment was made at Greenwood Cemetery immediately after the services at the house.

The Late William T. Rock.

William T. Rock was born in Birmingham, England, December 31, 1853, and remained there during his boyhood. After attending the public schools he came to America when still a young man, and depending entirely upon his own resourcefulness in gaining a livelihood soon became connected with a circus company, which gave him his first experience as a showman. From the beginning of his career in America he displayed keen judgment in selecting promising enterprises and always was on the watch for something new. Having acquired considerable capital, in the early eighties he became proprietor of the Madison Hotel, that for a number of years stood opposite the Metropolitan Opera House on Broadway. In this, as in many other undertakings, he was successful.

In 1886 Mr. Rock, in connection with Edward Purvis and Michael Crane, formed the Ball Electric Illuminating Company, which was granted a franchise to erect a plant in New York City. The generating station was on 38th street, just west of Broadway. Mr. Rock was president of the company. Owing to the imperfections of the arc light at that time, and to other circumstances, the company did not prosper, and was sold in 1897 to Ex-Judge William Kelly of the East River Electric Light Company. It was through this experience with electricity that Mr. Rock was able to make his subsequent success in the motion picture business in which he engaged in 1896, at which time he bought the rights on the Vitascope machine for Louisiana from Raff & Gammon.

It was out of this knowledge that Mr. Rock, in company with J. Stuart Blackton and Albert E. Smith, formed the Vitagraph Company of America in 1898 for the purpose of giving motion picture exhibitions. Here the experience of Mr. Rock in the show business stood the new company in good stead, for under his management and advice the new business grew rapidly until "Vitagraph" became almost svnonymous with motion pictures and the number of machines in use under its control numbered fully one hundred—which was a great many in those days.

Some time afterward the company began to make pictures, which branch of the business was mainly under the direction of Messrs. Smith and Blackton, while Mr. Rock continued to run the exhibition and rental business, which had become to be a factor in motion pictures. It was his ability to get good prices for exhibitions and for the rental of film that contributed largely to the ultimate success of the company.

Mr. Rock's connection with the Vitagraph Company was uninterrupted from the formation of the company until last May, when he sold his interests to the new syndicate which was then formed by several of the leading capitalists of the American Tobacco Company. For those interests he received a large sum of money and a substantial allotment of the stock of the new corporation.

Many stories are afloat regarding the amount of this world's goods accumulated by Mr. Rock through his connection with the motion picture business and, while that sum is no doubt large, a great portion of his material wealth was acquired by careful investments in real estate and securities of which he was an excellent judge and a close buyer.

Of the man, now passed away, much good may be said. Someone has written this little appreciation which we are pleased to reprint because it is so near to the truth: "If you have ever met 'Pop' Rock, as people are pleased to call him, you have recognized in him a man of deep convictions in all matters in which he is interested. He is a man of positive character and indomitable will, and he possesses a perseverence that will not be denied. Contrasted with these noticeable and commendable traits, Mr. Rock is one of the most likable of men, easy to approach, but difficult to oppose. Those who know him best know that underneath this brusque and impetuous nature he has one of the tenderest and kindest of hearts, true to his friends, and loyal to his associates."

In attestation of this there will be the testimony of hundreds of men and women who have found him a friend in a time of real need.

While the terms of the last will and testament of the deceased have not yet been disclosed, it is believed that the bulk of the estate will fall to the son, John B. Rock, who is particularly well fitted to administer its affairs.

The Great Get-Together Meeting

First Practical Steps in Perfecting the New Film Parliament—Incorporation Under Way—Executive Offices Will be Organized on August 16

THE National Association of the Motion Picture Industry held its first meeting after the Chicago Convention in the College Room of the Hotel Astor on Tuesday, July 25. About 100 film men were present representing every branch of the industry.

The object of the meeting was to act on the acceptance by the National League Motion Picture Exhibitors of America of the plans and by-laws drafted and submitted by the Delmonico Conference. No time was lost in getting down to business. Walter W. Irwin immeditaely reported that the proposed charter and by-laws of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry had been submitted to the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America in convention assembled at Chicago. The convention itself, said Mr. Irwin, considered the proposition and the question of joining the association and thereafter appointed a committee of twenty to go into session with the representatives of the National Association.

"These two committees," Mr. Irwin continued, "met for several hours and thoroughly and earnestly discussed the matter from almost every standpoint. As a result, the committee of 20 appointed by the exhibitors' convention, voted to approve the plan and to recommend that the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America join this Federation. The next morning, the convention of exhibitors unanimously and enthusiastically approved the report of its committee. Thereupon the convention proceeded to elect a branch committee of 102 to represent the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America in the Federation, and forthwith this committee of 102 elected ten splendidly representative exhibitors as directors to represent the exhibitors' branch of the industry on the Board of the Federation." Mr. Irwin then submitted this further report:

I desire to say at this time, gentlemen, that the spirit of the exhibitors in convention was splendid, and constitutes an example to be followed by each of the other branches of this industry.

Due, as they pointed out, to past experiences, they had their doubts and fears regarding this federation and the sincerity of the other branches of the industry in actually seeking to co-operate so that we might present a united industry to our common enemies. But the exhibitors waived their fears and doubts and concluded to place their confidence in the producers and exchangemen and in all of the other branches of the industry, and to believe that each of these branches is just as sincere and earnest in desiring to build a powerful federation consisting of the whole industry, as the exhibitors themselves are. In other words, gentlemen, the exhibitors fully recognized the necessity for such a federation as is proposed, and accepted it in good faith and with great earnestness.

Moreover, as soon as the convention unanimously accepted the proposition, they proceeded to the execution of their part of the organization with dispatch, and selected as their representatives men of intelligence, who will be of great assistance to the whole industry in meeting all common questions which confront us at the present time, and which will hereafter arise. It is earnestly hoped that each of the other branches will act with the same earnestness and dispatch.

We are here today for the purpose of having all those who have not already signed the application for membership to do so, and for the further purpose of having the other branches of the industry elect their respective branch committees and boards of directors. You understand that the federation proposes only to deal with questions affecting the industry as a whole.

The questions affecting any branch of the industry are to be taken up solely by the branch committee of that industry. Questions affecting two or more branches of the industry are to be taken up and thrashed out by a meeting of the branch committees representing the classes of membership between which the difference exists. It is, therefore, of the greatest importance that the branch committees elected shall be thoroughly representative, and that each branch committee be promptly organized, with at least a chairman, a vice-chairman and a secretary, and with such committees as each branch committee may deem desirable to appoint.

For instance, there are a great many questions pertaining to the producers' end of the business which the producers in their own committee can act upon to the benefit not only of the whole industry but to themselves. The same applies to the exchangemen and to the equipment and material manufacturers. The rules of government, in other words, the by-laws for each branch committee are left to its own determination.

Each of the four branches of the industry assembled here today is to elect five directors. In addition to electing officers for the committee, it will be necessary for them to elect two inspectors of election, who shall be properly sworn to perform their duties in the counting of the ballots for directors, and who will thus be in a position to file their respective certificates with the County Clerk. Now, gentlemen, let us act in the same spirit that was exhibited by Chicago.

First, it is necessary for each firm or individual who has not signed a subscription for membership, to at once do so. After all have signed, the producers will meet in one part of the room; the distributors in another; the supply men and material men in another; the miscellaneous class in still another part of the room, where they will hold their respective meetings. It will then be necessary to furnish us with the names and addresses of each director elected, so that we can place these names in the certificate of incorporation, to be filed at Albany.

As soon as the directors are elected, we will determine upon a time and place for the calling of the meeting of directors, so that we may complete the organization by electing officers and calling for the entrance fees of those who have signed, and begin actual operations. Our meeting will have to be held at a date sufficiently subsequent to permit the ten directors of exhibitors, some of whom represent the far West, to be present for the meeting.

At the suggestion of Mr. Irwin the various groups of film men who were to elect their representatives on the Board of Directors of the new organization retired for consultation, conference and election. The results of the elections in the various branches were: Producers—Carl Laemmle, J. Stuart Blackton, Adolph Zukor, W. A. Brady and M. Sherrill. Accessories—H. C. Moore, J. C. Brulatour, J. H. Hallberg, E. S. Porter and Don Bell. Distributors—P. A. Powers, A. Abrams, Richard Rowland, E. A. McManus and W. W. Irwin. Miscellaneous—W. Stephen Bush, Arthur James, Paul Gulick, Wid Gunning and Fred Beecroft.

The results of the elections having been announced the main meeting resumed business in the College Room, whereupon the chairman announced that articles of incorporation would be filed immediately and a further meeting would be held on August 16 in the same place. The Board of Directors will then organize the administrative and executive offices of the new organization.

The question of proper publicity was brought in a speech made by Mr. Brady, who advocated the speediest possible appointment of a paid publicity man. The whole matter was eventually referred to a committee consisting of Lee A. Ochs, Harry Reichenbach, W. A. Johnston, E. A. McManus, J. C. Brulatour and W. Stephen Bush. This committee went to work at once and sent out a story of the meeting to the press associations. It was decided to prepare reports and publicity matter for the entire press of the country. On behalf of the exhibitors President Ochs said he would place all this literature in the hands of the various locals with instructions to get as much of it into their papers as possible.

A partial list of the film men who attended follows: Ernest Horstmann, president Exhibitors' League, Massachusetts; A. Rothstein, William Edwards, of the Motion Picture Theater Equipment Company; Fred C. Hawley, W. A. Brady, W. W. Irwin, Wm. Brandt, E. A. McManus, J. Stuart Blackton, Arthur James, Lee A. Ochs, J. Robert Rubin, Wm. M. Seabury, P. A. Powers, J. W. Engel, Richard A. Rowland, J. W. Gray, Sam Spedon, Maxwell Karger, Moe Streimer, J. F. Confal, E. M. Saunders, C. A. Taylor, J. M. Larkin, C. J. Giegrich, H. A. Hallett, G. A. Magie, Phil Lewis, Thomas Howard, M. Grossman, W. C. Hubbard, S. H. De Ray, J. A. Millberg, E. A. Masters, Mr. Levine, R. Israel, Mr. Oes, W. A. Johnson, A. J. Hallegg, S. Jacoby, W. Hallberg, P. H. Cromelin, W. B. Westcote, H. D. Kramer, D. J. Hanlon, C. H. Pierce, J. N. Solomon, C. R. Condon, Henry Cole, W. K. Hill, E. J. McGovern, Paul Gulick, S. M. Jacobi, Adam Hull Shirk, Thos. Hardway, G. H. Wiley, A. L. Le Vine, J. Pelzer, J. J. Murphy, Ewan Justice, V. M. Shapiro, L. J. Bamberger, J. C. Broulatour, H. Reichenbach, M. Sherrill, Mr. Abrams, Wid Gunning, Mr. Barry, S. Lesselbaum, F. R. Jones, J. J. Wittman, H. Newman, Mr. Schallenberger, H. W. Rosenthal, Ben H. Zerr, B. F. Porter.

EDWARD JOSE NOW WITH ASTRA.

Edward Jose, who produced Pathe's famous serial, "The Iron Claw," has severed his connection with the Feature Film Company and is now under the banner of the Astra Film Corporation. He has taken with him his entire staff of cameramen, assistants, etc., and is now finishing a five-reel feature for the Pathe program. In this picture stars Pearl White, heroine of "The Iron Claw." Other members of the cast are Hal Forde, Niles Welch and Lilie Leslie.

GABORIAU NOVEL FOR PHOTOPLAY.

Among the future Bluebirds is listed "The Clique of Gold," adapted from Emilie Gaboriau's famous novel of the same title. Elsie Jane Wilson will be featured in the company Rupert Julian will direct from E. J. Clawson's scenario. Francelia Billington, one of the Bluebird's prize beauties, will also be in the cast along with Douglas Gerrard and Mr. Julian.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

NORTH CAROLINA CONVENTION.

Take Action Against Kitchen Tax Bill—Join National Organization—Wells Elected President.

THE Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of North Carolina last month completed a convention that will go down into the history of the industry of the State as something worth while and productive of great results. Held in Durham July 19 and 20, despite the fact that a large portion of the State was covered with water as a result of the devastating floods that tore up the railroad service and kept nearly half of the motion picture theaters either dark or in confusion as to programs because of delayed express shipments, the noise of the convention was heard in Washington, for one of the most important steps taken was the sending of telegrams to Senator F. M. Simmons, chairman of the Senate Finance Committee, and to Congressman Claude W. Kitchen, chairman of the Ways and Means Committee of the House of Representatives, denouncing in scathing terms the attempt to further burden the exhibitors of the country by the unjust tax proposed in the general revenue bill, now before Senator Simmons' committee. And they did not stop at that, for they voted to send Secretary H. B. Varner, and General Counsel A. F. Sams to Washington to supplement these telegrams with personal argument.

This is not the first time the Tar Heel exhibitors have come to the front in opposition to unjust legislation, and at each assault they have made an impression that has been to their credit.

There were so many things that kept the attention of the visitors focused on the convention that it would be a hard matter to make a selection of topics on which to give a wordy account, or to attempt to quote the many speakers who entered in good spirit the many arguments that arose. The subjects were many and highly interesting.

The principal speaker of the convention was F. J. Rembush, of Shelbyville, Ind., who had come direct from the Chicago convention to make the speech which really resulted in the action later taken of affiliating with the national organization. He outlined the new and higher aims of the latter under its amended charter and made a spirited plea for a greater amount of co-operation among the exhibitors. He bewailed the fact that it was necessary all over the country to practically beg exhibitors to so organize as to be able to take care of the business from which they exact their living. He also took up the need of various reforms in the industry, including truthful advertising on the part of manufacturers.

Mr. Rembush took cognizance of the splendid enthusiasm and sound business judgment which characterized the convention sessions and he complimented the exhibitors on these points. "I have seen even more genuine, healthy enthusiasm here in your convention, and heard more advanced thoughts projected by your speakers than during the entire convention of the national organization at Chicago last week," was his very gratifying declaration.

He also stated that he would telegraph to the exhibitors of New York who, with the manufacturers, were in session, urging them to consider the proposed tax law and telling them of the action taken by the North Carolinians with the recommendation that they get in touch with the latter, who are able to render very valuable aid to every exhibitor in the United States in this fight.

During the course of his remarks Mr. Rembush recalled his prediction made last January of the downfall of the Motion Picture Board of Trade. At that time he gave as his reason the fact that its members were not properly affiliating themselves with the exhibitors, who form the units upon which the entire industry is founded.

There was considerable discussion of the requirement of a number of the manufacturers and exchanges that exhibitors desiring to do business with them must make a deposit equal to the amount expended by the exhibitor on his program for two or three weeks. This was held to be unfair and was an evidence of poor business policy. It was contended that the exchanges and manufacturers should evolve some sort of a credit information service whereby they would be enabled to arrive at the credit standing of each exhibitor with whom they do business, much after the fashion of the Dun and Bradstreet systems, and know to whom to extend credit and to whom to refuse credit, and not make the exhibitor of good financial standing suffer because of these others.

Nor could the exhibitors understand why their money should be allowed to remain idle so far as they are concerned, although intimating that these collections served a good purpose for the exchanges and manufacturers in probably aiding them in the conduct of their businesses.

The delegates went on record as not countenancing any shrewd tricks or "crooked" methods resorted to by members of the industry, pledging themselves to purge the industry in North Carolina to the end that it may be put on a businesslike basis, doing what they could to co-operate with the exchanges, and incidentally expecting the exchanges to co-operate in turn with them for they too are sometimes guilty of sharp practices. They expressed their abhorrence of the man who gave bad checks or who did not pay his bills, feeling that these and like matters only increased the overhead expenses of the exchanges at issue and resulted in the honest exhibitor having to pay more for his service as a result.

Insurance rates came in for some little discussion for it was said that the theaters of North Carolina had to pay premiums that were far too high. It was shown that the rates demanded were greater than those in force in either Virginia or South Carolina, and it was suggested that this matter be turned over to the legislative committee upon its appointment with instructions to appear at the next legislature and press for a reduction of such rates.

This same committee is also to bring before the legislature the matter of taxation. It was shown that in cities of 15,000 or 20,000 in North Carolina the exhibitors were forced to pay $450 in special taxes to the city, the county and the state, and then there came the income tax, the corporation tax and finally the war revenue tax imposed by the Federal government.

Censorship, city, state and Federal, met with a great deal of opposition and resulted in the passage of resolutions expressing the views of the organization. An editorial from the Saturday Evening Post was read by Secretary Warner and a resolution was adopted instructing him to send a letter of thanks to the publishers of that periodical for this expression on the subject of censorship.

At the concluding session of the convention the annual election of officers resulted in the re-election of Percy W. Wells as president of the league. This was the first instance where a president has served for more than a single term in the state league. The exhibitors were unanimously opposed to "swapping horses" at this critical time, in view of the great constructive work which has been undertaken and carried to a successful conclusion during the past year under the guidance of President Wells. H. B. Warner, of Lexington, was also re-elected as secretary and treasurer for another term, and A. F. Sams, of Winston-Salem, will continue as attorney. Paul V. Phillips, of the Paris theater, Durham, was elected first vice-president, and L. G. Taylor, of Newbern, second vice-president.

Charlotte was selected as the place of the holding of the midwinter meeting in January, 1917.

Before adjournment the name of Henry E. Friedman was brought before the convention. Friedman was one of the founders of the organization and almost every exhibitor present at the convention expressed regret that he was no longer located in the territory and could not therefore take part in this gathering. He was one of the most popular film men who ever traveled through the North Carolina territory, and in appreciation of his efforts in behalf of the exhibitors of the state it was ordered that a telegram conveying the greetings from the convention and congratulations on his promotion be signed by the officers of the league and sent to him at Minneapolis.

The delegates had a great deal of fun at the barbecue held at Lakewood Park. They will soon have an opportunity of seeing themselves in the "movies" for Harry R. Mason took a few "close-ups" while they were busy devouring the good things that had been set out before them. The film is to circuit the state.

By courtesy of the American Tobacco Company, the delegates and film men were given an opportunity to make a tour of the mammoth plant of that company in Durham, where all the "Bull Durham" tobacco and the "Sovereign" and "Sweet Caporal" cigarettes used in the world are made. The daily output of Sovereigns at this plant approximates 4,000,000, and the other products are in proportion. The home of "Duke's Mixture" and "Piedmont" cigarettes is also in Durham and practically all of the smoking tobaccos of that class and domestic cigarettes of Virginia tobacco made in the United States are produced in Durham.

The representatives of the film interests present at the convention included the following: F. W. Sweet, Nicholas Power Company; Earle E. Reese and Frank G. Christoph, International Film Service, Washington, D. C.; Sidney B. Lust and F. J. Buck, United Film Service, Washington, D. C.; Carl F. Senning, Fox Film Corporation, Washington, D. C.; E. F. Dardine, of the Universal Film & Supply Company, Charlotte, N. C.; R. D. Anderson, Pathe Exchange, Charlotte, N. C.; C. O. Moss, Unicorn Film Service Company, Washington, D. C.; Alan J. Bachrach, V-L-S-E, Inc., Washington, D. C.; C. C. Ezell, General Film Company, Atlanta, Ga.; Arthur S. Hyman, Hy-Art Masterplays Company, Washington, D. C.; R. D. Craver, Craver Film & Supply Company, Charlotte, N. C.; representatives of the Bluebird Photoplay Company, and A. B. Cheatham, Mutual Film Corporation, Atlanta, Ga., and others.

SECRETARY VARNER IN WASHINGTON.

Secretary H. B. Varner of the North Carolina Motion Picture Exhibitors' League spent nearly the whole of last week in Washington, D. C., conferring with various members of the Senate Finance Committee in an effort to secure at least a modification of that clause of the so-called general revenue bill applying to motion picture theaters, if not able to induce the Senate to eliminate the tax entirely.

Mr. Varner, who is intimately acquainted with a number of senators, has put the matter up to them in a very convincing way, stating that the exhibitors of his state and of all other states are now overburdened with taxes and at the request of Senator Hoke Smith of Georgia, a member of the sub-committee of the Senate Finance Committee, who is in charge of the theater schedule, he has addressed the following letter to him:

Lexington, N. C., July 27, 1916.

Hon. Hoke Smith, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

My Dear Senator: Referring to our conversation with reference to the proposed tax on motion picture theaters in the revenue bill now pending before your sub-committee, I wish to call your attention to the resolution adopted by the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of North Carolina opposing the proposed tax on the ground that the industry is already overtaxed, paying six separate taxes into state, county, city and Federal treasuries, and we urge that in the event of a need for taxing these theaters, it be on the basis of the present rates as contained in the so-called war emergency revenue law.

Representing as I do over two hundred motion picture theaters in North Carolina, I earnestly request that the existing law be substituted for the law proposed in the new bill.

The tax of one-half of one per cent. will do a lasting injury to the business because of being exorbitant.

I am, Very truly yours,

H. B. VARNER,
Secretary, Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of North Carolina.

When seen at the Capitol by the Washington correspondent of the Moving Picture World, Mr. Varner expressed surprise at the inactivity of the motion picture interests in general. He said he had expected to see evidences of a considerable interest in a piece of legislation that is going to cost the exhibitors of the United States so great an amount of money.

Mr. Varner stated that he was working to have the section changed before it could get on the floor of the Senate and he had hopes that the committee might see fit to recommend that there be no change from the present war tax rate.

It naturally follows that the present war tax would be far more acceptable to the exhibitors as a whole than that proposed of one-half of one per cent. on the gross profits. There is absolutely no way to have the tax wholly abolished and the seating capacity tax is a whole lot better. The trouble in Congress is that everyone thinks that the exhibitors of the country are making more money than the manufacturers of war munitions and as such should be highly taxed.

PLANS OF PRESIDENT OCHS.

A Vigorous Political War Will Be Waged Against All the Enemies of the Screen.

THE National League of Motion Picture Exhibitors intend to conduct a vigorous political campaign this fall, both in the congressional elections and in the various states, where censorship has become a political issue or where censorship has been placed on the statute books. Mr. Ochs, the newly elected president, has well defined plans and has just issued a statement which makes most interesting reading matter. It shows that he is a man who has clear ideas and who knows how to plan for carrying them out. The statement reads as follows:

"It looks as if the motion picture men were at last beginning to rise to their opportunities. We possess and control the most effective weapon in political warfare. The type and the printers ink have heretofore been looked upon as the most telling means of political propaganda. How narrow after all is the field which the newspaper is able to cover compared with the medium of the screen. Political news and political campaigning in a newspaper are but parts of the newspaper's contents. The reader may pass them up with a casual glance and never be impressed at all.

"On the other hand, what is shown on the screen is absolutely certain of the general and undivided attention of the audience. Millions upon millions of eyes are focussed upon the twenty thousand motion picture screens in this country every day in the year. I have never figured out how large the percentage of voters is among the patrons of the motion picture theater, but it is obviously large. The indirect influence of the screen is varied to voters who themselves may never have attended a motion picture theater.

"Now, we all know that the politicians cherish a wholesome fear of the press. If the motion picture has so far failed to create a very strong degree of the same sentiment in the hearts of the politicians the fault has been ours. I cannot help comparing our wonderful business with its boundless possibilities and its great record of achievements to a second Gulliver bound and fettered by pygmies. One strong motion of this new Gulliver's right arm and he will stand revealed in all his power with the pygmies in headlong flight.

"Our new organization proposes to utilize its powers systematically and unceasingly from now on until the polls close in November. We have certain definite objects to accomplish in the coming political campaigns both in the various states and in the nation. If any of the members of congress who sided with the fanatics on the censorship question are up for re-election, they will hear from us we hope to their disadvantage. The political complexions of their districts are now under close and competent scrutiny and we will center our forces where they will do the most good.

"In Ohio, Pennsylvania and Kansas a strenuous campaign will be started for the abolition of the censorship laws. We also propose to get busy in Maryland. I am particularly ashamed of conditions there, for censorship in that state was admittedly the result of a combination between political grafters and one or two axe-grinders in our own ranks. Censorship in Ohio and Pennsylvania has become the laughing stock of the country. Here in New York, we will square accounts with the politicians who for reasons best known to themselves have introduced several strike bills both in the assembly and the senate. The sponsors of censorship bills in this state have gloried in their absolute ignorance as to moving picture conditions and in their haste to tap a new source of revenue and graft they drew such a preposterously faulty measure as to compel the governor to veto it.

"It is only just to say in conclusion that we all make a very broad distinction between the politicians and genuine statesmen. Constructive statesmanship has realized by this time that the motion picture is the greatest medium of expression known to mankind and therefore, entitled to political enfranchisement. Indeed it ought to be put on a level of liberty and responsibility with the press of the country. We helped to defeat the reactionary constitution, whose narrow-minded makers refused to consider our request for a grant of constitutional liberty to the screen. If that question ever is put before the people, censorship will be buried beyond the possibility of resurrection.

"We are never afraid of the result when the question is to be determined at the polls by the votes of the people. The people are the staunchest friends of the motion picture. We are going to bring this fact home to the politicians. At the same time we invite the constructive advice and the cooperation of the real statesmen to fix a permanent legal and political status for the motion picture in the scheme of our American civilization.

"Our campaign bureau is being organized now and will be in charge of an expert, provided with capable assistants. It will go to work forthwith."

BROOKLYN EXHIBITORS ACTIVE.

Benjamin Sawyer, State President of Ohio, and National President Ochs Among the Speakers.

THE Brooklyn Organized Exhibitors had a well-attended and lively meeting on the night of July 27 in the basement of the Triangle theater, at the junction of Fulton street and Flatbush avenue. Fully one hundred exhibitors were present, representing not only Brooklyn but various parts of Long Island.

President John Manheimer conducted the proceedings in his usual expeditious and pleasant manner, while Mr. Lesselbaum acted as a secretary. The treat of the evening was the speech of Benjamin Sawyer, the president of the Ohio League of Motion Picture Exhibitors. Mr. Sawyer had called at the headquarters of the New York local in the course of a business visit to New York, and he was induced to come to the Brooklyn meeting and make an address. Beginning with a strong plea for support of the new National President, Lee A. Ochs, the speaker, launched into a general discussion of present-day motion picture conditions. He severely arraigned the so-called vampire pictures and said that official censorship had forced these vampire pictures on exhibitors who personally detested them. He pointed out that in the city of Cleveland in the censorship-ridden state of Ohio, the vampire picture producers had something like seventy runs, while in the non-censorship city of Buffalo the vampire picture makers had less than a dozen runs.

"Remember," he said, "that every community, whether rural or urban, has only a certain amount of money to spend for amusements. You are not going to increase this amount by showing questionable pictures. Possibly on the first and second showing of such a picture you may make a little more than your usual receipts, but the penalty is sure and swift in every case. You will presently discover an abnormal falling-off of receipts, and when you average up your business, you have lost by attempting to show objectionable pictures. You must get the confidence of the people. No business is more close to the people than yours. Twenty-five years ago the railroads and all the great public utility concerns scoffed at the idea that the public had any right to meddle with their business. Today these companies know they cannot dwell apart from the people in four walls of their own, and they are saving themselves by taking the people into their confidence. You men of the exhibiting ranks must do the same; the manufacturers must do the same. One great evil is the shameless journalistic puffing of inferior pictures whose makers use the advertising columns liberally. We exhibitors will not stand for this and we will refuse to support papers that make a marvelous masterpiece out of every fifth-rate film. (Great applause.) This abuse of the English language must stop."

Mr. Sawyer's address was followed by a prolonged burst of applause and he was honored with a rising vote of thanks.

Mr. Ochs followed Mr. Sawyer. He explained the proposed activities of the new National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. He suggested the appointment of a committee to consider the advisability of having the three borough organizations represented in one central body at the same time fully maintaining home rule for each borough. On motion a committee was appointed to act on President Ochs' suggestion. W. Stephen Bush of the Moving Picture World, when called upon for a speech, pleaded the lateness of the hour (it was about 4 a. m.). He urged complete unity in the new organization.

Robert Israel, one of the prominent members of the Brooklyn League, was elected treasurer of the organization in place of Julian Loeb who, having left the motion picture industry, had tendered his resignation.

KANSAS CONVENTION AUGUST 22.

A joint convention of the Kansas branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League and the Amusement Association of Kansas, will be held in Topeka August 22 to 24. Arrangements were made recently, and include plans for a local celebration that will doubtless enthuse moving picture patrons in a way never before attained, and gain their sympathy with the industry, and perhaps their active expression of such sympathy. The plans provide for decoration of the streets and places of business, and for a social event at which screen stars will be present. The convention itself will probably make plans for the election. The primaries in Kansas occur August 1, and the nominees will be known at the convention—their sympathies or hostilities to censorship. The exhibitors have carefully avoided endorsement of candidates for nomination; and it may be that they will avoid official endorsement of candidates for office after the nominations are made. But there will be plenty of ways to find out how the candidates stand—and to support those who have indicated the largeness of their views with reference to censorship.

MEETING OF THE HUDSON COUNTY EXHIBITORS.

At a meeting of the Hudson County Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, held on Thursday at the headquarters, 386 Central avenue, Jersey City, and attended by exhibitors from Hoboken, Jersey City, Union Hill, West Hoboken, North Bergen and Bayonne, it was unanimously decided to apply to the National Exhibitors' League for a charter.

It was also decided to issue a call for a state convention to be sent to all county associations in the State of New Jersey for the purpose of making one strong organization to combat adverse legislation, particularly censorship, and to promulgate favorable legislation.

It was further decided that absolutely no political slides would be shown on the screens without having those wishing them shown, properly investigated through the organization and endorsed by the national league. Particular attention will be paid to those who introduced censorship bills at the last session of the state legislature, and a drive would be instituted to defeat them when they come up for re-election.

A publicity committee was appointed to present to the public, through the daily press, the unfairness of the present health order, prohibiting children under 16 years of age, from attending motion picture shows or exhibitions, although allowed to congregate in candy stores, on the street cars, etc.

ANNUAL REPORT OF BRITISH CENSORS.

A Most Interesting and Instructive Document Issued by President G. A. Redford.

THE British Board of Film Censors have just submitted and published their annual report. It is a most interesting document. It appears from the report that the board had in the course of the year examined 4,767 subjects and of this number only twenty-two were rejected in their entirety.

Eliminations have been ordered in 214 subjects which number, according to the report, is largely in excess of any previous year. This number does not, however, include many cases of exception which could promptly be rectified by the deletion of a few pictures from the film. Among the reasons given for ordering more substantial eliminations are: Indecorous, ambiguous and irreverent titles and sub-titles; cruelty to animals, the irreverent treatment of sacred subjects; unnecessary exhibition of feminine underclothing; the exhibition of profuse bleeding; scenes laid in disorderly houses; materialization of the conventional figure of Christ. The board registers a strong objection to what it calls notorious books. On this subject the board says:

A question of considerable practical importance to the trade became prominent during the year, viz., the use for cinematograph purposes of the plot and title of books of certain class. In some cases the film, when ultimately presented to the public, was purged of the objectionable features which gained notoriety for the book, although it was certain that many people based their judgment entirely on the book, and pronounced a verdict without ever seeing the film. The posters and literature accompanying the films tended to arouse the expectations that the subject of the film was carried further than really proved to be the case.

After the most careful consideration, the Board came to the conclusion that it must only examine what was projected on the screen, irrespective of the notoriety of the work, otherwise it might be argued that the Board was overstepping its duties by indirectly becoming the Censors of literature.

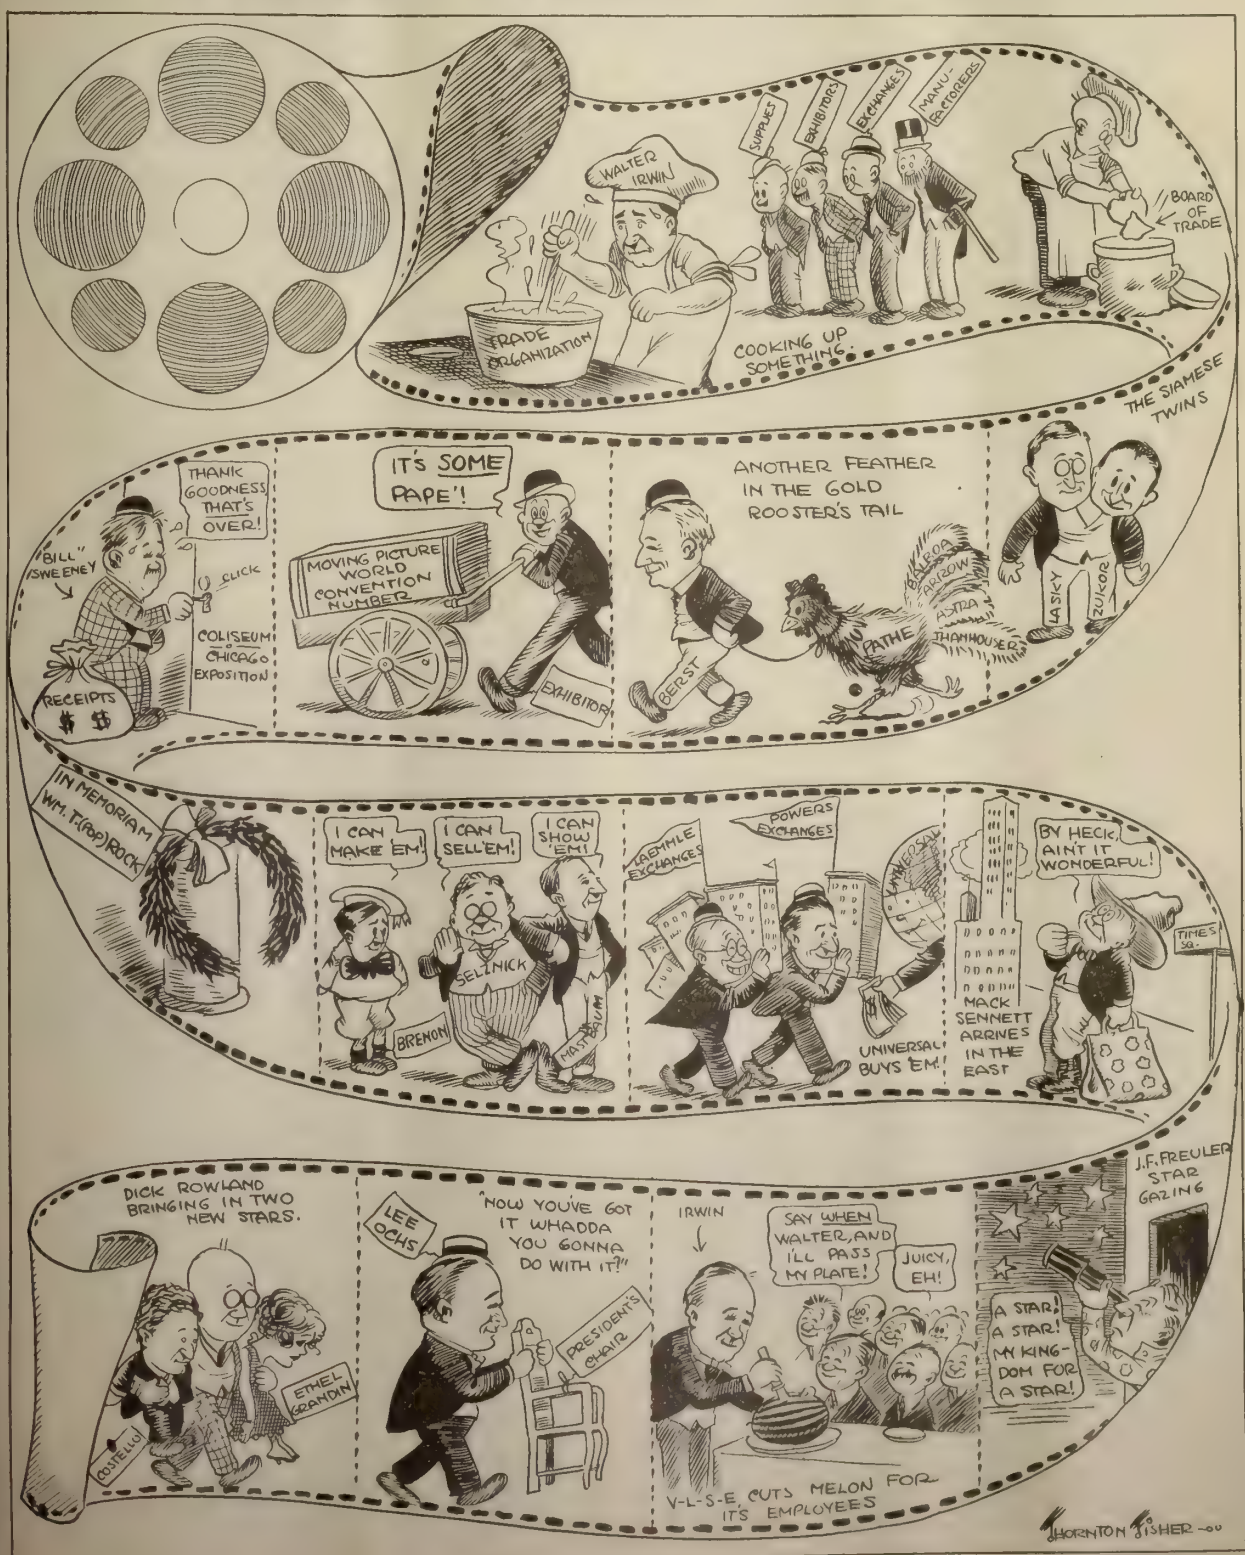
Having regard to the misconceptions and misconstructions placed on the facts, it has been decided that no film in future shall be passed of the same title as a book which is generally acknowledged as questionable. If such a book is filmed, and even the result be innocuous, the title will have to be changed, so as to dissociate entirely the one from the other.

About 90 per cent. of the films submitted have been approved for children as well as for adults. The board records its gratification as to the increasing confidence shown in its decisions by licensing authorities. The board has been entrusted by the War Office with an official status in the matter of film exports and also entrusted with discretionary powers in delicate questions of political, military and naval censorship.

GRAND OPERA INSPIRES NEW BLUEBIRD.

"The Chalice of Sorrow" is to be the moving picture name for the scenario inspiration of "La Tosca," the tragic opera. Rex Ingram devised the scenario and will direct Cleo Madison and Wedgewood Nowell in the leading roles. This will be Miss Madison's first appearance on the Bluebird program.

MOVING PICTURE WORLD NEWS REEL for JULY



Five August Releases for Famous Players

Marguerite Clark, Pauline Frederick, Louise Huff, Marguerite Courtot, Valentine Grant and Owen Moore Starred—Studio Busy

THE month of August will witness the release of five Famous Players productions on the Paramount program in which such stars as Marguerite Clark, Pauline Frederick, Louise Huff, Marguerite Courtot, Valentine Grant and Owen Moore will appear.

Marguerite Clark heads the list with "Little Lady Eileen," the tale of a little Irish lassie who believed in fairies, which is scheduled for release on August 7. This fanciful romance was staged under the capable direction of J. Searle Dawley, whose delightful handling of "Silks and Satins," "Molly Make-Believe," "Mice and Men," and other of Miss Clark's most recent great successes bespeaks the directorial resourcefulness of the production. As for the star—she is Miss Clark. In support of the star are Vernon Steele, John L. Shine, Harry Lee, Russell Bassett and others of equal note.

Four days after "Little Lady Eileen" comes Pauline Frederick in an adaptation of Clyde Fitch's celebrated drama, "The Woman in the Case." This is the production in which Miss Frederick upset tradition and all the known tenets of stellar law by declaring that she would rather play the less conspicuous role of Margaret Rolfe, the self-sacrificing wife, than the title role of "the woman," in which many great dramatic actresses have won distinction on the stage. Miss Frederick declared that she had played so many heavy roles on the screen that she wanted a chance to play one that had real sympathetic appeal, and her wish was promptly acceded to by the producers. As a result, Marie Chambers, a well-known dramatic actress, was engaged for the role of Claire Forster, and Miss Frederick enacted Margaret Rolfe. Others in the cast are Paul Gordon, Alan Hale and Clarence Handysides.

On August 21 an adaptation of Edgar Selwyn's great comedy-drama, "Rolling Stones," will be released, with Owen Moore and Marguerite Courtot in the stellar roles. The production is being staged under the direction of Del Henderson, a new member of the Famous Players staff, but one of the best-known directors in the business. "Rolling Stones" was a great success on the stage because it was a play of action and it has been found to be admirably suitable to adaptation for the screen. Among those in support of Mr. Moore and Miss Courtot are Alan Hale, Denman Maley, Gretchen Hartman, W. J. Butler and Ida Fitzhugh.

Louise Huff is the star of "The Mission of Patience," which is scheduled for release on August 24. Robert G. Vignola, who recently staged the adaptation of Roi Cooper Megrue's "Under Cover," with Hazel Dawn and Owen Moore, is the director of this production. This is a delightful little Quaker story which opens in a typical Quaker village and then transfers the scene of action to New York. With Miss Huff there appear John Bowers, Michell Harris, Henry Hallam and Lottie Pickford, who will play a heavy role.

The fifth release of the month is "A Daughter of MacGregor," in which Valentine Grant plays the title role. As the title suggests, it is a Scotch story. Sidney Olcott, who has made a remarkable success at staging productions which have foreign settings, is the director. Some of the action takes place in an American lumber camp, for which location the players went to the big timber districts in the South.

Seven Companies Working at Famous Players Studio.

The Famous Players studio presents the greatest scene of activity which has been seen in any Eastern studio for many a day, with seven entire companies now under full swing in preparing productions for release on the Paramount program and an eighth about to begin operations within the next few days. Pauline Frederick is now at work on a big photoplay written especially for her by Forrest Halsey. Joseph Kaufman is directing the production. Owen Moore and Marguerite Courtot are completing the adaptation of Edgar Selwyn's celebrated comedy-drama, "Rolling Stones," in which they are working under the direction of Del Henderson. This production marks the first appearance of Miss Courtot in a Famous Players production.

J. Searle Dawley is now taking the preliminary scenes for Ann Pennington's second silent starring vehicle. The little "Ziegfeld Follies" star made such a distinct success in her debut as "Susie Snowflakes" that the Famous Players requisitioned her services again.

Louise Huff, meanwhile, is playing a Quaker maid under the direction of Robert G. Vignola.

Mae Murray, who has heretofore appeared exclusively in Lasky productions, is making her first appearance in an Eastern studio under the direction of John B. O'Brien in "The Big Sister," a story of the slums and of politics.

Having just returned from the northern part of the state where the opening scenes of her next production were staged under the direction of Sidney Olcott, Valentine Grant is doing some of the interior work in the studio, preparatory to starting south. The story opens in Scotland and then moves to an American lumber camp. It is for the latter part of the action that Miss Grant will go to the lumber camps of the South.

Within the next few days Maurice and Florence Walton, whose engagement was recently announced, will begin work on a special production under the direction of Ashley Miller. This will mark the debut of the stars as Famous Players and likewise the debut of the director as a member of that company's producing staff.

VITAGRAPH DRAMA ON V-L-S-E PROGRAM.

"The Alibi," a five-part Vitagraph Blue Ribbon Feature, to be released on August 7, is a tense drama with a grip that holds. It presents a rare instance of suspense that is suspense, claiming the attention of the audience to the last. A welcome relief is also found in a criminal plot which comes well within the range of possibility. The characters, particular those in the important parts, are true to life and convincing. Betty Howe is charming as the bank president's daughter whose love and faith in the assistant cashier remain firm even after he has been convicted of murder. James Morrison is an excellent sympathetic character as the assistant cashier, convicted of theft and murder by planted circumstantial evidence, and Paul Scardon, who also directed the picture, is strong as the real murderer, who, fearing detection, contrives the idea of "framing" the innocent man. The direction of the picture has been carried out with unusual foresight and it is evident that Scardon made thorough researches to familiarize himself with the inner workings of a state prison, as there is no detail lacking. Even the three-foot separating wall, to prevent the passing of weapons from visitors to convicts, is shown. Edward Elkas and Robert Whitworth also do some very good work. "The Alibi" is from the book by George Allen England.

SON OF DIRECTOR PATON DIES.

The sympathy of all photoplayers goes out to Director and Mrs. Stuart Paton over the death of their youngest son, George, aged one year and two weeks, who died at the Clara Barton hospital in Los Angeles recently. The funeral was held in Los Angeles on Monday afternoon and all the members of the Paton company attended.

Essanay Offers a Number of Good Shorts for August

Strong Dramas and Comedies Will be Found on the List of Releases— A Bushman Re-Issue

EXCEPTIONALLY strong dramas and comedies are to be found among Essanay's short reel subjects for August, the complete program for which month has just been announced by George K. Spoor. The program opens with a beautiful two-reel love story, "The Chimney Sweep," which features Joyce Fair, the eleven-year-old actress. In this play, however, she takes an ingenue part and carries it off exceptionally well. It is as pretty a story as was ever found in a fairy book, of a poor little outcast, who sweeps out a chimney in a wealthy home and falls in love with the little heiress and how later in life he makes good and finally wins her love.

This is followed by Vernon Howe Bailey's sketches of Petrograd, the Russian capital, together with scenics. The three-reeler of the first week is "The War Bride of Plumville," a delightful comedy with a breezy satire on false nobility and a small manufacturer's eagerness to get rich through war orders. With Nell Craig, Ernest Maupain and Harry Dunkinson in the leading roles, the comedy proves genuinely humorous and exceptionally pleasing.

The second week of August opens with "The Three Scratch Clue," featuring Francis X. Bushman, and re-issued in two acts. George Ade's "Fable of Books Made to Balance" is the week's one-act comedy, and "Worth While," a realistic story of prison life as it exists today, with a beautiful love plot woven around it, featuring Bryant Washburn and Marguerite Clayton, is the three-act drama.

Comes a patriotic two-act drama, "My Country 'Tis of Thee," featuring Richard C. Travers and Lillian Drew. This is a timely story of the present situation relating to Mexico. The plot is woven around the call of the militia to federal service and shows the departure of the troops to the concentration camps, their farewells to sweethearts and all the little touches that go to make up the gaiety and the pathos of such scenes.

Wallace A. Carlson's Canimated Nooz Pictorial No. 14 with his inimitable caricatures on men and events of the day adds a strong one-act feature, while "A Little Volunteer," featuring Joyce Fair, tops off the week.

The latter, however, is not a war play as might be judged by the title. The little volunteer is a motherless heiress, who longs to love and be loved. Chance grants her wish by throwing a whole family of orphans into her way. She mothers them in their hovel, until her father finds her, after the police have searched the city for days for the missing child.

A re-issue of Francis X. Bushman's two-reel drama, "A Man for A' That," leads the fourth week, followed by George Ade's "Fable of How Wisenstein Did Not Lose Out to Butinski," and a three-act drama, "The Face in the Mirror," featuring Edmund F. Cobb and Josephine Sylvester.

Marguerite Clayton plays the title role in a pretty two-act drama, "An Old-Fashioned Girl," which is released August 29, a story of love and romance. Follows Vernon Howe Bailey's "Sketch Book of Washington," together with 500 feet of scenic. "The Higher Destiny," a three-act drama featuring Warda Howard and Edward Arnold, and released September 2, completes the week.

First-Class Theaters in Honolulu

Up-to-Date Photoplay Houses Established in Keeping With Progress in Picture Manufacture— Liberty Purchases $10,000 Wurlitzer Organ

IN "Commerce Reports," A. P. Taylor, of Honolulu, writes that the Liberty theater, of Honolulu, has installed a $10,000 Wurlitzer pipe organ. The transportation charges from the factory to Honolulu amounted to more than $1,000. Motion picture theaters were first established here about ten years ago and were then merely "holes in the wall." With the rapid development of the artistic side of motion picture manufacture the class of theaters in Honolulu has been raised until at present the city possesses several first-class houses, the largest having a seating capacity of 1,800 persons. The architecture of this place of amusement is suited to the climate; plenty of ventilation is afforded through rows of shutter windows.

Ten years ago the highest price paid for admission to motion picture theaters was 15 cents, ranging down to 5 cents. Today the standard high price is 30 cents for reserved seats, with a 50-cent charge for box and loge seats. The Honolulu public, with its large tourist population, demands the best pictures.

The exchange system permits these same pictures to be sent to the outlying islands, so that even in small plantation towns, on the Island of Kauai, the westernmost of the Hawaiian group, 2,400 miles from San Francisco, the same pictures produced in the leading theaters of Honolulu are given before an audience composed principally of Japanese, Chinese, Koreans, Filipinos, Porto Ricans, Spaniards and Siberians.

Where no theaters have been built, in some of the outlying districts, enterprising motion picture managers have large tents of the circus type erected. By rotation a tent is seen in a village about every two weeks.

During the past three years two or three motion picture companies have come to Honolulu, partly on vacation tours and partly to complete pictures which call for a Hawaiian setting. The result has been an investigation of the merits of the Hawaiian climate and scenery as a foundation upon which to build a motion picture colony. Negotiations are under way for the establishment of such a colony. At least $50,000 of local capital will be invested, the remainder coming from the mainland. An expert from New York states that while the Hawaiian Islands are admirably suited to the filming of South Sea scenes, they are also adapted for a New York setting.

VITAGRAPH COMEDY ON G. F. PROGRAM.

"Romance and Rough House" is all that the name suggests, slam-bang for a thousand feet of rip-roaring comedy, with Hughie Mack, Vitagraph's heavyweight comedian, officiating in the capacity of chief funmaker and recipient of countless indignities. The photography and lightings are worthy of comment as they are particularly. The hand of Lawrence Semon is seen in the direction, which is certainly all that could be desired. Hughie is exceptionally droll and his support is also very good. The balance of the cast includes Patsy De Forrest, Frank Brule and Edward Dunn. The scenario was written by C. Graham Baker and Lawrence Semon. With its country scenes this picture should have a particular summer appeal. Sophie Milimet wrote the story.

Metro Plans Many Elaborate Screen Productions

Offers a Formidable Array of Plays and Players for Early Fall Release—A Roster That's Hard to Beat

METRO'S early fall plans, which in part have just been announced, include many important productions and the appearance of some of the world's most famous stars of both the speaking stage and the screen. In variety and extent the proposed activities are by far the most pretentious and elaborate ever undertaken by the Metro Pictures Corporation and include many features which cannot yet be announced.

Ethel Barrymore, who is under contract to appear exclusively in Metro wonderplays, will begin work in about two weeks in a picturization of "The Awakening of Helena Ritchie," the successful stage play from the novel by Margaret Deland. Miss Barrymore will be supported by a distinguished cast and some of the foremost artists of the screen and stage have been especially engaged to appear with her. She has already been seen on the Metro program in "The Kiss of Hate," and "The Final Judgment," two screen masterpieces that are playing return engagements in many of the leading theaters of this country, Australia and abroad.

John W. Noble, who is directing Francis K. Bushman and Beverly Bayne in the elaborate screen production of "Romeo and Juliet," which is now fast nearing completion, will direct Miss Barrymore. He will be assisted by Leander de Cordova, who has been associated with him in the Metro picturization of Shakespeare's supreme romance.

Upon the completion of "Romeo and Juliet" Mr. Bushman and Miss Bayne will begin work on the serial, "The Chain of Evil," which will be released in fourteen two-reel episodes, probably at the rate of two a month. "The Chain of Evil" is a strong, original serial, each chapter complete in itself, but with a central theme running throughout the entire fourteen releases. It was written by Fred de Gresac, and scenarioized by Howard Irving Young and Paul Price.

Emily Stevens will begin work immediately on a strong five-part production, "Capital Punishment," an original story written especially for her by Katherine Kavanaugh. The theme of this story deals with the weakness of circumstantial evidence, when a human life is at stake. Miss Stevens has been seen on the Metro program in "The House of Tears," and "Destiny, or the Soul of a Woman," two notable successes of the silent drama.

George D. Baker, who recently joined the Metro directing forces after a successful career with the Vitagraph company, and who has just completed his first Metro production, "The Pretenders," with Emmy Wehlen in the starring role, will direct Miss Stevens in "Capital Punishment."

What promises to be one of the best features ever released by Metro is an original story written by William Nigh, the author-director-star, and in which Mr. Nigh will be co-starred with Irene Howley, who will make her debut as a star on the Metro program in this Nigh story which is as yet unnamed. The story deals with the efforts of a drunken attorney to redeem himself and contains a wealth of pathos and comedy relief.

Mabel Taliaferro, who has just completed the final scenes in 'God's Half Acre," will begin on a new big feature, which was written by Channing Pollock and Rennold Wolf. This story was written especially for Miss Taliaferro and promises to be one of her biggest successes. June Mathis, scenario writer, is now completing the final scenes of the script made for the Pollock-Wolf story. Edwin Carewe will direct Miss Taliaferro in her next production.

Lionel Barrymore, who is nearing the final scenes in "The Upheaval," and who was last seen on the Metro program in "The Quitter," will begin work at once on a powerful new feature. This will be a picturization of the short story, "The Woolworth Diamonds," by Hugh C. Weir, which recently appeared in one of the leading magazines.

Mme. Petrova, one of the screen's most brilliant and popular stars, has also begun work on a new story, as yet unnamed, which she wrote herself. The central theme deals with the marriage question from an economic standpoint, and contains many humorous situations, which will be a decided innovation and novelty in a Petrova feature. Mme Petrova has just completed a big production at the Popular Plays and Players studio, "The Secret of Eve," which is scheduled for early release.

Harold Lockwood and May Allison are at work in the Metro-Yorke Western studio at Hollywood, Cal., in "Mister 44," a striking comedy-drama, picturized from the successful novel of the same name by E. J. Rath. Mr. Lockwood and Miss Allison are surrounded by a strong supporting cast headed by Lester Cuneo, the well known dramatic leading man.

Edmund Breese, supported by a distinguished cast, which includes Ormi Hawley, Clifford Bruce, Evelyn Brent, and other well known artists of the stage and screen, is at work on a big story of the Maine logging camps called "The Weakness of Strength." This feature is from the pen of Aaron Hoffman, who writes a majority of the Breese and Petrova stories.

In addition to these multiple reel productions Metro has arranged to increase its program with more high class and refined one-reel comedies, three of which will be released weekly beginning this fall. The stars appearing in these comedies include such notable artists as Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew with one company of players, Max Figman and Lolita Robertson with another, and Ralph Herz at the head of another company. Then, too, Metro is scouring the world for important and picturesque locales for the Metro Travelogues, which form an interesting weekly release on the Metro program.

"Society of Motion Picture Engineers"

Important Meeting Held in Washington and a Temporary Organization Effected.

AN EVENT of much interest and importance to the motion picture industry occurred on the 24th of July at the city of Washington, D. C., when the Society of Motion Picture Engineers held its first meeting in the Oak Room of the Raleigh Hotel. The call for the formation of such a society had been issued by C. Francis Jenkins of Washington. The call set forth that "every industry has its society of Engineers, an association of men who are responsible for the form of structure of the mechanisms used in their trade." "The time is ripe," the call continues, "for the establishment of a society of motion picture engineers, as is evidenced by the lack of fixed standards in the industry. The society will stand in practically the same relation to the motion picture industry that the Society of Automobile Engineers does to the automobile business."

In response to numerous invitations sent out, the following men came to Washington to attend the meeting: Herbert Miles, C. A. Willat, of the Willat Studios; E. K. Gillette, Paul Brocket of the Smithsonian Institution, Don J. Bell of Bell & Howell of Chicago; Paul H. Cromelin of the Cosmofoto Film Company of New York, F. B. Cannock of the Precision Machine Company, W. B. Westcott of the firm of Kalmus, Constable & Westcott, of Boston, and J. P. Lyons, Electrical Appliances, and C. Francis Jenkins. A program of three days' duration had been mapped out beginning July 24 and ending July 26, but in view of the big film conference in New York at the Hotel Astor it was decided to adjourn after the first day. A most interesting address was made by Henry D. Hubbard, secretary of the U. S. Bureau of Standards. His subject was "Standardization." This was followed by a meeting of committees on raw material, cameras, machine manufacturers, reel manufacturers and makers of electrical goods. A report and general discussion followed. It was decided to have four classes of membership: First: A pioneer class consisting of men who had been engaged in the art as principals for a period of fifteen years; the second class is to consist of men who for a period of ten years have been actively engaged in designing, developing or improving materials, mechanisms and processes used in this or any of the allied arts; the third class of men who are now actively engaged in such work, and the fourth class are to be known as associate members.

The entrance fee for classes 1 and 2 is to be $250, while the entrance fee for the other two classes was fixed at $25.

Mr. C. Francis Jenkins was chosen as temporary chairman, while Herbert Miles was elected as temporary secretary. There will be another meeting early in October, until which time any one desiring to join may become a charter member.

It is the intention of the new society to seek an early affiliation with the new National Association of the Motion Picture Industry.

Universal Program for Week of August 7

Read Feather Feature Heads a List that Will be Found Attractive to Picture Fans

THE feature of the Universal program for the week of August 7 is the five-reel Red Feather production, "The Mark of Cain," in which Dorothy Phillips and Lon Chaney play the principal roles. "The Mark of Cain" will be released on August 7. On the same day Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran will keep Universal exhibitors smiling at their Nestor comedy, "All Bets Off."

On August 8, Marie Walcamp and Eddie Polo, the two dare-devils, will appear in the three-reel Gold Seal melodrama, "Onda of the Orient." On the same day the Powers Juvenile comedy, "The Henanpup," will be released.

Hobart Henley will feature on August 9 in the Laemmle drama, "A Knight of the Night." He will be followed on the program by Billie Ritchie in the two-reel L-Ko comedy, "Crooked from the Start." On the same day the Universal Animated Weekly No. 32 will be released.

Ben Wilson and Dorothy Phillips will co-star on August 10 in the Victor two-reel human interest comedy-drama, "The Marriage Broker." On the same day King Baggot will appear in "The Silent Stranger," a Big "U" drama. "Ben the Sailor," a mannikin comedy, and "Salmon From the Egg to the Table," an educational, will be released as split reels under the Powers brand.

Sydney Bracy and Sydell Dowling will appear in "The Highway of Fate," a two-reel Laemmle society drama, on August 11. They will be followed by the Rex drama, "By Conscience's Eye," in which little Marjorie Ellison will play the principal role. Pat Rooney will close the day's program in the Nestor comedy, "Some Medicine Man."

On August 12, Cleo Madison and William V. Mong will be presented in the Bison two-reel Western drama, "The Guilty One." On the same day Edith Roberts and Harry Benham will co-star in "Her Mother's Sweetheart," a Laemmle drama, and Gale Henry and William Franey will share the fun-a-making honors in the Joker comedy, "She Wrote a Play and Played It."

Joe Martin, the famous Universal ape, and Victor Potel will share headline honors on Sunday, August 13, in the Victor comedy, "What Darwin Missed." On the same day

Scene from "The Mark of Cain" (Red Feather).

Richard Stanton and Marcia Moore will star in "The Speed King," a two-reel Imp modern melodrama.

During the week of August 7, "Brother and Sister," the fifteenth episode of "The Adventures of Peg o' the Ring," will be released, with Grace Cunard and Francis Ford. The Red Feather release for August 14 will be the five-reel drama, "A Yoke of Gold," with Dorothy Davenport.

Ince Studios Are Models of Construction

Big New Structures at Culver City, Cal., Fine Example of Motion Picture Development

THE new Ince studios at Culver City, which have just been completed, represent the last word in structures of their kind. The entire plant represents a large investment and is a striking monument to the growth of the film business. The boulevard frontage of the studio is several hundred feet long; is monumental in architectural treatment and unbroken, save by a great columned gateway.

At the corner of the lot, facing the street, is the administration building, the brain center from which the giant mechanism is controlled. Adjoining the administration building is a big two-storied department of costumes, where you can uniform a company of warriors of almost any period or country on five minutes' notice. Along the front of the lot is the double-decked array of dressing rooms, each with its individual outside entrance.

The Ince studios, where the actual photography in the making of the Triangle pictures takes place, are all of steel and glass. There are four of them in all, each about 150 feet long and 70 feet wide. Their special value lies in the fact that they permit of every minute of sunlight being utilized each day.

An extremely interesting building is the film vault, where there is approximately $1,000,000 worth of film stored at all times. Work on the studios has been under way for almost a year. Unlike many other structures devoted to similar purposes, the Ince studios have been built with an eye to permanency and they will undoubtedly be a lasting evidence of the bigness which characterizes everything connected with the film industry today

"LIBERTY"—FORTY REELS.

The Universal serial, "Liberty," will be forty reels in length to run twenty weeks. "Liberty" is a most timely serial and depicts Mexican border raids; thrilling dare-devil deeds of heroism; love interest that alone would make a great picture; American soldiers; Texas rangers, and Mexican bandits. It will be presented with a brilliant and notable cast headed by Marie Walcamp, Jack Holt and Eddie Polo. These popular players will be supported by others almost as well known, including Bertram Grassby, G. Raymond Nye, L. M. Wells, Maude Emory and hundreds of expert Rough Riders and trained military men. The scenes along the border will compel the widest interest.

Attacks the Open Booking System

Adolph Zukor, of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Says It Gives No Guarantee of Permanency.

ADOLPH ZUKOR, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has come out strongly against that newest device of the motion picture distributor called the "open booking system" as opposed to the older method of marketing films known as the "program system." Much has been said in behalf of open bookings and the effect of the method has been watched by producers generally. Now Mr. Zukor, who must be credited with possessing some experience in the marketing end of the motion picture business, declares that it must fail.

His remarks on the subject were made in the course of an address at the recent meeting of Paramount publicity and exchange men at Chicago. This is what he said:

"The open booking system appears attractive to the exhibitor upon the surface because he feels that all he will have to do is to call up an exchange a day and name the picture he wants and the picture will be delivered to him. These exchanges, however, will have two or three times as many prints working in the same neighborhood at one time. This will be a great disadvantage to the exhibitor and will prevent his theatre from acquiring the prestige and the exclusiveness which the program theaters now enjoy.

"The open booking will also prevent the building of new theaters as the investors will seek to determine whether or not they can keep their theater open the entire year. When they find there is no regular program which can be contracted for that will insure them of consistently good productions every week in the year, the investment will appear too precarious. The producer under this system would not be able to make a price on his picture until it was screened and the price would correspond with the changing merits of productions. An exhibitor thus could not tell what his coming programs would cost and so his overhead would be in an unsteady and constantly fluctuating condition.

"Another disadvantage is that the exhibitor would book a picture in August for use in September and before he played it there might be other better pictures placed on the market, which he would have to procure in order to keep his competitor from obtaining them, laying his first purchases on the shelf. Many exhibitors would as a result have three or four pictures booked for the same day and have to pay for all and use only one.

"To those who don't look ahead and calculate its dangerous results, the open booking may appear attractive. Were you using a regular program and a representative of an open booking concern approached you and explained that you could buy just such pictures as you use you would naturally think it sounded well and would be in favor of such a plan. However, upon analysis, changing prices, uncertain supply, the increase of competition which are the inevitable results, would undermine the industry.

"If an investor builds a theater and determines that Paramount is the program for his house he is taken care of fifty-two weeks in the year for which he pays a flat and settled price. He can thus determine how to distribute the entire sum of his investment for the other factors that enter into his business with entire dependence upon the stability of his plans. This stability is impossible under the open booking system.

"The condition of open booking existed some years ago in the legitimate theatrical business. Until there was one organization that looked after and controlled the booking departments similar to the exchanges it was in a very unsettled condition. As soon as this organization was formed theatres had to look to one source for high-class attractions and this policy has in the last twenty years made wonderful progress. Having a regular program of Paramount pictures an exhibitor not only makes his business more stable but also makes the business of the producer so, so that he can make plans far into the future looking toward better pictures which inevitably results favorably to the exhibitor. This system, therefore, is the only lasting protection to the exhibitor and producer, and therefore to the industry.

"It must at once be apparent that with our well established trademarks and our large group of prominent stars it would be very simple temporarily to make much more money under the open booking policy. But I prefer to build up a business and make each year a little money rather than devise some scheme which will make a lot of money one year and have it necessary to find a new scheme for the next year. We are interested in building up the industry from every angle as that is the only way we can hope to progress."

New Universal Serial

Carter De Haven Featured in Twelve-Part Subject Entitled "Timothy Dobbs, That's Me."

MANY series, as distinguished from serials, have been released by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company in its career. They have found a recognized place on the Universal program, and exhibitors have been enabled to make a great deal of extra money owing to the cumulative advertising value which accompanies this kind of picture. Examples in point are the "Terence O'Rourke" series, the "Under the Crescent" series and the "Lady Baffles and Detective Duck" series. Now the Universal announces a series which it considers superior to any of these, and in fact, to any series which has ever been released on any program. Its series title is "Timothy Dobbs, That's Me," and Carter De Haven is starred in the title role.

The underlying idea of the series was suggested to Carter De Haven by Vice-president H. O. Davis and the general manager of Universal City felt so strongly the picture possibilities of the idea that he asked Mr. Laemmle to hold the episodes of this series as they came in, until he himself realized that in them the Universal had a unique and highly valuable property. This has been done, and now seven two-reel episodes are on the shelf of the Universal vaults at 1600 Broadway, ready to go out to exhibitors, and the Universal officials were never so confident of a knockout as they are with the Carter De Haven series, which they know will clean up the world over.

Upon his return from Chicago Joe Brandt, general manager of the Universal, announced that this serial would begin on August 14, and that one two-reel episode would be released each week from then on, until twelve episodes have been completed.

Great Month for Paramount

Program for August Said to Be One of the Best in Point of Consistent Quality and Excellence in All Points.

CONSISTENT quality, which has always been the watchword of the producing companies for the Paramount Program, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Morosco and Pallas Pictures, will certainly be the cheering phrase for Paramount exhibitors when they glance at the nine attractive productions that have been announced for the month of August, which, in connection with the beginning of publicity-efficiency campaign of co-operation with the exhibitors of the country which Paramount will inaugurate that month, will make August, 1916, an epoch marking month for "Paramountaineers" that will never be forgotten.

Five of the productions will be those from the Famous Players—three will be from the Lasky studios, and one from Morosco. The stars who will be featured will be Marguerite Clark, Pauline Frederick, Wallace Reid, Cleo Ridgely, Vivian Martin, Blanche Sweet, Owen Moore, Louise Huff, Lou-Tellegen and Valentine Grant. The releases will be the following:

Aug. 3.—Famous Players.—"Little Lady Eileen," Marguerite Clark.
Aug. 7.—Famous Players.—"A Woman in the Case," Pauline Frederick.
Aug. 10.—Lasky.—"The House of the Golden Windows," Wallace Reid and Cleo Ridgely.
Aug. 14.—Morosco.—"The Stronger Love," Vivian Martin.
Aug. 17.—Lasky.—"Public Opinion," Blanche Sweet.
Aug. 21.—Famous Players.—"Rolling Stones," Owen Moore.
Aug. 24.—Famous Players.—"When Shadows Fall," Louise Huff.
Aug. 28.—Lasky.—"Victory of Conscience," Lou-Tellegen.
Aug. 31.—Famous Players.—"Jean o' the Heather," Valentine Grant.

A new era in motion pictures for Paramount exhibitors begins with those releases, by reason of the inauguration of Paramount efficient aids that will be granted every exhibitor's need, to enable them to put before the public these productions of consistent quality in a manner that they have never presented pictures before. The same revolution that Paramount brought about in the distribution of pictures of a closed and protective program will be accomplished along exhibiting lines from now on.

Paramount will also release four additional sections of the "magazine-on-the-screen," Paramount Pictographs; four Paramount-Burton Holmes travel-pictures and four Paramount-Bray cartoons, during August, giving their exhibitors particularly well-rounded programs.

PARAMOUNT FOR WEEK OF AUGUST 14.

Paramount has formulated a well-rounded program for the week of August 14, in which there is contained a great amount of variety to meet the demands of everyone of the millions of photoplay lovers.

The feature productions of this week are "The House of the Golden Windows," a Lasky production in which Cleo Ridgely and Wallace Reid are featured, and "The Stronger Love," a Morosco production in which the charming Vivian Martin is starred.

Short reel releases for the week will include the twenty-seventh edition of the "Magazine-on-the-Screen," the Paramount Pictographs; the personally conducted tour with Burton Holmes in "Innsbruck, the Capital of the Austrian Tirol," that week's release of the Paramount-Burton Holmes Travel Pictures, and "Bobby Bumps Loses His Pup," a clever animated cartoon from the pen of Earl Hurd.

POPULAR PLAYS AND PLAYERS HAS LABORATORY

The Popular Plays and Players, a producing company releasing on the Metro program with such big stars as Mme. Petrova and Edmund Breese, have just installed their own laboratory at the studio in 35th street. It is one of the most complete laboratories in a New York studio.

Amos Stillman has been placed in charge of the new laboratory. He was one of the first laboratory men engaged by the Vitagraph Company in Brooklyn about ten years ago, and has been associated with some of the best known experts in the industry. Harry Revier, supervising director at the studio, is also an expert on laboratory work.

Berst Puts Production Above Star and Story

Nevertheless He Lists a Goodly Number of Leading Players and Has Several Noted Writers on His Staff

ONE of the most widely discussed questions in the industry today is the relative importance of the star and the play. In some quarters we hear that the greatest essential is the play. Others seem to give first consideration to the star. The views of J. A. Berst, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., are interesting in this connection. Briefly summarized, Mr. Berst's idea is this: The star is important. So is the play. But the production is the most important of all.

"The best star or the best play counts for nothing if the production is poor," Mr. Berst says. "The motion picture public has been educated to such a point today that it demands good stories, good stars and good productions. How often have we seen a stage celebrity in a play poorly produced. The public is growing tired of this. There are some stage favorites who have made good on the screen, and there is no question that the drawing power of their names has been a great box office attraction. Likewise some famous stage plays and literary successes have made good picture plays, but if you will analyze all these cases you will find that almost every successful play has been well produced."

Mr. Berst is now completing plans for Pathe's greater program. Announcements have been made of the $5,000,000 serial program, of which "The Grip of Evil" is the first release.

It has just been announced that the Thanhouser Film Corporation is to release through Pathe, and the formation of the Astra Film Corporation to produce for Pathe was recently announced. Reports of far-reaching plans on the part of the Arrow Film Corporation are heard and a definite statement is expected from this Pathe producer in the very near future.

It is generally understood that beginning in August Pathe will release at least three features a month in addition to the regular program of serials, Pathe News, comedies, cartoons, scenics, etc. Famous stars, both of stage and screen, will be presented in Pathe's Greater Program of dramatic and literary successes, as well as original scripts written especially for them.

One of the most important releases of Pathe will be "The Light That Failed," by Rudyard Kipling, featuring Robert Edeson. "Kick In," one of the greatest successes of recent years, is also in the course of production. "The Shadow of Her Past," starring Lina Cavalieri, the world's famous beauty, and Lucien Muratore, grand opera singer, is being very heavily booked in advance, according to information received from Pathe's exchanges.

Another Gold Rooster release features Geraldine O'Brien in "A Woman's Fight," and is produced by Blache. Pearl White, Pathe's fearless, peerless girl, is working on a feature under the production of Edward Jose, producer of "The Iron Claw," who is now associated with the Astra Film Corporation. George Fitzmaurice, whose successes include "At Bay," "Via Wireless," and "New York," has also contributed Gold Roosters for early release.

Out in California's sunshine Balboa, famous for beautiful photography, is making pictures for Pathe. This company, like Pathe's other producers, has concentrated on quality productions. "The Land Just Over Yonder," Peter B. Kyne's great story, recently published in the Saturday Evening Post, will be shown in Pathe pictures before the end of the year.

"We want the best authors, the best artists and the best producers," says Mr. Berst. "We are going slowly and building surely. Because of the great demand of exhibitors we are increasing our output and we are raising the high Pathe standard ever higher."

M. P. Advertising Men Organize

Get Together for the Purpose of Promoting General Welfare—Arthur James, President.

PLANS which have been under discussion for some time in motion picture advertising circles crystallized on Wednesday, July 26, into an actual organization of motion picture advertising and publicity men, which will doubtless be called The Associated Motion Picture Advertisers This organization has no connection with any other body either in or out of the motion picture business. It was formed for the purpose of bringing the advertising and publicity men of the trade nearer together,. both in a social and business way; to enable them to present a united front on all matters which demand concerted action; to secure needful information from reticent publications and from those whose offices are in distant cities, and to disseminate such information among its members; to eliminate grafting solicitations of all kinds, and to promote the welfare of the advertising and publicity men of the motion picture trade.

The meeting at which the idea of the organization was first definitely discussed was called by E. Lanning Masters. At the meeting which was held Wednesday at the Claridge the benefits to be derived from such a body as was proposed were so eloquently set forth that an organization was formed then and there and temporary officers were elected as follows:

President, Arthur James; secretary and treasurer, E. Lanning Masters; executive council, Carl Pierce, Paul Gulick, Harry Reichenbach, Samuel M. Spedon, E. Richard Schayer, Charles E. Moyer, Arthur James and E. Lanning Masters.

The officers then were elected an organization to secure legal entity and to draw up a suitable constitution and set of by-laws. Another meeting will be called as soon as this committee is ready to report.

THE SIDNEY DREWS CELEBRATE SECOND WEDDING ANNIVERSARY.

Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Drew celebrated the second anniversary of their marriage July 25 by working on the new Metro-Drew comedy by Epes W. Sargent called "Coupons." A trip out of town had been planned, but rainy weather made motoring impossible, so the Drew forces remained in the Rolfe studio and busied themselves with the new production.

Holcomb Lands With Hatch

Well-Known Pressman and Author Opens "Fall of a Nation" Engagement at Euclid Avenue Opera House, Cleveland, July 30.

WILLARD HOLCOMB, the well-known pressman and and dramatic author, is doing the advance publicity for J. Frank Hatch's bookings of "The Fall of a Nation" in Ohio. Mr. Holcomb joined the Hatch organization on July 20 and went to Cleveland. The Euclid Avenue opera house has been secured for a run beginning Sunday, July 30, and the same sumptuous production and Victor Herbert orchestra will be used as at the Liberty theater, New York.

Holcomb left the motion picture desk of the Dramatic Mirror a month ago to work with Henry MacMahon and W. M. Powers for a time on the National Drama Corporation advertising. The Ohio state rights buyer appreciated his deep knowledge of the Victor Herbert music, as well as his all-around competence and acquaintance with Buckeye conditions, and obtained his services. Holcomb started his theatrical career as dramatic critic of the Washington Post. Becoming an advance man, he did New York presswork and represented on the road some of the most important stars and companies. He wrote the stage version of "St. Elmo," managing the subsequent tours with great success. He was for several years general press representative of Kinemacolor. As motion picture editor of the Dramatic Mirror, his editorials have attracted wide comment, and several of his one-act dramatic sketches are now playing in vaudeville.

MOSS GETS FLATBUSH THEATER.

B. S. Moss announced last night that he has enlarged his vaudeville and motion picture circuit by adding to it the Flatbush theater, Flatbush and Church avenues, Brooklyn, one of the finest and most luxuriously equipped houses in that residential section.

The Flatbush theater has a seating capacity of 2,000 and enjoys the benefit of being absolutely fireproof, having been constructed only a short time, and being equipped with all modern improvements. It also possesses a complete ventilation system, which insures a supply of cool and pure air at all times.

The opening date of the Flatbush theater under the Moss management is set for Saturday evening, Sept. 2, on which occasion the affair will be made a gala event.

Mutual Program Has Some Interesting Features

Henry E. Dixey and Frank Mills Appear in Important Subjects—Other Good Numbers In One and Two Reels

TWO noted stars of the stage and screen, Henry E. Dixey and Frank Mills, are presented as the featured players of the two Mutual Masterpictures, De Luxe Edition, which top the releases of the Mutual Film Corporation for the week of August 7. "Father and Son," a five-act comedy, serves to introduce Mr. Dixey to Mutual followers. This production, for release August 7, presents the star of "The Man on the Box," "Adonis" and a host of other successes of the legitimate stage in the mirth-provoking role of "Andrew Slocum," a "pickle king," whose efforts to control the market results in a series of usual adventures.

As the "pickle king" Mr. Dixey renders one of his best efforts, handling the rather difficult role of "Slocum" with the same display of ease that has long been characteristic of this sterling player. In his portrayal Mr. Dixey is materially assisted by a capable company of players especially recruited for this production, numbered among whom are Gladden James, in the role of "Slocum, Jr.," Millicent Evans as "Miss Winkle," and Mabel Montgomery as "Mrs. Winkle."

Frank Mills, who is featured in "The House of Mirrors," second of the Mutual Masterpictures, De Luxe Edition, for release the same week, needs no instruction to theatre or picture fans. As the star of "Bought and Paid For," "Ready Money" and other big stage successes as well as for his work in companies headed by such famous stars as Mrs. Patrick Campbell, with whom he played for two seasons, Olga Nethersole, Mrs. Fiske, Elsie Ferguson, Sir Herbert Tree, Eleanor Robson, Sir Johnston Forbes-Robertson and Mary Mannering, Mr. Mills has won for himself an enviable reputation. His studio career has been equally fraught with success and includes a number of feature productions filmed by the Famous Players Company and the Kay-Bee-Triangle studios.

In "The House of Mirrors" Mr. Mills gives a striking illustration of his dramatic prowess in the role of the evil-minded husband, whose unjust belief in his wife's alleged perfidy brings about a split of their marital relations and the breaking up of their home. The feature gets its title from a house of chance run later by his wife under an assumed name, and which is known as "The House of Mirrors." Here the husband accidentally finds his wife and child, where, after explanations are made, a general reconciliation takes place. In his initial Mutual feature, Mr. Mills is assisted by a galaxy of stars of the stage and screen, chief among them Lillian Kemble in the role of the wife; J. Frank Clondon, Jack Curtiss, a seven-year-old player of unusual talents; Harry Spingler, Bliss Milford, Runa Rodgers and Rudolph Cameron. "The House of Mirrors" will be released by the Mutual August 10.

Edward Coxen and Lizette Thorne are featured as the stars of "The Power of Mind," It was written especially to suit the abilities of the co-stars by Anthony Coldeway and was filmed under the direction of Thomas Ricketts at the American studios.

Initial of the Mutual three two-act subjects of the week, will go to the public August 7 under the title of "The Little Troubadour." Vivian Rich is the star, supported by Alfred Vosburgh and George Periolat. In this story, written by William Parker and directed by Carl M. Le Viness, Miss Rich is given an unusual chance to work in some good comedy.

Anna Little and Frank Borzage have the chief roles in "The Countin' of Calliope Clew," second of the two-reelers for release August 11. This production, from the Mustang-Mutual studios, is a gripping story of the West, interspersed with a wealth of comedy.

Crane Wilbur, as the star of "For Her Good Name," the Centaur-Mutual feature release in two acts, which goes to the public August 12, is presented in one of his most powerful portrayals. Mae Gaston has the chief supporting role.

Among the comedies of the week are: "Billy Van Deussen, the Cave Man," with John Sheehan and Carol, Holloway and "Too Bad, Eddie," starring Orral Humphrey. They will be released August 9 and 13, respectively; "Jerry's Celebration," a Cub with George Ovey, for release August 13, and "Some Liars," a two-reel Vogue, with Rube Miller and Ben Turpin, released August 13.

Mutual Weekly No. 84, "See America First," and "Reel Life," the regular Mutual single-reel feature releases, will go to the public, as usual the two first-named on August 9 and the last on August 13.

East Indian Bandits Take Tip From Films

Hyderabad Educator in Letter to Dr. Pabst Tells of Unexpected Result of Showing Hold-Up Pictures.

FROM far-off India comes an interesting letter to Dr. Charles F. Pabst, a Brooklyn physician living at 396 Franklin avenue who nearly two years ago wrote and had filmed a sketch showing how children through a simple fireproofing process could be protected from danger of burns as a result of their clothing coming in contact with flame. It was after reading an article descriptive of the film and published in a London medical journal that Bulchand Karamchand, superintendent of the Nava Vidyalaya, Hyderabad, Sind., India, communicated with Dr. Pabst. The superintendent, after requesting information as to how he may obtain the subject on "fireproofing children," states the need in India for motion pictures as a factor in education.

Mr. Karamchand refers to present conditions in the motion picture industry in India. He points out the unexpected result of showing wild west and bandit pictures. These have been the means of suggesting to Indian outlaws the value of the automobile as an aid in the commission of crime, in the providing of a quick and too often safe "getaway." These bad men of the hot country are not slow to take advantage of any suggestions in a crime-facilitating way that the pictures may contain. The superintendent, too, remarks that the mind of the child in India is most susceptible to the influence of the pictures. It has been noted that in recent years the children's games have been more violent and exciting.

Mr. Karamchand also inclosed with his letter a booklet of fourteen pages compiled by himself and Morley Dainow, member of the British Psychological Society, etc. The title is "The Kinematograph in Education, a Scheme for India," and was issued last June.

JOHN STEPPLING AGAIN A UNIVERSALITE.

John Steppling, director and actor, has rejoined the Universal City forces and will direct "Smiling" Billy Mason in slap-bang comedies. Steppling has been associated with the Universal, Essanay, Famous Players and American companies, and directed and acted in the "Billy Van Deusen" comedy series, which he put on for the American company, the series running for more than a year. He was also prominent in the Nestor company. Director Steppling and Comedian Mason worked together at the Essanay company in Chicago. In the company which has been collected to support Mason will be found Peggy Custer, who will play leads opposite Mason; Countess Du Cello, Mrs. Ashton and Fred Gamble. The first film is a comedy written by L. V. Waters, called "Betty's Bandit."

Good Selection on The General Film Program

Contributing Companies Strengthen Their Offerings With Well Known and Popular Players—Helps for Hot Weather

THE first episode of "The Girl from 'Frisco," a Kalem production in fifteen episodes, will be released through General Film Service Wednesday, August 9, and stands out perhaps as the feature of the week's program August 7-12 inclusive. Marin Sais and True Boardman are featured in this Western drama, which reviewers have treated with exceptional enthusiasm after having seen the first two episodes screened at the Kalem offices. Aside from this, General Film Company's program for the week appears fairly bursting with good things.

Two of Selig's most noted stars, Harry Mestayer and Edith Johnson, are headliners in "The Gold Ship," a two-act drama which heads the week's program. This will be followed by a Vitagraph comedy featuring William Lytell, Jr., in "Pa's Overalls." Selig-Tribune News Service plays an important part in the program on that day, preceding a Biograph reissue, "The Telephone Girl and the Lady," featuring Mae Marsh and Claire McDowell.

"The Three Scratch Clue," an Essanay reissue presenting Francis X. Bushman, will be the first picture screened Tuesday, August 8. This will be followed by "Good Evening, Judge," a Kalem "Ham and Bud" comedy, which will precede Lubin's two-part drama, "Their Mother," in which Adelaide Bronti and George Routh have leading roles.

Essanay on Wednesday, August 9, will present a George Ade fable, "Books Made to Balance," in one reel. "The Fatal Wedding," a picture which when it was first presented by Biograph with Irene Howley and Walter Miller in the leading roles created a film sensation, will be seen on the program that day. Harry Myers and Rosemary Theby, Vim's special fun makers, will be shown then in "That Tired Business Man," a one-reel comedy. Then will come "The Fighting Heiress," the first episode of "The Girl from 'Frisco" referred to above.

The Selig-Tribune News Service will on Thursday, August 10, portray pictorially all the big events of the day, and "Dreamy Knights," a Vim "Plump and Runt" comedy, will supply the humor.

Friday's program will be ushered in with "The Better Woman," a Knickerbocker Star Feature drama in three parts, presenting Reaves Eason and Lucy Blake. Ivy Close, Kalem's international beauty and fun maker, will then get the spot light in "Daisy the Demonstrator," a one-reel comedy. This will be followed by Vitagraph's "Romance and Rough-house," another comedy in which Hughie Mack will have the stellar role. "Rushing Business," a one act Vim comedy, featuring "Pokes and Jabbs," will close the program for that day.

For Saturday's offering, Essanay selects two of their most noted stars, Bryant Washburn and Marguerite Clayton, featuring them in a three-part drama, "Worth While." "Hurled Through the Drawbridge," an episode of the "Hazards of Helen" series by Kalem, with Helen Holmes as the heroine, will be screened then. The week's program will be brought to an end with "A Western Masquerade" in one act, by Tom Mix, Selig's big salaried, widely known cowboy star comedian.

Pathe Outing a Success

Boat Ride, Sports and Good Dinner Mark a Memorable Day.

THE Pathe Club, an up-and-doing organization with a membership of one hundred and twenty-five, had an outing on Sunday, July 23, that was memorable for the good time it gave everyone who attended. The steamer Bronx had been chartered for the day, and the party went up the Sound to Glenwood Landing where arrangements had been made for dinner and games. Glenwood Landing, by the way, was found to be a remarkably attractive place.

Pathe luck prevailed, for the weather was good for the first time in days. At the Landing various contests were run off, among them a three-legged race, sack race, potato race, tall-and-short man's race, fat man's race, ladies' race, tug of war for men, tug of war for women and a baseball game between the married and single men. Handsome prizes were awarded in most of the events, and a grand prize for the winner of the most points. Rotham won the grand prize with nine points and was close pushed by Gini, who had eight. Other prize winners were Messrs. Kyle and Duffy.

J. A. Berst, president of the club, was judge of events and awarded the prizes.

An excellent dinner was enjoyed at Karatsonyi's Hotel, a large dining room having been reserved for the club.

A Pathe News cameraman was along and filmed all the events, which have been put into a special reel to be shown at the next meeting of the club.

L. J. Gasnier, president and general manager of the Astra Film Corporation, attended the outing with Mrs. Gasnier. In addition to many present from the Pathe executive office, the staffs of the New York and Newark Exchanges were present almost to a man. The many guests included the wives and lady friends of the members.

Mr. Berst, who had taken much interest in the outing, had much to do with its success. J. W. Kyle as committee on arrangements, did his work well. The vice president of the club, Paul Brunet; the treasurer, G. Bardet, and the secretary, P. Allen Parsons, all aided in helping to make everything go off smoothly.

Outing of the Pathe Club, July 23, 1916.

Lasky Releases for August

Next Month's Contribution to Paramount Program Includes Some of Companys' Foremost Stars

WALLACE REID and Cleo Ridgely, Blanche Sweet, Sessue Hayakawa and Lou Tellegen in August releases of the Jesse L. Lasky Feature Play Company for the Paramount Program, appear in photoplays that illustrate in a varied manner the elastic possibilities of the screen.

Wallace Reid and Cleo Ridgely, who have attained an unusual degree of popularity under the management of the Lasky Company, will return to Paramount theatres on the 3rd of August in an original photoplay entitled "The House of the Golden Windows." The theme of this story is based on the fairy tale of the house on the hill which has the appearance of a house with golden windows. Two little children struggle up the hill and upon reaching the summit discover that the house is only a ramshackle building with the sun shining on the broken window panes. Glancing back into the valley then own little cottage presents the same appearance and they return home satisfied. The photoplay attempts to delineate the futility of vain desire. The co-stars are supported by a very able cast including the adorable "Little Billy" Jacobs, Lance Neill, Mabel Van Buren and Marjorie Daw. Written by L. V. Jefferson and directed by George Melford, it is said to be one of the most notably symbolic dramas ever presented on the screen.

Scene from "The House of the Golden Window" (Lasky).

On August 10 will be offered "Public Opinion" with the brilliant Lasky star, Blanche Sweet, as the chief factor in the exposition of the screen problem play. It was written especially for the star by Margaret Turnbull, celebrated novelist and screen dramatist. The main role in "Public Opinion" is totally unlike any interpretation yet presented on the screen by Miss Sweet. In each Lasky production in which Miss Sweet has appeared she has fortunately been permitted to give an entirely different characterization. She has been seen as a [illegible] a member of a royal Russian house, a Swedish [illegible] all-work, an anarchist and now in "Public Opinion" she appears as a trained nurse on trial for murder. How a sensational newspaper report prejudices the mind of the public against this young woman who is absolutely innocent of all wrong, and how her whole future happiness is jeopardized by what is supposed to have been one false step, forms the main theme of this gripping play. One of the unusual features in this photodrama is the effort of the spirit of the victim the nurse is supposed to have poisoned to direct the mind of justice toward the guilty person. Throughout the story until the murderer is finally forced to confess the spirit of the dead woman tries to bring the guilty to justice. The cast includes Earle Foxe, Edith Chapman, Elliott Dexter, Lou Tellegen and Raymond Hatton.

The production is one of the most lavish the Lasky company has ever made. The courtroom scene is an exact replica of a trial upon which the story was based.

On August 24 Sessue Hayakawa, the noted Japanese actor who created a sensation in "The Cheat," and followed with a stellar success in "Alien Souls," returns to Paramount theaters in a unique photodrama entitled, "The Honorable Friend." This was written especialy for him by Elizabeth McGaffey and prepared for the screen by Eve Unsell.

In "The Honorable Friend" Hayakawa will be seen as a young Japanese gardener working for a wealthy, unscrupulous Japanese curio dealer. The old man is desirous of a bride and sends Hayakawa's picture as his own—it being the custom among Japanese in America to procure their wives by forwarding their photographs to Japan—and Hayakawa is sent to the dock to marry the Japanese girl. When he brings her before the wealthy old curio dealer his ideals are shattered as he is informed that she is to be taken away from him. How affairs are finally adjusted and the two lovers are re-united is presented in an unusual and most dramatic manner.

The photodrama was picturized for the Lasky company by Edward Le Saint, and the production is unusual in its excellence, Hayakawa is surrounded by a cast of distinguished artists including Tsuri Aoki, Raymond Hatton, Billy Elmer and others.

On August 28 Lou-Tellegen, the renowned dramatic actor, appears in his first photoplay since his marriage to the celebrated Geraldine Farrar which occurred as the culmination of a romance which began in the Lasky studios. The screen medium by which he is restored to the photoplay is "The Victory of Conscience," written by Margaret Turnbull and directed by George Melford. In the course of the story Lou-Tellegen faces the path from count to priest, from sinner to saint, during which he overcomes his baser impulses and learns a lesson to which he had always been indifferent—that true womanhood is the most valuable possession on earth. The role of the woman in this production whose part in the story the dramatist has expressed through a characterization of a cafe dancer, is portrayed by Cleo Ridgely. Miss Ridgely on this occasion adds another notable impersonation to her already remarkable screen repertoire.

The accompanying illustration shows Harry Harvey and his Balboa company on location, at an elevation of 6,150 feet, on the "101 mile drive on the rim of the world," the new state road recently built from Los Angeles. The players are working on "The Yellow Ballet." Mr. Harvey is seen with the saxophone at the right seated on a box. In the foreground is Lucy Fox, leading woman, and author of the famous "Where Are My Children?" At the left stands Robyn Adair, leading man.

Chicago News Letter

By JAS. S. McQUADE

The Day of "Shop, Shop, Shop" Has Passed.

IN THE head placed over the description of the banquet that closed the sixth annual convention of exhibitors at Chicago, as given in the Moving Picture World of August 5, reference was made to the "merry time in hall of Hotel Sherman" on that occasion.

That is just about what everybody not present imagined it to be, and just what it should have been; but also just what it was not.

Sam L. Trigger, of New York, exactly struck the keynote of what the entertainment should not have been, when he charged in a short speech that all preceding speakers had talked nothing but "shop, shop, shop."

For a whole week, from 10 o'clock in the morning until far in the night, in committee sessions, exhibitors had devoted their time to the business of the convention. They were dead tired of that atmosphere when the convention closed.

Broiling for nearly six days in the grilling heat at the Coliseum, representatives of the producers and of the manufacturers of machines and accessories, and of supply houses, had been immersed in business. The stars and the producers present on the night of the banquet had also their strenuous experiences, and of all of these it may be said truthfully that they were in need of the diversion that merry entertainment brings.

The banquet, so far as the repast was concerned, was faultless; there are no kicks on that score. But there is broad ground for many kicks because of the speeches piled upon speeches, devoted to "shop," that succeeded the banquet. And many men were called upon for speeches, who are good business men but poor speakers. At any rate, none of them was equal to the task, outside of the toastmaster, to entertain that large composite, intelligent audience, even when discoursing on their own business.

But why not get away from "shop" altogether on such occasions, in future? Let the committee in charge of such events put their heads together and arrange a program that will include at least two prominent national speakers, famed for their entertaining powers; high-class vocal numbers, including soloists, quartets, etc., and comedy numbers of high quality.

This is intended only as a suggestion, on the spur of the moment; but future national banquets will be looked forward to eagerly, if the proper entertainment is provided.

Let Chicago set the ball rolling at next year's convention.

The day of the old ways is past. As befits our great industry, let us put away childish things and measure up to the man's full stature.

Chicago Film Brevities.

Schuyler Colfax, Frank S. Noble and George A. Blair, all holding important official positions with the Eastman Kodak Co., of Rochester, N. Y., were in the city during the early days of the late convention. It was the first time I had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Noble, who is assistant treasurer of the company.

Frank Cook, manager of the Princess theater, one of the Saxe Enterprises, Milwaukee, was among the enthusiastic delegation from Wisconsin that attended the convention. Vernon R. Day, Essanay's business manager, took advantage of Frank's presence in the city to appoint him as introducer of the Essanay stars to the six or seven hundred visitors who went to look over the Essanay plant. Frank's old-time show experience stood him in good stead, as his voice had all its old carrying power.

* * *

W. R. Hart, an exhibitor of Houston, Tex., accompanied by his wife, arrived in the city the third day after the late convention opened, having motored all the way from his home town. Except for the bronzed appearance of the tourists, one would never have suspected that they had just come through such a trying ordeal, as the weather was blistering hot.

In the midst of the exceedingly hot spell, a postal card arrived at this office from W. R. Rothacker, president of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Co. A picture of the Chateau de Ramesay, Montreal, on the back of the card, shows that Mr. Rothacker is seeking refuge in a cool and picturesque spot.

E. R. Pearson, branch manager of the Kansas City office for V-L-S-E, Inc., was in the city at the exposition on Vitagraph Day. Mr. Pearson, who is treasurer of the Screen Club of Kansas City, informed me that his club was trying to arrange a "booster" visit from the Reel Fellows Club of Chicago in the near future.

The opening night of the late exposition was celebrated by the Reel Fellows Club of Chicago at a midnight stag meeting. Many of the star participants in Essanay's night at the exposition were present, including Henry Walthall, Richard C. Travers, Bryant Washburn, Edwin Cobb, Ernest Maupain, Charles Haydon, etc. These guests made merry with a host of delegates and film fans over Essanay's successful appearance at the exposition.

President R. R. Nehls welcomed the guests of the evening, and addresses were made by members of the Essanay Co. and Secretary M. G. Watkins. Entertainment was furnished by the Boston Opera House orchestra and cabaret performers.

A call for an "after convention" meeting has been sent out to members of the club by Secretary M. G. Watkins, the meeting to take place Thursday evening, August 3, at 6:30 p. m.

Mr. and Mrs. Tom J. Hamlin, Wm. J. Egan and John Le Roy Johnston, of "Amusements," Minneapolis, spent several days in the city during exposition week.

Steve Farrar, manager of the Casino theater, Eldorado, Ill.; James Clayton, manager of the Orpheum, Harrisburg, Ill., and J. C. Hewitt, manager of the Gem and Colonial, Mt. Carmel, Ill., three theaters owned by the Colonial Amusement Co., were in the city during convention and exposition week, and paid a pleasant call at the office of the World. All three managers reported good business.

The Illinois theater is closed. "The Fall of a Nation" departed quietly on Sunday evening, July 16, after a run of two weeks.

"Ramona" closed a run of six weeks at the Auditorium on Saturday evening, July 29.

The Strand Theater Co. has closed the Strand theater, Wabash and Seventh street, this city, for the summer months. The policy went into effect Sunday, July 9. It is expected that the house will be re-opened Sunday, Sept. 3.

The management of Orchestra Hall received the following telegram from Mary Pickford, on the day following Mary Pickford night at the exposition, when she visited that house and made an address to those present: "I want to tell you of my appreciation of the wonderful reception given me in your beautiful theater, which with its artistic environment, symphony music and uplifting atmosphere so thoroughly typifies my ideas of what surroundings should be given our highest art. Your great audience and its enthusiasm over your splendid entertainment evidences that you are giving them what they desire, and it was good to be a part of it. My best wishes for your continued success." After the address at Orchestra Hall, Miss Pickford introduced her mother to the audience.

A. J. Gilligham and Mr. Kunsky, largely interested in moving picture enterprises in Detroit and elsewhere, accompanied by a party of ladies and friends, motored from Detroit to Chicago to take in the big exposition at the Coliseum. The entire party was much impressed by the large crowds in the big structure.

It was a pleasure to greet Director Louis Myll and the members of the "Musty Suffer" comedy company at the exposition on Monday, July 17. Mr. Myll's direction of a scene in a forthcoming "Musty Suffer" comedy afforded great pleasure and instruction to many hundreds of moving picture fans, who learned for the first time, probably, that the director is a vital factor in the making of a photoplay.

The Motion Picture-Scope Co., of Chicago, has made arrangements with the Hawaii Film Supply Company, of Honolulu, to handle the Portoscope in the islands. Indications point to a very satisfactory business this fall, as churches, schools and clubs there are taking up moving pictures for educational and entertainment purposes. Traveling exhibitors in the islands report that the natives are strong moving picture fans, and that it requires little effort to get their money.

Mrs. R. B. Frazier, wife of R. B. Frazier, owner of the Grant theater, Cicero, Ill., paid us a visit July 11 and subscribed for the World. The Grant seats 300 people, and charges 5 and 10 cents admission. Four reels are shown at the former place, and six reels at the latter, the programs consisting of the General Film Service. Mrs. Frazier reported fair business.

Wallace Mayer, formerly connected with the Pathe exchanges and later with the Peerless Film Co., has been appointed assistant manager of the Central Film Corporation, which will handle the Clara Kimball Young productions. Mr. Mayer will jrove a valuable asset to Harry Weiss, general manager of this firm. Among the out-of-town visitors who have recently called on Mr. Weiss in connection with bookings of these productions are: A. Zigfried, Bijou theater, Decatur, Ill.; Albert Lowns, Orpheum theater, Aurora, Ill.; Wm. E. Pearl, Highland Park theater, Highland Park, Ill.; J. F. Dittman, Strand theater, Freeport, Ill., and W. H Hodgson, Jr., Oak Park theater, Oak Park, Ill. All these houses have signed contracts for the showing of the Clara Kimball Young pictures for three days each. Among the Chicago exhibitors who have signed contracts for the Kimball Young Pictures, for three to seven days, for each picture are: George H. Moore, Orpheum theater; J. Cooper, Twentieth Century; Salo Auerbach, Strand theater; Ascher Brothers for the entire circuit; J. C. Wolf, Vision theater; Lester Retchen, Paulina and Temple theaters; W. E. Beaty, Harper theater; A. Ostrovsky, White Palace theater; Aaron Jones, Studebaker and Colonial theaters; Wm. Teter, Julian and Buckingham theaters, and Messrs. Richard and Chamberlain, Orpheum theater, Lafayette, Ind.

Messrs. Levy, Chatkin and Feldstein, of the United Film Service Co., this city, recently signed a contract with the Unity Sales Corporation which controls "The Yellow Menace" serial, for the rights to thirteen states, including Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, Wyoming, New Mexico, Utah, California, Nevada, Arizona, Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana. The United Film Service Company will operate offices in the most important cities in this territory, all of which will be controlled from the main office in Chicago. A strong advertising campaign is already under way, which includes extensive newspaper publicity and billboard displays. D. J. Chatkin, well known in the trade, will shortly leave Chicago on a round of the offices to superintend personally the sales and publicitv on the serial. Exhibitors are requested to communicate immediately with the United Film Service Company's offices in Kansas City, Denver, San Francisco and Seattle for reservations in their respective territories.

Miss Dolores Vassinelli, star of the Emerald Motion Picture Co., this city, since her return to moving pictures, has been receiving hundreds of letters from her former admirers who have missed her since she retired from Essanay to take up an operatic career. One group of little girls in Manchester, N. H., has organized a "Dolores" club, with the avowed purpose of bringing all photoplays in which Miss Cassinelli is featured to the theaters in their town. Each of the ten girls writes at least once a week to Miss Cassinelli, and she is kept busy answering her club correspondence and in giving information regarding the release date of her first Emerald feature, "A Song of Romany," under the direction of Frederick J. Ireland.

The Selig Polyscope Company claims that it is interesting at least two million people in the Selig Athletic Feature Film series now released weekly through V-L-S-E. Nearly one hundred of the leading newspapers of the United States and Canada are publishing signed and copyrighted articles by athletic stars. These articles are syndicated by the Selig publicity department.

The athletic stars, who have turned authors, appear in the Selig films. Signed stories by Joe Stecher, champion wrestler; Joe Tinker, manager of the "Cubs," Chicago; Frank Thoma, bowling champion; Jess Willard, champion heavyweight boxer of the world, and Packey McFarland, famous lightweight, are used in the publicity campaign.

Tom North, manager of the V-L-S-E exchange, Seattle, Wash., recently wrote the Selig Company as follows: "The Selig Athletic Feature Film series have jumped into immediate popularity in this territory. Already they are being run in three big theaters, in the three largest cities on the Pacific coast. The managers of the theaters report that unusual interest is being taken in the series by the business men of their cities, and that they are building up a new patronage for their houses."

Wm. N. Selig left this city for Los Angeles, Saturday, July 15, accompanied by Director Colin Campbell and Mrs. Campbell. While on the coast he will complete plans for the forthcoming big Selig production, "The Garden of Allah," which will be filmed on a spectacular and expensive scale. Mr. Selig is expected to return in about a week from the time of writing.

Cy De Vry, for twenty-eight years keeper and superintendent of the Lincoln Park Zoo, the second in importance in the United States, may soon become superintendent of the Selig Zoo at Los Angeles. Mr. De Vry is now considering a liberal offer made him by Wm. N. Selig.

The following programs have been announced at the prominent downtown theaters in Chicago for the week beginning Sunday or Monday, July 30 and 31:

Studebaker—"Diana's Inspiration" (controlled by the Central Film Company); "A Woman's Way" (Wm. A. Brady), featuring Ethel Clayton and Carlyle Blackwell, and the thirteenth chapter of "Gloria's Romance" (George Kleine), entitled "The Midnight Riot."

Fine Arts—"Under Two Flags" (Fox), featuring Theda Bara.

V-L-S-E Theater—"The Prince Chap" (Selig), with Marshall Neilan, Mary Charleson, Bessie Eyton, George Fawcett and Charles Girard in the cast.

Colonial—The Tribune's German War Pictures, taken on the front by Edwin F. Weigle, the Tribune's famous war cameraman, succeeded "How Britain Prepared," on Saturday, July 22. The latter picture had a run of four weeks. Considering the hot weather, the German war pictures are doing fine business, it is reported.

Cohan's Grand Opera House—"Civilization" (Thomas H. Ince). Good business is reported.

Orchestra Hall—Marie Doro in "Common Ground" (Lasky); travelogue, "Rural England"; "Side-walk Studies" from "Scenes from Many Lands," and a Paramount-Bray cartoon. Miss Ida Mae Cameron, lyric soprano, is the soloist.

La Salle—"Where Are My Children?" (Universal), featuring Tyrone Power, succeeds "The Little Girl Next Door," which had a successful run of twelve weeks.

SELIG TO MAKE "THE GARDEN OF ALLAH."

Arrives With His Directors and a Large Company of Players from Chicago.

COLONEL WM. N. SELIG, Director Colin Campbell, Director Marshall Neilan and two companies of Selig players arrived from Chicago at the Los Angeles studios, Tuesday, last week.

It is Mr. Selig's intention to produce "The Garden of Allah," in twelve reels, which will require almost a year to film.

Several thousand people will be employed in this picture from time to time, and work has already been started on a magnificent city at the studios in Eastland Park.

Producer Colin Campbell, who produced "The Spoilers," "The Ne'er Do Well," and other productions, will direct this big production and is now drafting a cast for same.

Director Marshall Neilan has started filming on a five reel production, "The Country That God Forgot" and has taken his company of players to the Mojave Desert this week.

Mr. Selig will depart from Los Angeles, Wednesday, July 26.

ANOTHER NEW STUDIO.

Superior Films Company Leases Studio to Make Commercial and Educational Pictures.

Robert A. Brackett, manager of the Superior Film Company, is personally supervising the production of a six-reel picture entitled "The Faucet," which will be released independently. Mr. Brackett is making the picture for the author, Robert D. Sorver. Wm. E. Wing wrote the scenario and is directing the piece. The picture deals with the ravages of drink and promises to be very sensational.

The Superior Films Company is a new organization with studio and laboratories occupying the entire tenth floor of the Knickerbocker Building on Olive street, Film Row. The studio is equipped with an indirect arc lighting system and a stage fifty by ninety feet. The laboratory is capable of handling ten thousand feet daily, and it is the intention of the company to have another laboratory in conjunction at an early date.

The Superior Films Company is the only close-in studio and laboratory in Los Angeles and it is situated in the heart of the business district, and is absolutely fireproof. The company will do commercial work and rent the studio by the day or week to independent producers. It will make a specialty of trick and novelty films, and will buy and sell negative, manufacturing educational and industrial films, etc. Mr. Brackett was formerly a chemist and started in the moving picture business as manager for Lyman Howe in 1901, and has since been in the role of exhibitor, producer, exchangeman, cameraman and manufacturer.

The company is composed of Pasadena millionaires and will file incorporation papers soon. With Mr. Brackett at the head the Superior Films Company looks as though it will be an important factor in the film business when it gets thoroughly underway.

Mission Play to Tour.

At a meeting of the board of directors of the Chamber of Commerce, John S. McGroarty, author of the Mission Play, told of the plans for presentation of this famous dramatization of California history throughout the United States, covering a two year's period.

Mr. McGroarty stated that owing to the generous patronage of more than two hundred thousand tourists, and of the California people themselves, who have witnessed the production of the Mission Play at San Gabriel, no appeal for outside funds has been necessary to finance the taking of the play to other places.

For one week, beginning September 4, the Mission Play will be presented at the Mason Opera House in Los Angeles. The first outside presentation will be in San Francisco, where a week's engagement will be filled. The play will then have week stands at Oakland, Salt Lake, Denver, Kansas City, St. Louis, Chicago, Toledo, Buffalo and then will visit the New England cities, closing the season at Boston.

The second year the play will open in New York City and then go to the principal cities of New York State, then to Baltimore, Washington and cities of the Southern States.

The close of the second year will find it back in California, when a gorgeous presentation will be given in the Mission ruins at San Juan Capistrano, the funds realized to be used for the restoration of the mission.

This play has been seen by countless thousands and is to be acted by a cast composed largely of moving picture players.

HELEN GIBSON HUNT—BUD AND HAM IN FUNNY COMEDY.

Miss Helen Gibson, the fearless Helen of the "Hazards of Helen" series met with a rather painful accident this week during the filming of "A Leap for Life," making a jump from a motorcycle off the end of the Long Beach drawbridge. Instead of landing in the ocean the young lady evidently miscalculated the distance and fell on a pile of rocks. While bruised and battered she escaped serious injury, and, in spite of her accident, is playing her regular role in the series.

Helen Gibson on Motorcycle.

Director James Davis finished last week another installment of these series. A number of the scenes were made around Kalem's own railroad depot, "Lone Point," where Helen is the operator. Fire breaks out in the station building, in the upper story of which is Helen's bedroom. She is awakened too late to escape by the stairway, and climbs from the window and hand over hand on a cable on a pole directly outside the window to the opposite side of the street. The story is woven around the kidnapping of the little son of the president of the road whom Helen, after many thrilling escapes, restores to his parents. Percy Pembroke plays opposite Miss Gibson, with George Routh, G. A. Williams, in the supporting cast.

Lloyd V. Hamilton has completed during the past week another funny "Ham Comedy," directing and of course playing "Ham" in the story. The title role, however, was given to a silent member of the company who caused considerable disturbance during the making of the film. "The Donkey Did It" is the working title of this release, and the donkey earned the title by kicking to pieces three carts before the desired scene could be photographed.

Ethel Teare played opposite Hamilton with Bud Duncan, Al Edmondson and Myrta Sterling in the supporting cast.

The Glendale aggregation of Kalem companies is busy this week on many thousand feet of negative.

"Tigers Unchained" is the title of the fourth episode of "The Girl from 'Frisco" series just completed by Director James W. Horne. Mr. Horne is now working on "The Gold Plunderers," which is number five of the series. This production required a special car to take all the electrical paraphernalia used in photographing in the Yellow Aster Mine at Randsburg, where the company worked a week taking scenes down in the mine's tunnels, shaft, stations, etc. The town of Randsburg again extended its arms of welcome to the company.

GOVERNOR JOHNSON IS GUEST OF HONOR AT UNIVERSAL CITY.

Governor Hiram W. Johnson, Governor of the State of California, paid a visit this week to Universal City.

"This is a manufacturing plant of which California should indeed be proud," remarked the Governor as he saw thirty-four companies at work in various parts of the big plant.

The Governor had been spending the morning at the little town of Ventura, where he had delivered a powerful address on the necessity of preparedness, and accompanied by Paul Herriott, member of the State Board of Control, had planned to make a fifteen minute stopover at the famous celluloid city on his way to Hollywood, where he was scheduled to speak again.

Governor Johnson was escorted from Ventura by R. E. Wells, location manager of the company, and after being welcomed by Secretary E. G. Patterson in the absence of Vice President and General Manager Davis, visited the various stages and watched the production of comedies, dramas and feature photoplays and met the leading directors, actors and actresses of the film capital.

The Governor's proposed fifteen minutes stay lengthened to nearly two hours. "When I come again," he said, "it will be with Mrs. Johnson, and we will make a day of it here. It is all mighty interesting indeed and it's a good place to escape the office seeker, don't you know?" he added laughingly.

As the chief executive of the state stepped into his automobile to resume his journey to Hollywood, he said, with a merry little twinkle in the gubernatorial eye, "I guess I have done a good day's work here along with the rest of the motion picture actors.

That Douglas Fairbanks is a tremendously popular film star is attested by the fact that wherever a "Doug" picture is showing the crowd lines up. It matters not whether he plays broad farce or Shakespeare.

"The Good Bad Man," the picture showing at Clune's Broadway this week, starring Fairbanks, is a wild West picture—very wild indeed. However, there are the joyous Fairbanks grin, the Fairbanks touch of comedy whenever there's a chance to squeeze comedy in, and then there is that fast-rising little film star, Bessie Love.

One night this week Los Angeles photoplay circles were treated to their first photoplay smoker, which was staged at the Palace theater for newspaper men and their friends. The occasion was the pre-view of "The Captive God," Ince's latest spectacle of primitive passions, in which William S. Hart and an all-star cast take part, and which is to run at the Palace.

Jean Perkins acts out of as well as in pictures as he makes a weekly dive from the top of a one hundred and twenty-five foot ladder at Hollenbeck Park. Perkins is being employed by the Signal Film Company. He holds several world's diving records, in 1910 having dropped into a six foot square concrete tank from a height of one hundred feet.

Produced with rare taste to realize the full romantic value of Henri Murger's story and acted with intelligence and feeling, "La Boheme" at Tally's Broadway theater this week is a photoplay production that classes far above the average run of productions of this sort. It might have well been extended several reels without running the risk of wearying an audience, for there is a winning charm and sentiment in the presentation of the tragic career of Mimi sure to arouse responsive emotions where a story more complicated in its construction would leave the spectator unmoved.

Mr. Tally has arranged this music so well that it deserves some very favorable comment. Tally's is a household word and his music is one of the regular features that draws the crowd.

In Elsinore, Cal., the Star theater has closed and will not resume for some time.

Owing to the death of his wife Thomas Carmody has closed the theater until further notice. Large crowds have been in attendance the past few weeks owing to the increase of transients here, and the baby pictures and prizes which ran for a month.

The big screen and projecting machine are second to none on the coast, and such big pictures as "Ramona," recently run here, are as well shown as in any of the larger show houses. It had been the intention of Mr. Carmody to put on "The Clansman," and "The Eyes of the World" this fall.

At San Dimas, Frank Stolle has purchased the San Dimas theater from W. A. Gaston. The show has been moved to summer quarters known as the Airdome, but will return indoors this winter.

Joseph Carl Breil, the noted composer, who is writing the music for "Intolerance," the big Griffith spectacle which used to be known under the working title of "The Mother and the Law," went to San Francisco Saturday, last week, for a short vacation.

In the production of the "Manager of the B. & A." Director J. P. McGowan of the Signal Film Corporation is planning the filming of the most spectacular scenes that has ever been staged in any railroad pictures.

The plot of the story calls for the blowing up of a locomotive. A small blaze results, which rapidly spreads to the surrounding country, and causes a forest fire, which covers an area of miles throughout the State. Because of the cost of wrecking an engine, which through the nature of the action must be totally destroyed, it was first planned to eliminate the explosion of the locomotive. Later, however, the dependent action was regarded as too vital to be cut out, and plans were laid to blow up the engine regardless of the cost.

Permits from the authorities and arrangements with the railroad company are being taken up at present, and it is probable that the scene will be staged next week. So far as can be learned this is the first time any film company has blown up a railroad locomotive in the production of a five-reel story.

"In the Hour of Disaster"

Three-Reel Lubin Photoplay Containing Realistic Railroad Wreck—Written and Directed by Romaine Fielding.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

"IN THE HOUR OF DISASTER" is a domestic drama in every sense of the word. Most of the scenes take place in the home of a physician, the triangle being formed by the doctor, his wife and his adopted daughter. Jealousy is at the root of the dramatic clash. Dr. Gordon adopts the child of a worthless fellow named Rudge and has her carefully educated. When the girl reaches womanhood and returns home from boarding school, she finds that the house has a mistress. Nell is very fond of her foster-father and shows her affection on every occasion. Mrs. Gordon soon becomes jealous of her, in spite of the fact that Nell has met an artist with whom she has fallen in love. The doctor's wife tries to pay her husband back by flirting with the artist, and ends by ordering Nell from the house. The train taken by Nell is wrecked, through the instrumentality of her real father, and the girl badly hurt. Mrs. Gordon, who has learned of her error, is also injured in trying to rescue Nell, and the doctor saves the lives of both women. Explanations ensue, the doctor's wife is cured of her jealousy and Nell is married to the artist.

Scene from "In the Hour of Disaster" (Lubin).

The plot of the Romaine Fielding drama is not remarkable for its strength, but has the merit of being told with directness and an absence of any extraneous matter. The railroad collision is realistic, two trains meeting head-on and being completely wrecked. Mr. Fielding plays the physician. Notwithstanding a tendency to overact, he succeeds in creating a character that has many engaging qualities. Mildred as the jealous wife, Flora Lea as the adopted daughter and Bernard Siegel as Nell's father are capable.

Two Offerings from "Mutt and Jeff"

"The Indestructible Hats" and "The Chinese Cook" Interesting Matter in the Line of the Animated Cartoon.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

IN THE first-named of the animated cartoons in question Jeff's kindly spirit toward his under-sized pal is accentuated by the manner in which he wantonly destroys each of Mutt's newest and wonderfully fashioned headpieces. "The Indestructible Hats" appear in two half-reel instalments on this interesting subject. In this particular one after the first attack on his perfectly respectable hat, Mutt gives his good money for one made on the order of an automobile tire, which is shortly afterward shattered by a pin prick from the cruel Jeff. Another creation is built on the strength of an individual thread; and still another purchase presents Mutt in the cast-off head gear of Francisco Villa. Lastly the impregnable Mutt appears with an ordinary straw hat which he flourishes before his destructive partner, who, after standing on it, jumping on it, and maltreating it generally, discovers that the hat he has so mistreated is his own. So much for Mutt's bump of humor.

"The Chinese Cook" marks the initial appearance of our mischievous young friends "Hans und Fritz" on the program of the Mutt & Jeff Co. The chinaman cook in this instance has troubles of his own; for, after carefully cinching his job, and making elaborate preparations to please his employer, these naughty children steal his ammunition through the window, so exasperating him that he is obliged to defer the preparation of the dinner for a lengthy and undignified chase of the culprits.

These are both distinctly amusing offerings, clean and pleasing, and suited to any audience.

Twice-Told Biograph Tales

Three-Reel Farce and Two-Reel Western Numbered Among Current Reissues of This Company.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

"SEVEN DAYS," a three-reel adaptation of the successful play, is a production few would forget and not many would object to seeing a second time. It has the best of farce ingredients and more of them than most yarns of the kind. The cast is a lively one, including Louise Orth, Dave Morris, Charles Mailes, Walter Miller, Hayward Mack, Millicent Evans and Jack Dillon.

The story of "Seven Days" is too well known to need repetition here. The scene is laid in the home of a young man recently divorced from his wife after a quarrel. He gives a house party, to which his aunt and his former wife come unexpectedly. A burglar also drops in, followed by a policeman. The house is then quarantined as the result of a smallpox scare.

The production is full of amusing complications. One of the guests is a spiritualist, and she gives credit to the unknown powers for everything the burglar does. The ex-wife hides in the coal bin, and the dumbwaiter and the roof garden are also worked into various situations. The number is well handled throughout.

"A Temporary Truce" is a Western subject, with a villain named Mexican Jim. The Mexican abducts the hero's wife and is pursued by the husband and his jealous sweetheart. A band of Indians on the warpath adds to the complications which follow. This is a Griffith production, and, while the story is one of ordinary interest, it contains entertaining hints of the vision which was to produce "The Birth of a Nation" and other notable successes. Even the Indian fighting gets away from the usual helter-skelter and evinces a keen directing eye for massive effects. This makes a good outdoor number, located in a semi-arid country.

The clear, smooth Biograph photography is a strong factor in favor of these reissues.

"The Prince Chap"

Edward Peple's Drama Delightfully Filmed by Selig—The Strong Cast Includes Mary Charleson, Bessie Eyton, George Fawcett and Marshal Neilan, Who Plays the Titular Role and Directs the Photoplay.

Reviewed by James S. McQuade.

SINCE it is impossible for the finite to be perfect, it may be said at the start that "The Prince Chap" in pictures has its weak points; but these are of minor importance, and are lost sight of when one assembles in mind's eye the many fine points of the photoplay.

The adaptation by Gibson Willets affords a story in which the hero's innate kindness of heart on various occasions causes the outpouring of good will for him from the spectators, while scenes of pathos and deep heart interest are intermingled with touches of humor and broad comedy that keep the mind well balanced between the grave and the gay. The story is one of uplift, and the close brings a sense of happiness, because one is convinced that faith and the right have triumphed in the main.

The direction merits discriminating praise. Mr. Neilan has succeeded well in conveying the atmosphere of the London studio, in which William Peyton (Prince Chap) has struggled for recognition as a sculptor. His friend Jack Rodney, amateur painter, and the other aspiring artists, are introduced to us both at work and in play.

That concert in the den of Runion, the piece of driftwood which has seized on the position of valet to stay its wanderings, is so fine a scene that one carries it away with him. The arrival of Phoebe Puckers (the maid of all work) at the Rodney studios, to assist the over-worked housekeeper, is quite a comedy event; but the introduction to Peyton and his model while they are at work in the studio is a scream. Phoebe's make-up and dress may be somewhat exaggerated, even for a London slavey, but who cares for that when she makes us merry by her blunders?

The contrast between the quarters of Prince Chap as a struggling sculptor and those in which we find him when luck turns and his pile is coming in, as shown by Director Neilan, will attract the observation of all. The elegance of the interiors of his home, in his days of affluence, shows the refinement of art, just as the interiors of the old quarters showed art in the nude.

I was much impressed by the beautiful light effects introduced by Director Neilan in several fine interiors in this photoplay. In softness, warmth and clear definition the photography of these scenes is most pleasing. The human face, especially, is brought out more vividly, whether in repose or influenced by thought or passion.

The acting of every one in the cast deserves praise. Mary Charleson appeared as the mother of Claudia (the heroine of the story) and afterwards as that young lady when about eighteen years old. The first was a trying role, but—artiste that she is—Miss Charleson was always the tired, worn-out wife and mother. No need saying that her Claudia is a beautiful, lovable girl, manifiesting at various times the lack of a mother's over-care in her up-bringing.

Bessie Eyton's Alice Travers is another well-drawn character. Miss Eyton shows that Alice really loved the Prince Chap, as much as her shallow heart would permit; but her love was not strong enough to resist idle tattle or the wealth of another suitor.

George Fawcett's Runion is a big hit of the photoplay. Runion is never permitted to miss an opportunity to entertain in the role of valet, in Mr. Fawcett's artistic care. Whether it be in his gentle "earring" of Phoebe Pucker when he finds her blowing on his beloved flute, or peeping through the keyhole of Prince Chap's studio and receiving a splutter of ink in his eye for the liberty, or ironing the underwear of Baby Claudia while that young seraph hid her dimpled anatomy within a large vase until the lingerie was ready, or in trying vainly to take a glass of wine unseen at the Christmas party in Prince Chap's home, or in the attempt to make the Prince Chap believe that he was administering severe castigation to Baby Claudia for breaking a costly vase, in these and many other incidents Mr. Fawcett is ever a delightful entertainer.

Charles Girard's Jack Rodney is an excellent characterization, and no need to say that Mr. Neilan's William Peyton wins the spectator by his manly, high-spirited, gentle soul. We owe many hearty laughs to Fanny Cohn's Phoebe Puckers and it will be some time before we shall forget her.

The release date was July 24, through V-L-S-E, Inc.

Two Interesting Mutuals

"Judith of the Cumberlands," a Stirring Kentucky Feud Story, and "One A. M.," a Chaplin Farce of Unique Type.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

"JUDITH of the Cumberlands" is admirably typed and handled with skill, but the material of the Kentucky Feud and illicit whiskey stills has been worn threadbare. Then the screen story carries with it the glaring faults of the novel from which it was adapted. A director of such ability and a company of fine actors should be given something better to visualize than what has been done to death in the days of the one-reel cowboy pictures, particularly when the story contains little that is new and is desperately illogical in almost every phase of its development. A newly-elected young Justice of Peace, tremendously popular, is arrested for murder where no evidence of death is offered. No one attempts to produce the victim, a moonshiner, inasmuch as those who assert that he has been killed know that he is alive. Not the slightest proof is offered that the moonshiner has been killed, yet a man of good standing, popular in his community, is imprisoned for murder. This sounds like one of those carelessly-written stories turned out by lady novelists. Capable writers do not ask us to concede that two and two make five, at least not after the story is under way. We know from the beginning that the heroine will ride to the rescue of the unjustly-accused hero, as she has been doing for some time in that class of melodrama, and she does it twice in this story, perhaps because he is not particularly bright. He knows that there is a gang hunting him—he has been shot down at his door—yet he goes to a lonely spot on the lure of a letter which does not even attempt to imitate the heroine's handwriting. Incapable of taking care of himself, devoid of ordinary common sense, why is he blazoned in nearly every subtitle as the hero?

Scene from "Judith of the Cumberlands" (Mutual).

"One A. M." is the name of a farce so unusual that it is doubtful if one similar has ever been attempted. Charlie Chaplin discards the tramp costume entirely, arriving home at one in the morning in evening dress and, after some amusing struggles with the taxi door, enters his house and thereafter has the stage all to himself. He is the sole actor for two solid reels, and there is not the slightest doubt that he will hold close attention for the full period of time, not only by his antics and ingenious mechanical contrivances, but by some amusing revelations of a drunken man's state of mind. His representation is an artistic success as a character study alone. The lowered intellectuality of a man under the influence of drink, his persistent attention to the trivial, his solemn stupidity, his attempts at dignity, all these and more are depicted with fidelity, and it is doubtful if any actor but an acrobat like Chaplin could even attempt all that he does as a mere matter of course through two entire reels. One realizes better from "One A. M." that the comedian is a veritable artist, capable of filling roles beyond any he has thus far attempted on the screen.

be intensely interesting as reading matter, is not colorful enough when placed on the screen. Some good comedy situations occur in the first two reels of the production. The last part of the picture introduces a strike among the workmen at the Raymond-Kelly mines, to quell which the troops have to be called out. The main thread of the story deals with the effort of Rob Raymond to win the hand of Ann, christened by her father "Hesper of the Mountains." Considerable interest attaches to this portion of the production, and to those scenes dealing with the perfidy of Munroe a West Point pal of Raymond's.

An excellent cast has been chosen for the filming of the story, including Donald Hall, Evart Overton, Donald MacBride, Denton Vane, Robert Gaillard, Rose E. Tapley, Templar Saxe, and Josephine Earle.

"Dear Percy."

Frank Daniels does a delightful bit of comedy in this one-reel production. It belongs to the series of "Laugh Makers, and its story was written by Cyrus Townsend Brady. Percy is a mild type of man, too tender hearted to hurt a fly. He wearies his wife with too much affection, and causes her to long for a husband who is strong like Pat Casey next door. Pat Casey, by-way-of enlightenment, kisses his wife only to get rid of her, beats her when occasion demands, and breaks up the china when things fail to come his way. One day Percy is felled in the street by a trolley car, and later Casey is called upon by Percy's wife to submit to an operation for transfusion of blood to save Percy. The result of the operation is that the Casey devils enter Percy, and leave him only on the suasion of a blow from a ninety horsepower automobile. An excellent comedy number.

"Pillars of Society"

Henry Walthall as Karston Bernick in a Visualization Artistic of the Ibsen Drama, by Triangle.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

IBSEN stands for the spirit of his time and place because he crystallized ideals for his people and for the whole world as well. He was the embodiment of what most of our own dramatists lack, the modern spirit, "the form and pressure of the age in which we live." "Pillars of Society" is intensely local in a way. It reflects a Norwegian agitation to properly regulate insurance on unseaworthy craft, yet this subject matter has been so artfully introduced that it does double duty. It is in itself an evidence of the hypocrisy of those masking as benevolently inclined while they are the biggest thieves unhung, while it provides material for some intense drama. Karston Bernick, secretly a voluptuary, marries an heiress to save the Bernick shipbuilding industry and covers the many lies on which life is built by contributing checks to benevolent organizations and welfare committees, a highly respectable form of hush money.

Arch hypocrite that he is, a skilled thief in high finance, a murderer at heart, if not in deed, a crook to the core for the sake of keeping up appearances, Karston is human, he loves his only child, Olaf. Justice sleeps when the pillars of society thrive on misrepresentation and intrigue, but an unexpected retribution comes in the narrow escape from death of little Olaf on a ship Kartson intended to have burned at sea, Olaf having secretly gone aboard with an idea of seeing the world for himself. With the retribution comes a remarkable conversion, though not an inconsistent one. Karston, through complicated motives and providential intervention, reforms and is accordingly despised for becoming honest in the end.

The treatment of this story by Triangle Players is of high character, artistry being revealed at nearly every step, and the types are admirable. Walthall easily carries the honors, and he alone is careful to show the marks of time after the intervention of a long period. Others do it in a half-hearted way and still others not at all, but the acting is so good and the atmosphere so well preserved that the whole screen version constitutes a valuable contribution, a highly artistic addition to a class of production intended to familiarize the lowly with great examples of leading dramatists.

"Florence Rose Fashions"

Artistic Film Presentation of Fashions by the Pathe Exchange, Inc.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

ORDINARILY the screen fashion show has been presented in rather an indifferent way, with little thought of accentuating the art that lies behind the display. It was therefore pleasantly surprising to the congregation of press representatives and others who assembled recently in the projection room at the Pathe offices, at 25 W. 45th street, to be received and piloted through a reel and a half of pretty things to wear, by a well-poised, tastefully attired woman, who proved to be no other than Miss Florence Rose to whose artistic sense was due not only the nature of the display, but the unusual manner in which it was presented.

To go into detail on this reel and a half of handsome and exquisite articles of apparel would be too great a tax on the ordinary individual. A few words of praise will surely be ample compensation for the innumerable blunders which would doubtless be made in an attempt to cover the review in detail. The first reel is entitled "A Day with Betty Young," in which garments suited to various hours of the day, and various occupations at the times and places at which they belong are shown. The scenes in which these are presented are artistically subtitled, commencing with "Slumberland," and "The Break of Dawn." The second which, by-the-way, is to be completed later, and is entitled "Where Fashions Rein" takes us along Fifth avenue, and introduces us at this early date to the suits, hats, furs, etc., that well-dressed people will be wearing the coming fall and winter.

This manner of presenting fashions is a novelty, and is expected to be continued.

"The Fugitive"

First Thanhouser Contribution to the Program of the Gold Rooster Plays Features Florence La Badie.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

THE story of this five-part melodrama was written by Philip Lonergan; and it may be added, the story is a good one. The characterization is excellent and has been well interpreted, but the production as a whole is lacking in action and the small but important details that give to a picture an air of spontaneity that is convincing. does a fair piece of work, and dresses the part becomingly—often artistically.

As the first of the Thanhouser productions to be released on the Gold Rooster program "The Fugitive" is of special interest. And although we could wish that the staging of the production had been handled in a more forceful manner, it holds promise of future developments. The supporting cast in this picture are players of experience and play well the roles alotted them. The picture is well photographed and illumined effectively. There is considerable originality in the theme that pictures two sisters, one of them a widow with a child, suddenly at the mercy of circumstances, an inherited fortune having been unwisely invested by executor of their father's estate. The luring of the widow to the home of the employer whom she afterward stabs in self defense, and these scenes dealing with the career of her self-sacrificing sister who is later hunted out and lured back to New York through a telegram stating that her husband who has preceded her is seriously ill, are well handled.

Pathe News Causes Sensation.

The Pathe News No. 56 showing views of the transatlantic submarine "Deutschland" has caused a sensation in the far West. It was the first news film containing pictures of the "Deutschland" to reach Seattle and Manager Clemmer of the Clemmer theater advertised it heavily in the Seattle Times which is famous for its motion picture news.

The Times is on the street at 3.30 and almost as soon as the paper was out, crowds formed in the lobby and outside of the Clemmer theater and as late as 10.40 that night a line extended some distance down the block.

Mr. Clemmer has advised Manager F. C. Quimby of Pathe's Seattle Office that this advertising brought him more results than any he has ever used since his entrance into the show business.

"Miss Petticoats"

World Film Corporation Releases Five-Reel Peerless Production, Featuring Alice Brady.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

A THOROUGHLY human and enjoyable story is this five-reel production, adapted and directed by Harley Knoles from the book by Dwight Tilton. "Miss Petticoats" carries no particular message and does not thunder in a dramatic way, but it contains a great deal of humor and touches of genuine pathos. It wins the interest of the observer from the beginning and holds it to the end.

Alice Brady plays the leading role of Agnes Renier, a pretty girl of the woolen mills, who lives with her grandfather on an old schooner, known as the Harpoon. Miss Brady plays the part with a naturalness and freedom of movement that prove very effective. There is little artifice or posing about her work, and from the moment Agnes, attired in short skirt and blouse, with be-ribboned pigtails, steps into the picture she claims the attention.

The story of her rise in the world and marriage to the man she loves, in spite of the scandal that threatened her happiness, is well worked out. The plot is trimmed closely—almost too closely in places—of details. The discovery of her noble parentage and the accompanying inheritance are skimmed very lightly, but nothing essential is lost, and the observer is undoubtedly glad to have obvious business supplanted by more entertaining things. The picture is almost a model for the manner in which it works in short humorous touches of pleasing freshness.

Arthur Ashley, Isabel Berwin, Robert Elliott, Johnny Hines, Lila Chester and Ed. M. Kimball have the other important parts.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

"L'ABBE CONSTANTINE" is the title of the novel by Ludivoc Halevy from which the scenario for this five-part production, was made. In character the play resembles a comedy-drama, but persists in shaping itself in one's memory more as a pretty romance than as anything else. This does not mean that the production is devoid of comedy, for, in truth,

Scene from "Bettina Loved a Soldier" (Bluebird).

it has an ample supply, containing various highly amusing situations, well handled. It contains also a simple charm of quaintness and beauty that belongs to a former period.

The scenario made by E. J. Clawson found a competent director in Rupert Julian. The labor of producing was lightened by the aid of an able cast, consisting of Louise Lovely and Francelia Billington impersonating the two pretty sisters of the play, Zoe DuRae, Douglas Gerrard, George Berrill and Elsie Jane Wilson, and Rupert Julian himself. The role of Bettina, the unmarried sister of Mrs. Scott, the American purchaser of the estate of Longueval, as played by Louise Lovely is exquisitely dainty and sprightly; while both Miss Billington and Miss Lovely exhibit the refined dignity that is necessary to the play throughout. The undisguised annoyance with which Bettina meets the attentions of Paul de Lacardens, and the persistence with which she tries to force Jean Reynaud's love for her to confession, give entree to many delightfully amusing situations.

The production is one which boasts those attributes of excellence that make it suitable to any class of audience.

"The Heart Menders."

AN IMPORTANT piece of information regarding "The Heart Menders" is the statement that Ethel Teare is a member of the cast. Her return to the position of leading lady in the Ham comedies completes the trio that were so long identified with these Kalem one-reelers, Miss Teare's method and personality being right in line for the work.

"The Heart Menders" disclose Ham and Bud posing as lawyers, whose specialty is divorce cases. The two illegal practitioners are induced to take up the profession after witnessing the ardent embraces bestowed on I. Sepa Ratum by the lady clients of that famous divorce lawyer. Ham and Bud both succeed in doing an excellent business in divorce and kisses, but Ham also manages to arouse the jealousy of one of the lady's husbands and at the finish of the reel is ready to give up his practice. The situations are humorous, and Lloyd V. Hamilton, Bud Duncan and Ethel Teare give them expert comedy treatment.

Scene from "The Heart Menders" (Kalem).

"A Mystery of the Rails."

There is plot enough in this number of the "Hazards of Helen" to supply a three-reel drama. A murder is committed and the blame thrown on an innocent man, but Helen discovers the real culprit and, when he tries to escape on a power car, drops from the spout of a water tank to the top of a passing coach, overhauls the murderer, throws a rope around him and jerks him aboard the train. Swift action and an extra dangerous hazard mark this one-reel photodrama.

"Liberty"

First Instalment of New Universal Serial, to Run for a Period of Twenty Weeks.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THE first instalment of "Liberty," in three reels, has the ear marks of a first class story of love and adventure in the great outdoors. The scenes are laid along the Mexican border and certain incidents are quite as lively as the news reports emanating from that section a short while back. There are plenty of thrills and deeds of the red-blooded sort, with a touch of patriotism thrown in here and there.

The plot concerns a girl who inherits property in this country and Mexico, subject to certain conditions. A tricky executor of the father's estate and several anxious lovers serve to complicate matters. On her first visit to Mexico she is abducted by bandits, who demand $10,000 ransom money. This is refused after two of the girl's lovers have quarreled over the matter, and a rescue party invades the mountain fastnesses. The last reel closes with the heroine dangling from the edge of a high cliff on a small rope.

Marie Walcamp, who plays the girl, is well remembered for her intrepid undertakings in the films. She has done innumerable daring turns in previous pictures and her work in this will undoubtedly be of equal interest. Eddie Polo, also known for his daring, has a prominent part in this serial. Others in the cast are Jack Holt, Bertram Grassby, Albert Allen, L. M. Wells, G. Raymond Nye, Neal Hart and Maude Emery.

Jacques Jaccard, author and producer, has chosen some wonderfully picturesque localities for the opening three reels. The various instalments will follow at the rate of two reels each for nineteen weeks. It is impossible to foretell how the general plot interest of a serial will hold up. In a serial of this type, action and thrills are the keynote, but it is to be hoped they will remain bound together by some sort of a thread of interest.

"The Beckoning Trail"

Five-Reel Red Feather Production Features J. Warren Kerrigan in Story of East and West.

Reviewed by Robert C. McElravy.

THIS five-reel production, written by F. McGrew Willis and directed by Jack Conway, has a familiar plot motive, but the interest of the observer is carried to a high point in the last three reels. The struggle over the mining claim develops elemental passions which burst forth in hand-to-hand struggles and exciting gun play.

J. Warren Kerrigan is well suited to the leading role. He first appears as Carter Raymond, a Broadway youth who has gone the pace and suddenly finds it necessary to earn a living. He says goodbye to his friend, Georgette, and goes west to work a mining claim owned by his father. He finds an old prospector working on the claim, the father of a charming young girl. Lois Wilson is very pleasing in this part.

Scene from "The Beckoning Trail" (Universal).

The young man's reception is a warm one, as he is mistaken by the girl for a member of the Big Bosses' gang. This gang has been trying to jump the claim. The girl fires at young Raymond and her father attacks him also. He knocks down the father and explanations follow. Then Raymond and the prospector become partners.

This leads up to the various clashes with the Big Boss and his gang, which are exceptionaly well handled. Harry Carter plays the Big Boss acceptably, and Ray Hanford does his usual good work in the part of the girl's father. Maude George appears as Georgette, who further complicates the story. The action is good throughout and the clear photography a decided help.

Miss Pickford everywhere. Hulda as a characterization is filled with charm, with the distinctive bits that seem to be Miss Pickford's sole property in spite of manifold efforts by numerous others to appropriate them. She is always at her best with children—and with old men, not to mention young ones—and in this picture she has as side partners three clever youngsters, one of them especially so. Horal Hollacher is Little Yacob, and Horal makes a fine little Dutchman.

Frank Losee is John Walton, the "big business" man, who loses his temper over his son's fondness for sketching to the detriment of his law studies. John Bowers is Allan, the son, who becomes an artist with ill success until he sketches Hulda and lands a magazine cover—which incident figures much in the story. Russell Bassett is the Pennsylvania Dutch uncle of Hulda, who refuses to sell his property just to please Walton. And there is Antonio, the organ grinder. These all give excellent support.

"Hulda from Holland" contains a few serious moments, enough to leaven the lighter vein that marks the story as a whole. There is an abundance of human interest, increased perhaps in its scope by reason of the wide range in the ages of its principals, the children, the two lovers, the middle-aged father and the old uncle.

The story opens in Holland, with its little village and windmill, and shifts to New York City and the farm in Pennsylvania. Hulda will be liked.

Gaumont's Tabloids.

A striking innovation in motion pictures has just been inaugurated by the Gaumont company, to give greater variety to its entertaining single-reel release, "Reel Life," the Mutual Magazine in Film. This is the incorporation of an episode filmed at the Gaumont studios which points a moral without "preachiness," illustrates a fable, or satirizes some human foible. It is a complete motion picture compressed into 250 feet at most.

Scene from "A Tabloid Drama" (Gaumont).

The work has been carried on quietly at the Gaumont studios under the direction of Edwin Middleton. Owing to the short length of film which can be devoted to these subjects, no footage is used for introductions, but a number of the more important Gaumont players have appeared in these diverting tabloids. A recent whimsical series enlisted the services of Miss Iva Shepard, who appeared to advantage as a comedienne, and "Budd" Ross, who has had the star role in so many of Gaumont's Casino Star Comedies.

"Beyond the Trail" (Universal).

No; friends and fellow-citizens, this very acceptable snow picture does not show a group of East Coast Universal actors making their way across the great divide toward Universal City. It is merely a scene from "Beyond the Trail," a two-reel drama, written by Catherine Carr and produced by Ben Wilson, which will be released by the Universal under the Bison brand on August 19.

"Beyond the Trail" is an unusual story which pleases be-

OTTO, THE SALESMAN (Lubin), July 24.—A broad burlesque of an old-time melodrama, this one-reel picture is neatly played by D. L. Don, Patsey De Forest, Bernard Siegel, and George Egan. "Bertha, the Sewing Machine Girl" would serve as the original, and the villain is defeated and the heroine saved in the proper order.

HAM'S WHIRLWIND FINISH (Kalem), July 25.—Ham gets mixed up with several sticks of dynamite and a large number of angry sons of Italy, which accounts for his whirlwind finish. He also turns himself into an animated mailbox. There is considerable new business in the farce. Another pleasant feature is Ethel Teare, who is a member of the cast.

A MIX-UP IN ART (Kalem), July 26.—This is an Ethel Teare comedy and depends for its fun upon its situations, the four leading characters working at cross-purposes. A married couple, who pretend to be students of art in order to get money from the aunt and uncle of the pair, are played by Miss Teare and Victor Rottman. Myrta Sterling and Gus Leonard have the other two parts. An ordinarily good picture.

WILL A WOMAN TELL? (Vim), July 26.—The husband of the lady in this one-reel comedy is fully convinced that his wife can't keep a secret, and puts up a job on her to prove that he is right. The plot is neatly worked out and played with equal deftness by Harry C. Myers and Rosemary Theby.

THE SELIG-TRIBUNE, NO. 60, 1916 (Selig), July 27.—Business men of San Francisco leave for training camp at Montery; yacht Warrior in New London drydock; Miss Wood and Tell Williams in classic dancing, Seattle; "The Dragon Fly," a new aeroplane model, Pittsburgh; 9th Massachusetts infantry attend mass, El Paso; society girl and pet peacock; recruits for German Army, Strassburg; swimming races, Chicago; horse racing, Seroet, Java; James Whitcomb Riley.

THE GIRL AND THE TENOR (Kalem), July 28.—This is the first one-reel comedy in which Ivy Close, the English actress, is featured. A review of the picture was printed in the issue of July 29, page 803.

A PLUNGE FROM THE SKY (No. 90, of the "Hazards of Helen" Railroad Series—Kalem), July 29.—International complications are threatened in this one-reel railroad drama, and Helen takes a drop from an aeroplane, in order to capture the plans for a new motor that is of great value to the United States. The thrill is all there. It is very evident that Miss Gibson is ready to take any kind of a chance that the director is able to invent.

IT HAPPENED IN PIKERSVILLE (Lubin), July 29.—A trio of tramps, acted by Raymond McKee, C. W. Ritchie and Billy Bowers, head the cast of this one-reel farce. The reel is full of rough house comedy, a fire hose playing an important part at the finish.

GOLD AND GLITTER (Biograph), July 31.—A vivid dramatic sketch with most of the scenes laid on the banks of a river flowing through picturesque woods. Lillian Gish, Lionel Barrymore and Elmer Booth are in the cast. The picture was directed by Griffith a number of years ago and is now being reissued.

THE SELIG-TRIBUNE, NO. 59, 1916 (Selig), July 24.—31st Michigan at El Paso; Splash Week, New York; recover body of shark victims at Matawan, N. J.; Thos. Mott Osborne returns as warden of Sing Sing Prison, Ossining, N. Y.; "Police Mothers" patrol beach at Coney Island; strike agitators arrested, San Francisco; Open Metropolitan Golf Championship, New York; compulsory vaccination of troopers on border, El Paso.

A CHEAP VACATION (Vitagraph), July 24.—The drawbacks to camping out are humorously depicted in this one-reel comedy. The scenario was written by P. D. Hugon and has a number of amusing but conventional situations. The cast are all new faces and consist of Lena Brown, Frank Wunderlee, Sam Jaffre and Bessie Burt. They are fairly effective.

CANIMATED NOOZ PICTORIAL, NO. 13 (Essanay), July 26.—This issue of the Canimated Nooz is not an unlucky number for the spectator. Wallace A. Carlson's cartoon pictorial hits off the dancing craze most humorously, the Dreamy Dud comic is handled in novel fashion and an interesting scenic is on the same reel.

WHAT'LL YOU HAVE? (Vim), July 28.—Jabs goes into the saloon business in this one-reel comedy and Pokes at once becomes his best customer. The trick business in the picture is handled cleverly and will prove very amusing.

A NATURAL BORN GAMBLER (Biograph), July 24.—That celebrated poker game which Bert Williams has so often played in pantomime on the spoken stage, is the inspiration of this two-reel comedy. The characters are all colored persons of the male sex and they are all addicted to gambling. Williams attempts to annex the roll of a swell sport from the city, but the game is raided and, when last seen, the natural born gambler is sadly dealing out imaginary hands behind the bars of a prison. The business of some of the scenes could be improved, but Bert Williams' skill at pantomime shows up well on the screen.

THE CONFLICT (Selig), July 24.—A young minister who gives up a call to a wealthy parish and goes to a bethel in the slums, is the chief fighter in this conflict with evil. The story of the three-reel photoplay has many human touches, although some of the situations are difficult to accept. Earnestness of purpose by all concerned, helps to make the picture impressive. Charles West, Jack Pickford and Fritzi Brunette lead the cast.

A BROTHER'S LOYALTY (Essanay), July 25.—Francis X. Bushman appears in a dual role in this two-reel reissue, taking the part of a minister who goes to prison for a crime committed by his brother. The picture is entertaining. Beverly Bayne and E. H. Calvert assist Mr. Bushman.

BY RIGHT OF LOVE (Lubin), July 25.—The plot and characters in this two-reel photoplay by C. J. Harris, are conventional, and the director has not succeeded in improving the scenario to any marked degree. The daughter of a wealthy manufacturer is courted by the manager of her father's works. She agrees to marry him, but becomes interested in one of the workmen, who has a crippled sister. The manager is a blackguard and the workman gets the heiress. Velma Whitman, Jay Morley, Robert Gray, Melvin Mayo and Marcia Moore form the cast.

IN THE HOUR OF DISASTER (Lubin), July 27.—A review of this three-reel photoplay is printed on another page of this issue.

THE GROUCH (Essanay), July 22.—Harry Beaumont is the moving spirit of this three-reel comedy which shows how a wideawake young chap, just from college, mixes in with the affairs of the grouchy gentleman whose daughter he wants to marry. The situations are bright and breezy, and young Mr. Beaumont gives his scenes a regular Douglas Fairbanks touch. Harry Dunkinson is capital in the title role, and Virginia Bowker, Camille D'Arcy and John Cossar keep up the good work.

Bluebird Photoplays, Inc.

BETTINA LOVED A SOLDIER, Aug. 14.—A delightful five-part comedy-drama, featuring Louise Lovely. The story takes the form of a romance with many amusing situations, and is an adaptation of Ludivoc Halevy's novel "L'Abbe Constantin." A full review of the production will be found elsewhere.

International Film Service Inc.

HEARST-INTERNATIONAL NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 59, 1916 (July 25).—American Derby at Chicago; largest indoor swimming tank opened at Galveston, Tex.; review of volunteer army, London, Eng.; surf riding, Ocean Park, Cal.; Fashion section; National Guard and regular army officers at Brownsville, Tex.; giant log-raft, San Diego, Cal.; boy scouts in prize drill, Coney Island, N. Y.; steamer Keyport sunk at her pier, New York; Christy Mathewson becomes manager of the Cincinnati Reds; pictures of the U. S. Navy.

HEARST-INTERNATIONAL NEWS PICTORIAL, NO. 60, 1916 (July 28).—Review of Japanese fleet; infantile paralysis plague continues at New York; water sports at Larchmont Yacht Club; Polo and tennis at Narragansett Pier, R. I.; women of the Nat. Life Saving Society hold meet, New York; 9th Mass. Infantry clash with Mexican snipers, El Paso; Christy Mathewson comes to Polo Grounds, New York, as manager of Cincinnati Reds; army training camp at Darmstat, Germany; Fashion Section; a T. E. Powers cartoon.

MUTUAL WEEKLY, NO. 82 (July 26).—Some interesting items of this issue include the burial of the troopers killed in the fight at Carrizal, Mex.; Japanese tennis champions at Narragansett Pier, L. I.; the fire at the State Armory, New York; the dynamiting of the Matawan river for the capture of sharks, and Thomas Mott Osborne welcomed back to Sing Sing.

THE MASQUE BALL (Cub), July 28.—George Ovey appears again as Jerry. He swipes an invitation to a ball, where he outwits the girl's father and his rival, Don Kazaboo. The plot is not much, but the number is lightly amusing throughout.

REEL LIFE, NO. 13 (Gaumont), July 30.—Two good subjects are pictured in this, gold mining in Georgia and fishing on the New Jersey coast. The former shows placer and hydraulic mining and the passage of the metal from ore to mint. Several big fish are landed in the latter feature, showing some surprising possibilities of surf fishing.

BUNGLING BILL'S DRESS SUIT (Vogue), July 30.—This number, featuring Paddy McGuire, Elsie Greeson and Arthur Moon, contains more plot than most of this company's offerings. It centers about a letter left in a dress suit telling of an inheritance. The closing scenes are a mix-up in which the plot is temporarily almost to view. A fair subject.

PAINLESS EXTRACTING (Vogue), Aug. 1.—Rube Miller and Lillian Hamilton appear in the knockabout number. The scenes in the dentist's rooms are quite amusing, though the action never becomes very laughable.

SEE AMERICA FIRST, NO. 47 (Gaumont), Aug. 2.—Philadelphia and its environs are prolific of views, both of historical and modern interest. The parks, statues and shipyards are shown. One of the best of the series picturing American cities. The reel closes with animated drawings by Harry Palmer, showing how music acts as a hair restorer.

ONE A. M. (Lone Star), Aug. 7.—No one can deny that Chas. Chaplin is exceedingly funny in this two-part comedy in which not a soul appears beside himself and that solid taxicab driver. At the same time two reels of film absorbed with the actions of a drunken man leaving a taxi, getting in his house and finally upstairs to bed is a great deal to devote to low comedy. The picture is set richly and artistically.

Mutual Film Corporation Specials

SECRET OF THE SUBMARINE, Chapter XI (American), July 17.—This instalment witnesses the rescue of Hope and Cleo from the mountain fastness by Hook. There is a slight lull in the drama throughout this while all hands gather force for the next attempt to gain the secret. Satsuma, thinking all is lost, attempts hari-kiri, but is prevented from this by Mahlin. Both are then haled before the Black Council and given two more weeks in which to make good. Hope gets a letter from Inez demanding that he save her honor, after the night in the cabin, by marrying her. None of the incidents are sensational, but continue the story interest very well.

THE HAUNTING SYMPHONY (Centaur), July 29.—A two-part melodrama featuring Crane Wilbur. The story is rather a good one but intensely gruesome. While adults may enjoy it, it is not a picture to exhibit before children on account of the gruesome quality above mentioned.

THE DREAMER (American), July 31.—A two-reel number, by Anthony W. Coldeway, featuring Lizette Thorne, Edward Coxen and others. This is the simple story of a farm house drudge who reads fairy tales and dreams of the coming of her prince. At last he comes. She turns out to be an heiress and he a wealthy clubman posing as a hobo. This contains some pretty pastoral scenes and makes an entertaining offering of a somewhat obvious, but enjoyable type.

JUDITH OF THE CUMBERLANDS (Mutual Star Production—Signal), July 31.—This five-part production is based on a novel by Alice McGowan. The story is well adapted to the screen, but is not unlike other mountain stories that have been filmed. The production has been well staged, and will be found enjoyable. Helen Holmes, Paul C. Hurst, L. D. Maloney and other competent players are in the cast.

FATHER AND SON (Mutual Masterpicture de Luxe), Aug. 7.—Henry E. Dixey is starred in this five-part production, and it is an unfortunate thing that a better vehicle had not been found for this celebrated actor. The production is difficult of classification because it hovers midway between straight comedy and farce comedy. The crudeness of its subtitles are are also a detriment. The individual work of Henry E. Dixey is entertainment in itself. Others of the cast, including Gladden James, Millicent Evans and Mabel Montgomery have also acquitted themselves individually well.

THE HOUSE OF MIRRORS (Mutual Masterpicture de Luxe), Aug. 10.—A five-part production from the Rialto Film Corporation, made from a story by Frederick Chapin. The picture is not above the average in any way, the theme treating of how a woman, in order to provide for her young daughter after being separated from her husband on a trivial offense, takes charge of a famous gambling den, is a shade unwholesome.

Paramount Pictures Corporation.

HULDA FROM HOLLAND (Famous Players), July 31.—Mary Pickford returns to us after an absence of several months. It will be a welcome return, too, for in this story we see the Little Mary of old, with all the surrounding factors that accentuate the charm of her work—children, pets, old men and young men. It is a picture that will delight, and for a matinee attraction is a top-notcher. It is reviewed at length in another column.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

PATHE NEWS, NO. 58, 1916 (Pathe), July 19.—Among interesting items of this number are a contest between firemen and policemen at Sacramento, Cal., in resisting a stream of water from a high pressure hose; "Tar" Henderson, champion log roller, giving an exhibition of his skill; Thomas Mott Osborne being welcomed back to Ossining by the prisoners of Sing Sing, and dynamiting the Matawan river for sharks.

THE CHINESE COOK (Pathe), July.—Cartoon comedy number by R. Dirks which marks the initial appearance on the Mutt & Jeff Co.'s program of "Hans und Fritz," who proceed to make the life of a Chinese cook miserable with their mischievous tricks.

THE INDESTRUCTABLE HATS (Pathe), July.—A highly amusing number from the pen of Bud Fisher, featuring the famous cartoon favorites, Mutt and Jeff. A review of this number will be found on another page of the magazine.

UNCLE SAM'S IMMIGRANTS (Pathe), July 31.—Instructive and interesting, showing in detail what happens to immigrants entering the United States, from the time they leave the ships at Ellis Island to their release or deportation.

FLORENCE ROSE FASHIONS (Pathe), Aug. 7.—The exhibitor will find in this new fashion series "something new under the sun." Miss Florence Rose, one of the foremost fashion experts of this country, has supervised the producing of the pictures, which are presented in an unusually artistic way. A review of the first reel and a half will be found elsewhere in the magazine.

A MATRIMONIAL MIX-UP (Mittenthal), July 31.—A Heinie and Louie comedy that will be found moderately amusing. The pair are hired by a young lover to kidnap his sweetheart to prevent her marrying a man chosen for her by his father.

Pathe Exchange Inc., Specials.

WHO'S GUILTY? NO. 12 (Arrow), July 24.—"Weighed in the Balance" is the title of this number of the series. The story for this number is a good one and was written by P. A. Parsons. It deals with the fate of a rich man who has been brought up in idleness. At the moment of his father's financial failure and death he is obliged to take the position of a worker in the mills. A love story in which the foreman's daughter figures brings about disastrous results. An excellent number.

Triangle Film Corporation.

SHELL FORTY-THREE (Ince), Aug. 13.—A very strong and absorbing story of adventure, in which the perilous activities of an English spy are handled with unusual skill.

THE DEVIL'S NEEDLE (Fine Arts), Aug. 13.—A picture of an artist's struggle with the drug habit, Tully Marshall in the lead, Norma Talmage sharing honors.

Universal Film Manufacturing Company

THE FINISHING TOUCH (Imp), Aug. 6.—This story, by Harvey Gates, shows how a young wife reforms her drunken husband by tying him in a chair and horsewhipping him. Marjorie Ellison and Rex De Rosselli play the married couple. Although the husband experiences a moral awakening at the close, the plot is not very pleasant in character. It is, however, presented well.

THE YOUNGEST OF THE FAMILY (L-KO), Aug. 6.—A very successful comic offering, featuring Gene Rogers, Lucille Hutton and others. The opening scenes are attractive and contain a good burlesque touch. The auto dash in the latter part is a wildly hilarious one and very laughable. There is a big explosion at the close. This is unusually good.

HE MAID ME (Nestor), Aug. 7.—A characteristic comedy number, featuring Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran and Priscilla Dean. Lee pays an election bet by acting as hired girl to Eddie and his wife. The plot is slight, but some fairly amusing situations follow.

THE HENANPUP, OR FIDO'S FINISH (Powers), Aug. 8.—An amusing number of juvenile interest, in which some children hold a funeral for a dead hen and pup, which they bury together. Later they exhume the bones and make an old professor believe they are of historic interest. This is an amusing and original conceit.

A KNIGHT OF THE NIGHT (Laemmle), Aug. 9.—Hobart Henley is featured in this number as a housebreaker. He saves the wife of a business man from the assault of a false friend and as a result gets a new impulse to travel the "straight" road. This plot is a familiar one, but is handled agreeably here by a pleasing cast.

THE SILENT MAN (Big U), Aug. 10.—King Baggot and Irene Hunt appear in this number, written by Frank Smith. The idea is imaginative and impossible, picturing a man to whom the Devil appears in person. The main characterization is a good one, however, and, while the plot is incredible, the interest is held firmly.

ASCHENBROEDEL (Victor), Aug. 10.—A film version of one of Bruno Lessing's stories, adapted by Helmar Bergman. Ben Wilson, Dorothy Phillips and others are in the cast. The characterizations are good and the story exceptionally pleasing. It treats the Jewish manner of arranging weddings in a sympathetic, but humorous way. The result is a fresh and enjoyable screen subject. Dorothy Phillips is particularly pleasing in this.

SOME MEDICINE MAN (Nestor), Aug. 11.—A western comedy by Eugene B. Lewis, featuring Pat Rooney and Peggy Coudrey. Pat, acting as a male nurse, employs an Indian medicine man to treat his patient. He also knocks out the Indians with a live electric wire. The humor is only fairly strong in this.

BY CONSCIENCE EYE (Rex), Aug. 11.—A little domestic drama, in which the eye of a child's doll saves the mother from eloping and wrecking her happiness. The father and child had named the doll "Conscience" in play. A nice little story, well presented.

THE INTRUDER (Laemmle), Aug. 12.—A little story of home life, by Catherine Carr, featuring Edith Roberts and Harry Benham. The widower marries and his daughter considers her stepmother an intruder. Later her son appears and anothe love affair follows. This is not very strong, but is well presented and has a certain appeal.

Universal Film Mfg.Company Specials

THE MARK OF CAIN (Red Feather), Aug. 7.—A five-reel feature by Stuart Paton, with Dorothy Phillips and Lon Chaney in the leads. The story follows the fortunes of a released convict, who went to prison to shield his father's name, and a girl forced by her stepfather to steal. The story would have been much more effective if it had not been given such a sordid atmosphere throughout. The friendship of the two unfortunates appeals to the sympathies, but the picture, as a whole, has an unpleasant effect. Some of the construction is also weak and unconvincing. The subject is hardly up to the Red Feather standard.

ONDA OF THE ORIENT (Gold Seal), Aug. 8.—A three-reel subject, by Walter Woods and Ben Cohn, with Marie Walcamp, Duke Worne, E. N. Wallack, Eddie Polo and L. C. Shumway in the cast. The opening scenes are taken on a beautiful California estate and are very attractive. The story is intensely melodramatic, certain scenes being almost absurdly so. The plot concerns a will written on a dagger by the girl's father. Some of the scenes revert back to a revolution in Manila at the time the heroine was stolen away. This has elements of strength, but would have been much stronger if the villainy had been more adroitly handled.

THE HIGHWAY OF FATE (Laemmle), Aug. 11.—A two-reel story by Harry Dittmar, featuring Sydell Dowling and Sidney Bracey. The plot concerns a man who has gone to the woods in search of health. He meets a gypsy band, which he joins. The treatment of the plot is very vague in places, leaving the observer in doubt as to the relationship of characters. The strongest features of the production are the views of the picturesque gypsy camp by day and night. The story itself is weakly presented.

ALONG THE MALIBU (Bison), Aug. 12.—a two-reel Western subject, featuring Cleo Madison, Wm. V. Mong and Chas. Gunn. A stage robbery is featured. Somewhat conventional in plot, but holds the interest well. The wild scenery is appealing and the characterizations are good. This is stronger than the average production of the type.

THE GREAT CORONA RACE (Imp), Aug. 13.—A two-reel number, featuring Richard Stanton, Marcia Moore and others. The hero wins an automobile race and also the girl. A genuine contest of the speed kings is featured and a picture of the lamented Bob Burman is shown. Later flashes are also shown of Barney Oldfield, Earl Cooper, Hughie Hughs and others. The story is plainly constructed to carry the race feature, but it makes a good offering of the sort.

V-L-S-E, Inc.

THE LIGHT AT DUSK (Lubin), July 31.—Director Edgar Lewis has produced a worthy film in "The Light at Dusk." It is one of those features which stand upon their own merits. Aside from the direction and photography, which is at all times good, the story holds the interest throughout the seven reels, so much so that the spectator does not realize this, as the story is well constructed and void of dull moments. A more extended review of this film can be found in last week's issue.

HESPER OF THE MOUNTAINS (Vitagraph), July 31.—Lillian Walker is featured in this five-part melodrama, but with limited opportunities. The story adapted from a novel by Hamlin Garland, is not especially well suited to the screen. It embraces a rather interesting love story, and also a miners' strike. A full review of the production will be found elsewhere in the magazine.

World-Equitable.

MISS PETTICOATS (Peerless "Brady Made"), July 31.—A five-reel Peerless production, the book by Dwight Tilton and scenario by Harley Knoles, who also directed the picture. This tells a fresh, well-rounded story, abounding in humor and not lacking in pathos and the deeper emotions. Alice Brady plays to part of a mill worker, raised by her grandfather, a retired sea captain. She rises in station and wins happiness despite the tongue of scandal. All of the subordinate parts are in good hands, Johnny Hines and Arthur Ashley doing particularly good work. The production is entirely commendable and should have wide appeal.

Miscellaneous.

THE LURE OF ALASKA (Leonard S. Sugden), August.—Dr. Sugden shows some very interesting and picturesque scenes from this northern country of Alaska, showing the majestic lakes, the mountains, the glaciers and other interesting objects. This film was reviewed on page 944 of last week's issue.

MILLER GOES TO ROCKIES.

Victor Miller of the Cinema Camera Club has left New York for a two months' trip through the Rockies to film a series of scenics. Mr. Miller, whose camera work is widely known, will be remembered as the photographer of the remarkable naval scenes in the feature production, "America Preparing," presented until recently at the Lyric theater. Some notable camera work was produced by Mr. Miller in this film masterpiece. The panoramic views of Pensacola were taken while flying over the city in an aeroplane guided by Lieutenant Saufley, whose brief career was tragically cut short about a month later. The splendid film impressions of West Point and Annapolis also aroused favorable comment. Mr. Miller's new productions will be awaited with considerable interest.

WARREN KERRIGAN'S NEW LEADING LADY.

Lois Wilson, the Alabama prize winning beauty, who has been leading lady for J. Warren Kerrigan in recent Bluebirds, will be replaced when "The Social Buccaneer" is produced in that series by Louise Lovely, who has been a star on her own account among Bluebirds ever since she entered pictures in this country the first of the year.

At Leading New York Theaters

Programs for the Week of July 30 at New York's Best Motion Picture Houses.

Mary Pickford at the Strand.

"HULDA from Holland" is the title of Mary Pickford's new picture, which was exhibited at the Strand theater the week of July 30. The photoplay was produced by the Famous Players Film Company and released on the Paramount Program.

Edith Barnard Delano, who wrote the scenario, has provided a lovable story. The locale is Holland, and Miss Pickford's interpretation of a little Dutch girl blends perfectly with the picturesque background of dikes and windmills.

A subsidiary feature for the week showed a Zeppelin raid at night over London. The pictures were taken of a raid made by the Germans in their dirigible on the night of September 29. The Strand Travelogue contained scenes of Algeria. A one-reel comedy and the Strand Topical Review were on the program. The soloists for the week were Perle Frank, Mlle. Valentine and Bruce Weyman.

"Home" at the Rialto.

Bessie Barriscale, Louise Glaun and Charles Ray were the leading actors in "Home," a Triangle production, which was shown at the Rialto theater. The usual special features were included in the program.

Marie Doro at the Broadway.

"Common Ground," by Marian Fairfax, with Marie Doro as the star, headed the program at the Broadway theater. Miss Doro appeared as a ragged young girl of the slums.

Eighty-first Street Theater Bill.

At the Eighty-first Street theater, four Triangle pictures were shown. On Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday, Bessie Barriscale was seen in "The Payment," and on Thursday, Friday, Saturday and Sunday, Douglas Fairbanks in "The Half Breed." A Keystone comedy was shown with both feature pictures.

"UNCLE SAM AWAKE" IN TOWN.

Hugh A. Fargo, sales manager of the Imperial Film Manufacturing Company, Chicago, and Laurence Rubel, president of the Lawrence Rubel Service Company, are at the McAlpin Hotel, New York. Mr. Rubel and Mr. Fargo were in Washington last week, where they gave the first showing of their latest five-reel production, "Uncle Sam Awake," before the Secretary of War, Newton D. Baker, and forty of his staff officers. Letters of commendation which were written by the secretary and staff officers pronounce the film one of the finest photographically and flawless in detail. "Uncle Sam Awake" distinguishes itself from many of the war films in that a terse connected story is told by pictures, all of which were made under the personal supervision of commanding officers of the Army in both the United States and Mexico. This was made possible through a special authorization from the Adjutant General of the Army at Washington. A showing for State Rights buyers and exchangemen will be announced by letter this week.

V. H. Hodupp. C. W. Bunn. Henry E. Friedman.

Here are three business getters. In six short weeks they have built a model Pathe organization at Chicago in accordance with the new sales plan which Mr. Berst has been perfecting since the first of the year. Mr. Bunn is manager of the Chicago office and Mr. Friedman has been appointed from assistant manager of the Chicago office to manager of the Minneapolis office. Mr. Hodupp is assistant to Mr. Seelye and as a result of his good work in Chicago has had the Minneapolis office also added to the territory over which he has supervision.

Important Announcement

Commencing with issue of the Moving Picture World dated September 2d, 1916, the price will be advanced to fifteen cents (15c) per copy. This change is made absolutely necessary on account of the greatly increased cost of paper, engraving and printing.

For the present the yearly subscription price of three dollars will remain as at present. As the saving in cost between the yearly subscription rate of three dollars and the above single copy price—which will amount to $7.80, figuring fifty-two copies at 15 cents per copy—is considerable, we suggest to our many readers throughout the country the advisability of sending us their subscriptions at once. A considerable saving will thus be made in addition to receiving the paper earlier each week.

Chalmers Publishing Company

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

TOM NORTH, of the Seattle V-L-S-E, does not believe in permitting even a single bet to get by him, so a column of his Pals is regularly given to comment on the newspapers published in his territory, and when he sees one without a photoplay page he lets out a scream that is heard clear up in Alaska. Recently he jacked up the Hub, Centralia, and the publisher came back at him with the explanation that on certain days the paper was cut to four pages, and photoplay mention went along with a lot of other things. He says in closing:

> We understand that your interest is purely selfish, the same as ours and the same as the theater manager's, but if we can make a dollar for ourselves we don't give a damn how many dollars you and your picture theater man makes.

That's about the way the average publisher looks at it. He knows his readers are interested in photoplay. He knows they want to read about the plays, but he wants to see some advertising coming from all that space. If he gets his dollar, you can have as much more as you can make. If you do not advertise you cannot argue with the publisher. But if you do pay advertising bills, get after him for a photoplay page. If the New York daily papers, with the tremendous pressure on their columns, can run as much for the photoplays as for the dramatic theaters, your man can, so make him. Do it nicely, but do it now. Make him buckle down and run general stuff as well as your house notice. Then the department will please the readers more and your house stuff will show to better advantage. If there is another house in town, get the other fellow to come in with you in your assault on the editorial space. Forget personal differences and work as a team, no matter what you think of him, but think nicely of him, if you can. You'll get along better and you'll both make more money.

Classy.

The Criterion theater, Atlanta, sends out its opening announcement-invitation on a grey four page sheet of peculiar tint and texture, printed in purple and addressed in purple ink. The greeting page is unusually well printed script, but on the third page, giving the program for the first week, the printer uses machine composition instead of small display faces and loses the effect. It is a shame to spoil a good job like that for the want of a couple of dollars worth of type. One of the greatest drawbacks that even large city exhibitors have to face in their printing is the lack of good eight and ten point display faces. Printers, it would seem, simply will not stock them. That third page in a large size six and a small twelve point engraver's shaded would have backed up the front page and would have cost only three dollars and a half. It would often pay the exhibitor to buy the type if his printer is a corpse yet unburied. The house did its share well, but it loses effect through the printer.

Vion's House.

Lately we went up into the Bronx to look over the Crescent theater for Joe Vion. It answers so admirably to what we think a theater should be, we are going to tell about it. In the first place, as you come up the street it looks like a regular theater. There is an electric sign and a glass marquise and plenty of light. There is one well-painted banner across the sidewalk under the marquise. At either side of the door is a hand-painted three-sheet in a brass frame, but hand-painted in this case means something that really is better than the average printed bill, for Vion pays a salary to a sign painter and gives him plenty of space to work in. He does a block shaded letter that looks like relief work, and his air-brush stuff is a lesson. Just because he owns an air-brush, he does not smear everything up with color. The entire lobby front is swinging doors and you can swing any one of them without upsetting a frame, because there are no easel frames. All of the frames are on the sides below the wainscoting, and are provided with hooks that fit a pipe rail. The signs can be changed about without trouble and by always having the current program on the box office side the patron knows just where to look for the day's attraction. The lobby is well lighted and yet you can enter the house from the lobby without being temporarily blinded, for at all times the house is so well lighted that you can see the face of a person on the opposite side of the foyer, yet the auditorium is 118 feet wide. This is in direct violation of the rule that photoplay houses should be deep and narrow, yet the projection is so handled that the picture is the same whether seen from the rear of the house, the boxes or even directly against the screen. The throw is about 90 feet from a room above the balcony (the house has no gallery), but there is not a trace of the keystone effect, and where leaders are boxed in with rule work the corners form proper right angles. It's a little trouble to get that effect with a drop of 40 or 50 feet, but it can be done because it is being done.

The stage is equipped to handle any road show, but since it is given over to pictures, the property room has been turned into a printing office, the printer also serving as stage manager and curtain puller. He is an old man who would rather take it easy, so he is glad to get a comfortable position under a man he knows, and they can get out a job in a hurry. The programs have already been commented upon.

The house staff is small. There are girl ushers on each floor, but most of the patrons prefer to select their own seats and the ushers are more for the benefit of women patrons than to actually usher, and as the house is so light, ushers are not needed, though they are instructed to go to the assistance of anyone who shows the least indecision. Many managers will probably question the value of this scheme, but it has a basis in good sense. If the house is light and seats are unreserved, there is no need of officious ushering.

There is an entire absence of garish decoration. The stage set is pretty, but it does not obtrude. You have to look for it to see it. The screen is the principal point of interest and the setting is not allowed to kill that. It is the same in the body of the theater. It is a handsome house, but the tones are so quiet that they do not impress themselves. Probably few of the patrons can tell what the color scheme is, but they all know it is a pretty house.

They circularize with their house programs a list of nearly five thousand names, using an addressing machine, and requests for programs come from some of the suburban towns, though many of the patrons pass numerous other theaters on the way to this house. They like the program and they like the atmosphere of the house, and so they travel several miles by trolley to get the welcome and the comfort that the Crescent affords. That tells its own story—that and the well-filled seats. If you run the right sort of house and pick your program intelligently you do not have to worry about the house in opposition, even though it is located close to your own.

Rotten.

In a program to hand we note that the loaned cuts have a big number stamped into the face of the metal. As these numbers are stamped with the regular dies, they print in reverse. It is a short-sighted policy that leads an exchange to put out cuts with a quarter-inch number. The same stamps will work just as well if sunk into the end wood of the cut and will not show on the cut surface.

An Extra.

The Kansas City V-L-S-E exchange got out a four-page extra for the Iowa convention. It has a page and a half of bright hits and will probably be a valued souvenir of the outing.

At It Again.

Once more the Third Street, Easton, Pa., has dug out its own motion camera and is producing a local picture from a script by Frank G. Andrews. The local picture is getting quite common, and is generally a good business getter, but the Third Street is one of the few houses that can make its own productions, for it has owned a camera for same years now. It was the first house we know of to do this local stunt.

Backed Up.

The Stanley, Philadelphia, sends in a four-page program called The Stanley News, that has the front page on the back and another heading on the front. The program shows undated days and you have to go to some little trouble to find the dates, but it is the home house of Stanley Mastbaum, and the show is there, and there first. It differs from the usual layout in that, being published on Mondays, it gives a full page to the last three days of the week, the other half of the latter page being taken for house announcement. The issue to hand makes a special appeal to the delegates to the Advertising Men's Convention, and it shows its own knowledge of ad-writing by presenting this bank:

> It is not merely a Favorite theater
> It is a standard Philadelphia institution,
> A leader by right: A guide for others.

That comes pretty close to being good work in itself, and it means something, for the house is a leader. Dated days would help a little, but it has all of the other details, including time table and price schedule.

Finds Cleanliness Pays.

M. D. Gibbs, of the Princess, Adairville, Ky., writes:

> Just a line from a small town exhibitor to let you know that I appreciate your paper and feel that I could not do without it. I have always desired to run clean service and my patrons demand it, so your comments on the different releases have helped me to keep my program clean. I enclose a folder I had gotten out by the Adairville Enterprise. The idea may not be a new one, but I thought it a rather good way to inform my patrons and expect to mail them both in and out of town.

Mr. Gibbs voices what so many other exhibitors have. This paper does not expect that all exhibitors will be in perfect agreement with its critics at all times. That is an impossibility, but it employs men trained to the work whose reviews are honest and unbiased. The manager who follows this paper is playing safe. He knows he will not be betrayed.

The advertisement is a four pager, partly advertisement; partly form letter, which is a new combination. The first page is made up like a house program and the back page lists the Paramount stars. The inner pages are a form letter. We are inclined to think that a better form would have been to set the form letter as the chief page and the rest on the back as an advertisement, as many houses do, using one side for the communication and the other for publicity. In this form, folded as a letter, it would have better suggested its purpose. No effort is made to suggest a personally written letter other than the use of straight typewriter face, but even at that a Roman "(over)" at the bottom of the page is bad composition. It should have been typewriter type like the remainder. It merely announces a change to Paramount service, but it is well worded and the story is simply told; which is always the best way.

A Formula.

Lee D Balsly, of the Kansas City Feature Film Co., is also editor of their house organ, Paramount Pep. Recently he addressed the Omaha Photoplay Managers Association, and the meat of his remarks is compactly summed up in his concluding paragraph, in which he says:

> If you would have a busy box office, tell them your story in a sincere, simple, entertaining and forceful manner. Sometimes it requires a soft pedal, but more often a bang. Absorb film enthusiasm; radiate your faith, have a message and drive it home—hard and often; stand by every statement; play the game fair and square, you can then be reasonably sure of a liberal trade, from the good will created by your honesty and a truthful statement of facts.

It is all there, and it is not so very hard to follow if you really were cut out to be an exhibitor.

Another Peg Parade.

D. Filozola, of the Theatrette, Fort Scott, Kansas, was another to have a parade to launch Peg O' the Ring, and he built up on the band wagon idea by offering ten dollars in prizes for costumes. Evidently he also had a clown act for a ballyhoo in front of the house, since the house front shows a chair and table act. The circus subject offered all sorts of chances for street and lobby work. It was stunt suggestive in the extreme. Some special stuff is particularly needed to give a serial a proper start, and Peg is about the best self-starter in this sense that has been brought out.

A Three in One.

The Amusu, Statesboro, Ga., sends in a post card that serves as a three in one. It is a straight column advertisement that is used in the local paper. When it has been run off the type is lifted and printed as a dodger for the local distribution and then is run on postal cards for mailing to the country territory to persons known to have automobiles. Here the advertisement carries the name of the house in large type, the week in a smaller black face and the program, by days in straight Roman. Even here the days might be dated individually with profit, but in general the idea of making triple use of the same type is distinctly good. But little more than the titles can be carried, and we think that it would be better, if the type can be had, to set the titles in a six point and take a line to the title, instead of running in the day's offering.

Monday, Bootles Baby (3 reels).
July 3, The Man in the Case (3 reels).

is more distinctive than

Monday—Bootles Baby and the Man in the Case. A double feature in six reels.

The individual titles can be caught more quickly, and each title will make more of an impression.

Canning the Patrons.

W. F. Warneford, of the Gem, Lawrenceburg, Ind., sends in a throwaway for one night in which he advertises a serial and a series picture as well as a comedy. At the bottom he offers a free admission to any boy or girl brining ten tin cans tied together and specifies that these must not be taken from the city dump but from yards and alleys. The layout of the type is well planned, a cross line over the top and then the 4½-inch space is split into two by a bar in which the letters are set one below the other, merely the words "Heinie and Louie Comedy" running down the page. This gives two sections for the series and serials and not only keeps them apart, but it gives them equal importance and gets the type into a line that is not too wide for small descriptive matter. The two panels do not match well, but they can be made to harmonize with a little trouble, if desired. At the bottom of the bill the type again runs across the page. The sample sent in will not reproduce as green, yellow and red, the colors used, are all non-actinic, but the first time Mr. Warneford repeats we wish he would send in a couple on white paper. This is not as good for the street distribution but will be better appreciated by the engraver. Mr. Warneford writes that the throwaway packed his house for a Thursday program, and this is the real test.

For a Throwaway.

The Arc theater, Delphi, Ind., sends in some 10 by 12 throwaways that are very nicely set, though the days should be dated. One trouble with a weekly throwaway is that it seems such a lot to read, but this works

BIG HEADLINER FILMS! GOOD MUSIC! PLAYING THE PICTURES

MONDAY
John Barrymore
in "THE INCORRIGIBLE DUKANE."
A five-part picturization of George ( )Kendall's popular story, which is a unique combination of DRAMA, COMEDY and ROMANCE! No one who wishes to enjoy an unusual Photoplay should miss this sterling feature.

TUESDAY
Rose Melville
The original "Sis Hopkins," will appear in
"A FLOCK OF SKELETONS."
As "Sis" it surely is a laugh maker! "HAM" and "BUD" will do a clever stunt in "FOR SWEET CHARITY," while HELEN GIBSON will furnish the thrills in "THE DETECTIVE'S PERIL."

WEDNESDAY
Florence Oberle
in "SEPARATING FROM SARAH."
There is a deal of hearty human nature in this two-reel photoplay with many touches of natural comedy. Then "FREDDIE VERSUS HAMLET" a comedy by Ralph Ince closes the bill.

THE ARC is now co-operating with the BETTER FILMS MOVEMENT. The Paramount program heads the list. While the general film shorter length pictures are highly recommended!

10c on Mondays, Thursdays and Saturdays.

5c on Tuesdays, Wednesdays and Fridays.

ALWAYS THE BEST ALL WAYS!

THURSDAY
Mary Pickford
in "ESMERALDA."
Our own "LITTLE MARY," the idol of the screen, appears in her own company of brilliant players. She is always irresistible with her charming ways. No wonder she gets $300,000.00 a year!

FRIDAY
Kathlyn Williams
in "NO. 13 WEST BOUND."
To begin with, Elbert Flower's three-reel railroad story is something different. The "thrill" is the natural outcome of the plot, and Kathlyn exhibits a surprising amount of nerve in carrying out her part of the situation!

SATURDAY
W. S. Hart
The New York Motion Picture Co. presents this brilliant star in
"THE BARGAIN."
A five-act Paramount feature directed by Thomas Ince. Mr. Hart has an all-star support who plays well this splendid photoplay nicely without crowding. It is something along the lines of the program for the Auditorium, Coatesville, and perhaps the idea was gained there. Merely because the Auditorium cut showed a small program does not mean that it cannot be adapted to other service. In his newspaper stuff he uses a straight reader with lines and names pulled up in full face. It is not as easy to read as straight stuff for the black type makes a break. The house and the printer split fifty-fifty on names, for the house speaks of "Lew" Tellegen and the printer of "charming" instead of Channing Pollock.

A Summer Scheme.

The Lehigh Orpheum, South Bethlehem, is using a store card for the summer. We hope to reproduce it presently because it works out so well. It is not greatly unlike a lot of other cards save that the modesty of display saves it from being an unreadable mass of type. We have been watching a card near our home. At first they ran but a single title in a 48 point. Now they add the other attractions and get a series of 18 point lines that are useless for window work unless the cards can be forced to the front of the window. The Orpheum does not use its card for window work but has them punched and tacks them up in stores and shops with thumb tacks. It is small enough not to be in the way and yet large enough to be conspicuous. The sheet is 7 by 11 inches.

A Missouri Baby.

Clarence J. Koetting, of the Lyric, St. Genevieve, Mo., sends in his very first and this letter:

> You will find enclosed a copy of the first issue of what we call a house program, although we may be willing to recant when you have passed judgment. As it stands, it is the product of one who has never even seen a house program, must less ever edited one. We are in a town of 2,000 with about 25 per cent. theatergoers—and opposition. We have two weekly newspapers and of course we are held down to the few kinds of type shown in our program. Fancy type and job faces are out of the question and even italics can be had only in the one size, so you can see where we are. What do you think the best way of distributing programs, mail, delivery by messenger or passing them out at the theater. We will appreciate any samples the brothers may send in.

Please note the request for samples, and kick in with yours. The current issue is four pages, white paper and about the sort of blue ink that you would expect to find in an office so poorly provided with type. It is the sort of blue that they print window cards with and it does well enough when there is a heavy letter, but with a light outline or a cut the ink fades to the color of watered milk. It would be better to try a black.

The issue does very well for a first attempt. It has a cut heading, a simple open design, and then shows a cut with the date, house name and town and state below. The town, state and date must run just below the cut head, and it would be better to use type in place of the cut since it is not likely that every good result can be had from the cuts with the printing equipment available. The program runs on page three with dated days and a new wrinkle in running a bracketed "(today)" after the first date. The second page is sincerely written house talk and the back carries the underline attraction and more house talk. The back page looks a little too white, partly because a long extract from a poem is used for part of the underline announcement. If the office stocks a six point face, and probably it does, it would be well to use that for poems and for quotations from criticisms and similar extraneous matter. This should be indented, when set solid, which means that there is a little white space on either side, as in the case with the letter in this section. It does away with quotation marks, shows that it is a quote and not only saves space but, sparingly used, serves to give the matter some slight distinction.

As to distribution, in so small a town we think that the house to house distribution is best in that it reaches practically everybody; not alone the 25 per cent. who attend, and who are reasonably certain, but the 75 per cent. who might be coaxed and who are more important to the manager. A purely house distribution, either by handing out programs as the patron is leaving or entering or placing them on a table from which they may be taken, will reach only those who are already patrons. House and theater distribution combined is apt to result in duplication. Some arrangement should be made to cover possible patrons in the country by a mailing list. Possible patrons as those who come into town more or less regularly or who have automobiles and might be coaxed to come. Small girls make better carriers than boys, but boys will do if they are carefully selected. Generally free admission through the week is regarded as sufficient pay and more valuable than its equal in money.

appeal with the plea of beauty. In the motherhood subject he does not bar the kiddies but leaves it to their parents to decide, which is a better way for a subject that is not too frank. Typographically we think the Inspiration circular very well done; a better arrangement than that for "The Miracle of Life," which does not show as well, but then, the title is too long and should have been set in two or more lines, perhaps a small "the" and then two large lines "Miracle" and "of Life."

What Is the Menu?

A "Kentucky breakfast" is a large drink of whiskey, but what is a Kentucky dinner? Lately we mentioned that in speaking of a new house Charles O. Brown, of Middleboro, Ky., identified the site as being" the present location of Jo-Jo's hamburger stand." Now he comes out with an editorial in which he mentions the ptomaine spreading chop suey and goulash joints. They must have a variety of food down there. But aside from the varied menu, Mr. Brown has written an editorial that goes straight to the point. It is worth copying—if you can say "amen" to it without making your patrons laugh. Here it is:

> Business is business, whether it is selling soap or entertainment. And business, in the accepted sense, means getting from a given investment more than the interest the banks allow; otherwise it is not business. There are many modes of conducting business just as there are many ways of making money. Thus, methods of running picture houses for profit are as vital as the methods of running a restaurant. It is just as easy to give the people motion picture indigestion with a service of a certain type as it is to give it ptomaine poisoning with Hungarian Goulash or Chop Suey. These represent two ways of making money—money can be made selling gold bricks and money can be made in legitimate banking. It is really a matter of inclination of taste.
> For the same reason that Chop Suey and Hungarian Goulash Emporiums are able to maintain their business and cater with profit, certain picture houses give the public the lurid and sensational motion picture and make money. The public is divided in taste.
>
> We have long since taken the stand that good, clean and wholesome entertainment would win in the end. When we first located in this city the odds were against us, not because the public did not want the better class of picture, but because they had been accustomed to the "shoot 'em up" variety and thought it was the only kind which could entertain them.
>
> It has taken five years of hard work to cause the public to shake off this idea, not only in Middlesboro, but the country over generally. Gradually, but surely, the motion picture is rising to the plane which it justly deserves. We believe the days of "the wild and wooly" and the ultra-sensational have passed and that the public of to-day is demanding the better class of mind recreation. We have not waited for them to make this demand, however. We have always been just a step or two ahead of the demand which we predicted would come; we have kept to the front and are now beginning to realize that we were right. This policy shall continue in full force at all times and we shall not wait for the public to demand better motion pictures.
> However, there will always remain those who prefer the cheap clap-trap—those who will digest anything from thumb-tacks and Chop Suey to morbid sensationalism. Whether they will ever be converted is a matter of conjecture. In the meantime we prefer to cater to those who discriminate—without a doubt the majority by big odds.

This is followed by almost a page of chat about the coming pictures. It is good, sound, sensible sort of talk, but we note that Mr. Brown has his programs with a consecutive number that suggests some lottery scheme. That would offer another house a come-back. He is putting too much into his book program to need to resort to prize schemes. And they hurt the pictures, too. The old days "gift trick" was synonymous with fake. It is different now, but the schemes do the house no good.

Right on the Job.

Arthur G. Stolte, of the Palace, Vinton, Iowa, is not standing still long enough to let the moss grow on his shoes. The day that the presidential proclamation calling out the militia was issued, the Palace had in its regular shipment a single reel, "The Stars and Stripes in Mexico." Mr. Stolte gave one look at the film, hustled for the print shop and without waiting to write copy began to sling type, taking the news paragraph from the Chicago papers, putting his film stuff on the other side and making up a 15 by 15 one sheet extra that reached the street before two-thirty (the news came at nine), with the result that the business was unusually big. To show that Mr. Stolte is one of us, we reproduce the page.

There will be many times, perhaps, when a timely stunt like this can be worked. He works for catchlines on his throwaway paper. One circular was put out folded so that only "Extra!! Five cars of dynamite explode," was to be seen and another urges the reader to "Hear the Melody of Love," there being three lines of text between the first word and the title, with a small "ever" above the "hear," the text reading "Ever hear of the three part photodrama that is showing to-day at the Palace, photographed in a mining district, 'The Melody of Love'?" We fancy that Mr. Stolte works all of these ideas out directly in type. But it will be some time before he can again beat the local daily on an extra, for the local sheet did not give the news until the following day.

INQUIRIES.

Questions concerning photoplay writing addressed to this department will be replied to by mail if a fully addressed and stamped envelope accompanies the letter, which should be addressed to this department. Questions should be stated clearly and should be typewritten or written with pen and ink. Under no circumstances will manuscripts or synopses be criticised, whether or not a fee is sent therefor.

A list of companies will be sent if the request is made to the paper direct and not to this department, and a return stamped envelope is inclosed.

The Form Fetish.

SEEING matters from a new point of view, S. A. Van Petten takes up interestingly his personal angle on form. He writes:

I think you mentioned once that as a part of his training, an author ought to have a few weeks experience reading scripts. Well, I've had mine. Some time ago I read scripts for several weeks to help out a friend of mine, who was swamped. And say—I've found out what "boobs" are, and their variety is infinite. But of course I expected that. However several things did surprise me. First, the surprising number of fairly good scripts—not good enough to use, but not hopeless. It recalled to me your striking illustration of the box of tacks of various sizes, and a few railroad spikes. Well, the railroad spikes were mighty few. Out of hundreds of scripts, there were only three or four that could be considered fair, and they required re-writing. Another thing that surprised me was the knowledge of—I won't call it "technique," I'll call it "form" as distinguished from "substance"—knowledge of form possessed by the average amateur writer. Script after script came in to us in nearly perfect "form" as to arrangement of scenes, leaders, etc. (though of course the continuity was usually poor). But as to the substance,the idea, the real thing—well, it wasn't there. It was like a clock with the works removed—just a shell. I almost forget to mention that we did receive one good idea in crude, synopsis form. I laid it aside for further consideration. About a week later, the author wrote requesting an immediate decision on the script, as she had another offer. The script was returned at once, without comment. And so it goes. Another thing that surprised me was the number of so-called experts today that are writing Synopsis Only. It seems to be very prevalent.

It was certainly a valuable lesson to me. You can rest assured that my scripts will be Railroad Spikes, or they will go into my waste basket. Also, I have the utmost sympathy for a reader or editor. If there is any branch of literature that is more tiresome, and monotonous and tedious than reading scripts—well, I've never found it. "Never again" for me; I know when I've had enough. The Moral is self-evident.

The spike illustration to which Mr. Van Petten refers was given so long ago that perhaps many readers have forgotten. Briefly it was to the effect that in a box of brads and carpet tacks a railroad spike would loom amazingly large and that the story that was bought must, like the spike, overshadow its fellows to command attention.

Thousands of writers have studied form with care, with such care that it completely overshadows idea. They have become absorbed in form largely because they cannot envolve plots and they study what their limited comprehension permits them to grasp. They come in time to suppose that any story in good form must be a good story.

If you have a good story, form is not vital, but if you have a good story and also possess a mastery of technique, you can give the story the best possible development in a shape that any director can understand if he wants to. Technique is useful only if you have an idea to exploit. Then it enables you to give that idea in a form that cannot be misunderstood, but merely because a script looks like some "model scenario" it does not follow that the script contains an idea and the greater portion of those who bitterly complain that their good scripts never sell as those who write forms an idea.

Master form, as you master typewriting, merely as a means to an end and not the end itself. Then master plotting and make form and typewriting merely serve to show your plots to the best advantage. That is what the writing of photoplays really means.

The Secret.

"I could not get good scripts of action even if I wanted them," was the remark an editor made the other day. "I would rather pay a hundred dollars a reel for a real continuity than ten dollars for the idea alone." And he never realized that if he announced that he would really and truly pay a hundred dollars a reel for stories worth while it would not be long before he had an ample supply. The trouble is that practically no company regularly pays the hundred dollars that the press agent loves to talk about. They announce that they will, but always they find that the script must be reconstructed, but that if the author will take $25 "for the idea only" they'll send him a check. Then the man who might make a real author quits and does something else and the editor remains at the mercy of the boobs.

Any company that will promise to pay $100 a reel and make good at that price for every reel that it buys will presently have the pick of the market, but no editor is ever permitted to make good on that promise for every script worth the price. Seven years ago Bannister Merwin started to write film stories, attracted by the $10 to $100 offer. He stopped when he found that only the $10 end of it was genuine and it was not until two or three years later that he found a company that would pay him that hundred, though even here the prices started at $25. The way to get good themes done into good action is to attract the type of writers who really can do the work and yet who are not yet arrived at the point where their fiction stories will pay better. For that matter we know more than one author who may sell serial rights for from three to five thousand dollars under his own name and job less finished work under another name for $500 for from 30,000 to 40,000 words; the so called book length magazine stories. They cannot glut the market with their stories, and they can write many more than they do, so they sell their seconds on first draft. These men are not now interested in motion picture work because they have tried it and have been stung. They could be interested afresh if there was offered a check proportioned to the idea, but the moment a company makes such an offer, even in good faith, they start to hedge. Too many editors are holding their jobs on the strength of the money they are supposed to save their employers. In reality these are most costly.

Carbon Copies.

A New Jersey author is moved to self pity because Editors will not read carbon copies of plays. He makes the astonishing statement that hundreds of professional writers submit their carbon copies. He contends that a clean carbon copy should be more acceptable than a dirtied original and lastly he does not see why he cannot submit to two or more companies at the same time.

It never occurs to him that he can recopy that dirty original, or perhaps he is too lazy, but we think it is just plain boob, for we have been playing the game for twenty-five years now, have been in close touch with the editorial departments of many magazines and we never heard of a single professional writer who ever made a practise of sending out a carbon copy.

It is not for the writer to dictate terms. The other man does the buying. If he wants to sell, he must conform to the rules, and one of these rules (bad though it may be) is that the editor must be given his own time in passing on the script. It is seldom that the editor is to blame and most of them would be glad were they able to pass on stuff more promptly. It does them no good to hold up a script for six or eight weeks, but they must wait the pleasure of the director or their employer and what these know about courtesy to authors is painfully little. It is annoying, but it is the rule, and the rule must be obeyed. The author is not required to offer stories, but if he does want to offer stories and is required to offer originals, then original must be sent. Evidently this correspondent never got his fingers all smeared up with carbon sheets and stuff written with copying ribbons.

Looks Fishy.

A questioner writes that a company has advised him that they are in the market for adaptations from stories not copyrighted or on which the copyright has expired. He wants to know about it. It looks very much as though some wildcat company was looking for free scripts. Most companies maintain a staff of writers who could make better adaptations than the novice free lance, and a request for stuff from the outside suggests that no checks would be forthcoming. Moreover, copyrights may be renewed and the line "Copyright 1888" does not mean that the work may not have been reentered for an additional period.

For Lady Leads.

It might be well to note that Lasky buys only stories with strong female leads. They are not even mildly interested in a strong part for a male lead.

Spelling.

If you habitually misspell a word or if you know how to spell it but unconsciously hit the wrong combination of keys, sit down some time and write the word carefully a couple of thousand times, using the same fingers when hitting any certain key. After that you'll work it unconsciously and have no more trouble.

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be endorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second set of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Question No. 149.

Best answer will be published, and the names of others sending in replies of excellence will appear in the Roll of Honor. Theater managers looking for high-class men will do well to watch the Roll of Honor.

Roll of Honor on Question No. 142.

Nearly all of the Roll of Honor replies to Question 142 were practically equally complete. The following constitutes the Roll:

Joseph H. M. Smith, Fort Worth, Texas; F. F. Bell, Palestine, Texas; Wilson Hayes, Barton, Md.; Nelson W. Williams, Jackson, Ga.; W. B. Allen, Edmonton, Canada; M. Nosti, Tampa, Fla.; W. C. Crawford, Brooklyn, N. Y.; C. E. Linstruth, Carthage, N. Y.; J. L. Arnold, Bellingham, Wash.; L. Pagenhardt, Westernport, Md.; Edward Marshall, Vancouver, B. C.; Jamie McAdoo, Hamilton, Mo.; F. T. Layman, Washington, Ind., and one unsigned.

I think the reply of Nelson W. Williams, Jackson, Ga., best serves the purpose for publication.

Reply to Question No. 142.

By Nelson W. Williams, Jackson, Ga.

The Question:

Which is the more efficient, a carbon or metallic filament lamp? What is the relative light-giving power per watt?

The Answer:

Of the two lamps, viz.; the carbon, or metallic filament, the latter is by far the more efficient, giving approximately twice the C. P. per watt which the carbon filament lamp supplies. The carbon filament lamp has an efficiency represented by 3.5 watts per C. P., or, in other words, one C. P. for each 3.5 watts of current consumed, which means that a true 16 C. P. lamp would consume 56 watts. The different metallic filament lamps, however, have a much higher efficiency, though they vary according to the different makes, as follows, the figures being quoted from tables presumed to give the correct data: Gem Metallic Filament, 2 watts per C. P.; Mazda Metallic Filament, 1.5 watts per C. P.; Nitrogen Filled Lamp, .60 watts per C. P. The nitrogen filled lamp has, however, hardly passed the experimental stage, and the figures given are for the 100 watt size. The smaller nitrogen filled lamps are not so efficient, running as low as one watt per C. P. The relative C. P. per watt is as follows: Carbon Filament, 2/7 C. P. per watt; Gem Metallic, ½ C. P. per watt; Mazda Metallic, ¾ C. P. per watt; Nitrogen Filled, 1 2/3 C. P. per watt, the latter being for the 100 C. P. size.

An Outrage.

J. Arnold, Bellingham, Wash., says:

I note in recent issue of the department you still remember this little burg as being located somewhere on the line between Seattle and Vancouver, and I certainly hope that satisfactory arrangements can be made to have you stop, though if they cannot I shall try to be in Seattle when you are there. Attached find samples of film cut from the first reel of "Why Mrs. Kentworth Lied," an Imp drama sent us from the Film Supply Company, Seattle, for showing June 20th and 21st. There are twenty punch holes in less than nine inches, and these are not all the punch holes in that reel. Can you beat it?

It passes my understanding that men calling themselves operators will thus outrage the films placed in their care. Even allowing that the producer ought to adopt a change-over sign, still that does not in any way excuse the man who punches holes one-eighth inch and more in diameter in films, and even puts twenty of these holes in nine inches of film; that kind of man does not deserve ordinary censure. He ought to be literally kicked out of the operating room, and a punch heaved out after him. It is shameful! It is disgraceful! It is outrageous from any and every point of view, and no real operator would think of doing such a thing. I am doing everything I can to induce manufacturers to adopt a changeover sign, but it is like trying to pry Pike's Peak off its base to get them to pay attention to anything which does not give evidence of an immediate return in actual dollars; still I have hopes. The manufacturers' failure, however, as I before said, does not excuse the operator at all—no, it does not even begin to excuse him.

Later: I have gotten the adoption of a change-over sign under way at last. The Universal, through its general manager, Mr. Joseph Brandt, has agreed to place a sub-title at the end of each multiple reel release, half the said title to be on the next reel following. This title will have a plainly discernible sign, probably an arrow pointing toward the center of the title, in each corner.

I am taking the adoption of this sign up with the other producing companies, and believe we will secure its general adoption.

Interesting.

The following letter just came to hand by registered mail, a carbon copy being sent to the editor of the Moving Picture World, presumably on the assumption that the committee wanted my deep dyed villainy exposed to the management of the paper. The letter is interesting. Read it. There is matter already in type to fill five weeks' issues of the department, but in order to gratify the desire of the committee to see their literary effort in print I am putting this through special.

Mr. F. H. Richardson, Editor Projection Department, Moving Picture World

Dear Sir:—Apropos of the fund of misinformation that you have seen fit to circulate through the medium of the Moving Picture World, issue of July 15th, reflecting upon the character and ability of the organized operators of Springfield, Mass., we beg to acknowledge the receipt of your published views, and accepting the gauntlet as thrown down by you, do rally to the defense of our fair name. Your odious comparison, in which you laud the progressiveness of Holyoke, and bemoan the benighted condition of Springfield, is nothing more nor less than a gross and unwarranted reflection on facts and conditions, the real status of which, you have not even the slightest personal knowledge. When you state that we ignored your communication in regard to addressing us on projection, at our expense, you are not stating facts. The communication was regularly taken up, discussed, and disposed of, and the reply courteous was dispatched to you. The fact that you later indited a personal letter to our worthy secretary, which he chose not to present to the local, has, of course, no bearing on the incident whatever. In our eyes it was purely a matter of business, and because we choose not to buy of your wares was no just cause for the attack you made on our organization. You state that we are sadly in need of your lecture on projection and that our equipment is antiquated and passe. Poor, old Nicholas Power! How that grand old mechanical genius must be borne down by the burden of those harsh words. How our local managers must gnash their teeth and rail with rage at their own stupidity. For be it known as a true and absolute fact, that in the city of Springfield there are only sixteen picture theaters, and they are using fifteen Power's Model B (majority motor driven) and six Power's Model 6-A; also two latest Simplex (motor drive). And then to learn at this late date that the leading authority on motion picture mechanics pronounces these outfits antiquated and passe. Aint it hell?

Mr. Richardson, after the years that the operators throughout the country have spent in educating you in the intricate complications of motion picture equipment and projection, you would better reward the fruits of their labors by using a little more tact and prudence in disseminating said knowledge, and by sticking more closely to the facts. In regard to your visit to Holyoke, as paternal relative of that infant organization, we wish to voice our appreciation of your efforts in that town. They are much needed and well-spent. But when you tread on the ideals, abilities and personnel of Local No. 186, of Springfield, you tread where angels do not dare to tread. For be it known that this aforementioned local claims, and with well-established facts and statistics to support their contention, to be the model Moving Picture Operators' Local of the New England States, in equipment, projection, working conditions, wages, progressiveness, and any and all attributes that go to make up and maintain the highest possible state of organization and efficiency. In the event of your not caring to publish this reply to your charges, we will take steps to get publicity for same through some other channels. Hoping that you will give this statement the same pitiless publicity that you afforded your own, and that you will append an apology for your misstatements, we are,

EDWIN B. WELLER
JOHN F. GATELEE,
(Signed) J. LOUIS LAMBERT,
Special Committee.

P. S.—In the event of your not caring to publish this reply to your charges, we will take steps to get publicity for the same through some other channels.

And here is the item that stirred up this tempest in a teapot. It appeared in an article [illegible] July 15 issue:

"The local wrote the Springfield union inviting its members to attend, and, as I understand the matter, lunch was provided for them, but not even so much as a postcard was received by way of reply, and no Springfield men showed up—rather discourteous to a sister local, don't you think? And I happen to know that both Springfield managers and operators stand in need of a shaking up on practically all matters pertaining to projection. I have myself seen some extremely antiquated projection equipment, some very, very poor operating rooms, and some mighty punk projection in Springfield, Mass."

You will observe that my comment on Springfield was mainly based on the rank discourtesy shown a sister local, which same is "rubbed in" in the committee's letter. I would like also to make note of the fact that the letter does not confine itself to the facts. I said: "I have myself seen some extremely antiquated projection equipment, some very, very poor operating rooms and some mighty punk projection in Springfield, Mass.," and most certainly and emphatically I have seen all that. If there are now fifteen out of the total of sixteen Springfield theaters using Power's Model B and A, and Simplex machines, there must have been a most tremendous change in projection equipment in that city. It must be remembered that I pass through Springfield on an average of about six times a year. I have been there four times already this year.

Again the committee took liberties with facts when it says: "We ignored your communication with regard to addressing us on projection at our expense. * * * Because we did not care to buy your wares." I would like to have this most dignified and astute committee point out when and where I said they ignored a communication. What I did say was that they ignored a communication from a sister local, and ignored it in a way that amounted to an affront to that local. I would feel very grateful to this committee if it would inform us where, when, and how I undertook to "sell them any wares." The Moving Picture World offered, through me, at its own expense (and it is considerable expense, too, let me tell you) to send me to Springfield or elsewhere to address the operators and managers on projection. The only thing they were asked to do was to make the local arrangements, which might cost them considerable, or absolutely not one cent. In fact in one or two instances, with small locals, the lecture has been given in a theater, the use of which was given free of cost, and there has been no expense at all, except a few cents for postage in sending out invitations to theater managers, and that, too, could be avoided by having each operator invite his manager.

I am very sorry indeed that the Springfield local felt that it had to pay for anything. As appears from their letter the fact that ey thought they had to go to some expense was the reason they "turned down" the proposition. If I had known that, I have no doubt but that the Moving Picture World could have been induced to assume the expense of postage in sending our the invitations, and I myself could have arranged for the use of a theater.

I want to make it perfectly clear that I have no criticism or fault to find with any Local that does not care to hear the lecture. To me it means tiresome travel and it means no small expense to the paper. It is simply an effort on our part to do what we can for the improvement of picture projection and as such has been apreciated by quite a few groups of both operators and managers.

In closing this incident, I would remark that there is no "misinformation" contained in the article, page 443, July 15th issue, quoted herein. I made no statement as to the equipment now in Springfield. I simply set forth what I have myself seen with my own two eyes, and, moreover, on at least one occasion these things were displayed to me by a committee of the union who showed me around through some of the theaters, though that was quite some time ago. The punk projection, however, I have myself viewed not longer than sixty days ago, and it was very punk, indeed. Just why the union thought I would not care to publish their letter I don't know. Certainly if they are proud of it I have no reason to withhold it from type. It surely makes interesting reading, though personally I would not consider it exactly in the light of a credit to the committee, or the organization they claim to represent.

Why Cored Lower Carbon Is Inefficient.

The average operator nowadays uses a cored upper and a cored lower carbon for both A. C. and D. C. For A. C. this is, of course, correct, but for D. C. it is NOT correct; also it is a highly inefficient arrangement. It is the lazy man's way of doing things. It makes the arc "easier to handle," but did you ever stop and think why the arc is easier to handle with the cored lower? I will tell you. It is because the core of a carbon produces a large amount of gas. That is precisely what the core is for. It makes a heavy arc stream, and since this flow of gas, known as the arc stream, has comparative high conductivity, it follows that the arc will, under this condition, be more stable, and easier to handle than where the arc stream is light, as is the case with the solid lower carbon. The cored lower carbon enables the operator to carry a considerably longer arc, and up to the point where light interference by the lower carbon tip is avoided this is good. The trouble with the lower cored carbon lies in the fact that it forms a curtain of gas which comes up right square in front of the crater, and this curtain of gas not only absorbs a considerable percentage of the light, but also injures the purity of that which does pass. Many times I have heard operators wondering why they got a whiter light with a solid lower carbon than they could with a cored lower. That is the answer, my brothers. The gas from that lower cored makes the light yellow, thus injuring its brilliancy. The correct set for D. C. is a cored upper and a solid lower. The arc won't be so easy to handle. You will have to stay right there on the job, but you will get better results for less money, and that is one of the important items in the make-up of a high class operator.

Shutter Does Not Suit.

F. L. Bristol, Sharon, Conn., says:

Have been operating between three and four years, and though this is my first letter to the department, I have been a very interested reader thereof and have derived much profit therefrom. Am running a Power's Six, using 110 volt A. C., through a Power's Little Giant, set at 60 amperes. Am using 3-4 inch Speer carbons. Have a 5½-inch E. F. objective lens, and the distance of projection is 72 feet. The screen is a home-made one, covered with clear aluminum paint. I get a clear, brilliant picture, but the cutting off of the shutter does not suit me, as I think there is too much flicker. No amount of experimenting on my part seems to improve it to the extent I wish. Am therefore writing, thinking you may be able to make some suggestion which will bring about the desired improvement. The diameter of the objective lens is 1¾ inches, and the two-blade shutter only clears the lens to ½ inch. I have the shutter so adjusted that there is no travel ghost, and I begin to believe the trouble is in the lens system. The condensing lenses are, as near as I can measure them, 10½-inch focus. Am enclosing rough diagram of the lens system.

According to the diagram the brother has a meniscus-bi-convex condenser with ½ inch between the two lenses. The arc is 3½ inches from the meniscus, and the front edge of the front condensing lens is 9¼ inches from the aperture. The back focus is 4¼ inches. If your measurements are correct, Friend Bristol, you certainly cannot be using a 10½-inch condensing lens; also you are wasting a tremendous lot of light. To cover your light beam under the conditions named, your objective lens would have to be a little more than 3 inches in diameter. With a 1 3-4 inch diameter you would have to have 22 inches between the apex of the front condensing lens and the aperture of the machine in order to avoid light waste, and you should have a condenser having a 3 3-4 inch E. F. I would advise you to at once procure a copy of the third edition of the Handbook and study Table No. 1, page 141.

As regards the proper distance of the shutter from the lens, I would recommend you to study Figure 63a, Page 145 of the Handbook, and the text which accompanies it. Another and even better way is to find the dissolving point of the light ray by cutting the ray at various points in front of the objective lens until the point is found where the whole screen becomes dark at once, or there are two shadows which come together like a pair of shears, and set your shutter at that point, or as near to it as you can get it. You must then cut down the blade of the shutter until it is just wide enough to avoid travel ghost. I think you will find that shutter of yours ought to set further away from the lens than it now is.

You will, of course, when running at normal speed, particularly with light scenes, have some flicker when you are using a two-wing shutter. If your current is true 60 cycle, and never falls below that in cycle, you could use a three-wing shutter, provided you did not run the projector faster than 65 per minute. The trouble with this is, however, that the least variation of speed of the dynamo alters the speed of the cycle, therefore 60 cycle current may vary in same cases between 55 and 65, or even more, and under those conditions there might, and most likely would, be trouble with the three-wing shutter.

A Surprise.

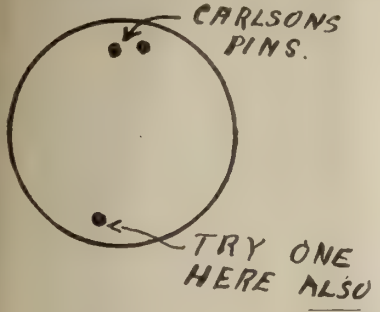
On Page 1881, July 10th issue, in Figure A, we see where Brother Martin proposes paralleling the light ray by adding a meniscus-aperture lens. To my astonishment I have discovered within the past few days that a certain lens manufacturer, who is not yet quite ready to enter the market, is constructing a three-combination lens which is, in a modified way, making use of that identical proposition. It is therefore, quite possible that in the very near future we will be able to report a decided improvement in the optical system of the projector, in the insistence upon which this department has been the pioneer; also it has been the pioneer in the discovery of the necessity for this improvement.

Stoll Dream Tandem.

As an act of friendliness to the wives, daughters and sweethearts of operator motorcyclists, I want to tell you that the Stoll Dream tandem, made by the Stoll Manufacturing Company, Denver, is about the best thing that ever happened in the way of a tandem seat. I have been using one for almost two years, and it not only rides like a cradle, but stands up well. The seat costs little more than the ordinary tandem, but, take it from me, it is worth three times more than its price and—then some. You couldn't separate that Stoll Dream and Mrs. R. with a crowbar.

Suggests an Improvement.

G. E. Carlson, Burley, Iowa, referring to issue April 22nd, says:



Bert Carlson's idea is all right, as far as it goes, but it does not regulate the size of the loop. The addition of an extra pin, as per the drawing, does the trick, but you must trip quickly in order to accomplish it.

All of which is passed along for the more or less distinguished consideration of our readers.

Get Results.

Just to show you that we do get results, we presented to the New York headquarters of one of the big producers a large bunch of poor splices, etc., showing lack of inspection in one of their exchanges. Headquarters took the matter up with the exchange, and this is a portion of a letter received in reply, copy of which has been sent me by headquarters.

> "Mr. Richardson failed to comment on the fact that a great many of the pieces of film showed large punch holes which some of the competent operators he mentions put into the film they have been complaining about. We have added another inspector to our forces this week, and have ordered a renovating machine, and in this way hope to eliminate any cause for future complaint regarding the physical condition of our films."

So far as the punch marks be concerned, if the manager of this exchange will take the trouble to read the department he will find I have been protesting against these marks for a long time, but primarily the fault lies, not with the operator, but with the producer who fails to incorporate into his multiple reel releases any kind of change-over sign. This we have repeatedly advocated, and still live in hopes of having brought into use. However, I am anly printing this in order to show that we do get results. In this case another inspector and a renovating machine is the next result of one operator's kick, backed up by competent evidence of poor inspection.

An Interesting Problem.

The following letter has been received from a Philadelphia film exchange:

> We are enclosing a piece of film which you will notice is torn on both sides and burned at the end. Will it be asking too much for you to answer the following question: Is it possible for a Power's Six A to tear the film evenly at both sides? We have had a friendly argument with an operator and both parties agree that it should be put up to you. He claims it is impossible for a Power's Six A machine to tear the film thus on both sides. Your answer will be greatly appreciated.

In reply the following letter was sent to the exchange, and I invite comments from our correspondents who can offer a solution of this matter. The tear is precisely the kind of one that might cause a fire, and, as a matter of fact, did cause a hole to be burned in the film.

> "With reference to the attached bit of film, it would be a physical impossibility to say with any degree of certainty as to just what did the damage. This much seems sure, however, either the damage was done by a very badly worn upper sprocket (highly improbable, however, this this would cause a tear as this on both sides at the same time, or at all, for that matter, where there is no patch) or by badly hooked intermittent sprocket teeth. If we accept the latter, and most highly probable explanation, then it is likely there was was some slip of the perforator which caused an imperfect sprocket hole, and the break, of course, appeared on the last previous run to the one in which the hole was burned."

This much is certain. Neither the Power's Six or any other projection machine would or could cause such a break as this if it were in good condition and in perfect adjustment. This is not very satisfactory, I know, but it is a case which is peculiar in that there is no splice at the point of the trouble, and, so far as we know, the film was in perfect condition at that point. Another thing which makes the perforator end of it improbable is that another piece of film laid over the sample shows no apparent fault in the sprocket hole spacing.

Some Interesting Data.

WHAT TAKES PLACE IN OPERATING ROOMS.

Assuming there are 20,000 places where moving pictures are shown, in the United States and Canada, and that these 20,000 places use an average of 30 amperes of 110 volt current for projection, and assuming that the average program is made up of six reels of film, and that the average show lasts five hours per day, North American operators, exclusive of Mexico and Central America—

Consume between 50,000 and 75,000 carbons per day.
Wear out 10 to 20 projection machines per day.
Run 120,000 reels of film per day.
Use 600,000 amperes of current per day.
Consume 54,000,000 watts of energy.
Consume 270,000,000 watt hours of energy per day.

In these operating rooms there are employed between 25,000 and 30,000 men, at least 22,500 of whom are operators of greater or less degree of competency.

These men each day handle film valued at $15,000,000.

These men handle projection machinery, including projection machines, transformers, motor generator sets, mercury arc rectifiers, etc., valued at not less than $11,000,000.

These men daily interpret the films for between 12,000,000 and 15,000,000 people, who pay approximately an average of 8½ cents admission, or between $1,200,000 and $1,275,000 admissions each day.

These estimates and figures are all my own. I do not claim them to be accurate but believe that, if it there were any means of accurately ascertaining the precise facts they would be found to be very nearly correct.

I would like to impress, in the strongest possible way, upon the producer of moving pictures, and upon the projection machine manufacturer that their legitimate interest in film productions and projection machines does not end with the sale thereof.

Producers of photoplays, and manufacturers of projection machinery will do well to come to an understanding of the fact that incompetency, or carelessness in the operating room cannot but operate to, if not nullify, at least in very great degree reduce the effectiveness of their best efforts so far as the individual audience is concerned.

Of what use to, at huge cost, produce a magnificent photoplay and then turn it over to an incompetent operator, who cannot, due to lack of knowledge of his profession, project it in the best possible manner; or allow it to be run on a machine with worn sprockets, which cannot fail to in some degree injure the accuracy of the perforations, thus forever after rendering it impossible to project that particular film in the best possible way.

Producers of photoplays will do well to recognize and realize the fact that a perfectly projected picture of doubtful merit may be more pleasing to an audience than a far more meritorious production which is poorly projected.

Bearing this fact in mind, would it not be wise for producers to join hands with the writer in insisting on a higher degree of competency in the operating room?

The foregoing is the copy of an article the editor furnished for a special paper published during the Board of Trade's Exposition. I am reproducing it because the figures are both interesting and enlightening.

He Likes the Book.

Ralph W. Martin, Los Angeles, Cal., says:

> Have just finished about a week of browsing in the new Handbook. It certainly is great stuff, and I feel considerably swelled up in finding some of my ideas printed just as if they were made to order. I think, however, your explanation of the "Two Sets of Rays" theory beats all records for squaring the circle. Es sheint nicht ganz in der Ordnung zu sein, aber Ich weisz nicht alles darein. "Loss of Light in Lenses," page 159, is certainly very interesting; also the results there shown, or claimed are surprising. Surely your stand for high grade lenses is very well taken.
> I notice Friend Solar's comment on Question 115, which is evidently correct, and is practically identical with statements found in the new Handbook, in "Optic Projection," and in an unpublished article of my own, except that I introduce the element of spherical aberration; all of which shows there is nothing new under the sun.

I don't know what that line, presumably German, stands for, but I'll bet four dollars that, whatever it is, the joke is on me.

In Error.

The exhibitors of Vancouver, B. C., notified their operators, about June 6th, that on and after the tenth of the month no union operators would be employed. The position of the exhibitors as set forth by one of the managers is that they object to the union principally on account, as they claim, that body has spread reports exaggerating the danger connected with the operation of projection machines with relation to fire. The effect such reports would have on the theater-going public is bad, they claim; also to the rule of the union requiring an extended apprenticeship before a man be given an operator's card.

Now, I do not care to take up this matter extensively. However, the objection that the union has spread alarming reports of fire danger is worthy of comment in this way, first: If the union has been any more industrious in spreading alarming reports of the fire hazard in moving picture theaters than has the press, daily and otherwise, it certainly must have been very busy indeed. Personally, I do not agree with the spreading of such reports and if the union has done it, then, in my opinion and judgment, it has taken an action which cannot be successfully defended. For the good of all concerned I believe the less said about fire danger the better. As a matter of fact, in a modern moving picture theater, with the operating room properly built and equipped, the only possible danger from fire is that of a stampede, and this is largely brought about by newspaper reports of the danger of fire in moving picture theaters. To this extent I cannot agree with the operators in this matter. They might better, in my judgment, have expended their efforts in perfecting themselves in the art of projection, thus placing themselves in position to demand more money because they have made themselves worth more.

So far as the apprenticeship be concerned, however, the managers are absolutely, entirely and positively in the wrong. Not only should an operator serve an apprenticeship, but that apprenticeship should cover a period of not less than one, and preferably two years. Why, great heavens, Mr. Manager, do you expect a man to become a competent electrician, optician, mechanician and an artist without having served any apprenticeship? Does he have to become all these things, do you ask? He certainly does! He must be a very competent electrician, along certain lines, because the operator of today is placed in charge of motors of both large and small capacity, and of generators of comparatively large capacity, the performance of which, both as to mechanical and electrical efficiency (the latter relates directly to the amount of current bills you will pay each month, Mr. Manager), will depend upon the degree of knowledge and skill possessed by the operator who has them in his charge. He must thoroughly understand the mercury arc rectifier, both in its theoretical and practical operation, because mercury arc rectifiers are placed in charge of the operator. He must understand both the mechanical construction and the theoretical and practical operation of low voltage transformers and auto-transformers, because these instruments are placed directly in his hands. He must understand the different wiring systems, including the different currents, such as alternating of different cycle and different phase, because the cycle frequency has much to do with light effect, and the phase has to do with the connection of motors to the circuit. He must understand switches, how they should be placed, which end should be connected to the supply, and what size and kind are allowed for different purposes, how to make a double connection to two different systems, with an emergency set to enable the changing-over instantly in case of breakdown. He must understand fuses, and their practical application, such as, for instance, what size to use on the primary, and what size to use on the secondary, or transformer side of the motor generator set, transformer or mercury arc rectifier, where fuses should be placed and how they should be protected. He must understand carbons, and the difference in results brought about by different combinations of sizes and kinds, because he is now handling high amperage, even in some instances as high as 90 amperes D. C., and the efficiency of the light will depend upon the care exercised and the knowledge possessed by the operator, and if that knowledge and care is not up to standard, MR. MANAGER, YOU ARE THE GOAT WHEN THE BILLS COME IN AT THE END OF THE MONTH. The difference between the bills of maintenance and operation as between a thoroughly competent and incompetent operator may amount to very much more than the difference in salary would, besides which you will not get the high class result you ought to get on the screen.

The operator must very thoroughly understand the action of light through lenses if he is going to deliver high class results on your screen, Mr. Manager, and TO DELIVER THEM EFFICIENTLY. He must be a pretty good mechanic becaues the high speed mechanism in his charge must be true to one one thousandth of an inch, else the picture on your screen will not be satisfactory; also he must be (if you want really high class work on your screen) a close student of action. More than this from $600 to $1,000 worth of highly damageable property is placed in charge of the operator every day, and the amount of damage done to that property will be in direct proportion to the knowledge possessed by, and the skill displayed by the operator. And now, my dear Mr. Manager, do you really and honestly expect to get all that combined in one individual, and that individual not serve an adequate apprenticeship? Why, my dear sir, I think you are bound to admit that the idea is rank foolishness. It is one of the things which simply cannot be done. And let me tell you that it is high class results on your screen that brings the money. Granting that fact, why do you object to anything within reason which makes for greater efficiency in the operating room, and therefore a better picture on your screen?

Please understand that this is written with the kindest of feelings. I am simply pointing out to you, Mr. Vancouver Manager, the fact that the position you are occupying, or have occupied in this matter, is untenable, and I am thoroughly convinced away down at the bottom you know I am right.

Decidedly Amusing.

As heretofore set forth, this department has at last induced the Department of Water Supply, Gas and Electricity to incorporate into their examination questions covering the optics of projection.

I have myself listened to some of the examinations and have been amused at the perfectly weird replies candidates make to questions concerning the optical end of the projector. Chief Examiner Brown supplies the following list of "queer" answers to questions:

> Must have one soft and one hard carbon, otherwise could not get an arc. To focus picture on screen would separate condensers. To focus picture on screen would move arc closer to condensers. If division line between pictures appears on screen, revolving shutter is out of adjustment. Size of condensers depends on amperes used. When wide blade of revolving shutter covers lens the shutter is set right regardless of intermittent sprocket. If picture was larger than screen, would keep changing condensers till it was right. As long as film does not break the tension springs are not too tight. Excessive speed is shown by the take-up not being able to take the film fast enough. Con> densers should be placed in machine with the plain surfaces together.

I think these answers speak for themselves as to the urgent need of an examination along these lines.

The attached card shows that the old legend, "This is not a certificate of ability to project a good picture" has been removed. It always was an eyesore to this department and its editor, because, while an examination cannot prove that a man will project a good picture, it certainly seems to me it ought to guarantee his ability to do so.

Brother Deutsch Criticises.

George F. Deutsch, Poughkeepsie, N. Y., criticises the reply of Brother Martin, Los Angeles, to Question 133 in several respects, one of which is important. Brother Martin says, speaking of the method of measuring the distance of the lens to the screen: "The most accurate method is to measure directly from the aperture to the center of the screen by the means of a steel tape line." He should have said from the lens to the screen. I did not notice it myself, and undoubtedly that is what he meant. The thing simply was an error; also it may have been an error in copying the reply. Brother Deutsch also criticises Martin's method, but that I think is hardly worth taking up, particularly in view of the fact that this method was given rather as an interesting calculation, with the statement that the really practical method to measure directly using a tape line in conjunction with a string. I would give Brother Deutsch's entire criticism space, but it calls for a cut of considerable size and I do not really believe the matter is worth it. As I said in my comment to the reply, the really practical method of measuring the distance from the lens to the screen is to tie a string to the end of a tape line (assuming you cannot get a tape line long enough to reach from lens to screen) and then stretch the combined tape line and string from the lens to the screen, afterwards doubling the string back on the tape to get the complete measurement.

Conditions in Mexico.

J. I. Boggan, an operator who has been working in Mexico, writes from Naco, Arizona:

> Conditions in Mexico are very bad. All of we Americans (I suppose you mean United Statesians, because the Mexican is also an American.—Ed.) were ordered to leave Mexico at once, and we did. Had we stayed there another day it would not have been so easy to get out. Today if any one of us were to attempt to cross the line into Mexico we would probably be stood up against the wall and filled with nice, little round Mexican bullet holes. Mexico certainly needs a good government. You can do most anything in that country, because there is no law of any kind. For instance: if you shoot a man, and you have a little money, they will keep you in jail until they get the coin away from you, and probably you will then be released. Last Saturday night in the theater where I worked, the Municipality President received a telegram from Mexico City, which was read, in the theater, to approximately 1200 people. The message stated, as nearly as I could understand, that every civilian should be armed and join the troops. After reading the telegram the president said to the audience: "Let's get ready and shoot the Gringos down," applying to them a vile name. All United Statesians then left the theater and went home to prepare for departure in the morning; the Mexicans went home to get their rifles and pistols. The show promptly broke up. The Mexicans were armed and were waiting for our soldiers, whom they expected to come at any moment. I wish to heaven the war would begin and straighten out old Mexico, then we could go back there and make good money. Here in Naco we have over 400 soldiers and a bunch of machine guns lined up along the border. In case I get any more news I will keep you posted. It will at least be a little more near the truth than what you get from the papers.

All of which is interesting, though I think, after all, very likely the sentence: "We can go back there and make good money" is at the bottom of considerable of this disturbance. Though it must be conceded that it looks as if we would be compelled to go into Mexico with the army sooner or later, and if this is true, then, in the interest of humanity, I would vote for "sooner."

More on Optics.

Ralph W. Martin, Los Angeles, Cal., contributes the following, which I am printing just as it is sent in, because I do not feel competent to offer criticism, other than to repeat my former assertion that, whereas

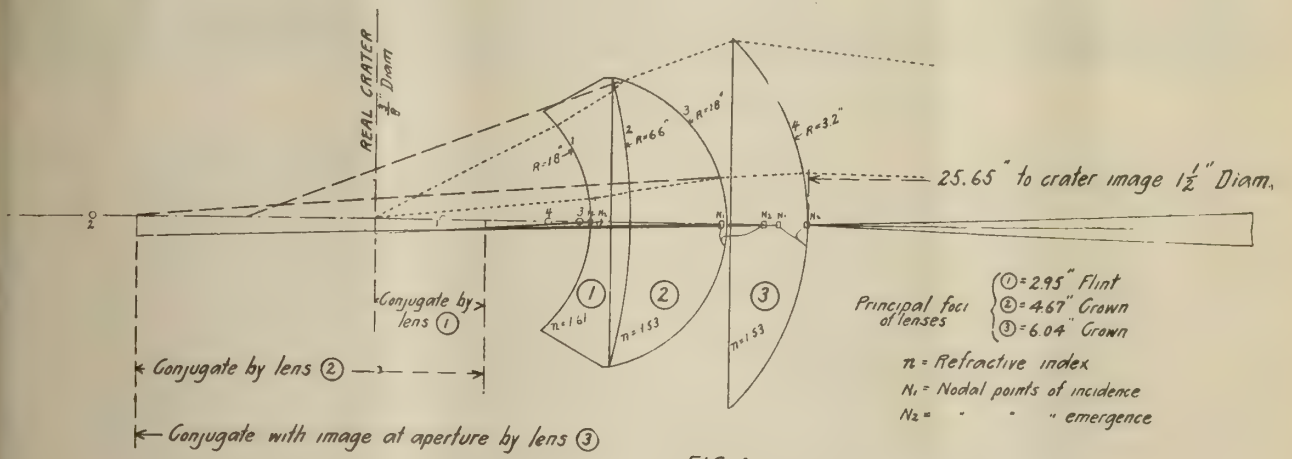

FIG. 1.

I believe, in general, the scheme suggested is a good one, still, on the whole, I don't believe it practical in the form Friend Martin puts it in, by reason of the fact that, due to its thick edge and thin center the rear lens would not stand up under the heat of the arc. I am of the opinion that whereas the scheme in general is what we are going to come to, still, I think, Brother Martin's plan is not the right plan. I think most likely the condenser will be retained practically in its present form, with some form of negative lens placed between the condenser and the aperture. I am, however, perfectly willing to have myself proven wrong and Martin right, and in any event I am very sure we all thoroughly appreciate the work Martin is doing.

I have been nearly working my bean off on this telephoto condenser. The last design send in contained some bad errors mainly for the reason that I had used the optic centers of the lenses instead of the nodal points. I find that in thick lenses like these the nodal points are of great importance, and must be considered if we are to get anything like accurate results with a three lens combination. (The article in question has not been published.—Ed.)

In Fig. 1 I have given the principal foci of the three lenses, the same being mathematically correct for the design of the lenses shown and refractive indices given. The position and size of the different focal planes are also accurately plotted, which finally places the crater image at a distance of 25.65 inches from the front lens, with a spot 1½ inches diameter.

I am quite confident these results are correct, for I have gone over the work many times and checked the results in various ways.

The ⅜ inch crater is placed 2.65 inches from the rear lens, and at this position the total angular amount of light that is passed through the entire lens system is the same as secured by the regular plano-convex system with a 6½ inch lens next the arc and the crater placed 3½ inches from the plane surface of the rear lens.

Now concerning the question of spherical aberration: The dotted lines (Fig. 1) show the courses of two rays emanating from the central point of the crater and embracing the range of the aperture of the lens system. These rays have been calculated and plotted very carefully, and I am confident they are very nearly correctly shown.

Now, after the two rays have passed through lens two their directions have been continued backwards to meet the axis, as shown by the dashed lines, Fig. 1, and it is observed that the total effect of lenses one and two is to produce an excess of negative aberration in the rays which now become incident upon lens three. Consequently, if lens three has a positive aberration which just balances the negative aberration as shown by the dashed lines, then spherical aberration will be totally corrected in the image at the aperture.

Now in Fig. 2, from a central point (P) on the crater image, two typical rays one and two are traced back through lens three, and after emerging on the other side, give the resulting aberration as shown by the full lines. If, therefore, the dashed lines in Fig. 1 coincide with the full lines in Fig. 2, spherical aberration would be wholly corrected. But as shown in Fig. 2, the dashed lines do not quite coincide, and their position indicates that there is still a little positive aberration in lens three which remains uncompensated. It is, however, very slight, and when compared to the large amount present in the regular condenser system it seems almost a negligible quantity. However, it may still be possible to get rid of all of it. I have tried many kinds of alterations in the forms and focus of the lenses, but without success. There is still another way open, and that is to grind lens three to a true aplanatic shape, i. e., make the aberration of its incident days balance that of the emergent rays. This might be expensive, but the front lens is not much liable to breakage by heat. Now all these results have been obtained after a very great amount of calculation, and my confidence in their accuracy is mainly due to the great amount of work I have spent on the design, and the number of times I have checked over the final conclusions. If I am wrong, it is not because I have spared any pains or labor to set this matter forth as it really is, so far as the true optical theory is concerned and for whatever that may be worth in final practice.

I have noted friend Griffith's last article and also your plan to place the crater 3½ inches from the rear lens. I will keep the matter in mind and try to dope out something on that particular proposition.

Typographical Error.

C. E. Bacon, Stoughton, Wis., sends in some "horrible examples" of film splices and says:

> In July 1st issue, page 93, top of right hand column, you say when switches A and B are thrown over, downward, the lamps will be in multiple. Should not A be thrown up and B down?

Yes, that was, of course, an error, though whether it was mine or the typesetter's, I don't know. Anyhow, I said: "when the switches are thrown over," and that would, of course, mean A up and B down.

A Tabloid History of Moving Pictures.

Few patrons of the cinema, or those directly interested in the great film industry, are familiar with the romantic history of the motion picture. To entirely cover the history of moving picture machines in a short article is impossible. But here is the story in a nutshell. A bet was made in 1871 by the late Senator Leland Stanford of California, that a running horse at no time had all four feet off the ground. Edward Muybridge—an Englishman, by way of experiment, placed numerous cameras at regular intervals about the track, which by electrical contact were "snapped" by the horse in passing. It proved that the horse always had, when running, one foot on the ground.

This was not the first record of moving pictures, though it served to demonstrate their practicability. Records indicate that the first machine was patented by W. E. Lincoln in 1867. It comprised objects which revolving rapidly, gave the appearance of motion; it possessed little value.

In 1869 a Mr. O. B. Brown patented an "optical instrument" comprising a disc or moving shutter movement, which, on revolving, projected objects with the appearance of motion. There were then no films, and translucent glass was used. This was the forerunner of modern machines.

Development dragged from then until the Muybridge experiment stated above. In 1880 Muybridge produced in San Francisco, Cal., the "Zoopraxiscope," which projected pictures (on glass positives) on a screen. Later, Muybridge conferred with Edison regarding a combination of his machine with the phonograph then in its infancy, about 1885 he went abroad and held frequent conferences with M. Marey, of the Institute of France.

Marey first utilized the continuous film, though it was George Eastman who brought it to its present state of high perfection, which greatly influenced the success of the moving-picture industry. In 1893 Lumiere produced the "Cinematograph," the first machine to project from the film. Films then had only one hole on each side of each picture. Edison discovered this to fast on each side and in 1896 produced his "Vitascope." These machines became the models for the greatly improved article of today.

Films then were very crude, permitting length of only seventy-five feet, which was an endless belt. They were threaded over spools contained in a box at the rear of lamphouse, passing over lamphouse to head of machine, thence downward through head, past projection aperture, and back to spools. This exposed film at all times, which was dangerous.

About 1900, longer films came into use, which necessitated a change in handling at machine head. Films were then wound on a reel mounted on top of head. After passing through head they were piled on floor. This being dangerous and destructive, a receptacle was devised and fastened to the frame below reel into which the film passed. This soon gave way to a reel known as the "take-up reel" which received the film after it had passed from the upper reel, through the head, and before the aperture projected on screen where it was.

These were a few of the steps in the march of improvement that have made possible the wonderful pictures such as we all know them today. And the end is still a long way off

Answers to Correspondents.

Nippon—Los Angeles, California.

How much practical knowledge of photography, do you think, is necessary for an average intelligent man to take up the motion camera? If he has but a little knowledge of photography has he to study in some photo-studio before going into the motion picture photography? Could you suggest what is the most economical and quickest way to master the motion camera?

A knowledge of photography is of great advantage to one who wishes to become a camera man, although there are quite a number of camera men who did not have previous experience in photography. I would advise one who wished to become a camera man to obtain a position in a factory where films are made, in almost any capacity and while there to learn all that is possible in regard to a camera man's duties, and at the same time read all of the books that he could obtain on the subject. If he is sincere, he should be able to become a camera man in a year or two.

F. C.—Chicago, Ill.—I am an amateur moving picture photographer, just breaking into the game, and am somewhat puzzled as to using the different stops on lens, which is an Ernemann with the following diaphragm markings: F 3.5, F 4.5, F 6.3, F 9, F 12.5, F 18. Can you give me any information as to using them under different light conditions? What causes static and how can it be avoided?

Your diaphragm markings are a little bit different from those usually given upon cinematographic lenses, but are so near those which are usually given that the small amount of difference need not be taken into account. The usual markings are as follows: F 3.5, 4, 6.3, 8, 11, 16.

Your Ernemann Camera, which probably has a 1/3 opening shutter, when operated at normal speed gives an exposure of about 1/50 part of a second. At this time of the year in the middle of the day in the sunshine, you can get a fully exposed negative at F-18: each succeeding number of your lens admits twice as much light, as the preceding number. You will have to learn to judge the diaphragm number from the strength of the light. There have been several articles published in back numbers of the World, on exposure and the causes of static. I would advise you to look them up and read them. Static is caused by frictional electricity which is generated on the moving film under certain weather conditions.

Manchester, N. H.—There is going to be a display of latest fireworks given by a club. I would like to take motion pictures of same. Could I get good results with an aperture of F 1.9 with crank turned regular speed 16 to the second? Or should I turn crank slower, say half speed or 8 to the second with same aperture as above given with 75 mm. lens?

You should be able to get a very good picture of fireworks at night at regular speed by using the Dallmeyer F 1.9 lens, but of course on scenes where your judgment tells you, you can crank slower and get better defination. Excellent fire-works pictures have been made in this way.

W. F. O.—Irvington, N. J., writes a letter too long to be reproduced here, and complains that he cannot find as much literature devoted to motion picture photography as he would like to read and asks if there is any publication devoted exclusively to the subject.

There is no publication known to this Department devoted exclusively to motion picture photography. The Camera, a magazine published at Philadelphia, Pa., contains a department devoted to motion picture photography, conducted by Ernest A. Dench, who wrote a book called "Making the Movies," which was reviewed in this department some time ago. Many magazines which are devoted to exploiting scientific development in popular language occasionally publish articles on various phases of the subject, but have no regular department of that nature. As there are relatively so few people interested in the subject, it is impossible for a general paper like the World to devote more than one or two pages to such a topic.

Cleveland, Ohio—I have a contract to make about 4,000 ft. of film in a number of factories here in the state of Ohio, and I want to install a portable artificial lighting system, and I would like to ask you for your good advice as to what I ought to buy, where to buy it, and the probable cost of same. I did not want to carry a Cooper-Hewitt outfit if I could carry something as good that would be easier installed. How about Nitrogen filled Mazda Lamps or Radium flares. I will assure you that any information that you will give me will be more than appreciated. I have been reading your valuable articles in the World with great interest and immediately upon receipt of the World after reading them and soaking them in I clip the article and paste it in my memorandum book for future reference.

There are a number of portable lighting system on the market. One of the best is manufactured and sold by Allison & Hadaway, 235 5th avenue, New York City. Cooper-Hewetts are too heavy and Nitrogen Mazda Lamps have not proven satisfactory. Radium flares are all right for certain outdoor pictures at night, but create so much smoke that they cannot be used except where there is a strong draft to carry away the fumes.

R. M.— Washington, D. C.—From reading the Motion Picture World, I have become greatly interested in motion picture photography. I would like to know whether or not there are schools where one may study this subject thoroughly.

The University of Syracuse at Syracuse, N. Y., offers a two years' course in photography which includes instruction in the manipulation of motion picture cameras. There are also one or two schools which advertise to teach motion picture photography, but none of these courses will enable a student to become at once a professional camera man, able to do work in a professional studio. Such a training would, however, be of great benefit to anyone who wished to gain employment in a film factory, expecting to ultimately become a camera man.

Music for the Picture

Conducted by CLARENCE E. SINN and S. M. BERG

Musical Settings for "The Devil at His Elbow."

Released July 31st by the Metro Pictures Corp'n.)

(Prepared by S. M. Berg, by special arrangements with G. Schirmer, Inc., Music Publishers, New York.)

THIS "Musical Suggestion Cue Sheet" is not designed to solve every possible musical requirement of the film, but is intended as a partial solution of the problem—what to play for the picture. It has proven to be of great assistance to the leader, not only by relieving to a degree the tedium of rehearsals, but by assisting materially in overcoming those conditions encountered when the film is not available until the hour of performance.

Musical Suggestion Cue Sheets can be obtained (free of charge) by managers from their local exchange in advance of the date of release. This will afford to the progressive leader an opportunity to acquaint himself with the general character of the film drama he is to portray with his orchestra.

Together with the suggested music at the title or descriptive cues where it is to be played, the tempo or characteristic is given, so that the leader can select or substitute any or all of the numbers from his own library, thereby avoiding any financial outlay though still carrying out the interpretation.

The timing of the picture is based on a speed of 15 minutes to a thousand feet. The time indications will help the leader to anticipate the various cues which may consist of the printed sub-title (marked T) or a described action (marked D). 20¾ "I am broke" is a sub-title and is printed reading matter on the screen. But 6¾ D "Reception scene" is a descrpition of action.

John Ashton, inventor of a submarine, has to finish the plans in six days. He works feverishly and drinking heavily falls asleep at his work. In a dream that follows he sees his downfall through drink. His fiancee's father breaks their engagement and later he finds himself at a wharf dive. There he meets Meg, a girl of the streets, who persuades him to stop drinking. He conquers the evil and marries Meg. Going back to his old life he devotes all his time to his submarine. Meg feeling herself forsaken, induces him to drink again. The test of his submarine results in a tragedy due to his negligence. Realizing that Meg brought about his downfall, he tries to choke her. Just then he awakens and vows never to drink again. Shortly after he is united to his fiancee in marriage.

There are several scenes of the devil in allegory. It is suggested that timpani rolls and muffled crash be used. Note particularly: Piano only according to action at 6¾; short fantastic dance, depicting the passing of time at 54¼, church wedding scene, organ only, at 68.

The THEME selected is "Andante Pathetique No. 1"—Schumann-Langey.

Time schedule: 71½ minutes (five reels—about 4750 feet).

Time.		Sub-Titles or Descriptive Cues.	Music.
0	D	Opening.	Andante Pathetique No. 1. (THEME)—Schumann-Langey.
3	T	"Do you think it wise?"
3¾	T	Andrew Sealey.	Norwegian Folk-song—Borch. (Andantino)
5½	T	Like a cruel spur.
6¾	D	Reception scene (Piano only according to action.	Coquette—Stern. (Valse)
8¼	T	"Your engagement to my daughter—"	Repeat: THEME.
9¼	T	When Ashton leaves.
10¼	T	Drifting, ever drifting.	Intermezzo—Arensky. (Presto)
12	T	"You signed ship's papers." (Water effects.)
13½	T	Homeward bound.	Ragtime Pipe of Pan—Romberg (Allegretto)
16	D	Ashton in saloon.
17¼	D	When Captain speaks to Meg.	Agitato No. 2.
19½	T	Sunk to the depths.	Repeat: THEME.
20¾	T	"I am broke."
21¾	T	With the passing of the months.	Daffodils—Carvel. (Andante moderato)
25	T	"No more, you've been—"
26¼	T	The first fruits of victory.	Petite Bijouterie—Bohm. (Valse intermezzo)
28¾	T	The upward climb.
30¼	T	"Now that you're off that stuff."	Repeat: THEME.
32	T	"Do you know this man?"
33¼	T	And so they were married.	Sparklets—Miles. (Moderato)
36¼	T	The new life (Telephone bell).
39	D	When Ashton gets letter.	Astarte—Mildenberg. (Andantino)
43	T	"I'll go it alone."
43¾	D	At the reception.	A Ball Scene—Nicode. (Waltz descriptive)
46¼	T	Two o'clock.
47¼	T	And the devil laughs. (Timpani roll.)	Repeat: THEME.
49½	T	"Just one drink."
50¼	T	Next morning.	The Land of Dreams—Driffill. (Idyll moderato)
53½	T	"You could have prevented this."
54¼	T	Time flies.	Scarf Dance—Chaminade. (Allegro grazioso)
55¼	T	"But the government gives—"	Russian Romance—Friml. (Andante moderato)
57½	D	When Grace calls on Ashton.	Dramatic Allegro No. 1.
59	T	"My God, it's true."
59½	D	In the submarine.	Furioso No. 2.
61¼	T	Grace makes a final appeal.
62¾	T	"Don't you think I know?"	Hurry No. 1.
64	T	"I gave you the drink."
64¾	T	At the moment of awakening.	Repeat: THEME.
68	D	Church scene—wedding.	Organ solo.
68½	T	Five years later.	Roses and Rue—Scates. (Valse lento)
71½	T	The end.

Musical Instruments.

Clarence E. Sinn.

THE musical instruments demonstrated at the Coloseum building (Sixth Annual Convention), Chicago, were so widely distributed in the big building that there were times when you were not compelled to hear more than one at a time—when you could get close enough to any one to be far enough away from the others. The biggest display in this line was made by the

and other Seeburg instruments (one of which I expect to mention in a future letter). A Seeburg Motion Picture Player furnished music to the pictures shown in the south end of the building, while the Seeburg booth was in the north end, in charge of Mr. Gerlich—a live wire. The Seeburg instruments have been pretty thoroughly described here already but are deserving of another mention. Of course it was almost impossible to give the instruments a fair demonstration in the noisy, crowded Coloseum building, but a large number were sufficiently interested to visit the Seeburg General Offices and Showrooms at 209 South State Street and were well rewarded for their trouble.

Many manufacturers emphasize the merits of their automatic features, dwelling on the point that as anybody can run a mechanical organ, a great saving is accomplished in musicians' salaries. Now, although this may appeal to certain exhibitors under certain conditions, I do not believe it is the proper attitude for manufacturers to take, nor to depend upon it as a principal talking point. A good musical instrument (such as Seeburg's Style "A" De Luxe, for example) is bound to make a better showing under the hands of a skillful musician than when it is run by the janitor. J. P. Seeburg believes this, too, for, in spite of the fact that neither pains nor money is spared in making the "Seeburg Music Rolls" he doesn't overlook its value as a musical instrument nor its possible appeal to a musician.

Get the Seeburg pamphlet entitled "The Soul of the Film" and read the first pages carefully. It makes a strong point for the Seeburg instruments as played manually as well as by perforated roll.

Some pianists simply play a lot of "pieces" without regard to their fitness to the picture. If such are supplanted by automatic players they have only themselves to blame. Indeed, with the Seeburg music rolls one can supply fairly appropriate music for the general run of pictures if one is intelligent and discriminating, because of the large number of subjects on each roll (which can be instantly adjusted to any part of the roll) and the great assortment of compositions included in the Seeburg Music Rolls. These are reproduced from records made by artists, so if you must have self-playing music you can be sure these rolls will give you good music—and between them and a careless indifferent piano player the choice seems obvious.

A musician who is careful and interested can get good results from a Seeburg without using the rolls, or he can vary his program by playing from one occasionally. One feature worth mentioning is the "cut-out button." By means of these you can use any combination you please when using a roll. For example, a melody may be changed from a flute solo to a xylophone solo, or any other stop. Or any two or three stops at once, or all at once or any combination your fancy suggests.

An Electric Violinist.

Over on the east side of the building you saw a sign reading "Mills Novelty Company." If you were sufficiently curious to learn what particular form of novelty they were exhibiting you stopped there and were well repaid by hearing their "Violano-Virtuoso." This is a combination of violin and piano; no imitation. A real violin (and a very good one, too) is accompanied by a real piano, both being played automatically by means of a perforated roll, the whole being operated by [illegible] to convey an adequate idea of this marvelous piece of mechanism in the space of a paragraph, but the "Mills Novelty Co." [illegible] Wabash avenue, Chicago, Ill.), have filled a booklet with interesting [illegible] relating to the violinless luthier will be glad to send on request. The "Violano-Virtuoso" really sounds like a violin and [illegible] because it [illegible] is a violin and piano. An interesting point is a self-tuning device by means of which the violin is kept in tune automatically. Plays as that, you "scraper pan" violinists. Wouldn't it be fine if you could rig up such a thing on your fiddles and get it to work all the time.

American Fotoplayer.

The American Piano Player Co. (Ampico Fotoplayer), was conveniently located on the east side of the building, the booth being in charge of Mr. Ben Weissenbach (Chicago). Vice-President M. J. Samuels from New York was also very much in evidence, making friends for himself as well as the Fotoplayer. Mr. Samuels is a Moving Picture World fan and has many nice things to say about us and our value as an advertising medium. His "Exhibit A" had something to do with a cornet and was most convincing.

"The Fotoplayer" has been so frequently and thoroughly described in this department that I believe most of my readers are familiar with its leading characteristics. It is played either manually or automatically, or both—this last being (to my mind) the most effective. Played automatically two perforated rolls are placed in service. A "double tracker board" enables the operator to change from one to the other instantly at will. You can stop one roll at any point and start the other roll at any point without cessation of the music. It is possible to stop either roll and reverse it instantly, thus enabling you to repeat any portion of the roll if desirable. While playing from one roll the operator can change the other (both of his hands are free, of course) and thus permits him to have any kind of music available at any needed moment. The piano (and organ) can also be played in the usual manner if desired, which makes it convenient for "filling in" between standard musical numbers, which is a big item to players who [illegible] the picture closely.

The instrument on exhibition was their "Style 45," listed at $6,500, their other styles being respectively 35, 40 and 50.

Mr. W. R. McArthur, who is widely known among moving picture exhibitors clear across the continent and up and down, now has his headquarters in Chicago on the thirteenth floor of the Lytton building, 14 East Jackson boulevard. Mr. McArthur is general distributing agent for the "Fotoplayer" in Illinois, Indiana, Wisconsin and Michigan and wants his friends to call. Even if you are not interested, he promises to interest you, so watch out. Entre nous, he may try to bribe you to smoke one of his long black cigars. I used one and as soon as I recover I am going back there.

Mr. McArthur told me that they had already made three direct sales from the exhibiting booth—and it was only in its third day when I saw him.

"Morbid Theme on the Wane"

Says William Wright of the Kalem Company—Real American Stories Wanted.

"PICTURE patrons are craving healthy, rugged stories of clean action," declared William Wright of the Kalem Company in an interview granted a World representative last week. They have had their fill of sex discussions, of lurid psychological studies. The morbid theme is a thing of the past."

The statement of the Kalem official came as the result of a recent exhaustive investigation conducted by that organization. "We reached exchange men, exhibitors, and even lay followers of motion pictures," continued Mr. Wright, "before forming our plans for a new series production. The results confirmed us in our belief that the public was tiring of yellow sensationalism and it was then that we made arrangements for the production of 'The Girl from Frisco,' a series of the West.

"In addition reports received since the initial announcement of that series and the figures for advance bookings have given strength to the result of the investigation. The cycle of public favor is swinging back to the clean and virile stories that established the screen's popularity. At present the demand is strong for Western pictures—for that particular type of production is the concrete expression of the desire to get away from the morbid.

"It is a healthy indication that finds picture patrons turning from the lurid to real American themes, to stories that truly represent our national character and traits. We will have less of censorship worries then, and, I firmly believe, more business.

"When you mention the West most picture people think of the old-time Westerns that had little to recommend them other than their lively action. We have had comparatively few Western pictures produced with the art that directors now command. Exhibitors and patrons seem to have realized this more quickly than the manufacturers, and they are demanding pictures with the swift action and vigor of the old Westerns staged with up-to-date producing art.

"The West" that Kalem will show the picture followers in 'The Girl from Frisco' is a West that they have never seen. It is the new West of irrigation, oil fields, vast mining interests and so on. There will be no dime-novel cowboys, but there will be real, true-to-life cowpunchers of the West of today. And so on, all the way through, it will be a real portrayal of a real America, with healthy romance, adventure and action."

Interesting Gaumont Single Reels

How Naval Recruits Are Whipped Into Shape—Pictures of Watkins Glen and Thousand Islands are Features for Week of Aug. 13.

WHEN the pictures of life at the Newport training school for naval recruits were screened at the Gaumont studio, they were found so interesting that it was decided to make them a feature in a "Reel Life" release, rather than have them divide interest with "A Visit to a Duck Farm." Hence the latter was featured in the release of August 6, the reel being completed by "Masterpieces of Asiatic Architecture," and the short views, already announced, showing the making of palmetto leaf fans. "The Making of a Naval Recruit" now comes as the "Reel Life" release of August 13. On the same reel will be pictures of various species of dogs. Over a score of different kinds are shown, including such little known dogs as the barbacon, the butterfly porcelain and Morocco slougis.

The second single-reel of the week which Gaumont will release as a Mutual Picture is "See America First," August 16 bringing to the screen beautiful views of Watkins Glen, N. Y., and the Thousand Islands of the St. Laurence River. Watkins Glen is noted for its cascades, falls and pools, and these have been pictured with great care by a Gaumont cameraman. Among the views which will delight those who have visited the glen, bringing back pleasant memories, and be equally pleasing to those who have never visited the spot are cavern cascade, the cathedral, poet's dream falls, glen of the pools, rainbow falls and triple cascade, artist's dream, Pluto's falls, and spiral gorge.

On the same reel will be a Gaumont Kartoon Komic animated by Harry Palmer.

The third release of the week from the Gaumont studio will be the ever-popular Mutual Weekly.

Hearst Buys "Jaffery"

Frohman Amusement Corporation Disposes of Negatives for Distribution by International Film Service.

"JAFFERY," recently produced by the Frohman Amusement Corporation, has been secured by William R. Hearst as the first feature release for the International Film Service.

At an invitation performance of "Jaffery" given at the Strand, several weeks ago, one of Mr. Hearsts's representatives was present. He was so much impressed by this picture and the acting of the cast, headed by C. Aubrey Smith, that the film was sent by messenger to Mr. Hearst's summer residence near Hartford, Conn.

A special showing proved "Jaffery" to be the first picture out of some fifty features reviewed, in which Mr. Hearst found all the dramatic elements and qualities which he desired for the initial feature release of his company.

UNIVERSAL EASTERN STUDIOS BUSY.

The Universal eastern studios continue to keep busy despite the heat and rumor of their closing. Director Frank Smith is busy directing and playing the character lead in "The Professional Clubman," in which he is supported by Betty Page and Joseph Granby. Director Trinchera, recently engaged by the Universal, is at work on "The Tinselled Lady," in which Jack Newton and Jean Stuart play the leading roles, supported by James Harrison and Irma Dawkins. Robert F. Hill's company is busy on "The Urchin of the Sands," in which Helen Martin, Joseph Granby, Charles Slattery and Miss Duquette are cast. Lucius Henderson is filming "Masks," in which Mary Fuller appears, supported by Harry Benham. Director Edward Grandin is directing "Feud Renewed," in which Violet Mersereau stars, supported by Paul Panzer, Winthrop Chamberlain and Fraunie Fraunholz.

LEWIS-RABINOWITZ.

Miss Anna Rabinowitz, secretary to the manager of the New York branch of Bluebird Photoplays, Inc., and Julius Lewis, manager of the Supply Department, Universal Film Mfg. Co., were married on the roof of 1600 Broadway, on Thursday afternoon, July 27, in the presence of a large delegation of the employees of the Universal and Bluebird organization, Jack Cohen, manager of the Universal Animated Weekly, photographed the scene.

Motion Picture Educator

Conducted by REV. W. H. JACKSON and PROF. HARDIN LUCAS

A REVIEW OF THE WORK OF THE EDUCATIONAL FILM.

FROM time to time the Educator looks over the field of educational kinematography for the purpose of noting whatever advances have been made, what hindrances exist, and what may be the teachings of the experiences gained. The great fact of the sterling value of the pictures as teachers, and their powers in all kinds of educational work, has long ago passed from the theoretical or argumentative stage; they are universally acknowledged in schools, institutions and factories; their equally universal adoption is the next great question.

Advances. The general advances have been large, ignorance of the advantages have gradually given way to at least some little knowledge whereby it has become evident that the uses of the pictures possess more value than was at first supposed; prejudices are also being overcome by force of conviction. The very growth of the picture trade itself has been one of the factors commanding the attention of educational people, the subjects of recent films has added to this development, together with the names and reputation of those either responsible for or taking part in the work. It cannot but be expected that such films as "Seeing America" (Gaumont), also "Macbeth" by Sir Herbert Tree, must have more than a passing effect upon those who are watching the development of those pictures for the purpose of noting their effect upon the public mind. The growing power of the topical subjects which bring such a combination of news and information, with the added instruction from near and far, must be more and more felt everywhere. If these subjects can only be given a little more care in their preparation by the makers, they will increase greatly in value. Pictures showing the instructive side of the European war, also preparations in this country, have their educational value; the famous patriotic films which have been so popular have, when divested of that which might be subject to criticism, much of value in them. Pictures of travel and scenics have grown in number recently. Mention must be made of the fact that in many places school authorities and instructors have arisen to the needs of the occasion, and have given aid or encouragement to the development of educational kinematography. Another certain advance lies in the fact that for some time no new school or educational institution has been built or designed, which did not provide for the use of the moving picture machine; the time has come when an architect would no more think of excluding the moving picture from his plans than he would think of excluding light and heat; this is in itself a great testimony.

Hindrances. While very apparent, hindrances will be more difficult to tabulate. There is a something, somewhere, somehow, which is holding many school authorities back from adopting that power which is at their doors; what it is may not be easily discovered. While ignorance of and prejudice against the pictures as aids to teaching has largely been outgrown, it has not by any means entirely vanished.

Lack of appropriations rather than lack of funds is very often one cause of delay, difficulties in the way of fitting up old buildings is another; these, however, must of necessity gradually be overcome, therefore they cannot be considered as offering any definite or permanent hindrance. Too often, unfortunately, many school principals are their own enemies. Such a one writes that he cannot use the pictures "unless they have synchronized talks with them"; how pitiably helpless such a man must be. Another wants "all the subjects classified and graded," he asks for perfection and maturity in that which is yet in its infancy; another of the helpless kind. A large number find fault, saying, "there are not sufficient subjects ready." Well, considering there are upwards of ten thousand, it is difficult to know how many they want before they can begin; there are sufficient to give several lectures a day for several years without duplicating, to say nothing of those being added almost daily. It is surely absurd to say that a very instructive film on natural history is not acceptable because there happens to be nothing in the text book on that particular subject; or that the pictures on American history cannot be used because they do not just fit in with that which the class is studying.

The writer, who is familiar with all these pictures, does not know of one which cannot be made to profitably fit in with whatever is taught in the school courses. The writer has come to the conclusion, after much experience and correspondence, that LACK is the greatest hindrance, classifying them as Lack of Adaption, Lack of Appreciation and Lack of Appropriations; these out of the way and they will find no lack of films to help them—the supply is only waiting for the demand.

Experiences Gained. The first great experience gained lies in the fact that too many schools are claiming too much knowledge. Like the critic who could advise the creator how to make a better world, it is astonishing how many tell us in conventions and other places how to make and classify pictures; they really want to draw from us a confession "that we have done what we should not have done, and have left undone that which we should have done, therefore we are most miserable sinners," but our experience tells us that we have done the very best under the circumstances. The University of Wisconsin stands out as a rebuke against these helpless people who have not yet found themselves able to do a little to help themselves. Many plans have been tried whereby these and all others may be helped, but so far nothing has positively succeeded. A plan recently put out on this page has failed to meet with that success it should have commanded when it was known to have been put forth by an authority on such matters; several other helpful plans have met with similar discouragements. It almost seems as though we shall have to wait for another generation of teachers who shall have grown up in the atmosphere of the educational pictures in their youth before the educational picture can come entirely into its own place. It is, however, gratifying to relate that except for these hindrances to a more universal use of the pictures in educational work, there is a very large and growing use of the educational pictures in all parts of the country.

A Bright Outlook. Ten years ago the moving picture was looked upon as a possible aid to educationalism; then it was a prediction; to-day it has become fulfilled and is history, the educational picture is a fact. We speak of ADVANCES to encourage, we speak of HINDRANCES for the purpose of exposing them and overcoming them, we speak of EXPERIENCES for the mutual profit to be gained therefrom. When the war is over and there are neither "wars or rumors of wars" and there begins to flow again from Europe that steady stream of pictures from the studios of Pathe, Eclair and Gaumont like as of old, a new future will be born unto us. Meanwhile, we are not standing still; there is no more progress in any line more marked than in the development of educationalism through the general uses of the moving pictures and the educational ones in particular. It is wonderfully encouraging to read how in all parts of the world the moving picture is filling more than a "passing fancy" part.

To-day on the Mexican border the American soldier is at home with his picture exhibition, being taught and entertained thereby, learning his duties in the easiest and best possible way, making the irksome pleasant. At home everywhere the "home folks" are up to the minute in the knowledge of events, and the interest is unified everywhere. The scholar of any age is going daily to be picture-taught; too fast here, too slow there, we shall eventually average up; the laggards will be quickened, the slow of comprehension or adaption will perceive quickly, and the young will be taught together. From this time let those to whom the pictures are a necessity begin to make ready for the inevitable. "If inevitable, why not now?" reads a famous advertisement.

W. H. J.

Observations

BY OUR MAN ABOUT TOWN

TODAY is one of the most discouraging to those in the motion picture industry in the history of the business. Where the exodus created by the Mexican war scare has not been felt, we find the exodus to the vacation resorts exercising a discouraging effect upon the home people; and, in the eastern part of the country, we find the infantile paralysis working sad havoc upon which, to the winter houses, was a poor business. Many of them have closed. The open-air places have not suffered as much, but their losses are marked. The summer season of 1916 will be remembered by the people of the East (especially in New York and vicinity) as a most discouraging one. With the war and epidemic scourge they have also been obliged to contend with a season not only marked by rain, but with a humidity that had a marked effect. Truly, the month of July has been a severe test upon the endurance of the moving picture man. After the first of August we hope to see a pronounced change for the better. The conservative men who have seen the wisdom of closing their houses during the trying season will reap the benefit of a patronage from those who appreciate that the moving picture people were willing to act in full accord with the health and other municipal authorities and lose any receipts that might have been made at the box offices by closing their houses to all and guard against any communicative or infective agency. While it is true that many houses could have been kept open with a possible loss to the owners by the health board's restriction against the admission of children, it is nevertheless a credit to them that they closed their houses entirely for a few weeks to guard against any possible infection that might be carried by people beyond the age fixed by the Board of Health regulations. It goes to show that the moving picture people are willing to make a larger financial sacrifice than those who charge them with being arrayed against public interests will admit.

Have you read the returns from Chicago bearing upon the deliberations of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America convention? Order back numbers of all publications on this convention by special delivery. The proceedings overflowed with a spirit of independence and personal liberty that must command the admiration of everyone imbued with thorough democratic principles. In the first place, Mr. Lee Ochs was elected as the national president. Mr. Ochs is at present engaged in a fight against the so-called Blue Laws of the State of New Jersey. His election guarantees him the support of the New Jersey exhibitors against the enforcement of laws that permit the existence of frankfurter and near-beer stands and require the closing of the moving picture exhibitions next door. It is safe to assume that the wisdom of Mr. Ochs' administration will be enjoyed as well in Pennsylvania, Ohio and other states of the Union where the lead of a man of action has long been wanted.

The most important action taken by the Chicago convention was the indorsement of a federation of all motion picture branches, to be known as The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. The movement started several weeks ago now promises to be placed upon a most thriving footing. If nothing else, it shows a disposition to bring the manufacturer and exhibitor within the sphere of understanding, which must in time work to the advantage of both. But as the policy endorsed incorporates the welfare of every branch connected with the industry (even those under the caption of "miscellaneous"), we may hope to soon see something of true benefit to the industry as a whole.

* * *

One of the resolutions adopted at the convention must command the respect of all advocates of sound business principles and the lovers of home rule. This resolution provides that film exchanges shall not lease any pictures to a church, public school or others who may compete with an exhibitor, without consent of the exhibitor, and when such exhibitions are given they shall conform with all laws and local regulations. There is common sense in this demand. No church, public school or other institution, or organization, should be permitted to compete for patronage in a line of business for which there is a regulated procedure, especially when the party against whom the competition works is held to strict accountability to state and local regulations that do not technically affect the competitor. There is not an exhibitor who will not willingly lend his house within reason to any church, school, or any organization. He can afford occasionally to do this for the advertising of his own business. But when barn-storming and irresponsible motion picture exhibitors are permitted to enter a town and compete with a legitimate exhibitor under the guise of charity, or otherwise, it is time to call a halt. As a rule the programmes offered by the foragers are of an inferior scale; but the great inducements offered to the beneficiaries is such that the patronage is as good as a first-class show would attract. Sometimes the barnstormers, knowing the attractions offered by the regular exhibitors, will arrange special programmes. Special, or otherwise, the same regulations imposed upon the regular exhibitors should be enforced against the interlopers, and where the latter do not place themselves as exhibitors (where they really belong), no films should be leased to them without consent of the license paying business men.

Another resolution passed by the convention declares against the fabulous salaries paid to stars by film producing companies and asking that salaries paid players be based on a sliding scale with a maximum rate. At present writing it would seem that this resolution was inspired by the spirit of the convention for a national federation of all moving picture branches. Indeed, it is a strong point in favor of such a federation. To the ordinary mind it may be puzzling as to what interest the exhibitor has in the amount of salary a producer may pay to its stars. The exhibitor reasons that the greater the salaries paid certain players the greater the cost to him for the pictures in which those players appear. So, while to the ordinary mind what the producer pays is of no concern to the exhibitor, there is, after all, a decided connection of interests which emphasizes the importance of the exhibitor and producer getting together. The anti-trust and restriction of trade laws are of such a complicated nature that at this time it is impossible to state just what bearing the influence of exhibitors would have in dictating what salaries should be paid to players. The theory of combination of exhibitors and producers on this question might lead to a serious complication with an organization of players. But with the federation in force and meetings of all interests concerned that would be nothing upon which to base a protest against any producer fixing his salaries and other expenses to keep them within a limit that would secure the patronage of exhibitors and allow him a reasonable profit.

* * *

In this, then, we find another argument for a general federation which should include the players. The latter would have an opportunity to tell the producer and exhibitor what his or her services were worth. It would then be time to discuss the probable income from the use of a name or a license. If either of the latter should appear exorbitant the producer could intelligently decline to risk his capital. Should the exhibitors favor the player or the play the producer could proceed more intelligently and confidently than he does now. One thing foreshadowed by the convention's resolution is that the name of a player is no more important than the name of a play and the day when Mr. Great Star can command a great sum by reason of his name has passed.

* * *

All this brings us back to the thought that the motion picture business must settle down to a sane, business basis. The great stars of the stage did not bring it to its present standard. They only came in after prominent owners and managers in the legitimate line found the moving picture had caught the public. Up to this time the stars of the screen the people sought were those who had met almost indifferent success upon the stage, or were almost unrecognized in connection with it. Sight has been lost of the fact that with the advent of the great stage stars the mechanical and artistic end of moving picture production has advanced, and if all the great stage stars were to retire in a body today the studios have a reserve talent that would make good. The plea by the exhibitors against exorbitant salaries is not without reason. They speak from the pocket, and many, if not all producers, will agree with them. If the high salaried people could get the same money on the stage they would not be in moving pictures, and if the public will not stand the tax the producers must cut down.

PRESIDENT LAEMMLE ENTERTAINS BROTHERS.

President Carl Laemmle of the Universal is entertaining his brothers, Joseph and Louis, of Chicago, at his home, 378 West End avenue, this week. Mrs. Laemmle and son Julius are spending the summer at Fabian, N. H., in the White Mountains, with Mrs. Maurice Fleckles. They will not return until September.

The New Unicorn Program

An Announcement By Ike Schlank That It Will Be Strengthened By the Addition of Multiple-Reel Subjects

ANNOUNCEMENT is made by General Manager Ike Schlank, of the Unicorn Film Service Corporation, that a new multiple-reel feature program will be released by that organization in the near future.

"We are now arranging to release one five-reeler, three two-reelers and two three-reelers every week," said Mr. Schlank, "in addition to a number of single reels.

"Our decision to enlarge our field of operations was largely owing to the many requests from exhibitors to provide them with an entire program. We have been checking up such requests and find that they number more than twelve hundred.

"We are optimists concerning the future of the business," he continued, in answer to the query as to what he thought of the cry of over-production being raised in various quarters, "and our experience in single and double reels has proven, beyond the shadow of a doubt, that business in plenty awaits the good film. There is an over-production of poor film, and an under-production of good film. Four months ago if a man had predicted that the Unicorn would today be doing the business it has gained he would have been laughed at.

"We made no predictions. We just put out a good program and accomplished results. The business has reached a condition where the exhibitor is in a position to choose his service, and we propose to cater to him.

"The value of a picture is in its drawing power in the theater—the story and dramatic action. We don't want directors producing for Unicorn unless they can give 1,000 feet of action to each reel.

"We have moved very cautiously in the selection of our producing companies, and have been guided to a great extent by the directors employed. We have already arranged contracts and will make proper announcement when the entire organization is complete. I am sure that when the line-up is announced exhibitors will realize the pains we have taken to secure an aggregation of popular players and directors that know their business.

"It is needless to say that Unicorn service will go with our multiple reels. We do not stop with supplying a man with films, but we give him prompt and courteous attention. Our branch office managers are all men of ability and experience, and we are proud of our organization."

Olga Olonova

A NEW vampire is to make her appearance on the screen in the near future. She is not one of the so-called vampires, who is taken as a rule from the studio "extras," but is a vampire whose heritage has come down to her through several hundred years. She is a Russian and her name is Olga Olonova. She has been secured by President O. E. Goebel of the Consolidated Film Corporation and has already begun work in the strangest of all serial pictures, "The Crimson Stain Mystery."

Olga Olonova.

It was necessary to go into the heart of Russia to secure this young woman and it is a safe prediction to make that she will be the raging sensation of the motion picture world when her remarkable work is presented on the screen. She has the most remarkable history of any woman vampire that has up to this time appeared in public life. Each generation of her family since the fifteenth century has produced a vampire woman, each of whom was born under the weird Turtle moon.

Besides Miss Olonova, Maurice Costello and Ethel Grandin will portray the stellar roles in this sixteen-part serial, which will be released on the Metro program beginning August 21. The novelization of the serial is by Albert Payson Terhune, and the strange and remarkable story that unfolds during the course of the picture would do credit to the imagination of Edgar Allen Poe. T. Hayes Hunter is directing the production, and the photographing and technical details are under the personal supervision of Ludwig G. B. Erb.

ADLER'S METROPOLITAN PUBLICITY.

Bert Adler, assistant to Herbert Blache, is recalling his publicity stunts of days gone by through "jimmying" into the only two metropolitan papers that don't feature movie news. A controversy in the Globe, Saturday, between Mr. Blache and Mr. Sherwin, the Globe's dramatic critic (who is "down" on the picture manufacturers), netted three solid columns and a novel photographic interview with Gertrude McCoy covered two complete pages in the Sunday magazine of The Sun.

Sheldon Lewis

SHELDON LEWIS, or, as his acquaintances know him, "Shelly" Lewis, now under contract with the Frank Powell Productions, Inc., to star in the feature photoplay productions, is an actor of great ambition and no little achievement. He entered upon his stage career at a very early age, being especially well qualified for this work, due to his many successful appearances in amateur theatricals, while in school and college. Prior to his advent into the professional world, Mr. Lewis attained considerable reputation as an athlete of more than ordinary ability, and this excellent training often comes to his aid when called upon to depict parts calling for strength and agility.

Sheldon Lewis.

During his twenty years of stage experience he has been associated with such stars as Augustin Daly, Minnie Maddern Fiske, Mrs. Leslie Carter, Ada Rehan, Blanch Walsh and many others too numerous to mention in this limited space. Mr. Lewis has played over 500 different character parts in the various companies he has appeared with and when Pathe Company were casting about for an actor of known reputation and ability to play the extremely difficult part of the Clutching Hand in the "Exploits of Elaine," they were fortunate in signing up Mr. Lewis.

So successful was he in this part that at the culmination of the "Exploits of Elaine" he was immediately re-engaged for the title part in "The Iron Claw," their latest and most successful serial, with the result that Mr. Lewis is known from one end of the continent to the other.

Whenever he can find a spare hour or two he may be found on one of his yachts, and the many trophies to be seen at his country estate on the Palisades speak in glowing terms of his expertness as a yachtsman. He is a member of several theatrical organizations, among which may be mentioned the Lambs Club and the Screen Club. The Powell organization is to be congratulated upon securing the services of Mr. Lewis, who will appear in the first production of the newly formed corporation, sharing stellar honors with Creighton Hale and Linda A. Griffith.

Australian Notes

AUSTRALASIAN FILMS, LTD., have secured sole rights for the new Brady-World productions. At present the Co-operative Film Exchange has the rights for World productions, while Australasian Films have Equitable.

The latter firm states that they are determined to procure the best possible features for their patrons, and in getting Australian rights for these new productions, feel that they have made another step in this direction. They also handle Triangle, Bosworth, Pallas, Morosco, Gold Rooster, Vitagraph, Selig and Lubin features in this country.

The first of the Brady-World features to arrive will be "The Closed Road" and "Her Maternal Right."

Wirth's Hippodrome, the largest amusement house in Sydney, and heretofore used by Wirth's circus, is closing down very soon, and I believe that they may start to show high-class photoplays.

The Hippodrome was only opened about four months ago, and was built so as to suit either circus, dramatic, vaudeville, or picture entertainments. It has seating accommodation for 2,500 persons.

* * *

"The Battle Cry of Peace" is to be shown in Sydney at an early date under the title, "The Invasion." The season in Sydney will probably extend for a few weeks, as I understand it is to be presented as a special feature. This will be followed by screenings in the other capital cities of the Commonwealth.

Anthony Pugliese, a very interesting personage in the history of the motion picture in Australia, died last week in Sydney after a long illness.

Mr. Pugliese was one of the first in Australia to see the future of the "pictures" and he conducted a small show in Sydney many years ago. It was he who leased the Colonial Theater to J. D. Williams, and the latter made several alterations to the theater and opened it as the first continuous picture house in Australia. This was followed in quick succession by the erection of the Lyric, Empress and Crystal Palace Theaters.

Mr. Pugliese, on his death, was proprietor of two Sydney theaters, the Alhambra, a continuous house, and the Star, situated in Bondi, a near suburb.

The Waddington circuit of theaters are advertising that the following picture stars are appearing in their screenings this week: Mary Pickford, Charlie Chaplin, Theda Bara, Valeska Suratt, Dorothy Bernard and Victor Moore.

Little wonder that they're drawing the crowds.

The main attraction at the Triangle-Lyceum theater this week is Douglas Fairbanks in "His Habit of Happiness," a Fine Arts five-part comedy—and it is proving a big draw. Sydney picture fans are still laughing over "His Picture in the Papers," and Fairbanks has made a decided hit. The other features on the program are "The Stepping Stone," an Ince subject featuring Frank Keenan, and "The Worst of Friends," a Weberfields piece from the Keystone studios.

* * *

Other features being screened this week include: "She," an adaption of Sir Rider Haggard's novel by an English company. The fame of the novel, coupled with the fact that Sir Rider is at present visiting Australia, has proved a decided attraction, playing to S. R. O. at the Crystal Palace for a week; "The Little Gypsy," a Fox feature, presenting Dorothy Bernard to Australian picture audiences; "Chimmie Fadden Out West," a very fitting sequel to "Chimmie Fadden"; "Esmeralda," a splendid Mary Pickford feature; "Machiste," a foreign film featuring the giant of Cabiria, and, last, but certainly not least, "Charlie Chaplin's Burlesque on Carmen," which speaks for itself.

A good number of features have been screened in Melbourne this week, including: "Pasquale," a Morosco feature, which presents George Beban for the first time as a photoplay artist; "The Disciple," a Triangle Kay-Bee; "The Lily and the Rose" (Fine Arts) and "His Auto Ruination" (Keystone) constitute the current Triangle program; "The Waif," featuring Matty Roubert, and "Sold," with Pauline Frederick.

Griffith's spectacle, "The Birth of a Nation," is advertised to commence in Adelaide on Saturday next, the 24th inst. It will be presented by J. C. Williamson Ltd., at the Theater Royal in this city (the same as in Sydney and Melbourne). The rates of admission will be three shillings, two shillings, and one shilling (75 cents, 50 cents, and 25 cents). The picture is on for an unlimited season.

"The Frame-Up," "The Conqueror" and "Her Great Hour" are current screenings at city houses.

A meeting was held in Hobart, Tasmania, this week, to consider the matter of dealing with questionable picture films. Representatives of many religious and civic societies and bodies were present. The following letter from E. A. Stacey, chairman of the Picture Theaters Association, was read:

The managers of Hobart picture theaters view with pleasure the fact that a meeting of various organizations has been called with a view to moving for a Federal Board of Censorship, and take this opportunity of assuring that meeting of our wholehearted support in any action that may result in the formation of a Federal Board of Censors. Our association regrets that no representatives of the picture theaters were invited to attend the meeting called for that purpose.

Then followed one of the usual "hitting below the belt" speeches that these apostles seem to delight in. Dr. Crowther of the Medical Association said they had seen for some time past films shown that were a disgrace, and if they were to admit children of all ages to them, these pictures would do no end of mischief. There was more crime now among the young men than ever was before. Steps had been taken to deal with the trouble in Bavaria, where no one under 17 was allowed to enter a picture theater. He was not going to ask that a Bavarian system be established here, but it was high time they did something (Hear, hear). Little brats of children now spent their time reading penny dreadfuls and watching unhealthy pictures, and the influence could not be a good one. He was delighted to see that the picture proprietors were going to help. No doubt it was very hard for them to refuse a dirty film, or a suggestive film. This gentleman went on for some time in this strain, and I will not pass any remark on his "speech." This motion was carried unanimously:

That a deputation be formed to wait upon the local representatives in the Federal Department, or, if possible, upon Federal Ministers, asking them to appoint a board of censors for picture films immediately.

Mr. Connolly of the Theatrical Employees' Union opposed a suggested appeal to the State Government. His organization was not opposed to film censorship, but he would not say he had seen any indecent, or even suggestive pictures.

After several other persons had addressed the meeting, the chairman named several prominent men to constitute a deputation. The stand of the exhibitors may be possibly accounted for in the fact that there is no film exchange in Tasmania, and therefore everything must be procured from the mainland, usually Melbourne. Another thing is, the newspapers never have independent articles on the censorship question, in spite of the fact that they have many advertisements from film exchanges and theaters. This is noticeable throughout Australia, with the exception of Sydney, where the Sun newspaper printed a very strong editorial against the proposed Board of Censors for New South Wales.

NEW ENGLAND TRIP FOR EDITOR OF MUTUAL WEEKLY.

Combining business and pleasure, Pell Mitchell, editor of the Mutual Weekly, has just returned to the Gaumont studios from a week spent in New England. As the guest of the Gaumont Boston representative, B. F. Coolidge, Mr. Mitchell toured from Boston to a number of summer resorts on the Maine coast. The party was representative of the news-gathering end of the film industry, since several Boston cameramen made the trip with Mr. Mitchell. Those in the party were James Hutchinson, Selig-Tribune; Richard Sears, International Film Service, and J. E. Coolidge, Pathe.

After the Maine outing Mr. Mitchell visited Narragansett Pier for the tennis and polo games, accompanied by B. F. Coolidge. He then went to Newport, where an entire reel was made of the activities of the recruits at the naval training station. This is for release as a feature of "Reel Life," the Mutual Magazine in Film.

HENRY OTTO'S ASSISTANT MADE DEPUTY SHERIFF.

Bennett A. Molter, assistant to Henry Otto, who directs Harold Lockwood and May Allison in Metro-Yorke feature productions, has become a deputy sheriff of Los Angeles County. He was sworn in with the utmost pomp and ceremony by Sheriff John H. Cline.

Kemble Offers War Pictures

"America Preparing" and "Zeppelin Raids on London and Siege of Verdun" Will be Disposed of on State Right Basis.

"AMERICA PREPARING" and "Zeppelin Raids on London and Siege of Verdun" are to be sold on the state rights basis, according to William H. Kemble, president of the Kemble Film Corporation, who produced the film. The first production, which had a highly successful run at the Lyric theater, was made by the authority of the Federal Government, and is a complete and remarkably interesting portrayal of every branch of our military service. The scenes showing "Our Boys" drilling, playing in camp, and finally on active service in Mexico, are said to be most thrilling, and that portion of the film relating to the naval arm of the service contains numerous scenes that have never before been shown. Interposed in the picture are touches of comedy, pathos and human interest—flashes that bring a smile to the lips, or a tear to the eye.

Scene from "America Preparing" (Kemble).

Mr. Kemble stated that the rights to New York State will be retained for exploitation by the Kemble Film Corporation. It is also understood that some very fine lithographed posters have been prepared for the production, together with a complete press and sample advertisement sheet, besides a full line of other advertising aids.

"The Zeppelin Raids on London and the Siege of Verdun," a five-part war film, also has been offered for distribution on the state rights basis by the Kemble Film Corporation. Some of the scenes in the picture were made at night, the great airships being photographed by the light of hundreds of searchlights whose shafts of light were thrown into the sky immediately on the sounding of the alarm that the dreaded Zeppelins were coming.

The section of the picture dealing with the Siege of Verdun, which is regarded by many military experts as the turning point in the great war, is equally interesting.

Unity Serial in West

United Film Service Pays $100,000 for the Western Rights of "The Yellow Menace."

D. J. CHATKIN, vice-president of the United Film Service, whose main offices are in Chicago, with branches throughout the West, closed last week what bids fair to be one of the largest exchange film contracts ever made, with Andrew J. Cobe, vice-president of the Unity Sales Corporation. Under the terms of this contract the United Film Service Company, purchased for $100,000 the rights on the "Yellow Menace" serial for fourteen Western states, including Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, Wyoming, New Mexico, Utah, California, Nevada, Arizona, Washington, Oregon, Idaho and Montana.

The United Film Service Company already operates offices in the most important cities in this territory, and in addition will establish other branches so as to successfully handle "The Yellow Menace" and other forthcoming productions. Aside from the regular advertising campaign put out, the United Film Service Company will conduct a tremendous advertising campaign on their own account.

Mr. Chatkin, who is well known to exhibitors in his territory, will shortly leave Chicago for a swing around the branch offices of his company to personally superintend the sales and publicity on this serial. In discussing the deal Mr. Chatkin said: "We will back the exhibitor in every way to make 'The Yellow Menace' a success for him. This serial will have more newspaper advertising, billboard display and general publicity than any other picture yet put out. We are prepared to receive reservations from exhibitors in our Kansas City, Denver and Seattle offices. Showing will be arranged for in all the principal cities of the West immediately."

Bluebirds Galore This Season

Schedule of Subjects Is Well Filled for Several Weeks to Come.

THE arrangement of Bluebirds for several weeks to come has been definitely fixed, and there is an abundant supply of features ready for future release. It is the purpose of the Bluebird management to start the regular theatrical season with a series of plays that will give the exhibitor good material with which to combat the dramatic and vaudeville houses in the battle for early-season patronage.

To this end the program has been varied and made attractive through draughts upon the ample resources of these producers with a specific purpose in view—to fulfill the promises made in Bluebird's national advertising campaign and to prove to the play-going public that the play is verily "the thing."

The scehdule for the last two weeks of August and the first fortnight in September will afford four features that the Bluebird people claim will convince the most skeptical "film fan" that the play itself is the foundation of good entertainment.

The heroine of "Shoes," beautiful Mary MacLaren, will have Phillips Smalley for her leading man in "Saving the Family Name," to be issued Sept. 11. Lois Weber provided the scenario and directed the production and the Bluebird publicity department declares that the popular verdict will place this feature as the best release in the series. The idea of the story was adapted from the work of Evelyn Heath, but Lois Weber has interjected copiously the products of her own originalities.

On Sept. 4 "A Miracle of Love" will be exhibited with Dorothy Davenport and Emory Johnson will have the leading roles with Richard Morris, Mattie Witting and Alfred Allen. The scenario by Eugene B. Lewis was based on Elwood Hemmings's printed story, and Lloyd B. Carleton directed the production.

Lynn F. Reynolds devised the story and scenario of "The Girl of Lost Lake," to be released Aug. 28. Myrtle Gonzalez, Val Paul and Fred Church will be featured in a company that also includes George Hernandez, Bertram Grassby, Ruby Cox, Jack Connelly, Jack Curtis, Bobby Mack and Mary Du Cello. Mr. Reynolds directed his own production.

Announcement has already been made of "Little Eve Edgarton," with Ella Hall and Herbert Rawlinson, for Aug. 21, and "Bettina Loved a Soldier," the Bluebird for Aug. 14, which carries three stars, Rupert Julian, Louise Lovely and Francelia Billington.

Another Balboa-Pathe Serial

Will Consist of Fifteen Two-Reel Installments—Ruth Roland and Henry King Featured.

BALBOA will immediately begin the production of another continued screen story for Pathe, thus maintaining the undisputed distinction of being "the house of serials." The contract was closed by H. M. Horkheimer, president and general manager of the Long Beach, Cal., studio, just before he left for the coast, last week.

"The new serial," said Mr. Horkheimer, "promises to be one of the most novel pieces ever screened. I know this promise sounds trite, since the same thing has been said of almost every other photoplay, in advance. But really, this time I believe we have something out of the ordinary.

"The production will consist of fifteen two-reel installments, for which the synopses are being furnished by one of the best-known newspaper women writers in America. Her subject matter is the one thing talked most of in every home in the land. You can guess for yourself what it is. I am not at liberty to reveal it any further, at this stage of the game.

"Will M. Ritchey, Balboa's veteran scenario editor, will develop the scripts, and the leading parts will be taken by Ruth Roland and Henry King. This will be their first reunion since the success of "Who Pays," which we made more than a year ago. Ever since, there has been a constant demand for them from exhibitors and film patrons."

Selznick Increases Operations

Adds Herbert Brenon Film Corporation with Nazimova and Mary Garden to Clara Kimball Young Productions.

THROUGH the acquisition of the Herbert Brenon Film Corporation with its two great stars, Nazimova and Mary Garden, Lewis J. Selznick this week fulfilled his long-announced intention to enlarge his scope of action to include other stars than Miss Clara Kimball Young.

The news of the deal between Messrs. Brenon and Selznick is of some importance to the film industry as it increases Mr. Selznick's power as a champion of the open booking system to most formidable proportions. With three such dominant dramatic personages as Clara Kimball Young, Mme. Nazimova and Mary Garden on the open market in film features, the program manufacturers may well regard Mr. Selznick as a competitor.

By the agreement entered into between Brenon and Mr. Selznick, the latter becomes a partner in the producing company, the Herbert Brenon Film Corporation. All the productions of this concern will be distributed exclusively through the channels of the Lewis J. Selznick Enterprises, Inc., on a plan identical with that under which the Clara Kimball Young Film Corporation features are to be released. Mr. Selznick's system of exchanges now covers practically the entire country. By the time the first of his pictures is ready for release in October, the remaining territory will have been closed, as well as all foreign agencies.

Scene from "The Common Law" (C. K. Y.).

Mme. Nazimova will begin work next week on the production of "War Brides." Miss Young is already well advanced with the filming of Robert W. Chambers' novel, "The Common Law," at the new Blache studio in Fort Lee. The scenario for her second picture, an adaptation of Thomas Dixon's popular novel, "The Foolish Virgin," is ready for production, and Director General Albert Capellani is selecting his assistants in order to begin work on this picture when half way through with "The Common Law'.'

Selig Athletic Series

Features "Chick" Evans, Jake Schaffer, Ed Renny and Other Notables in World of Sport.

Charles (Chick) Evans, who recently won the National Amateur Golf Championship from over fifty of the greatest golf players in the United States and Canada, appears in the fifth reel of the Selig Athletic Series, being released through the V-L-S-E.

"Chick" Evans has long been among the golf leaders of the country, but up to this year had always met defeat in the national tournaments, either in the finals or semi-finals. His defeats were invariably taken with a smile, however, and when he came out on top this year each and every golfer in the country joined in congratulations.

Jake Schaffer, son of the late "Wizard" Schaffer, who, in the opinion of billiard experts, is destined for big things in balk line billiards, is presented in a match with Harry Cline of Philadelphia. Marvelous masse, draw and follow shots are demonstrated in the contest.

Ed Renny, winner of the three-mile walk at San Francisco Stadium, is seen winning the strenuous pedestrian contest from a large field of competitors. Renny is the only man in the country pushing the famous Goulding for walking honors.

A burlesque wrestling match between Kaila Pasha, the Americanized Turk, and Jack Dribbs, is side-splitting. Both men, although expert wrestlers, stage a travesty in which many strange and startling holds are exemplified.

The final event is a bowling contest on the green. The games are played on the lawn of the Crescent Club of Brooklyn. Not only are the fine points of the game presented, but a close-up view of William H. Herbert, bowling champion, is shown, together with his trophies.

"The Fall of a Nation" in South America

Two Productions to Be Made by Roy Chandler and Thomas Dixon, Jr., with Headquarters in Buenos Aires.

ARRANGEMENTS have been completed between the National Drama Corporation and Roy Chandler, head of the Roy Chandler amusement enterprises in South America, to present immediately two elaborate productions of "The Fall of a Nation" in that territory. The South American premiere of the Dixon-Herbert spectacle will take place at Buenos Aires early in September, and the musical features will be even more elaborate than those of "The Birth of a Nation" when Thomas Dixon's earlier story was first presented to a South American assemblage in that great capital. The Victor Herbert music will be played by a real grand opera orchestra of seventy pieces. Ed. V. Giroux, general manager of the National Drama Corporation, said yesterday:

"In arranging with Mr. Chandler to book South America, we realize that 'The Fall of a Nation' has a world-wide significance for all republics that may be menaced by the might of European militarism. Besides the deep interest in the international theme, Mr. Herbert's operatic score will possess a decided novelty to the music-loving South Americans. Two productions, fully as sumptuous as the New York and Chicago ones, will be made—one to tour the east coast and the other the west coast of the continent. Among the cities visited will be Buenos Aires, Montevideo, Rosario, Sao Paulo, Rio de Janeiro, Bahia, and on the west coast Santiago, Valparaiso, Concepcion, Lima, Iquique and Panama."

Scene from "The Fall of a Nation."

The headquarters of the South American agency of "The Fall of a Nation" will be Casilla Correo 1759, Buenos Aires. Mr. Chandler and Thomas Dixon, Jr., a son of the playwright, sail for the Argentine metropolis on the steamship leaving New York July 29. For eighteen years Chandler has specialized in show management in the regions on the other side of the equator. He has taken thither some of the greatest musical stars, spectacular productions, circuses, hippodromes and dramatic and vaudeville features.

F. A. WAGNER, V-L-S-E SALESMAN, PROMOTED.

F. A. Wagner, salesman in the San Francisco branch office of the V-L-S-E, one of the livest men in that organization, was promoted last week to the membership of the sub-office of Salt Lake City, to succeed R. M. Bertleson, who was forced to resign that position because of ill health.

In assuming the managership of the Salt Lake City suboffice, Mr. Wagner will come under the direct supervision of Frank Harris, Denver manager. Succeeding Mr. Wagner in his San Francisco post will be M. C. Wilder, booker of that branch office.

Manufacturers' Advance Notes

CHAPLIN IN "ONE A. M."

Charles Chaplin, in his latest comedy entitled "One A. M.," for release August 7, presents on the screen a large number of things that he did not learn from a correspondence school.

It is rather well known that Mr. Chaplin is a young person of the most extreme sobriety, but "One A. M." leads one to the belief that some time in his life Mr. Chaplin has observed somebody who drank.

Scene from "One A. M." (Mutual).

But we can lay aside the question of where Mr. Chaplin got his dramatic material; the certainty is that he got it. It may be left to the judgment of the fastidious public whether or not Mr. Chaplin knows about those weird fantasies and grotesque happenings that sleep in bottles and awake in glasses.

The writer has it on the authority of a number of persons who ought to know that Mr. Chaplin can delineate with accuracy that rare and exotic state of mind and body known to science as "the stew" and variously otherwise termed "a skate," "spiffed," "pickled," "hardboiled," "ossified," "ori-eyed," "comfusticated" or "dazed." Those familiar with this glorified condition offer every assurance that Mr. Chaplin is histrionically correct. The writer, while naturally conservative, is inclined to accept the opinion of experts.

The story of "One A. M.," which deals with Chaplin's adventures in the home of a bachelor friend whose hobby is collecting stuffed animals, in itself is excruciatingly funny, but when combined with the art of the comedy star it becomes a continuous laugh.

GAUMONT HARD AT WORK ON TABLOIDS.

The innovation of tabloid dramas promised for "Reel Life," the Mutual Film Magazine manufactured by the Gaumont company, is meeting with favorable comment from all who have seen on the screen the pre-release showings of several of these Lilliputian photoplays. They are dramatizations of episodes which have all the vim and surprise of an O. Henry story. Edwin Middleton is directing these "short lengths," and is never more than two days in recording one. As work at the Gaumont studio is practically continuous, it will not be long before there are sufficient on hand to meet the one-a-week requirements for the next half year.

A couple who are playing in these tabloids with marked success are John Hopkins and Iva Shepard. They are ideally suited to each other in type, and make a strikingly handsome couple. Another well-known player who is in evidence when a comedian is required is "Budd" Ross. Mr. Ross is particularly successful, since he is able to secure comic effects with such rapidity that a great deal of laughter can be crowded into a few feet of film when he is on the screen.

The first of these "Reel Life" episodes will probably be released about the middle of August.

HAND-TO-HAND FIGHTING IN MUTUAL WEEKLY.

Some extremely interesting pictures have come from "somewhere in France" for Mutual Weekly No. 83, manufactured by the Gaumont company. These show how hand grenades are handled in dealing death and destruction and also in forming a smoke-curtain behind which troops can advance with greater chances of success. The compressed-air guns, which hurl grenades farther than they can be thrown by hand, are shown in operation.

The greatest of New York pitchers has passed into history, and Mutual Weekly No. 83 now pictures the advent of Christy Mathewson as manager of the Cincinnati "Reds." Other sporting events include the semi-annual field day of the men of the Atlantic Fleet at Newport, R. I., and the interstate trapshooting tournament at Holmesburg, Pa., in which John Philip Sousa took part.

SIX AMERICAN FEATURES COMING.

Six five-act features to be released in forthcoming months as Mutual Star Productions and Mutual Masterpictures, De Luxe Edition, are now in preparation at the American studios in Santa Barbara, Cal. A galaxy of stars, headed by Richard Bennett, Mary Miles Winter, Audrey Munson, Kolb and Dill, recent additions to the American-Mutual forces and such favorites of Mutual feature releases as William Russell, Charlotte Burton, Franklin Ritchie, Winnifred Greenwood and various others are to be presented in these new feature releases.

The titles are: "Youth's Endearing Charm," "The Sable Blessing," "Dulcie's Adventure," "Three Pals," "Land of the Lizards," "The Torch Bearer."

KALEM STAGES OWN AUTO RACE.

After waiting close to a month for the production of the final scene for "Hurled Through the Drawbridge," in hopes that a real auto race might be held on the Coast, Director James Davis finally decided to hold a race of his own, solely for his picture. A dozen racing cars and professional chauffeurs were engaged in San Francisco and Los Angeles, and the day declared a holiday at Glendale.

Over a thousand sightseers from Los Angeles and Glendale were on hand for the day of the race which had been widely advertised. The event was won by Glen Gano, the well known Pacific Coast aviator and equally famous auto racer. Director Davis had a battery of ten cameras stationed at various points about the twenty-five mile course, and secured a number of thrilling scenes for the single reelers featuring Helen Gibson.

Scene from "Hurled Through the Drawbridge" (Kalem).

The railroad equipment at the "Hazards of Helen" studio will soon be sufficient to start a good sized road with the recent addition made by Kalem. The most recent purchase is that of the club car formerly dubbed the "millionaire's special" on the Salt Lake Railway, where it was used only for deluxe trips. The car will furnish a lavish setting for coming episodes of the "Hazards."

"THE GOLD SHIP" (Selig).

James Oliver Curwood has written a wonderful story in "The Gold Ship," a Selig special, released through General Film in regular service on Monday, August 7. The story is somewhat reminiscent of "Treasure Island," carrying, as it does, the tang of the salt sea and a hint of the reckless deeds of bold buccaneers of olden days.

Captain Roscoe, master of a sailing vessel, rescues a crippled boy, Joe, and his little dog from the hands of intoxicated seamen, and takes him aboard his ship. Gold bars are the cargo of Captain Roscoe's vessel. A rascally clerk in the company's offices plots with the crew to capture the vessel and take the gold. How the cripple boy and a beautiful young girl circumvent the plottings of the mutineers after Captain Roscoe is made helpless from his wounds; how a passing steamer is signaled and arrives just in time to save the three, and how Captain Roscoe learns to understand that the girl who risked her own life to save him is no longer a child but a woman who loves him, are in brief the highlights in this wonderful drama. The scenic effects are many and varied. Particularly beautiful are the scenes showing the sailing vessel at sea. Harry Mestayer is supported by Edith Johnson and Sidney Smith.

"WORTH WHILE" (Essanay).

While the play carries a strong love theme, it is unique in showing prison life as it actually exists at the Illinois State Penitentiary at Joliet, most of the scenes having been taken in the prison and about the grounds of the institution. The story is woven about the life of a young broker whose business is smashed by a rival and who finally is falsely imprisoned for theft. Bryant Washburn, who plays the role of the young man, was actually taken to the penitentiary in handcuffs. There he was put through the regular formula the prisoner undergoes in being registered and assigned to his cell. In the prison he mingles with the other prisoners and the entire routine of prison life is shown, centering about Washburn, including the men at work, at their meals, etc. Marguerite Clayton takes the leading feminine role. She is the ward of the young broker, who is successful until a wealthier man falls in love with the ward. Finding that the girl loves her guardian he ruins him and causes him to be sentenced on a trumped up charge. The girl traps him into confessing whereupon she obtains a pardon for the man she loves and goes joyously to the prison to set him free.

Scene from "Worth While" (Essanay).

NEW POWER'S MACHINES FOR LABORATORIES.

A new Power's 6A Cameragraph projector has just been installed by the Picture Theater Equipment Company of 1604 Broadway, New York, to be used in the laboratories of the New York Motion Picture Corp., at their Ft. Lee, N. J., plant. The machine is equipped with special lenses, motor drive, and has a special rheostat, grid type, adjustable from 15 to 45 amperes. By merely turning the contact handle the operator can either increase or lower the amperage on a second's notice.

"THE BATTLE OF CHILE CON CARNE" (Universal).

'Twas a terrific fight and no one knows it better than General Tortila Enchilada, who stands in the foreground reading a dispatch. On his right is the famous war correspondent, Ferdinand Archibald von Piffle, who loves to write about himself and his adventures while sitting in his hotel room at El Paso.

Archibald comes down to the border and joins the bandits under General Enchilada. Immediately he has some variegated adventures. A Mexican senorita of marvelous beauty enters into his life and Archibald falls hard. At once he incurs the enimity of the Portugese highbinder in command of the Guanajato Apaches.

Fortunately, at a critical juncture in Archibald's young life, the Constitutionally incapable troops of General Carramba attack General Enchilada and the great battle of Chile Con Carne takes place.

Some war correspondents declare that this battle never took place, but Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran were both there, and if you don't believe them, the story can be verified by Priscilla Dean. All three went through the battle and can be addressed at Universal City, Cal., regarding the details.

Scene from "The Battle of Chile Con Carne" (Universal).

"THE STRONGER LOVE" (Morosco).

The initial Vivian Martin subject to be released by the Oliver Morosco Photoplay Company as a result of the long term agreement recently consummated between this popular star and the west coast producers, has been completed and will be shown in Paramount houses commencing August 14th. The title of Miss Martin's first Morosco subject is "The Stronger Love," a photoplay in which this winsome little actress offers a characterization of deep heart interest, such as she has presented to best advantage in the past.

"The Stronger Love" presents a drama of the mountains by Alice von Saxmar and was staged chiefly among the beautiful pine forests at the top of the San Bernardinos under the direction of Frank Lloyd. The usual Morosco photography of excellence has been attained by Cameraman Jim Van Trees, who is responsible for many of the beautiful photographic displays evidenced in recent Morosco subjects. Artistic lightings of natural beauty together with picturesque backgrounds are among the features of this subject.

The story tells of Nell, a mountain girl, who is reached by the spirit of progress to the extent of rebelling gainst the sordid conditions and stifling scope of her life. Although different than her people, she yet retains a great love for her own kind. The story ends in a most unusual way that will grip the audience with its logic. As Nell, the beautiful little girl of the great backwoods, Vivian Martin presents a character that will gain her immediate popularity among the patrons of Paramount Pictures throughout the country. Supporting her is an exceptional cast, including Edward Peil, William W. Jefferson, Louise A. Emmonds, Alice Knowland, Herbert Standing and John McKinnon.

Trade News of the Week

GATHERED BY OUR OWN CORRESPONDENTS

"You See, It's Like This," Says Swan

And Then the Pittsfield (Ill.) Exhibitor Proceeds to Reveal Details of His Business Which Would Seem to Furnish Small Ground for a Tax of Any Kind, Certainly Not $1.50 a Night—Not a Philanthropist, Just a "Nut."

By Frank H. Madison, 623 South Wabash Avenue, Chicago.

PITTSFIELD, Ill.—The Moving Picture World last week printed the story of how some members of the city council here tried to put through a measure taxing Burr Swan's picture show $1.50 a night. While the proposal failed of securing a majority, following a heated discussion and the announcement of one alderman that he would resign, a suggestion was made that a conference with Mr. Swan be arranged in an effort to learn what would be a reasonable tax.

Mr. Swan, it seems, is a publisher of a live weekly newspaper as well as the exhibitor of motion pictures at the Knights of Pythias opera house. In the latest issue of the Republican, Editor Swan interviews Exhibitor Swan. It makes interesting reading even for those exhibitors whose houses are far removed from Pittsfield, which, let it be borne in mind, has a population of 2,095.

It is hardly likely after this frank expose of the financial returns from the opera house there will be any further attempt to impose a local tax on Exhibitor Swan, whose figures seem to prove that just at present he is conducting a motion picture house "for the fun of it." Mr. Swan denies that he is posing as a philanthropist and admits that he is merely "a nut."

The statistics may be illuminating to those Congressmen who would impose a blanket tax on all motion picture theaters, not all the proprietors of which own a weekly newspaper or other business from which to make up the deficit which may exist in the returns from the theater.

Here is the "interview":

Q. What does it cost to run your picture show? A. From $110 to $120 per week.

Q. How much do you pay for help? A. Thirty-seven dollars a week.

Q. What is your net profit. A. For the past six months less than I have paid my picture machine operator; a trifle more than I have paid my janitor.

Q. Do not evade, Mr. Swan, what was your net profit for the past six months? A. $282.88.

Q. If there is no more profit then why do you stay in the business? A. Because I like it, and like to keep busy.

Q. Will you sell? A. Yes.

Q. How much? A. The invoice price of my stuff.

Q. Why don't you run only three nights a week—wouldn't you make more money? A. Yes, but I like to keep good help employed full time; and I like to have my patrons feel that the picture show is always open.

Q. Are you trying to pose as a philanthropist? A. No—merely "a nut."

Q. Do you think you should pay a license for running your picture show. A. No more than I should for running my newspaper.

Q. How much money did you have in the house when you showed Geraldine Farrar in "Temptation"? A. $41.70.

Educational Program Yields $5.05.

Q. How much money did you take in on your educational program the same week? A. $5.05.

Q. What do your "juice" bills run? A. $25 to $30 a month.

Q. How much do your films cost a week? A. $45 to $50.

Q. What did they cost four and five years ago? A. $15 to $20 a week.

Q. What did your rent cost five years ago? A. $250 a year.

Q. What does it cost now? A. $500 a year.

Q. Do you do more gross business now than then? A. No.

Q. What did your help cost five years ago? A. $17.50 per week.

Q. Have other operating costs increased in about the same proportion A. Yes.

Q. How much money did you make last week, for instance? A. My receipts were $129.10; my expenses were $129.39.

Q. How much did the fans in the opera house cost (installed)? A. About $500.

Q. How much coal do you burn in winter? A. On an average, about two and a half tons a week.

Q. What do you think the Pittsfield city council should do about charging you a license to run your picture show? A. I think the alderman should find out whether the people of Pittsfield want to charge me a license. If any considerable number of Pittsfield people want me to pay a license the council would be certainly justified in charging a license.

Q. How may the council find out? A. By asking the people.

Swan Always Has His Eye on the Ball.

Q. Will you ever get "The Birth of a Nation" in Pittsfield? A. Yes.

Q. When? A. Monday and Tuesday, September 4-5, afternoons and night.

Q. Will this be the real "Birth of a Nation," the same as shown in big cities? A. Yes.

Q. Do you realize, Mr. Swan, that you have laid bare a good many of the inside facts about your business, and that most business men consider that such a course is bad business. A. Certainly I do.

Q. Why, then, do you do it? A. Because I don't always do business just as other men do, and I never in my life lost a nickel by looking a man square in the eye and telling him the truth.

Mr. Swan has found out the license fees in other cities. The cities, population and rates follow:

Rushville, Ill., Population, 2,422; $15 a year.

White Hall, Ill., Population, 2,854; none charged.

Barry, Ill., Population, 1,647; $10 a year, vaudeville allowed.

Bowling Green, Mo., Population, 1,585, $5 for each six months.

Virginia, Ill., Population, 1,501; ordinance not enforced.

Jacksonville, Ill., Population, 15,431; $50 a year.

Virden, Ill., Population, 4,000; 5-cent houses, $50 a year, 10-cent houses $100 a year.

Hillsboro, Ill., Population, 3,424; $60 a year in advance.

Petersburg, Ill., Population, 2,587; $12 a year.

Mt. Sterling, Ill., Population, 2,065; $25 a year.

Winchester, Ill., Population, 1,639; No license.

Clearing House for Atlanta

Exchange Men to Fortify Themselves Against the Unscrupulous.

By A. M. Beatty, 43 Copenhill Avenue, Atlanta.

IT is stated there is being formed in Atlanta a credit clearing house among the film exchanges, modeled along the lines of associations of like character in all the principal film distributing centers in the country. This step is being taken to guard the exchangemen against the sub-renter, the fly-by-night manager and the general dead beat; through this organization it is thought thousands of dollars will be saved to the exchangemen by being able to secure a definite line on the credit of the southern exhibitors in general. The exhibitor who is good pay will welcome this kind of an organization covering the southern states, as it will give a definite indication of his good standing.

Hardcastle Manager and Actor, Too.

Very few Atlantians knew that "in their midst" was one who was a real bona fide moving picture actor. Ted Hardcastle, manager in Atlanta for the George Kleine attractions, and also manager of the Piedmont theater, is the man. During the past week there was shown at the Georgian theater a photoplay entitled "Across the Border," which was made in Denver, Col. Mr. Hardcastle not only directed the picture, but acted the leading part. Mr. Hardcastle was present at the theater and explained many interesting facts about the taking of the picture and how the leading woman and the cameraman both lost their lives in the making.

Anti-Tuberculosis Film Draws Crowds.

Open air moving pictures being shown by the anti-tuberculosis association as an aid in the fight against tuberculosis are continuing with unabated success, drawing great crowds, in spite of daily rains. The pictures have been shown mostly in negro sections, and the lectures on the pictures have been given by negro doctors, who affiliate with the anti-tuberculosis work. The programs always include, besides educational films, comic and other purely entertaining pictures.

Manager Smith Campaigning.

A three cornered fight is on in the fourth ward of the city of Atlanta for Alderman. Col. B. Lee Smith, manager of the Strand theater, and formerly with the V-L-S-E, is one of the candidates. Col. Smith is an old campaigner, and has an excellent prospect of being elected. It is well the moving picture interests in Atlanta are awakening to the fact that they should be represented in the city government by some one who will look after their welfare, and no one will do it better or more loyally than Col. Smith.

Notes of the Trade.

A 1916 model car was stolen from in front of the Piedmont theater recently. The automobile was owned by Manager B. T. Hardcastle of the Piedmont theater.

For the benefit of the Friend Rescue Mission, on Decatur street, who take care of derelicts, the Grand theater gave a benefit show Sunday. "The Christian" was shown, it being donated by the V-L-S-E.

General Humidity Closes Buffalo Theaters

A Dozen Houses Shut Down and Others Decide on Half-Time for a Brief Spell—News from Western New York.

By Joseph A. McGuire, 5 Lewis Block, Buffalo.

BUFFALO, N. Y.—Extreme heat has been responsible for the closing of several moving picture theaters in Buffalo. Despite the use of the latest devices to keep the houses cool and ventilated, the attendance lately has been reaching the lowest level. On account of a long, unbroken spell of hot weather and an abundance of humidity, moving picture-goers of this city have sought rest and recreation at the cool lake and river resorts in the vicinity of Buffalo. This exodus of Buffalonians and the tendency of the "stay-at-homes" to visit parks instead of theaters have had a depressing effect on boxoffice receipts and several of the managers decided that rather than lose money for the next three or four weeks it would be better to give their staffs as well as their patrons a brief respite.

Among the Buffalo houses that have closed are the Elmwood, Allendale, New Victoria, Circle, Ellen Terry, Family, Frontier, Fillmore, Como and Linden. Decorators will brighten up several of the houses, now that the doors have been temporarily closed, and patrons will find their favorite moving picture theaters spic and span when business opens with a rush in a few weeks.

On account of the intense heat several of the theaters in the towns and villages in the vicinity of Buffalo are giving shows only three nights a week. The theater attaches are glad to get the half-week vacations and on show nights return to their positions with renewed vigor.

Somerville Will Not Shut Down.

Harry Somerville reports that he will not close the Happy Hour, Buffalo, during the hot weather this summer. The Happy Hour is a 5-cent moving picture house in the downtown district. This theater has been attractively decorated inside and out.

Harry Somerville.

"Every day we have a new show, which consists of a four-reel feature service," said Mr. Somerville. "We have a well-trained, dependable staff because we do not frequently change our help. We receive plenty of transient trade. Many of the department store employes visit our house between 12 and 1 p. m."

Mr. Somerville has been manager of the Happy Hour for three months. Among the other theaters he has managed are the Family and Airovict, Buffalo; Plaza, Chicago; Coliseum, Chicago Heights, and Orpheum, Jacksonville, Fla.

Film Men Call on Christoffers.

Leon Brick, former manager of the Regent theater, Buffalo, was a recent caller on Manager Christoffers of the Mutual. Mr. Brick is manager of the Regent theater, Toronto. The Regent is a high-class house, with a seating capacity of 1700. The prices of admission are 15 up to 35 cents. Another caller on Mr. Christoffers was H. E. Smith of New York City.

Mr. Christoffers recently had an interesting visit from W. J. Hayes, proprietor and manager of the Strand theater, located in Main street, Erie, Pa. Mr. Hayes is one of Erie's leading citizens and has a number of financial interests here.

Rural Districts Like Health Films.

Citizens of Western New York are interested in a new plan of the New York State department of health, which is using up-to-date films to impart health information. The pictures are especially popular in the rural districts. A portable moving picture machine and a fireproof screen are shipped from place to place and the films can be shown in any convenient hall or church.

Corning Opera House Closes.

The Corning (N. Y.) opera house recently closed its doors. Just when the house will again be opened is much in doubt. In this connection a late report from Corning says the five-year lease under which the house has been operated expired July 1. Although the house has been kept open since on the old lease, it is understood that the arrangement has not been satisfactory to either party.

Averill Goes Out and Gets 'Em.

Harry Averill, manager of the Palmyra opera house, is working a successful plan to hold his patronage during the hot weather. Once a week he treats the citizens of his town to a free show on the village green. This feature, with band concerts or other music, attracts hundreds to the open air exhibitions, and on account of the advertising benefits Mr. Averill has no trouble in drawing satisfactory patronage to his house on the remaining nights of the week.

Bacon Opens the Dewtell.

Dana Bacon has opened his new moving picture theater at South Dayton, N. Y. One enthusiastic report says this house represents "the last word in theater construction." The name is rather unusual—Dewtell.

Exhibitors' Wives Visit Buffalo.

G. H. Penn of the Mutual staff, Buffalo, recently entertained his sister, Mrs. E. N. Downs, whose husband is manager of the Knickerbocker theater, Cleveland. She was accompanied by Mrs. I. V. Downs, whose husband manages the Metropolitan theater, Cleveland.

Miss Bakenhaster Wins Contest.

Miss Mignon Bakenhaster was the winner of the "Who Will Be Ruth?" contest of the Mozart theater, Elmira. This will be the leading character of "The Man Haters," a film to be produced in that city.

Notes from Western New York.

C. H. Ross has taken over the Grand moving picture theater of Elmira.

H. H. Buckle of Medina has given up the Temple theater of Albion. The house has reverted to J. E. Jensen, the original owner. Mr. Buckle also is part owner of the Scenic theater, Medina.

Baltimore's Brodie Enlarges

Light Street Theater Will Have Two Balconies and 1,800 Seats—Other News.

By J. M. Shellman, 1902 Mt. Royal Terrace, Baltimore.

ACCORDING to latest reports, Joseph Brodie, who owns and manages the Brodie theater, 1118-22 Light street, has recently purchased the property adjoining the house, and it is understood is to enlarge the structure to a seating capacity of 1,800, with two balconies. While on a recent trip to New York and Philadelphia, Mr. Brodie made a point of studying the latest modes of construction in the theater line so that he could incorporate these advantages in his new building.

It is interesting to note that one square to the north the new McHenry theater will be built with a seating capacity of about 1,000; one square away to the west the New Crescent is still running and prospering, and two squares away to the northwest, the South Baltimore Garden theater is being enlarged to a seating capacity of about 1,000.

Parkway Changes Program.

For the past several weeks, Bernard Depkin, Jr., manager of the Parkway theater, 3-9 West North avenue, has been visiting New York, Philadelphia, and Washington, relative to booking big attractions for his house. The new addition to the theater will be ready about September 1.

Community Concerts for Baltimore.

The Baltimore community concerts, which include moving pictures, have been started. The first one was to have been held on Tuesday night, July 25, but owing to the inclement weather, it was given on the following night. The place selected for the entertainment was at the Washington monument in Mount Vernon Place.

"Ramona" Opens at Ford's.

Ford's Opera House opened up with the Clune cinema operatic spectacle entitled "Ramona," on Monday, July 31. A symphony orchestra of thirty pieces and a grand opera chorus has been engaged. Two performances are given daily and the prices of admission range from 25 to 50 cents for matinees and 25 to 75 cents for the night performances.

Hagerstown Lights Out.

Hagerstown, Md.—During the severest electrical storm of this summer which swept over this city on the night of Friday, July 21, the lighting system was completely disabled by the lightning, and as a result the moving picture theaters were obliged to discontinue their exhibitions for the night.

Strand Organist Married.

On Sunday, July 23rd, Hubert Nickson, the organist at the Strand theater, 404-6 North Howard street, was married at Williamsport, Md. Miss Grace H. Sharrar of Hagerstown, Md., was the bride.

New Theater Reopens.

The New theater, 210 West Lexington street, resumed business on Monday, July 31, after being given a new coat of paint and having the floors newly carpeted, the seats upholstered and the stage furnished with a new set. Manager L. A. DeHoff has engaged the Paramount service, and only first run productions will be shown here. "Hulda of Holland," featuring Mary Pickford, was the first picture to be presented.

Govan's Theater Resumes.

Govan's theater, situated at York road and Rossiter avenue, reopened on Friday night, July 21, after an idle period covering about six months. F. L. Snyder is now managing the house.

ILLINOIS HAPPENINGS.

Belvidere, Ill.—Educational pictures will be shown at the Derthick opera house in September, October and November under the auspices of local churches.

Springfield.—Articles of incorporation have been issued to the Rex theater, Chicago. Incorporators: Hermann Scgoenstadt, Isador Brecker and Hyman L. Weiss; capital, $2,500.

Wilmington.—Dr. Harry Gurney is wrecking a building here and contemplates the erection of a brick and tile moving picture theater and auditorium.

Freeport.—A. L. Stevens of Grand Rapids, Mich., has succeeded H. B. Knapp as manager of the Superba theater.

Arlington.—Skiffington & Lewis have opened a moving picture theater here.

Decatur.—Joseph Allman will open new moving picture theater here about September 1.

Edwardsville.—W. A. Edwards, manager of the Wilder theater, has re-leased that house for two years.

NOTES FROM IOWA.

Cedar Rapids.—James R. Grainger has resigned as manager of the Strand theater to devote his time to his film business in the east. He is succeeded at the Strand by F. W. Burke.

Sioux City.—Articles of incorporation have been filed by the Cosmo-Picture Corporation. The company is capitalized at $10,000. Officers: C. W. McDonald, president; Harry S. Mayne, secretary, and E. Swartz, treasurer.

Burlington.—Burlington now has but three exclusive moving picture shows, Fred Cramer and J. C. Allender having closed the Nemo theater.

Wapello.—J. A. Knight has purchased the [illegible] theater.

Nodaway.—Charles Richards has purchased the moving picture theater here.

Mt. Vernon.—F. O. Nielson's feature, "Guarding Old Glory," was shown at the Star theater for the benefit of the Woman's Relief Corps.

Columbus Junction.—Robert Weber and Louis Roberts have purchased the Lyric theater from Dr. J. W. Spence.

Sioux City.—The Model Amusement Company of this city has leased the Majestic theater at Worthington, Minn., and renamed it the Royal.

Davenport, Iowa.—S. E. Greenebaum and A. H. Blank, owners of the Casino and Garden theaters, have started a campaign to secure the 1917 convention of Iowa exhibitors for Davenport.

Fort Dodge.—The Magic theater has been reopened under the management of James P. Martin, who has returned from Cedar Rapids. He had the local Boy Scouts in to see his opening attraction, "The Battle Cry of Peace." The old house attaches are back, including Sam Higgens as director of the orchestra.

Des Moines.—After editing the films of soldier life at Camp Dodge, E. R. Harland, curator of the state historical department, and Maurice Ricker, who did the camera work, expect the picture to run twelve reels. Iowa National Guard officers planned to lease a local theater for two weeks and run the film. After the cost of the work, which was advanced by Curator Harlan, has been met, one set of films will be preserved by the state and all other proceeds will go to the guardsmen. Four sets will be started on the road.

Bellevue.—John R. Collins, founder of the Cozy theater, has repurchased that house. He will enlarge it to 400 capacity and will run vaudeville and pictures.

Muscatine.—The Princess theater, operated by Ludi Boston, will open August 15 at a new location, 227 East Second street.

LYNCHBURG, VA.

LYNCHBURG, VA.—Realizing good music is as much a feature as good pictures, Guy Barrett, manager of the Belvedere theatre, has recently installed a Wurlitzer organ and the instrumental program has already scored a decided hit with patrons of this cozy photoplay house. Professor Earl Ball, a talented musician, is in charge of the musical feature. Mr. Barrett has changed the seating arrangement of the Belvedere, converting the theater into a classy photoplay house.

The Universal theater, which has been operated for several years by the Piedmont Amusement Company, a North Carolina corporation, is "dark" and it is persistently rumored that it will not be reopened under the same control. J. Bryan Craver, who had charge, has accepted a position in Charlotte with the Piedmont theater.

Fred Karch, one of the cleverest Wurlitzer organists in Lynchburg, has been secured by Jake Wells to operate the big Seeburg in the Isis theater.

Charles E. Kessnich, formerly manager of the Academy of Music, but now manager of the southeastern division of the Mutual Film Corporation, was in Lynchburg the past week.

Exchange Building Needed in Washington

Widely Separated Offices of Film Concerns Causes Inconvenience to Whole Trade—Large Improvements for Savoy Theater—Morgan Thinks Exhibitors Should Get Together Once More.

By Clarence L. Linz, 635 Tenth Street, Washington.

WASHINGTON, D. C.—There is one man who wishes that the long discussed film exchange building was indeed a reality, for it is fast becoming apparent that desirable places for the establishment of exchanges are few and far between.

When Arthur Lucas, general manager of the Triangle, hustled into Washington it was partly with the idea of making a quick selection of a good location and leave the rest to J. H. Butner, of Philadelphia, who will be stationed here. Fire laws, insurance regulations, lack of space, too much space, and whatnot, were among the few things that confronted him. After a search of five days he has succeeded in getting quarters at Thirteenth and G streets, Northwest, and in so doing assumes the novelty of having his exchange further away from the Ninth street center of things than any other exchange in the city, being one block away from Paramount, which previously held that title.

All Washington, and in fact the exhibitors of the entire territory, regret that conditions are such here that the exchanges are scattered, literally, all over the lot. When a stranger comes here from out of town he finds himself at no little disadvantage because of the distance between exchanges and the necessity for going up and down stairs.

Even greater delays occur when operators are returning or calling for shows when the houses they represent are using a varied program, and it is no wonder one exchange sometimes gets the films intended for another.

There has been considerable talk about a building for film purposes exclusively, but up to the present time arrangements have gone no further than the production of floor plans. A new proposition, it is rumored, is now in prospect, for there is a whisper along Ninth street that somewhere in the downtown section, some time in the dim and distant future, there is to rise a combined film exchange building and theater that will have its reputation spread broadcast. It is even stated options on property are being secured; that plans are in the making, but one must discount this talk and await developments before becoming enthusiastic.

Exchangemen Complain of Film Damage.

There is a great deal of complaint among the motion picture exchanges of the way in which the average operators let their machines get into such shape as to ruin large lengths of films, and heap upon the exchanges a great deal of unnecessary expense because of improperly adjusted machines. The complaints during the last few weeks have been more insistent and some of the exchange managers are perturbed over the matter.

"We lost eleven thousand feet of film in sixty days," was the complaint of L. M. Day, president of the Metro Film Service Company, of this city, "and we almost thought somebody was being paid to go around and endeavor to wreck our business. Why, we had seven thousand feet of good film ruined in two weeks. In some cases the entire side of a film has been stripped. This is evidently because the sprocket is worn on one side and the tension spring is not properly adjusted.

"It hurts us pretty hard, for the exhibitors in a great number of cases refuse to pay for the damaged film because they rely on their operators. These latter, to escape censure, declare the film was in bad condition when received, and as it means a great saving in many cases they accept his report. The exhibitors place too much faith in their operators. We know when they stray away from the truth because we have an experienced man examine every film before it leaves the exchange and we know who is at fault."

At other exchanges the same complaint was heard, and the announcement that Mr. Richardson may come to Washington in the near future to lecture on the care of machines and what constitutes proper projection is being welcomed with delight. It is said that arrangements are now under way to endeavor to secure a suitable meeting place and insure a representative attendance.

Big Improvement for Savoy.

Up-to-the-minute methods are being followed in making the considerable improvements at the Savoy theater, on Fourteenth street, Northwest. One of the most important is the erection of a balcony with a seating capacity of about 500, necessitating raising the roof a distance of 20 feet, making it 40 feet from the sidewalk. The theater will be closed down on August 5, and the work will then be rushed. The contractors have promised the work will be completed in time for a Labor Day reopening.

A coat of stucco is to be spread over the entire front, covering the present decorations. Then a very attractive marquee is to be extended the full width of the building from building line to curb. This is to be of ornamental iron and glass, and is to be very massive and give tone to the exterior.

Naturally, this other work will require the complete redecorating of the interior and there is promised something that will prove a treat to the patrons. A small stage is to be erected and the new 13 by 17 Gold Fiber screen is to be set back several feet. This will serve to give several additional rows of seats which are now not used because of their nearness to the screen.

The Savoy will have a seating capacity of about 1,400.

Morgan Would Rejuvenate League.

There are a number of exhibitors in Washington who believe the time is ripe for the rejuvenation of the local league, and this thought was advanced by Joseph P. Morgan, who is associated with Harry M. Crandall in the conduct of several houses in the District of Columbia.

"Now that it looks as though we are going to have a regular league," remarked Mr. Morgan, "I think it is time for the exhibitors of Washington to read the handwriting on the wall and get together. This new organization looks as though it was going to do things right and we should help it along."

Crandall Goes Strong on Bath Stuff.

Harry M. Crandall, picture magnate of the District of Columbia, has a new abode of thirteen rooms and four baths in the most select and desirable section of the city. It is on 16th street, and is said to have cost $16,000. Sixteenth street was formerly known as Avenue of the Presidents, and Mr. Crandall asserts his eligibility to a residence thereon by reason of his being a former president of the local motion picture league. Another president, Mr. Woodrow Wilson, lives at the other end of the street.

Name Yacht for Theda Bara.

Carl F. Senning, manager of the Fox Film Exchange, has just returned from Atlantic City, where he participated in the christening of a $20,000 yacht in honor of Theda Bara.

Portland's Theatrical Situation in the Air

Indications That Exhibitors Are Lining Up for Radical Move—Price Cutting and Vaudeville Competition Ascribed as the Cause.

By Abraham Nelson, 601 Journal Building, Portland.

PORTLAND, Ore.—The theatrical situation in this city is up in the air. This state of affairs is true in all the branches of theatrical amusements. Which will be the legitimate theater when the season opens? Where will Orpheum attractions play? Is the Cort-Morris vaudeville a certainty and where will it play? Is the rumor true that the downtown theaters will abandon their mutual fifteen-cent policy and reduce the admission price to a dime? Will they combine musical and vaudeville acts with pictures, disregarding their tacit understanding of a year ago? Outside of the grab for business, these are the questions before the Portland showmen.

The photoplay policy of the downtown theaters is due for a change. A spirit of unrest that has existed among the larger exhibitors for the past two months indicates this. For nearly a year there has been a tacit understanding among exhibitors not only with reference to the admission price but also regarding the exclusion of vaudeville acts where pictures are the biggest part of the program. Recently several so-called exclusive photoplay houses have added vaudeville or music to their programs.

The Heilig has cut to a dime for night shows and something has been said about a nickel for matinees. This is the city's legitimate house, running pictures only during the summer. The cutting the price of admission here to a dime for first run super-features and permitting the audience to dance on the big stage besides is worrying the managers of the exclusive photoplay theaters who run pictures all the year round.

One exhibitor stated that the appearance of vaudeville at low prices and the keen competition will make some kind of a change of policy certain in the near future. Another exhibitor stated that he was of the opinion that a ten-cent proposition could not live because theater men had worked out their business on a basis of fifteen-cent admission price.

Joe Merrick Returns to Portland.

Portland.—Joe L. Merrick is back in Portland as traveling representative for Universal. Until recently he has been road man for the General Film Company in Arizona, New Mexico, part of Texas, Nevada, and Southern California, with headquarters in Los Angeles. Merrick was at Columbus, N. M., a few hours after the recent battle and had some vivid tales to tell to the Portland boys. On his way north he stopped at Universal City, where he was shown the workings of the company by whom he is now employed.

Joe L. Merrick.

Merrick was formerly an exhibitor, operating the Bijou and Isis theaters at Missoula, Mont., for three years from 1911. Leaving Montana, he was employed by the General as road man for over two years. In this capacity he has traveled all the territory on the Pacific Coast from Canada to Mexico.

Seattle Censor Calls on Portland.

Portland.—Seattle exhibitors please note: Miss Lord, secretary of the Seattle censor board, was in Portland gathering data. The Seattle censors are not essentially a prepublicity inspection board, but views most of the city's pictures during their runs at the show houses. It views before exhibition pictures it is called upon to inspect and those which it is advised need pre-publicity inspection.

Campaign for Modified Censorship Progresses.

Portland.—The campaign by the Oregon Motion Picture Men's Association for a fairer censorship ordinance has progressed fairly well at the time of this writing. Thousands of names are on the petitions to the city council asking for appealable censorship in place of the kind now in force. Exhibitors have been favorably surprised at the attitude of their patrons on the issue and feel that the sentiment of the people in favor of the ordinance asked for by the picture men is so strong that if the council follows the will of the people it must pass the ordinance.

When interviewed, Mrs. E. B. Colwell, secretary of the board, intimated that the censor board was not concerned about the campaign, did not consider it as a fight, and would not do so unless it believed the motion picture interests were using unfair tactics.

The writer gathered from remarks of William Warren, the mayor's secretary, that the present picture situation, from a standpoint of the class of pictures shown, was not viewed by him with the greatest favor and that there was still lots of clamping to be done to the lid of our little old town to make it fit nice and snug.

Sennett Representative in Portland.

Portland.—S. L. Rork, personal representative of Mack Sennett, spent a few days in Portland looking over conditions. Mr. Rork is on his way back to New York City, coming here from Los Angeles.

Picture Men Celebrate.

Portland.—At the Clear Creek dairy, up the Clackamas River, the milk was late one morning not long ago.

The reason? The milkmaids tripping through the dewy pastures lingered overly long to listen to the strains of sweet music that filtered through the pines at Clear Creek Park with the sunrise. The occasion was the outing of the Portland picture men. They left Portland at midnight in fast automobiles, taking three hours for the going trip. On the banks of the Clackamas, they swam, fished and feasted. The return was made the next afternoon in fifty minutes. Present were, G. T. Holtzclaw, Sam Fleishman, E. J. Myrick, M. Donovan, A. S. Graeper, W. M. Rogers, Art Phillips, W. A. Reed, Mike Rosenberg, W. A. Mead, A. S. Kirkpatrick, F. M. Simonton, C. B. Pumphrey, Lew Bronaugh and Jimmie Cassell.

Hip Pages Mother When Baby Cries.

Portland.—The Hippodrome has installed a nursery with telephone connections to the projection room. There the operator has a bunch of appropriate slides and when baby in the nursery becomes hungry or obstreperous beyond nursie's control, she phones the operator who flashes a slide on the screen stating baby's condition, also baby's number and requesting the mother to hie to the nursery forthwith.

Heard on Film Row.

Seaside.—B. J. Callahan has opened the Strand theater here.

Portland.—The Majestic theater has signed up Esther Sundquist for a long engagement. This popular violinist worked sixty-six weeks at this house on one engagement.

Portland.—Among the week's visitors were H. A. Zollner, Mont Angel; L. E. Partridge, Tillamook; T. S. Wilson, Camas, Wash.; N. H. Klaus, of Vollmer, Idaho, and J. B. Johnson, of Amity, Oregon, who took over the Palace theater there a few months ago.

Portland.—H. M. Wilson, road man for General, is back in town after a trip to the Klamath Falls country, and Sol Baum, manager for Bluebirds, returned recently from a trip through northern Washington and Idaho.

Albany.—B. A. Rolfe, of the Rolfe theater, and C. A. Myers of the Globe have formed a corporation to handle both theaters. The Rolfe will only run two days a week and the Globe every day.

Roseburg.—Werner and Koehler have given up the Antlers theater. The Elks are now conducting the house, with Mr. Parrot, trustee, as manager.

IN THE LAND OF THE DAKOTAS.

Devil's Lake, N. D.—The Unique theater is being remodeled to resemble Talley's well known Broadway theater in Los Angeles, Cal. The theater has been purchased by Charles Finkle of Los Angeles, a former resident of Grand Forks, N. D.

Rapid City, S. D.—Arthur Rose has sold the Dreamland theater to Frank Keys of the Empress theater.

Devil's Lake, N. D.—Olson & Turner sold the Unique theater to Charles Finkle and John Wolfe.

Union Operators Boning for Examinations

Vancouver Local Institutes Course of Instruction Designed to Increase General Knowledge of Members—Censor Passes With Cuts Subjects Previously Banned.

By E. C. Thomas, 821 Rogers Building, Vancouver.

VANCOUVER, B. C.—In anticipation of the forthcoming provincial examinations for operators, under the provisions of the recent amendment to the Moving Pictures act, Vancouver Local 348, I. A. T. S. E., has instituted a course of instruction for its members, with a view of making them thoroughly conversant with the different types of projection apparatus, and thus make it more certain that some men who have been operating the examinations without trouble.

The recent trouble between the operators' union and some of the exhibitors of this city served to bring out the fact that some men who have been operating for several years—perhaps at a single house, or with some particular current or type of machine—were placed at a disadvantage when called upon to take charge of an operating room with which they were not familiar. Although these were not union men, the lesson was not lost upon the organization.

As the examinations to be held will deal with practical projection problems, with the various types of machines at hand, it was thought advisable to enlarge the scope of the operators' knowledge. Although the World man is informed that no difficulty is anticipated in passing the required tests, the officers of the local body feel that the move will be distinctly beneficial to the men who follow the course of study planned, as they will undoubtedy be better operators when they are finished, and a higher standard of efficiency will mean increased prosperity for the union and its members.

Censor Experiences Another Think.

Vancouver, B. C.—Another instance of the fickle nature of the British Columbia censor's decisions has just come forth with the passing of the Essanay-Chaplin subject, "A Woman," which has just been run at the Rex theater here. Originally banned in this province some months ago, the picture has now been resubmitted, and, although much has been cut from it, the picture was finally passed. The local office of the General Film Company, however, has sustained a direct loss of many hundreds of dollars through the infliction of the censor's delicate sensibilities on the theatergoing-public, and there is a general tendency to question why the film was not passed many months ago, after such cuts as were considered necessary had been made.

Many men in and out of the industry are firmly of the opinion that the changes in the standards of censorship are simply induced by the imminence of the provincial general elections, scheduled for the early part of September.

Wells Undergoes Another Operation.

Vancouver, B. C.—Sergeant Fred (Doc) Wells, lecturer with "Canada's Fighting Forces," the official Canadian government's films, both throughout their tour of Canada and during the recent engagement in Boston, has returned to this city for the purpose of undergoing a further operation on his amputated arm, which was riddled with machine-gun bullets during the first battle of Ypres. He is now at the Vancouver General Hospital, and is reported to be swiftly recovering from the effects of the operation.

Burton Holmes in Calgary.

Calgary, Alberta.—Burton Holmes, the noted lecturer, who is now supplying scenic films for the Paramount program, has arrived here, accompanied by Mrs. Holmes, and after a short stop left for Banff, where some time will be spent in securing pictures of the beautiful mountain scenery which abounds in this region. After a trip to the coast the party will return to this city and during the harvest season will take scenes throughout the province.

Johnson and Gunn Join Kean.

Vancouver, B. C.—The business of Kean's Canada Film Exchange has just been taken over by A. I. Johnson and W. H. Gunn, who will in future attend to the distribution of the Kean films, while Mr. Kean himself will give his entire attention to the photographic end of the business. The rapid growth of this branch of the work has made it impossible for him to give any considerable attention to the booking of the films, and it is now anticipated that the new arrangement will result in a greatly increased business.

Costly Alterations for the Winnipeg.

Winnipeg, Man.—Harvey & Walker, owners of the Winnipeg theater, are to make extensive alterations in the building, amounting to about $15,000, and the work will be undertaken immediately. The fronts on Notre Dame avenue and Adelaide street are to be embellished in stucco relief, and the entrances and exits will be improved. Alterations are also to be made in the interior of the house.

Universal Manager Flouts Censor: $50.

Vancouver, B. C.—J. E. Finch, manager of the local office of the Universal, recently appeared in court to answer to a charge under the Theater Act, and on conviction was fined $50 and costs. The prosecution was conducted by City Prosecutor R. L. Maitland, and the offense consisted of booking to an exhibitor a film which had not been submitted to the censor for examination.

Official Defines Status of Dual Licenses.

Winnipeg, Man.—Representatives of the Majestic theater have made an effort to ascertain from the government the exact status of moving picture theaters in this province, pointing out to W. J. Ptolemy, deputy provincial treasurer, that they are at present operating under both city and provincial licenses, and inquiring from whom they should take orders relating to the conduct of the houses.

Mr. Ptolemy stated that the provincial license is simply for the purpose of obtaining revenue, while the city license is for supervision on behalf of the public, to prevent fires, insure cleanliness, and so forth.

Before departing the theater men advanced the opinion that the present board of censors is an untraveled and and uneducated body.

Notes from Western Canada.

Rossland, B. C.—E. J. Cann, formerly musical director at the Regent theater in Calgary, has taken over the Star theater here, opening with Mutual service.

Calgary, Alberta.—J. B. Cronk, manager of the Allen theater, recently left with other Shriners on a pilgrimage to the convention at Buffalo, and incidentally to take his first vacation in many years. During his absence the house is being looked after by Mr. Cloakey. The Allen has just inaugurated a summer attraction for the children in the shape of ice cream cones, which are presented to each child attending the Saturday matinee.

Winnipeg.—"Cabiria" has just closed a two weeks' engagement at the National theater here, the picture's first date in Western Canada.

Vancouver, B. C.—Manager C. R. Dippie of the Mutual Exchange reports that the "Whispering Smith-Medicine Bend" ten-reeler will be here October 30 and arrangements are already being made for booking the big picture.

Calgary, Alberta.—The following out-of-town exhibitors were recent visitors at the local office of the Famous Players' Film Service, Limited: H. Hemmings of North Battleford, C. W. Johnston of Blairmore, A. E. Martin of Kindersley, and Mr. Weiss of High River. All report that business is unusually quiet even for this time of the year, but are confident of an improvement in the fall.

Cincinnati's Veritas Photoplay Bankrupt

Ohio Company, Which Never Reached the Producing Stage, Has Liabilities of $21,785—Verdi Theater of Canton Has Big Opening—Summer Uniforms for Attaches Help Business.

By Kenneth C. Crain, 610 First National Bank Building, Cincinnati.

CINCINNATI.—Another of the several companies organized in Cincinnati within the past year or so for the announced purpose of getting into the producing field here has followed the Highland Film Corporation into the discard. This is the Veritas Photoplay Company, which was incorporated something over a year ago with some of the leading business men of the city interested as officers and stockholders. A voluntary petition in bankruptcy has been filed in the United States District Court at Cincinnati on behalf of the company, liabilities being fixed at $21,785 and assets at $11,392.80.

The largest item among the assets by a good deal is a claim against John Von Rittberg, of Newark, who is also known as Jacques Jansen, for $11,355. Mr. Von Rittberg was the chief promoter of the company, spending some time in Cincinnati in the work of securing local investors to take stock in the enterprise. Most of the larger creditors of the company have claims for money loaned to the corporation, ranging from $500 to $3,500. The company never reached the producing stage. Upon the filing of the petition in bankruptcy adjudication of bankruptcy followed as a matter of course, without opposition, and the liquidation of the company's affairs will proceed in due course.

Verdi Has Auspicious Debut.

Canton.—The opening of the new Verdi theater, at Tenth street and Cherry avenue, took place on Wednesday evening, July 19, with a capacity audience filling the 700 seats available at every performance. The house is thoroughly modern, a rest room between the foyer and the auditorium, with adequate toilet and other facilities, being a feature, while the decorations are unusually handsome. On the opening evening Edelman's orchestra was engaged to render a special musical program. Mayor Stolberg made a talk to the first audience. The Verdi will be open every evening and on Saturday and Sunday afternoons, with a ten-cent admission charge.

Wiring in Canton Is Commended.

Canton.—Inspection of the wiring in Canton moving picture houses by representatives of the Ohio Fire Marshal's office was completed a short time ago, a special wiring inspector looking over the work. Very few instances of defective wiring were found, and these were promptly corrected when pointed out. The inspector stated that much higher standards are now observed by the theaters than was formerly the case, and that the general rule now is that moving picture houses are better wired from the safety standpoint than structures of any other kind.

Anent Summer Uniforms for Attaches.

Cincinnati.—Among the several devices which numerous moving picture houses in Cincinnati have been using during the summer season to help their patrons think and feel cool are the uniforms which are worn by the staff. Uniformed door and ticket men and ushers are the rule in all of the leading houses at all seasons, but most of them have discarded the warm-looking suits of blue which are the rule for the greater part of the year, in favor of something lighter and cooler. In one of the largest and most popular of the downtown houses the management decided upon an extremely attractive summer uniform, with a neat jacket of silver gray, braided with black, and white duck trousers. The combination has the virtue of looking as cool as ice, and as the material used is very summery it is as cool as it looks.

Filmmen Provide Shows for Soldiers.

Cincinnati.—By arrangement with several local film exchanges, the irksomeness of the prolonged wait suffered by the Kentucky National Guard regiments held in camp at Ft. Thomas, across the river, has been considerably relieved. An excellent variety of pictures has been contributed by the Cincinnati exchanges, and the show, which was of course without charge to the soldiers, proved to be as popular as the most ambitious exhibitor could desire.

Censors Cut and Pass "Inspiration."

Cincinnati.—Ohio exhibitors are taking advantage of the opportunity now available to show the Thanhouser art study, "Inspiration." The film was rejected twice by the Ohio censors, but after elimination had been made of parts to which the censors objected they passed the picture.

Sunday Shows Are On in Ontario Province

It Is in the Military Camps, However, Where the Civilian Authorities Can't Bar In—Soldiers Also to See the Johnson-Willard Fight Pictures—Applegarths to Build Thousand-Seat House

By H. M. Logan, 347 Jarvis Street, East, Toronto.

TORONTO, ONT.—The ban has been lifted on Sunday shows in the camps of the Canadian overseas contingent, and the pictures will be run by the Military Authorities. The Canadian Government Exhibition Commission has been granted the privilege of showing the pictures of the Johnson-Willard fight in the camps, and the films will be run on Sunday afternoons and evenings. The Commission has also been granted the privilege of showing the pictures in the camps of the United States troops on the Mexican border. The pictures will be shown in the camps in Canada and England.

The action removing the Province's ancient ban on Sunday shows was taken by the Provincial Government at the request of the Military Authorities. The request was presented to the Government by Sir Sam Hughes, Minister of Militia, and Sir George Foster, Minister of Trade and Commerce. The Government, after considering the matter, decided to grant the request, and the Commission was appointed to carry out the arrangements. The Commission is composed of Lieut.-Col. Sam Hughes, Sir George Foster and Lieut.-Col. Wilson, Deputy Minister of Militia. The Commission has been granted the privilege of showing the pictures in the camps of the United States troops on the Mexican border. The pictures will be shown in the camps in Canada and England.

Applegarths to Build Fine House

Toronto—Plans are being prepared by John M. Lyle, architect, for the erection of a handsome theatre building on Yonge street, for the Applegarth Brothers, who have been operating the Regent theatre on Dundas street for the past two years. The new house will be of brick and stone construction, and will have a seating capacity of about 1,200. It will be equipped with the latest and most modern devices for the comfort and convenience of patrons, and will be conducted on the high class policy which has characterized the Regent since it was opened by the Applegarths. The new house will be ready for occupancy about the first of the year.

Famous Players Has House Organ

Toronto—The first copy of the Famous Players Film Service house organ, a publication issued by the Famous Players Film Service, has been received here. The publication is a four-page paper, and contains a number of interesting articles relating to the Famous Players and their productions. The paper is edited by Mr. Sherwood, formerly a reporter on the Toronto Daily Star, and is published monthly.

Weekly for Strand and Star

By arrangement with newspaper managers, M. A. Morris of the Strand theatre and Miss Pettypiece of the Star theatre will write a weekly letter for the Toronto Saturday Night, which will be published in the form of a weekly letter. The letters will be published in the Saturday Night, and will be published in the form of a weekly letter.

New Canadian Producing Company

Toronto—A new producing company has been formed here, to be known as the Canadian Producing Company. The company will produce films of Canadian scenes and subjects, and will distribute them through the Canadian Government Department of Trade and Commerce. The company will also produce films of Canadian scenes and subjects, and will distribute them through the Canadian Government Department of Trade and Commerce.

In and Around Toronto

Toronto—W. A. Brady, general manager of the Canadian Theatrical Syndicate, has announced that a new theatre will be built in Toronto. The new theatre will be known as the Brady Theatre, and will be built on the site of the old Princess Theatre. The new theatre will have a seating capacity of about 1,200, and will be equipped with the latest and most modern devices for the comfort and convenience of patrons.

Clinton.—F. V. Atherton is now in control of the Gem theater.

Weather Kind to St. Louis Airdome Men

Days and Nights Have Been Hot and Dry in Missouri Metropolis and Outdoor Shows Have Recouped Losses of Last Year—Geibler Looks 'Em Over—New Producing Company for St. Louis.

By A. H. Giebler, 236 Vanol Building, St. Louis.

ST. LOUIS started out to be one of the best airdome towns in the country. Visitors to our city have always remarked upon the beauty, equipment, and number of outdoor places devoted to the exhibition of pictures. Last year the old town almost lost its reputation, however, for from the middle of May until closing time it was a race between the exhibitors and the skies to see who wept the most. There is one cheerful soul going around town yet who claims that there were nineteen nights last year when it didn't rain and the temperature was warm enough to obviate the necessity of the management furnishing an overcoat with each admission ticket, but nobody believes him!

At the beginning of the present season there were many predictions that if we had a repetition of last summer's weather the airdome business would die, that no one with nerve or money enough could be found to open an al fresco place, in the face of past weather records. But the weather and the skies have been kind this year. We have been having days and nights as hot and dry as the name of a photoplay released by the Triangle company a short time ago. You remember that one about Hinges.

We made a little trip out Easton avenue the other night and stopped at a number of places. At Easton & Compton we found William McDonald's snug little garden in a flourishing condition. Mr. McDonald was sitting in the box office with a smile on his face while a big crowd filed in at the entrance and the first show crowd filed out of the exits.

* * *

Our next stop was at the Alps, managed by the well known Wagner brothers. We did not get to see Gabe, which we regret, because Gabe is one of these here old-timers, and a regular mine of information and of interesting reminiscences. His brother was there, however, and Louis is some little entertainer himself, and we fared very well. Business was good at the Alps.

* * *

Further out, where Cora crosses Easton, we found a new place, that has been going just a month. J. C. Norris is the manager. He is a new-comer in pictures, but he says he likes the business, and he's right up on the job with an attractive lobby display and a nicely maaged house, and from the looks of things the Cora, as the place is called, is going to be a success. Mr. Norris is giving his audiences a Universal program, for which 5 cents is charged. The Cora seats 700.

* * *

At the Aubert Garden, where there is room for 2,400 people, and a promenade all set out in flowers at the back which would seat as many more, there was a big crowd. Julius Steger in an Equitable feature and a Unicorn feature formed the big program. The Albert is under the management of Bruggeman & Goll, who also operate the Penrose Garden, at Grand and Penrose avenues. Mr. Goll had just come from the Penrose and said that the two places keep him on the jump. Mr. Goll says business is good, and certainly a vast improvement over last year.

* * *

Out at the Fairy, August Roettger's beautiful place, the goodnight crowd was just pouring out between the long row of pillars topped with electric lights. This airdome has one of the most attractive entrances in the city. The airdome is directly behind the theater; at the entrance there is an ornamental kiosk where tickets are sold, and from there a long lane flanked on either side with a latticed wall and pillars at close intervals, each with a large electric globe on top. The lane is about a hundred and forty feet long, and is a regular blaze of light. "Gloria's Romance" was part of the bill at the Fairy, and to judge from the smiles and evident good humor of the audience as they came out they had been well pleased.

Burglars Should Not Step on Piano.

The Criterion theater, 2644 Franklin avenue, was broken into at 1 a. m., on July 22, by a burglar who, in placing a fan which he had taken down from the wall on the piano, stepped on the keys of the instrument, thereby giving the alarm to two patrolmen passing in the street. The officers forced their way into the theater and discovered the burglar hiding in a corner. At the Dayton street station the man was identified as William Warren, alias Nick Maloney.

Olympic Theater Is Condemned.

The Olympic theater, on Broadway and Walnut, famous to theatergoers of two generations, has been condemned for theatrical purposes by Building Commissioner McKelvey, who said that structurally the building was sound, but its ancient construction, in which wooden floors and supports figured prominently, made it too much of a fire hazard. The Klaw & Erlanger lease, under which the theater was operated, ends in September, and it is understood that the house will never again be the scene of a theatrical production. "The Birth of a Nation" film ran two engagements at the Olympic during the last year, and was said to be the only production, with the exception of the Ziegfeld Follies and the Maude Adams engagement, that made money for the management.

New Picture Company for St. Louis.

A company organized by G. W. Helmerich, to be known as the Mississippi Valley Motion Picture Corporation, has acquired Suburban Garden, at one time one of the most popular amusement parks in St. Louis, for a studio. The buildings, according to Mr. Helmerich, will be altered and improved into a modern motion picture plant. Suburban Garden is situated at the edge of town, and if St. Louis is to have a studio no more fitting spot could be found for it. As work is being done on the grounds, it is earnestly hoped by a large number of loyal citizens and picture fans that the project will be carried through to a successful culmination. The company is said to have been incorporated for $250,000 last April.

Motion Pictures in Missouri Campaign.

A Traveling Men's Organization conducting the "Gardner for Governor of Missouri" campaign, includes a moving picture entertainment as well as stump lecturers in its itinerary.

ITEMS FROM MICHIGAN.

Battle Creek, Mich.—The Bijou theater, which has been running moving pictures, has been closed and will reopen with vaudeville and pictures. Ernest J. Latimere, who has been managing the Majestic theater at Flint, succeeds Harry Lorch at the Bijou.

Manistee.—The Ramsdell theater had three successful days July 28-30 with "Ramona."

Calumet.—Will H. Foster and William Olsen, local camera men, did the film work at the semi-centennial festival of the Calumet and Hecla Mining Company, including the parade of 6000 employes.

Blanchard.—The picture theater operated here by Manager Fitzgerald has been destroyed by fire.

San Francisco's Camera Club May Build

Thriving Bay City Organization, Containing in Its Membership Many Film Men, Talking of Erecting Home of Its Own—Moving Pictures in Famous Greek Theater—T. & D. Report Business Good.

By T. A. Church, 1507 North Street, Berkeley.

SAN FRANCISCO.—The Camera Club of San Francisco, with which a number of persons engaged in the motion picture business here are affiliated, is considering the proposition of erecting a building of its own in the downtown district, several splendid sites being under consideration. This club has made its headquarters for several years in the Commercial Building, on Market street, where Edward H. Kemp, a member of the organization and agent for the Enterprise Optical Manufacturing Company, has his offices.

The membership of the Camera Club of San Francisco has passed the three hundred mark and new members are being added at such a rate that new quarters are rapidly becoming imperative. With additional space at its command it is believed that moving pictures would be given more attention than ever before and that the new home would be designed with this in view. The club recently held its annual outing in the Yosemite Valley and the trip was made by several prominent camera men, as well as by men engaged in film exchange work who are camera enthusiasts.

H. L. Knappen, International Manager.

San Francisco.—H. L. Knappen, manager of the San Francisco branch of the International Film Service, at 280 Golden Gate avenue, is one of the successful men in the business who have come into this line of work by way of the newspaper route. He had had much experience in various branches of newspaper work and while engaged in this line at Salt Lake City became interested in the moving picture business. For a time he covered the Northern California field for the Pathe Exchange, Inc., and quickly won an enviable place for himself as a business getter. Later he was manager of a Pathe exchange at Denver and filled a like position at Georgia before affiliating himself with the Hearst interests.

H. L. Knappen.

Mr. Knappen is a great believer in advertising, and the amount of space which he has been able to get in the local press touching upon the moving pictures released by the International Film Service sustains his reputation as a press agent. While some of this must be attributed to the very favorable connection he has made a great deal of it has been the result of his early training in publicity work. That his policy has been a paying proposition may be judged from the fact that the local branch stands right up in the front with the other offices in the volume of bookings and greatly surpasses some of those serving a great many more theaters.

Exchange Man Off on Long Trip.

San Francisco.—George Chamberlain, owner of the Independent Film Exchange, 122 Golden Gate avenue, left recently for Portland, Ore., and points in the Pacific Northwest, accompanied by Mrs. Chamberlain, the trip being made by automobile. Several weeks will be spent in visiting relatives and friends, and on returning home they will bring their children, who have been visiting there for some time. Mr. Chamberlain was formerly in the moving picture business at Portland, Ore., as an exhibitor, and has a wide circle of friends there. Brief stops will be made at various towns in Northern California in the interest of the exchange of which he is the head.

Moving Pictures at Greek Theater.

Berkeley.—Moving pictures were shown recently for the first time in the famous Hearst Greek theater on the grounds of the University of California, these being presented in conjunction with a travel talk on the Yosemite Valley. This classical structure is an open-air theater set in a magnificent eucalyptus grove and has a seating capacity of about 9,000.

Municipal Theater for Moving Pictures.

Oakland.—Arrangements have been completed by E. Kehrlein, of the Kinema theater, Fresno, for taking over the motion picture exhibiting privileges in the Municipal Auditorium, erected a year ago at a cost of more than $1,000,000. The beautiful opera house section, with a seating capacity of 2,000, will be used, and it is the intention of Mr. Kehrlein to present the best photo-plays that have been made in the past, as well as the finest new subjects. No attempt will be made to put on a show every day, engagements being planned to conform to the desirable material available. It is intended to work in conjunction with the Oakland school department, and matinees of an educational character will be featured during the school season. Moving pictures will be presented with exquisite settings and fine music and the prices that will prevail will range from 25 to 75 cents.

Turner & Dahnken News.

San Francisco.—The Turner & Dahnken Circuit has been experiencing good business at all of its houses during the summer months, having booked a number of attractions of exceptional drawing power for this season. Managing Director Claude L. Langley returned some time ago from a visit to the new house at Portland, which is reported as showing a steady gain in business. Several changes have been made this season in house management, A. E. Northey having been transferred from Watsonville to Berkeley, and J. R. Wilson changed from Richmond to Watsonville. J. Hunter, who has had charge of several T. & D. houses, has left the employ of this concern to return to his former work as bank teller at San Francisco. Ground has been broken for the new theater at Stockton, Cal., and plans are now being considered for the opening of the big house at Oakland.

Commissioner Issues Permits.

San Francisco.—The Ellis Street Investment Company of this city has been granted a permit to issue shares to Allen Moyer in consideration of the payment of $161,700 to the corporation and to sell the remainder of the capital stock at par. The proceeds are being used to acquire real property at Ellis and Mason streets and to erect a theater, construction work on which is now under way.

The South Seas Film Company has also been permitted to sell stock to net the concern not less than 95 per cent of the selling price and to issue a certain amount to E. F. Caldwell, R. Hodgkins and L. D. Mills in payment for services to be rendered. Caldwell and Hodgkins, motion picture photographers, are to be outfitted for a trip to the South Seas and the East Indies to secure pictures.

House Planned for Richmond District.

San Francisco.—James H. Hardman, formerly associated with the Sullivan-Considine interests, has taken a ninety-nine year lease on property at Clement street and Sixth avenue and plans have been drawn for a moving picture house to have a seating capacity of 2,200. The announcement that a house would be built at this location followed the recent announcement by other interests that a theater of large capacity would be erected shortly at Clement street and Tenth avenue.

To Return to China.

San Francisco.—Bed Brodsky, president of the China Cinema Company, who has been here for several months, is preparing to leave shortly for China to resume his duties with this producing and distributing concern. Some of the Oriental productions he brought to this country with him have been favorably received here.

Minneapolis Censors Seek Control of Films

Not Satisfied With Acting in an Advisory Capacity to the Mayor, They Ask for Legislation That Will Make Them the Exhibitor's Boss.

By Perry S. Williams, The Tribune, Minneapolis.

MINNEAPOLIS—The censorship board, composed of representatives of fifty of the most prominent civic and betterment organizations of Minneapolis, is seeking greater power. So far the board has been able to act only in an advisory capacity to the Mayor, who has had the final word to say with regard to the propriety of permitting the showing of films in the city. Now the members want to be given authority which will enable them to force a film theater man to show them privately any film which is suspected of being improper. C. J. Rockwood, a prominent attorney here, is studying the tentative draft of an ordinance which would give that power to the censorship body.

Mr. Rockwood is attorney for the Minneapolis Civic and Commerce Association, the strong body of business men here, and he expects to submit the draft of the proposed ordinance to the association before seeking to have it put through the council.

"The censorship organization as it exists is really nothing more than an advisory board," said Mr. Rockwood. "It is the Mayor who is looked to for action in all matters concerning the exhibition of motion pictures that may be considered objectionable for public showing here. It has been proposed that an ordinance be drawn that will give the present advisory board, or any board that may be created, sufficient police power to make its findings not merely suggestions to the Mayor, but orders that exhibitors must obey."

Hoffman Visits Minneapolis.

Minneapolis.—M. H. Hoffman, general manager of exchanges for the Universal Film Corporation, was in Minneapolis several days ago looking over the company's trade in this territory. He was accompanied by E. H. Goldstein, his assistant; Claude McGowan, general accountant, and O. E. Gurney, traveling auditor. The Laemmle exchange here will be known in the future as the Universal, and Mr. Hoffman's trip principally is being made in order to take over the offices of the Powers and Laemmle companies which have been merged with the Universal.

Twin City Film Men Hold Picnic.

Minneapolis.—All plans have been completed for the big half-day picnic at Parker's Lake, Minn., on August 2, at which all persons in any way connected with the film business in St. Paul or Minneapolis are expected to be present with their families. All film men within striking distance of the Twin Cities or their playground at Parker's Lake are being urged to come along.

Sherman and Elliott Buy Into Empress.

Minneapolis.—Harry Sherman and Jack Elliott, two of the best known film men of the Twin Cities and the Northwest, have further widened their interest in the picture field. Several days ago they took over the Sullivan and Considine theater in St. Paul—the Empress. The deal involved a purchase of $25,000 worth of the theater stock and a cash consideration to the former managers. J. A. Bozeyer of Los Angeles, Cal., formerly manager of the Empress, will return to resume his old place. Sherman and Elliott recently have come into national prominence through their connection with the Sherman-Elliott-Connolly combination, which took over the boxing clubs of St. Paul and Minneapolis.

Thall Goes to California.

Minneapolis.—This city is about to lose one of its best known moving picture men. Charles Thall, who for the last two years has been manager of the Minneapolis exchange of the Kleine-Edison Feature Film Company, has accepted a call from the Elliott-Sherman Film Corporation Company of Minneapolis. The local company in making a bid for Thall's services dropped the word that he would be sent to California to handle "The Birth of a Nation" in that territory. Inasmuch as Thall is a "native son," having come out this way from San Francisco, no one here is blaming him for the change he is making, but many friends will be sorry to see him leave.

Henry D. Graham, formerly manager of the Merrill theater in Milwaukee, Wis., has taken the place left by Thall at the Kleine-Edison exchange. Graham has many friends in the trade here. Ten years ago in Chicago he began his film career and then worked five years for the Mutual. Graham at one time had a road show of his own and became acquainted in Twin City territory when he went through here with his show.

Harry Reubenstein, former manager of the Garden theater in this city, has gone to Milwaukee to succeed Graham at the Merrill.

Independent Takes Over New Film.

Minneapolis.—The entire stock of the New Film Corporation here has been taken over by the Independent Film Corporation, of which Nelson & Moor are proprietors. Many features and hundreds of reels were included in the sale, which is said to have involved a cash consideration which is one of the largest ever paid in a deal in Minneapolis.

New Garden Opens to Capacity.

St. Paul.—The New Garden theater has been opened on West Seventh street in this city. The new playhouse is as modern as present day planning can make it and played to a capacity house the first night it was open. Its equipment and general attractiveness have caused the closing down of the Royal, only a few blocks away, one of the oldest in St. Paul.

Seigel Retires to Cut Coupons.

Virginia, Minn.—Just to show how money is lost in film exhibition it is only necessary to refer to the case of J. Seigel of this place. Mr. Seigel has disposed of his interests in the Lyric theater to William Rozac to retire from business on his savings and investments.

Ask Receiver for Amusement Company.

Minneapolis.—A petition asking the appointment of a receiver for the National Advertising and Amusement Company in order to obtain an equitable adjustment of the receipts of the Crystal theater has been granted by Judge Fish in district court here. The petition was filed by Harry H. Green a year ago. Green alleged his brother-in-law, Jacob Barnet, and Mrs. Annie G. Barnet had taken control of the theater and voted themselves excessive salaries. The license of the Crystal since has been revoked, but the receivership will enable a proper division of receipts and salaries.

New Grand Opens at Mohall.

Mohall, N. D.—One of the most modern picture theaters in the Northwest has just been opened here by R. B. Wilson. The theater, the New Grand, is of concrete.

Morris' Strand Deserts the Stage.

Morris, Minn.—The films have captured another playhouse built for the "legitimate" business. The new Strand theater here has been turned over to the projection machine and the screen.

Mann, Too, Goes Over to Screen.

Billings, Mont.—Arthur Mann, proprieter of the Gem theater here, has succumbed to the lure of pictures. He shortly will reopen his playhouse with a regular offering for film fans.

Fargo of Princess Ill.

Minneapolis.—E. G. Fargo, proprietor of the Princess theater at Blue Earth, Minn., is in a hospital in this city suffering from a cerebral hemorrhage with which he was stricken while on a business trip to Minneapolis. His left side is paralyzed, but only temporarily, according to physicians who are attending him.

Around About the Twin Cities.

Springfield, Minn.—W. H. Snyder has purchased the Grand theater here from T. H. Swenson.

Devils Lake, N. D.—Olson and Turner have disposed of the Unique theater here. Charles Finkle and John Wolfe are the new owners.

Hamilton, Mont.—C. E. Freshwater has sold the Family and Star theaters here to Grant O. Seafield of Seattle, Wash.

Bolfield, N. D.—A new moving picture theater is to be erected here soon, according to an announcement made several days ago. Martin Brotton and Carl Peterson are behind the project.

Minneapolis.—H. Apperson Jones of New York City is in Minneapolis to direct the work of placing "Civilization" in the Northwest territory by the Supreme Feature Film Company of this city.

Minneapolis.—Richard Mencel has resigned as manager of the Regent theater here. He left Minneapolis to enter into business at Cleveland, Ohio.

Exhibitors "Can" Chattanooga Chatter Board

Because Committee of Women's Council Refuse to Pass "The Evil Thereof" Theater Men Decline to Invite Members to Sit In on Advance Viewings—Appeal to Mayor Brings No Results.

By J. L. Ray, 1014 Stahlman Building, Nashville.

CHATTANOOGA, Tenn.—Following the refusal of the women's censorship board of the Women's Council to pass "The Evil Thereof," a Famous Players release of June 5, at the Fine Arts theater, the power of the board appears to have terminated. Women of the board declare that since their interference with this picture the existence of their board as a censorship body has been completely ignored by the exhibitors, and they are no longer invited to view advance showings of any pictures by the managers of the local theaters. Without the consent of the managers the women's board is powerless to fulfill the purpose for which it was created. This information was made known when members of the Women's Council replied to numerous inquiries as to why no protest was entered against the showing of "The Eternal Sappho," a Theda Bara subject, at the Fine Arts.

The exhibitors feel that the matter has gone far enough, and that the condemnation of "The Evil Thereof" was unjust, in and of itself. The women's board consists of seven members of the Women's Council, a civic organization representing seven thousand Chattanooga women. Mrs. C. C. Huntington, chairman of the board, stated that in the beginning the exhibitors had shown a disposition to co-operate with them, but that after their refusal to pass the picture in question the attitude of the managers had been one of total indifference. An appeal was recently made to Mayor Littleton for some action to be taken, but as yet nothing along this line has been attempted by the city officials.

Mrs. H. Goodman, a member of the women's board, declared she believed the board would be fully justified in demanding an advance showing when another Theda Bara picture is offered. However, it would seem the exhibitors themselves have more or less of a voice in the matter when such a "demand" is made. Individual members of the board who have seen some of the recent productions strongly denounce them, stating that much evil is brought to bear upon children's minds, which leaves an indelible impression. One patron of the Chattanooga houses, who has a child five years old, states that if the parents who indulge in such censorship agitation would follow the example of himself and thousands of other parents and keep the children away from so-called "salacious" offerings, there would be less trouble and grievance all around. He adds that these same childern are carried by the fond parents to see stage plays and vaudeville performances which far surpass the silent drama from a standpoint of immorality and nothing is thought of it.

Cresent Makes Changes.

Nashville.—Extensive alterations have been made in the lobby arrangement of the Crescent theater, feature house. The ticket booth, formerly far back in the lobby, has been closed, and a handsome circular booth, obtained from the Decorators' Supply Company, Chicago, has been placed in the center of the spacious corridor some thirty feet nearer the pavement. A rest room, with wicker furniture, has been provided in a section between the outer corridor and the auditorium, in which mahogany fixtures have been placed. New electrical appliances, together with tasteful decorative effects, lend an artistic appearance to the theater.

Rex Installs Electric Flag.

Nashville.—A handsome new electric image of "Old Glory" now graces the lobby of the Rex, and is attracting much attention on Fifth avenue.

Unicorn Makes Bow in Nashville.

Nashville.—Unicorn films made their initial appearance in Nashville this week, showing at three Fifth avenue houses at once. They got off to a good start, and

An ordinance relating to and regulating the exhibition of pictures, motion pictures, shows, theatricals and other public entertainments, and providing a penalty for the violation thereof.

Section 1. No person shall publicly produce, exhibit or assist in publicly producing or exhibiting any picture, motion picture, show, theatrical, or other entertainment which is immoral, indecent, obscene or licentious, or which shall have a harmful influence upon public morals, or which tends to disturb the public peace.

Sec. 2. Each performance contrary to the terms of this ordinance shall constitute a separate violation thereof.

Sec. 3. The provisions of this ordinance shall be cumulative and in addition to the provisions of existing ordinances of the City of Spokane.

Sec. 4. Each person proposing or intending to exhibit publicly any picture or motion picture shall, before making such exhibition, file with the Commissioner of Public Affairs a written notice of such proposed exhibition. Such notice shall state the name of the manufacturer thereof, the time and place of the proposed display of the picture, and the name and address of the person or persons filing the notice. Each person proposing or intending to give any public performance, show, theatrical, or exhibition, other than pictures or motion pictures, shall, before the production of such performance, show, theatrical, or exhibition, deliver to the Commissioner of Public Affairs a written notice, giving the title of the performance and, if the performance consists of several acts, the title of each act.

The Commissioner of Public Affairs shall have free access to every public entertainment or exhibition given in the City of Spokane.

Sec. 5. Any person who shall violate any of the provisions of this ordinance shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine not exceeding one hundred dollars, or by imprisonment in the city jail for a period not exceeding thirty days, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Sec. 6. This ordinance shall take effect and be in force thirty days from and after its passage.

Ohio Clubwomen Assert Censorship Fails

At Cleveland Meeting of Representatives of Fifty-four Organizations Exhibitors' Officers Ask Them to Lend Influence to Fight Censorship Law—Women Pleased by Co-operation of Theater Men.

By Hubert Persons, 410 Standard Theater Building, Cleveland.

CLEVELAND.—That the "better film" movement started here by the Federation of Women's Clubs and indorsed by the local Exhibitors' League has gained sufficient impetus to carry it through the hot weather was evidenced the night of July 25, when a "better film" meeting was held in the Old Stone Church, on the Public Square. The meeting was called by Miss Bertelle Lyttle, chairman of the civics committee of the federation, which is in charge of the better film activities as far as the clubwomen are concerned.

While the clubwomen thus far have been passive as regards any active fight on the Ohio censor board, some of those in touch with the federation activities express the belief that an open fight on censorship will develop as a result of the co-operation given the clubwomen by the Cleveland exhibitors in their plan to improve picture theater programs.

Miss Lyttle denies that her organization has any intention of entering the lists against official censorship, but admits that the failure of censorship started the better film movement by the clubwomen.

"The question 'Why is censorship not meeting the needs of our people?' raised by so many of our women, started this movement," Miss Lyttle said. "We cannot see that censorship is accomplishing anything in Ohio. We cannot see the logic of its procedure, but I do not believe we are contemplating a censorship fight. Our idea embraces rather a campaign of education—education of the manufacturers, the exhibitors and the public."

Representatives of fifty-four women's organizations attended the meetings in the Old Stone Church. In addition there were present B. J. Sawyer, president, and Charles A. Megown, secretary of the local Exhibitors' League, and Allen T. Burns, of the Cleveland Foundation.

Mr. Sawyer and Mr. Megown urged the club women to go a step further in their convictions on the censorship question and lend their influence actively for a fight to repeal the censorship law.

Mr. Burns, on behalf of the Cleveland Federation, indorsed the plan of the clubwomen to establish educational moving picture programs as an adjunct to regular public school courses.

The clubwomen differ widely on the advisibility of centering their activities on the creation of special family programs in suburban moving picture theaters. Some favor this course and others insist that at least a part of the organization effort go toward children's programs. Miss Lyttle said that undoubtedly the special children's matinee idea would be tried out, but said there was a doubt as to whether this would fill the need of the public in as great a measure as the family programs.

A special sub-committee of the civics committee is now at work on a plan to be carried out in the early fall. The principal work of this sub-committee will be in arranging programs. The exhibitors have promised to co-operate with the clubwomen as far as possible.

Some of the clubwomen also expressed opposition to the proposal to have the special programs run on Sundays as well as other days, but this is not expected to hamper the working out of the plan.

A list of educational and children's films recently published by The Moving Picture World is now being studied by the club women.

No Exhibitors' Meeting at Mansfield.

Cleveland.—The proposed meeting of Ohio moving picture exhibitors at Mansfield on July 25 did not materialize, being called off by the Cincinnati exhibitors at the last minute. It had been the intention of the Cleveland exhibitors on the advice of National President Lee Ochs to send W. H. Horsey, state secretary, to this meeting with an invitation to the Columbus and Cincinnati exhibitors to apply for a state charter. Some of the Cleveland exhibitors oppose giving any heed to the activities of any organization of exhibitors not embraced in the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America.

Reserve Studio Nearing Completion.

Cleveland.—Johnny and Emma Ray, stars of the producing staff of the Reserve Photoplays Company, are taking a fortnight's vacation, during which the new studio in the Wilshire building will be completely equipped. The studio proper has space for five "sets" at a time, and contains thirty dressing rooms, screening room, laboratory, cutting room and carpenter shop. In addition the roof of the big six-story building is to be equipped for use as an outdoor studio.

When the Rays return to work the Reserve Company will put out a new edition of one-reel comedies, the first of which is expected to be "Casey Goes Shopping." Scenes in a big department store will be reproduced in the studio and Johnny Ray, in the title role, will take a wild ride on an overhead parcel carrier.

"Casey's Servants" is the latest Reserve release. It opens for a four-day run at the Strand theater and is booked in many other houses later.

Other early releases in the Casey series are "Casey The Bandmaster," "Casey The Fireman," "Casey The Janitor" and "Casey's Kids."

Here Is Something New in Photoplays.

Cleveland.—The Midland Film Company of this city has just made the dual announcement of the purchase of a 150-acre tract of land for the erection of a modern studio and the intention to produce a seven-reel feature play written by a Sandusky woman and embracing her life story.

According to H. P. Angel, secretary of the Midland Company, real Cleveland people are to be named in the cast, including Probate Judge Hadden, Dr. A. B. Howard, Dr. Willis Hobson and A. B. Williams, the latter of the Cleveland Humane Society. They will not act in person, but their parts will be taken by screen actors.

The story tells how the author of the play was wronged in girlhood, how her children were taken from her, how her family kept her prisoner in a garret for four years, later sending her to Newburgh Asylum for the Insane. She escaped from the asylum, proved her sanity and married a Sandusky man. Now she hopes her life story on the moving picture screen will enable her to find her two children, for whom a search has proven futile.

Bullock's Houses on Part Time.

Cleveland.—Just to show that he has the courage of his convictions, Sam Bullock, who recently failed in an effort to induce local exhibitors to close their houses for a few weeks during the hot weather, has announced that the Columbia and the Boulevard theaters, which he manages, will be closed part of the time during the hot weather. His notice to the public, printed on the Boulevard program, was as follows:

"The motion picture business is a 365-day grind and our employees need a breathing spell this hot weather. Consequently we shall, until further notice, close the Boulevard theater on Mondays and Wednesdays with full pay to our employees. We sincerely hope that this arrangement will not inconvenience our patrons."

A similar notice on the Columbia theater program arranges for closing three days a week, Monday, Wednesday and Friday, with full pay to employees.

Warns Against Fake Acting Schools.

Cleveland.—John DeKoven, photoplay editor of the Cleveland Leader, has just printed a lengthy warning against fraudulent schools for acting, particularly as applied to persons offering to put girls on the moving picture stage. The article, DeKoven says, was inspired by the receipt of many letters from girls who had taken "courses" intended to make them "stars" in a few weeks. Third-rate producers, DeKoven says, had in several instances urged girls to take such "courses."

Exhibitors Install Officers.

Cleveland.—Newly elected officers of the Northwestern Ohio Motion Picture Exhibitors' League were formally installed at a meeting of the league in its headquarters in the Republic building, August 1. The new officers elected a fortnight ago are Benjamin J. Sawyer, president; Henry Lustig, vice-president; C. A. Megown, secretary, and Adolph Maher, treasurer.

Sex Pictures Arouse Louisville Churchmen

Men's Brotherhood of St. John's Pass Resolutions Urging Managers to Co-operate in Making Screen Power for Good—Object, Too, to the Restriction "No Children Under Sixteen Admitted."

By G. D. Crain, 1404 Starks Building, Louisville.

LOUISVILLE, Ky.—The showing of several "sex" pictures in rapid succession by some of the moving picture theaters of this city has called a rise out of the Men's Brotherhood of St. John's Evangelical Church. The organization at a recent meeting adopted resolutions in arraignment of film plays whose themes exploit the sex problem and calling on civic and church organizations and the city government to protest against such showings. After calling attention to the fact that the motion picture has become a popular form of recreation and of deep, lasting impressions created by the pictures, the resolution reads:

"Resolved, That we insistently urge the management, directors and stockholders of local playhouses to co-operate with us in our endeavor to make the screen a power for good and not a source of evil; that we call on brotherhoods, churches, civic clubs, fraternities, our city government and other agencies concerned about the common good to lift their voices in protest against the misuse and corruption of what otherwise might be one of the greatest educational factors in our modern life, the moving picture show."

A rap was also taken at the exhibitors for making the shows doubly attractive and enticing by the restriction "No children under sixteen admitted," and by raising the price of admission for such shows to attract where a show at the usual price of 10 cents would not appear of any unusual attractiveness. It was alleged that many of the films present scenes and suggest transactions bordering on the obscene.

Exhibitor Suggests Stripping of Fans.

Louisville.—One of the local moving picture exhibitors is working out a theory to the effect that electric fans make less noise, deliver more air and work more advantageously if the entire fan guard is removed and the fan is allowed to run naked. He contends that as the fans are placed on brackets high above the heads of the audience there is absolutely no chance of anyone getting a finger into the fans, which as a rule are turned off and on by switches in a switch box. In many cases fan guards quickly become tarnished, bent and even fly-specked, and have no advantage whatsoever where a fan is placed at a sufficient height from the floor. According to this exhibitor there would be just as much sense in placing a guard on a wooden panel ceiling fan as on a fan that is located on a wall bracket. Another Louisville exhibitor has decided to cover all of his semi-indirect lighting fixtures with mosquito netting or screening of some kind to keep the bugs out in the summer time. With open houses the inverted bowl fixtures have to be emptied of dead bugs every few days, layers one to three inches deep accumulating in the bottom of the globes.

Summer Hasn't Affected the Aristo.

Louisville.—H. S. Gilbert, manager of the Aristo theater, reports that the house is making money in the summer months in spite of the fact that it is in a wealthy neighborhood where many people have left the city until fall. For some time the house, which is a suburban theater, has been showing first run Bluebird features under an old contract whereby the Strand theater had the first run and the Aristo the second. The Strand theater closed, and as no downtown house took the first run Bluebird the Aristo used the first run films until the contract expired, when the films were taken away from it. The theater has arranged a new program whereby V-L-S-E pictures will again be run on Fridays and Sundays; Daniels comedies on Fridays and Mondays; four Paramounts, on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Saturday. Serials and series pictures are run to fill in the other bills, all shows running about seven reels.

Louisville Concern Takes Vice Film.

Louisville.—The Big Feature Rights Corporation, of Louisville, which handled the "Battle Cry of Peace" and several other big features in this district, has announced that it has booked the new feature, "The Little Girl Next Door," for showing in Kentucky and Tennessee.

Field in Industrials Expanding.

Louisville.—That national organizations are now fully aware of the importance of moving pictures as a means of showing members of various industries important features in their trades is shown by the fact that at almost every national convention special pictures of some kind are shown. During the recent national convention of dyers and cleaners in Louisville a special show was held at the Alamo theater showing inside operations in the cleaning and dyeing field. The following week during the National Association of Dentists convention, also in Louisville, pictures were shown at the old Masonic theater in which many interesting features of the profession were shown.

Berryman Issues Favorable Report.

Lexington.—At a recent meeting of the Board of Directors of the Berryman Realty Company, owners of the Ben Ali theater and the Lexington opera house, President Berryman reported that business for the year had been very satisfactory and that there was complete confidence on the part of the board that the favorable conditions would continue. Reports in circulation to the effect that there were negotiations on between the Strand, the Ben Ali and other theaters looking toward an amusement combination with the introduction of more vaudeville and road shows and the elimination of some of the expensive competition in pictures were denied by President Berryman.

will be given a thorough trial by the theaters here.

Wassman Entertains Soldiers.

Nashville.—W. H. Wassman entained the Tennessee troops at the Knickerbocker during the run of the Ince feature, "The Deserter," which Mr. Wassman considered a fit subject for every man in the camp to witness. The best seats in the house were provided for the soldiers.

Tennessee Topics.

Nashville.—Messrs. Tony Sudekum and Harry Anderson, president and publicity manager, respectively, represented the Crescent Amusement Company at the Exhibitors' Convention in Chicago. W. H. Wassman was another delegate from Nashville.

Nashville.—General Manager Oldknow of the Consolidated Film and Supply Company, Atlanta, was in Nashville and closed bookings with the Princess for "Where are My Children?"

Nashville.—Exhibitor Harry Sudekum is the proud father of an eight and a half pound girl.

Memphis.—The Old Majestic No. 1 is booking the Essanay-Bushman releases, which are extremely popular in Memphis.

Lawrenceburg.—E. R. Braly has sold the Princess theater to the Lawrenceburg Band Company. A ten-piece orchestra has been added. Admission remains at 5 cents.

Tullahoma.—Manager Aaron Campbell opened his new theater to the public July 24. The house is one of the handsomest in this section and a crowd greeted the opening performance.

Maryville.—Operations are being pushed rapidly in the construction of the $11,000 theater for Maryville, which is leased by W. E. Drummond, of Knoxville.

Phoenix Directors Clear Slate.

Lexington.—Officers of the Phoenix Amusement Company, operators of the Strand theater, have denied there was any truth in the rumor that a combination was under consideration. The company recently held a meeting of its directors at which meeting an assessment of $10,000 was made against the stockholders to be applied in removing a standing indebtedness against the concern. Reports were made at the meeting by M. Switow, president of the company, and Slaughter Sparks, the manager, indicating the company's business was in satisfactory condition. The authorized capital of the company is $40,000, of which $28,000 has been issued.

Slight Fire at New Grand.

Henderson.—The New Grand theater was damaged by fire which broke out in the rear of the building at noon on July 18. The rear of the building and a lot of stored merchandise, consisting largely of chairs and extra equipment, was damaged. The loss was not very heavy, as the contents were not of any great value

Kentucky Notes.

Georgetown.—It has been announced that N. W. Grantz is preparing to remodel the Alamo theater building.

Hickman.—Many friends of H. A. Colvin are somewhat worried over his sudden disappearance from the city without notice. Mr. Colvin for some time has been operating the Crystal theater under lease from John Wright, and the Empress theater under lease from J. T. Dillon. Nothing is known concerning his whereabouts.

Paducah.—Sheriff Bailey Huddleston, of Hickman, recently passed through the city with E. H. Rucker, a negro prisoner, captured at Metropolis, Ill. Rucker is alleged to have taken a moving picture machine out of a theater at Hickman.

Winchester.—On account of poor business, the Colonial theater, operated for several months by R. L. Badger, has been closed. It is claimed the house has operated at a loss for some time.

Maysville.—At a recent meeting of the creditors of Harry Hills, bankrupt, owner of the Gem theater, Harry L. Walsh was appointed trustee in bankruptcy to wind up Mr. Mills' affairs. The theater has been closed, but may be opened after the second creditors' meeting on Aug. 8.

End Spokane Censor Fight

Exhibitors and Theatrical Men Bury the Hatchet—New Censorship Ordinance.

By S. Clark Patchin, Spokane.

SPOKANE, WASH.—Moving picture exhibitors and other theatrical managers of Spokane have practically buried the hatchet over the censorship fight, according to all reports. The city commissioners repealed the censorship ordinance held up by referendum, thus giving the picture men the best of that deal. They have had two readings of a second ordinance to supplant the former ordinance passed a few weeks ago, which it is understood is acceptable to both sides, as a public hearing was held. This ordinance was so strongly approved that its adoption is predicted as certain. It still gives the city commissioner of public affairs oversight, and follows:

An ordinance relating to and regulating the exhibition of pictures, motion pictures, shows, theatricals and other public entertainments, and providing a penalty for the violation thereof.

Section 1. No person shall publicly produce, exhibit or assist in publicly producing or exhibiting any picture, motion picture, show, theatrical, or other entertainment which is immoral, indecent, obscene or licentious, or which shall have a harmful influence upon public morals, or which tends to disturb the public peace.

Sec. 2. Each performance contrary to the terms of this ordinance shall constitute a separate violation thereof.

Sec. 3. The provisions of this ordinance shall be cumulative and in addition to the provisions of existing ordinances of the City of Spokane.

Sec. 4. Each person proposing or intending to exhibit publicly any picture or motion picture shall, before making such exhibition, file with the Commissioner of Public Affairs a written notice of such proposed exhibition. Such notice shall state the name of the manufacturer thereof, the time and place of the proposed display of the picture, and the name and address of the person or persons filing the notice. Each person proposing or intending to give any public performance, show, theatrical, or exhibition, other than pictures or motion pictures, shall, before the production of such performance, show, theatrical, or exhibition, deliver to the Commissioner of Public Affairs a written notice, giving the title of the performance and, if the performance consists of several acts, the title of each act.

The Commissioner of Public Affairs shall have free access to every public entertainment or exhibition given in the City of Spokane.

Sec. 5. Any person who shall violate any of the provisions of this ordinance shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine not exceeding one hundred dollars, or by imprisonment in the city jail for a period not exceeding thirty days, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

Sec. 6. This ordinance shall take effect and be in force thirty days from and after its passage.

A similar notice on the Columbia theater program arranges for closing three days a week, Monday, Wednesday and Friday, with full pay to employees.

Warns Against Fake Acting Schools.

Kleist Will Canvass Michigan for League

With Secretary Moeller, State President to Tour the State in the Interest of His Organization—Believes Through Personal Talks With Exhibitors He Will Be Able Greatly to Increase Membership.

By Jacob Smith, 503 Free Press Building, Detroit.

DETROIT.—The World representative went to Mt. Clemens the other day to interview August Kleist, Sr., President of the Michigan State Branch No. 4, Motion Picture Exhibtors' League of America. Mr. Kleist is running the Lyric theater in the Bath City, having moved to Mt. Clemens from Pontiac about eighteen months ago. He is the only exhibitor who has ever met with success in the operation of the Lyric. The house seats 316, is in the very heart of Mt. Clemens' hotels and prices are five and ten cents. The service is Universal, World and V-L-S-E.

Regarding association affairs, Mr. Kleist said: "Our next convention—as well as all future meetings—will be held in the city of Detroit. We are extremely anxious to get out a big attendance at the coming meeting which takes place in December. There will be a lot of important matters to take up. For instance, there is the matter of state censorship, the $1,000 license and the closing of theaters on Sundays. Our association intends to vigorously oppose any adverse legislation, and it is unfair that we should spend our money and get results for even those exhibitors who refuse to belong to our association. Michigan State Branch No. 4 is for all exhibitors, big and little, and the only sure way to get results that will protect the industry in this state is for every exhibitor to be a member.

"Early in August, A. J. Moeller, secretary of the Michigan association, and myself plan to make an extended trip through the state, calling on hundreds of exhibitors from city to city in the hope that we can secure their membership. We fully believe that if we can personally talk to an exhibitor and can get the opportunity to present our side to non-members, we will have little difficulty in materially increasing our membership. And more members means greater strength to our organization and greater results for all."

Wide Exploitation of Young Films.

The Harry I. Garson Productions, Inc., is the name definitely decided upon for the exploitation of the Clara Kimball Young productions, the first of which will be "The Common Law." J. O. Kent, manager of the exchange, has leased the second floor of the building at 318 Woodward avenue. The lease not only includes the entire second floor, but also the use of the roof for a huge electric sign. According to an announcement by Mr. Garson, this will be a moving electric sign that will announce each week where the various Young productions are showing. As approximately 200,000 people pass the point in the course of a day one can readily appreciate the value of the sign for advertising purposes. The exchange will be ready early in August.

If plans decided upon by Mr. Garson are carried out to the letter, the advertising and publicity campaign which he has outlined will be the greatest known to the motion picture exhibitors of Michigan. Mr. Garson has already contracted for one thousand billboard spaces and has already placed his orders for twenty-four sheets. The campaign not only includes billboard advertising, but a newspaper campaign as well, along the lines of general publicity.

Anglin Studio Near Detroit.

On a site of twenty acres on Michigan avenue, about three and one-half miles east of Wayne and about twelve miles out of Detroit, is to be established the Michigan plant of the Margaret Anglin Pictorial corporation, according to an announcement by James D. Barton, president and general manager of the corporation, who has completed the purchase of the property.

George W. Weeks Promoted.

George W. Weeks, manager of the Detroit Universal Film Company, has been appointed district manager of the central division for the Universal, which includes Detroit, Cleveland, Cincinnati and Indianapolis. Mr. Weeks returned from a trip to these cities on July 27, accompanied by M. H. Hoffman, general manager of Universal exchanges.

George Weeks has a host of good friends in Michigan—real friends—the kind that stick through thick and thin. As he gets better acquainted with exhibitors in other sections of the country, he will unquestionably create many new friends, not only for himself but for the Universal.

The promotion of Mr. Weeks will mean the promotion of M. S. Bailey, his assistant at Detroit, and we await the word from New York of the appointment of Mr. Bailey as manager of the Detroit Universal exchange.

Bert Graham, formerly traveling representative for the Detroit Universal, has been appointed Detroit salesman, and he is succeeded on the road by Robert Rowan.

Two Owners of One State Right.

An interesting suit on the film "Charlie's Stormy Romance," created no end of excitement for Detroit exhibitors. Judge S. Hosmer rendered a decision which permits two prints of this film to do business in Michigan. The suit was between the Standard Film Feature Service Co. and the Wolverine Feature Film Co., both claiming full Michigan rights on the film. The Standard had leased its print to the Royale theater on Monroe avenue, while the Wolverine leased its print to the Monroe theater, also on Monroe avenue. The Standard asked for an injunction against the Wolverine, but this Judge Hosmer refused to grant, which gives the right to both exchanges to make bookings in Michigan on "Charlie's Stormy Romance."

International Opens Detroit Office.

L. E. Davis, of the International Film Service, representing Detroit, has opened an office at 1 and 2 Campau building. He reports increasing business every week.

Drury Lane Opens to Big Business.

Detroit's newest downtown theater, The Drury Lane, at 256 Woodward avenue, opened on Friday, July 21, to big business. The house is managed by Frank Drew, whose assistant is G. C. Deats, formerly associated with the Avenue theater. The style of decoration in the theater is of the Adam period. There is a 40-foot lobby from Woodward avenue, and the theater is 60 feet deep and about 60 wide. Music is furnished by a Wurlitzer organ. The policy of the house is a new feature every day and prices afternoon and evening are ten cents. Performances are continuous from 9 A. M. to 11 P. M. The Drury Lane seats 550 people and is a cozy playhouse. The annual rental is said to be in the neighborhood of $25,000.

Organist Fruetchey Favors the Organ.

C. F. Fruetchey, former organist at the Majestic theater, Detroit, contends the organ is the best medium for the interpretation of motion pictures because of the frequent changes in the story, both as to mode and temperament. He further contends it is impossible to get as good an interpretation with an orchestra as it is with an organ. Mr. Fruetchey has prepared a list of "400 suggestions to movie-organ players."

Spaeth Moves to Kalamazoo.

George Spaeth has resigned the house management of the Majestic Gardens theater at Grand Rapids, Mich., to manage the Fuller theater in Kalamazoo, Mich., having purchased a half interest in the house. The Fuller seats 1,700 people and plays both legitimate attractions and motion picture productions.

A. J. Gilligham announces that the Majestic Gardens will remain open Saturdays and Sundays until August 27, when it will resume its regular policy of keeping open seven days a week.

Aladdin Doubles Up.

The Aladdin theater in Bay City, Mich., has closed for about six weeks, while extensive repairs are being made. About $3,000 will be spent in re-arranging it. The seating capacity will be doubled, bringing the accommodations up to 1,000.

Michigan Notes.

The Park theater, Battle Creek, Mich., has been sold by Harry Saylor to Samuel Bowne and son, Edward Bowne. The house was closed for slight repairs and reopened July 30.

A. J. Gilligham has given up his lease on the Columbia theater, Grand Rapids, Mich. No announcement is made by the Temple Theater Realty Company as to the future policy of the house.

The Knickerbocker theater, at Holland, Mich., will be sold at public auction at the court house in Grand Haven on September 1. The Michigan Trust Company of Grand Rapids is acting as administrator for the Slagh estate, who own the property.

Pending the bankruptcy proceedings involving the Grand Circus theater, 301 Woodward avenue, Detroit, Henry P. Seaborg will have full charge of the affairs of the theater, having been appointed receiver by the court.

News from the Bay State

Boston Photoplay in New Quarters.

BOSTON, MASS.—The Boston Photoplay Company, which books "Where Are My Children?" which has been playing for two months at the Majestic theater, is opening new headquarters at 205 Pleasant street. Edward A. Golden, manager of the company, has taken part of the quarters of the Kriterion Film Exchange at that address and is fitting an up-to-date office and exhibition room there.

Paramount Fitting Up New Offices.

One of the finest moving picture headquarters in New England is being built for the Paramount Pictures Corporation and will be opened for business about September 1. The new building runs from Shawmut to Piedmont streets and will have ornate entrances on each street. It is a one-story building, and besides the general offices, distributing rooms and film deposit vaults will have one of the best exhibition rooms in the country. The company's quarters on Pleasant street have been completely outgrown by the large volume of business that the company is doing in New England.

Dave Manley to Open the Crystal.

"Dave" Manely, well known of theatrical fame, is opening a new theater in Worcester within a few weeks. It is a $200,000 structure and will be known as The Crystal. It is on Trumbull street, just off of Front street, the main thoroughfare between the Union station and Main street. The new theater will seat 1,025 persons and will be thoroughly up-to-date. On the Saturday before Labor Day Manager Manley expects to invite the public to a big band concert in the theater and to open the house for public inspection. On Labor Day the house will be opened for regular business. Mr. Manley has been in Boston, making bookings of big feature films for his new house.

Exhibitors Look Over Kalem Serial.

Sixty exhibitors from all over New England came to Boston this week to see the first run-off of "The Girl from 'Frisco," a Kalem film produced by the Western Company. It will be released in the regular Kalem service on August 9.

Regan With World Film.

C. F. Regan, who has been a moving picture exhibitor in the Western field, has joined the force of the World Film Corporation as a road man. He takes charge of the New Hampshire and Vermont interests of the World company. W. H. O'Brien, who has been with the World traveling in Maine, has returned from a trip through that State and has gone to Rhode Island.

Marion to Test Sunday Law

Indiana Exhibitor to Fight Arrest for Showing Sacred Picture.

MARION, IND.—Marion is to have a Sunday closing test case. There have been many in Indiana, but for some reason no definite construction has ever been placed on the closing laws. The Supreme Court has never been asked to rule on Sunday closing. It is possible the Marion cases will make their way into the upper courts before a definite decision is reached. Other cities of the state, principally the larger ones, have the Sunday show. In most cases restrictions are thrown about Sunday opening but not always.

The Royal Grand theater opened its doors recently, after having advertised Sunday shows. Only sacred pictures were shown and only sacred music was to be heard. The vaudeville was cut from the bill. Policemen arrested the owner, Miss Dollie Spurr, and her brother, Howard, who was operating. The two gave bond and employed attorneys.

Sunday opening was tried several weeks ago, but it failed and no fight against the police decision was made. The owners of the theater were convicted of following their usual avocations on Sunday and paid light fines.

Petitions are being circulated here to permit Sunday openings, but no use of them has yet been made.

Byrd Joins Sheppard Forces

Resigns from Fox Dallas Office to Handle Three Southern States.

By A. B. Harrison, Box 389, Dallas.

DALLAS, TEX.—William M. Byrd has tendered his resignation as manager of the Fox Film Corporation here, effective August 1, which office he has been managing since September, 1915. Mr. Byrd has just closed a fifty-two week contract to manage "The Fall of a Nation." This feature will be handled on the same basis as "The Birth of a Nation" by W. K. Sheppard in Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas, with headquarters at Dallas.

O. P. Hall, formerly of Atlanta, and a well known film man throughout the South, will succeed Mr. Byrd.

Mr. Byrd has been in the amusement business practically all of his life, formerly promoting large skating rinks. Five years ago he became an exhibitor and so remained for two years. He disposed of his theaters in Texas and Oklahoma and accepted a position with the first feature film company in the South, The Famous Players. Later he was manager of the World Film Corporation, succeeding Frank Sanford in that capacity.

Mr. Sheppard of Brownsville has purchased "The Fall of a Nation" for the three states named and has arrived in Dallas July 21 to perfect arrangements for its handling.

Crown Returns to Houston.

Houston.—P. C. Crown, manager of the Crown theater, has returned to Houston after an absence of several months and he will again look after the active management of the Crown theater.

Gilson Succeeds O'Leary.

Houston.—F. L. O'Leary, manager of the Beacon theater at Houston, has resigned and has been succeeded by J. W. Gilson.

Theater at Palacios Changes Hands.

Palacios.—Lawrence Nelson has purchased the LaBelle theater here from G. Martino. Mr. and Mrs. Martino have gone North on a month's vacation, at the end of which time Mr. Martino says he is coming back to Houston to look for a location.

Texas Exhibitors Visiting Dallas.

Recent visitors to Dallas included L. M. Ridout, manager and owner of the Star theater at Denison; J. W. Sayeg, manager of the Grand and Jewel theaters at Ennis; Saul Dan, manager of the opera house at Wichita Falls; Messrs. Kimbel and Davidson, managers of the Princess theater at Weatherford; A. V. Wade, manager, and R. L. Wood, operator, of the Dreamland theater at Lewisville; J. W. Rushing of the Dixie theater at Kemp, and C. W. Batsell, manager of the King and Queen theaters at Sherman.

Pittsburgh Has New Film Container Rules

Department of Public Safety Issues Instructions Designed to Protect Traveling Public—Youngstown, Ohio, to Have Big House—Walters Theater, Davis, West Virginia, Enlarges.

By Pittsburgh News Service, 6016 Jenkins Arcade, Pittsburgh.

PITTSBURGH, PA. — Pittsburgh exchanges have received an order from the Department of Public Safety for the purpose of enforcing the regulations as to cases in which moving picture films are carried in the city. Director Hubbard of the department has asked the co-operation of the managers in carrying out the following rule, which will likely be embodied in an ordinance. It applies to the carrying of films on street cars and other conveyances.

"Moving picture films must be packed in tightly closed metal cases inclosed in a strong, spark-proof wooden box, or in the case of sheet iron not less than 2 inches (number 25 U. C. standard gauge) and lined thoroughly with fibre board one-eighth of an inch thick or some other equivalent insulating material. The covers of cases must fit tightly and lap over body at least five-eighths of an inch on the sides, forming a tight joint."

Strand and Court Change Owners.

Two well known theaters in Washington, Pa., changed hands recently, the Strand and the Court. Roy Fulton and Abe Vaught have purchased the Court theater from W. F. Delaney, who will continue in the capacity of house manager. A number of improvements will be made by the new owners, including a five-piece orchestra. A policy of big feature pictures will be instituted at the Court. The Strand theater has been sold by B. Brandon to a former owner of the house, Mr. Clark.

Big Theater for Youngstown, Ohio.

One of the most pretentious moving picture theaters in the eastern part of the Buckeye State is to be built soon in Youngstown, Ohio, by the Federal Holding Company. It is to be operated by C. W. Diebel, according to reports received here. The concern backing the project has been incorporated with a capital of $200,000. The incorporators were A. E. Adams, L. J. Campbell, C. W. Diebel, Richard Galick and R. C. Steece, all of Youngstown. The theater will occupy a fine location on Boardman street, with a Federal street entrance. When the plans will be put into effect has not yet been announced.

Fairmont's Grand Is Remodeled.

The Grand theater, Fairmount, West Va., has been reopened after undergoing a remodeling process which has greatly increased the attractiveness of the house. Much up-to-date equipment has been added and a new pipe organ installed. The Grand is now one of the best arranged and most inviting theaters in its section of the state. Manager W. M. Miller visited in Pittsburgh several days ago, and while here booked a number of features to be shown soon.

Walters Theater Enlarges.

The Walters theater, Davis, West Va., has been closed for the purpose of remodeling the house and enlarging it by several hundred seats. Its capacity will be 750. New and up-to-date equipment also is being installed. The reopening will take place about August 15. The owners of the Walters theater are also conducting the Opera House as a picture theater this summer, and if its success warrants, the policy will be continued in both houses.

New Bethlehem to Have Theater.

C. E. Andrews is erecting a modern 800-seat house at New Bethlehem, Pa. This is the first moving picture theater in the town, which has a population of 2,500. It will be completed in about three months.

Aronson Puts in First Run Universals.

Manager Aronson has announced that his downtown Cameraphone theater, 347 Fifth avenue, Pittsburgh, has inaugurated an important change in its attractions, having become the first run house on the Universal Program in western Pennsylvania. The program will be shown throughout the week, with Bluebird features on Saturdays.

Solz Manages Uptown Cameraphone.

J. Solz has been appointed manager of the uptown cameraphone theater, at 1600 Fifth avenue, Pittsburgh, recently purchased by the Rex Amusement Company. The house is closed temporarily, but the work of remodeling will be completed within another week.

McClelland Names House Committee.

President A. H. McClellan has appointed the following members to constitute the House Committee of the Pittsburgh Screen Club: Ludwig Hommell, chairman; Harry Reiff, Harry Megown, Dale R. Cratty and Ralph Pielson.

Stories of the Films

V-L-S-E, INC.

SELIG ATHLETIC FEATURE FILM SERIES NO. 4 (July 17).

Addams and Pratt, champion high jumpers of the world, stage a spectacular contest at Stagg Field, Chicago.

Finish wrestling match between Sam Varrion, of Chicago, and Ben Ruben, amateur middleweight wrestling champion of the world. Ruben defeats Varrion only after a sensational battle.

Annual push ball contest between freshmen and sophomores of Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute, of Troy, N. Y. The game is contested by two hundred students, one hundred on each side, and is an annual college event.

Johnny Ertle, of St. Paul, Minn., world's bantamweight champion boxer, presents methods he uses to train and condition himself for his ring contests, and is also seen in a scientific glove contest with Joe Burman, of Chicago.

THE STING OF VICTORY (Essanay—Five Parts—Aug. 7).—The cast: David Whiting and Walker Whiting (Henry B. Walthall); Ruth Tyler (Antoinette Walker); Edith Whiting (Anne Leigh); Jack Spencer (John Lorenz); David Whiting, Sr. (Thomas Commerford); Thomas Spicer (Richardson Cotton); George Spicer (Jack Dale). Directed by J. Charles Haydon.

David Whiting belongs to a fine old aristocratic family of the south and is an officer in the United States Army. He believes in the Union and is opposed to slavery. When the Civil War breaks out he frees his personal slaves and joins his regiment to fight for the north. His brother, Walker, is an honorable man, but hot-headed and impetuous, the opposite of his brother. He joins the southern army fighting against his brother. Edith Whiting, the sister, and her parents are extremely bitter over David's defection.

The play opens shortly before the Civil War, when David is visiting his home with a friend and brother officer, Jack Spencer, who is engaged to Edith. Edith quarrels with Spencer over their differences in principles and returns his engagement ring. David is in love with Ruth Tyler. During the war the Whiting family, deserted by the slaves, have a hard time to make ends meet, and borrow from a professional money-lender, Thomas Spicer, giving mortgages on their property. Spicer is anxious that his son be recognized by the better class of people. He is ambitious for him to marry Edith Whiting. Edith always spurns him, even though word reaches her that Spencer has been killed.

After the war David, now a colonel, returns to his home town with his troops as military commander of the district. He pays off the debts on the plantation and saves his sister from further humiliation at the hands of Spicer. A few days afterward Spicer is found murdered. Walker Whiting is found leaning over the body. A gun belonging to Walker is found by the man's side. It is well known that there was bitter feeling between Walker and Spicer, so he is arrested and accused of the murder. It devolves on David to court-martial and try his own brother. However, Rufus, a slave, confesses he killed Spicer because he once horsewhipped him.

Although David had done all of this and much more for his family, had restored order and saved the residence from great humiliation and outrage, both his family and all his old friends are still cold to him. The sting of victory comes when the woman he had long loved, Ruth Tyler, rejects him and throws herself into the arms of his brother. David has won the fight for his principles, but lost the girl.

Knock-about wrestling match between Kalla Pasha and Jack Dribbs. Bowling contest on the lawns of the Crescent Club at Brooklyn, with a close-up view of Wm. H. Herbert, champion bowler, with his trophy.

SELIG ATHLETIC FEATURE FILM SERIES, NO. 6 (July 31).—Ralph de Palma and Dario Resta, world champion auto speed demons, show racing on various speedways. Gus Schoenlein and Johnny Rogers engage in a wrestling match to a finish. Theodore Combis, awarded the prize for being the world's most perfect man physically. Frank Thoma and H. S. Merino present the finer points of the bowling game.

SELIG ATHLETIC FEATURE FILMS SERIES NO. 7 (Aug. 7).—Collier and De Walde engage in roller skating contest. Students of Columbia University engage in a strenuous tug of war. Greenleaf and Weinrich engage in an expert billiard match. Field Day at White Sox Park, Chicago. Sack race, relay race and the hop, skip and jump. Ed. Lewis, who wrestled Joe Fletcher five hours to a draw, has a handicap wrestling contest against Cutler and Getstout, and wins within an hour.

METRO PICTURES CORP.

THE DEVIL AT HIS ELBOW (Popular Plays and Players—Five Parts—July 31).—The cast: John Ashton (Clifford Bruce); Meg (Dorothy Green); Robert Gray (J. K. Roberts); Andrew Sealey (Frank McDonald); Grace Sealey (Mary Sandway); Wilfred Carleton (Adolph Menjou); Franklin Darrow (Edward Martindel). Scenario written by Wallace O. Clifton. Produced by Burton L. King.

John Ashton, a young mechanical engineer, is completing the plans of a new submarine. The government is interested in his work, and he has promised to have it done by the tenth of the month, which gives him only six days in which to complete it. More and more he has been resorting to whiskey to keep his brain active. His friend, Franklin Darrow, and his assistant, Robert Gray, remonstrate with him, but to no avail. His fiancee, Grace Sealey, telephones him and urges him to attend a dinner party on the ninth. He accepts, though against his will. He falls asleep and dreams that he prepares to attend the dinner; he is still intoxicated when he arrives. Grace's father at once breaks off the engagement, and he leaves the house in disgrace. He goes home and finishes his plans on the morning of the tenth, and then, still wearing his evening clothes, wanders out into unknown streets. He goes into a saloon on the waterfront, and drinks until he is insensible. There he is noticed by the captain and mate of a freighter, and shanghaied on board the vessel. When he comes to his senses he is far out at sea, and is told that the cruise will occupy six months, but that he may have all he wants to drink.

At the end of the cruise Ashton and the captain, coming ashore, take a farewell drink together. Meg, a human derelict, attracts the captain's attention, and he attempts to force his attentions upon her. Ashton comes to her assistance, angering the captain, who gets two stevedores to attack him. Meg takes him to her own meagre quarters and takes care of him. Gradually she induces him to stop drinking.

Passing the building where he formerly had his office, he sees Franklin Darrow, a government engineer, and Gray, and hears them speak of Grace's wedding. She is to marry Wilfred Carleton, a broker, thinking Ashton dead. The news sends Ashton back to drinking heavily once more. But Meg learns of his real identity and helps him to win back his self-respect. They are married and Ashton's ambition returns. He resumes his work and seeks out his former friends.

But Meg is unused to the new life. Her husband's work takes him more and more away from her, and she decides to take radical measures. Since he fell in love with her when under the influence of drink, she induces him to drink again, preferring his society in idleness and sordid surroundings to his neglect in luxury. The new plans for the government's submarine are made while he is intoxicated. They are wrong, and the crew of the first boat launched is drowned. Meg confesses what she has done, and takes the blame on herself. He flies at her throat—and waking up, knocks over the things on his desk. His original plans are as yet unfinished. He puts from him "the devil at his elbow"—whiskey—and he and his fiancee have an early marriage, with the promise of a life full of achievement and ambition that is not clouded by an enemy which steals away the brains.

THE GREAT CORONA RACE (Two Parts—Aug. 13).—The cast: Tom Ross (Richard Stanton); Malcolm Short (Clyde Benson); Margery Trumbull (Marcia Moore). Scenario by Walter Woods. Produced by Richard Stanton.

Ross conducts a little auto repair shop and is building himself a racing car, which is entered in the Corona race. Trumbull reads a description of "Speed King" in the papers, and wagers a large sum with Short that this unknown will "show in the money." Short proposed to Margery and is rejected.

Margery's car refuses to start and Ross is phoned for to come and repair it. He meets Margery and while fixing her car they become friendly, he telling her of his racing ambition and of his despair because he has not money to complete his car. His visit makes quite an impression on Margery. She longs for another chat, so she unscrews an important part of her machine and tosses it away. Ross is again called to repair it. Again their conversation is most entertaining, so much so that Trumbull feels it his duty to cut it short, so he calls Margery to the house, where Short, who has been observing, is consumed with jealousy. Ross is lothe to leave, but as an excuse to return, he "forgets" his tools.

Margery asks her father to lend the young man money to complete his car. Trumbull refuses. Margery tells him that the man has a chance in the race if he can complete his car—that his name is "Speed King." Trumbull is stumped. If he doesn't lend the money he will lose the bet to Short. Short solves the problem by telling Trumbull to lend the money conditionally and to have Ross sign a paper agreeing that if he cannot repay the amount after the race he will agree never to speak to Margery again.

Trumbull takes the plan, as he has seen Ross return for his tools, and the very evident interest of his daughter for the young man. He broaches the subject to Ross—appeals to his "sporting" side, and Ross agrees. He accepts the loan and signs the paper. On the day of the race Short bribes the mechanician to cripple Ross's car at about the middle of the race. Margery overhears the plot and informs Ross. The latter changes mechanicians. Ross wins the race and incidentally the love of Margery.

THE FINISHING TOUCH (Aug. 6).—The cast: Sam Newlands (Rex de Rosselli); Irene (Majorie Ellison); Danny (Buddy McQuoid). Written by Harvey Gates. Produced by George Cochrane.

Sam Newlands, leader of a gang, is a man who needs no one to settle his disputes. His wife, Irene, is timid. Saturday is generally marked by the return of the father from his carousing friends, broke and drunk. At last the heart of Irene rebels when her husband roughly shoves her aside and starts out for one of his weekly celebrations. As she thinks over the indignities she suffers her eye lights on a rifle and she gets an idea.

Sam returns home that night and meets the surprise of his life, for the meek Irene is transformed and when he roughly orders her to do something she covers him with the rifle and orders him to throw up his hands. Irene then lowers the gun and binds him securely to a piece of furniture. She has hidden a whip and now, bringing it forth, she uses it on her drunken husband. When she is exhausted Irene unties Sam and leaves him to wash his cuts and bruises. He determines to seek out his wife and punish her for the punishment she has dealt him.

He slips into the next room and finds Irene cuddling her child and singing it to sleep. Sam realizes how meanly he has acted and he good-naturedly says he guesses he deserved his whipping. The next day is quite different from the usual run, for Sam, instead of hurrying with his friends to the saloon pauses in indecision. While they are pleading Sam hears his wife say "Samuel," and with a muttered excuse Sam hurries home to the wife and child.

REX.

BY CONSCIENCE'S EYE (Aug. 11).—The cast: John Spencer (Rex De Rosselli); Maud, his wife (Majorie Ellison); "Cooter" (Virginia Carlin); Jimmie Franklyn (Maxfield Stanley). Scenario by Fred Myton. Produced by George Cochrane.

John is busy all day and tired at night. Maud seeks diversions with Jimmie, a "man about town." "Cooter" is deserted. "Cooter" has a doll which she calls "Conscience" because the eyes will keep away harm. She has one eye and her father the other. But father drops his on the sofa by accident.

Maud at last decides to run off with Jimmie. She leaves a note for her husband, but when she gets to the station she finds the eye of "Conscience" in her veil. This brings her to her senses and she goes back. At home she finds that "Cooter" has put the letter in the box outside the door, so that her husband has not received it. She destroys the letter and the family are happily reunited.

LAEMMLE.

A KNIGHT OF THE NIGHT (Aug. 9).—The cast: Jim Corey (Hobart Henley); Dr. Randall (Sydney Bracey); Myra, his wife (Sydell Dowling); Norton Craig (Anthony Merlo). Written and produced by Robert F. Hill.

Dr. Randall and his wife, Myra, leave for a reception with Norton Craig, a friend. At the party the doctor is called away on an important case to the hospital. But before he goes he asks Norton to take Myra home.

In the meanwhile Jim Corey, who has been a failure in life, is desperate that night. He decides to steal to keep alive and happens to select the Randall home for the job. He enters the house and makes his way about the upper stories looking for valuables. By accident he gets into the nursery and seeing the Randalls' little child sleeping, says to himself that he would be a dog to take the child's trinkets.

As Jim is about to leave Myra and Norton come home. The thief hastily hides and the sight he sees makes his blood boil within him. Norton tries to force his attentions upon Myra and at last Jim can restrain himself no longer. Just as he is downing Norton the doctor comes in. When Myra tells him how she has been saved by Jim the doctor offers to reward him, but Jim says that he is more than paid by the incentive he received to go straight. The picture ends as Jim Corey is striding out into the night.

THE HIGHWAY OF FATE (Two Parts—Aug. 11).—The cast: Roxanne (Sydell Dowling); Zed (Joseph Smiley); Jack Underwood (Sidney Bracey); the Doctor (Paul Panzer). Written by Harry Ditmar. Directed by Robert F. Hill.

Roxanne is a Gypsy girl who has been wronged by a man of ruthless character. When he tired of her he cast his plaything aside and forgot. The girl did not forget. She cared for her child and brooded over her grievance.

Jack Underwood is in the last stages of consumption and the doctor tells him that he has two months to live. His wife, he sees, is hampered by his presence, so he decides to clear out. He meets Roxanne and they tell each other their stories. The Gypsy girl induces Jack to join the band, telling him that the open air will cure his heartache.

A couple of years later the band of wanderers comes again to the same region. Jack and Roxanne have come to care for each other. But one day Jack reads that his wife has married the doctor. At first he is angry, but finally he realizes that it is the best way out.

In the meanwhile Roxanne's rancor is reawakened by being in the vicinity where she met with her misfortune. At last she can stand it no longer and decides to have vengeance. The man who had deserted her was none other than the doctor. She seeks him out and plunges a dagger in his back. Jack has decided that he wants to see his wife once more. He finds her and they are reconciled as the picture fades out.

BISON.

ALONG THE MALIBU (Two Parts—Aug. 12).—The cast: Jane (Cleo Madison); Her Father (L. M. Wells); Jeff (Charles Gunn); Lem (William V. Mong); the Sheriff (B. T. Henderson); the Halfbreed (Betram Grassby). Scenario by Harvey Gates. Produced by Cleo Madison and William V. Mong.

Jane is a country girl who lives in the mountains with her father, the stage driver. She has two admirers, Jeff, the deputy sheriff, and Lem, a barber by trade, but a gambler and ruffian as well. One day Lem after losing heavily decides that he must take some radical step to recoup his failing fortune. Crazed with drink, he goes to Jane's cabin and tries to force his attentions on her. As they are struggling Jeff comes along and gives Lem a thrashing. Lem leaves, vowing vengeance.

After he has gone Jeff tells Jane of his love and she confesses to be in love with him. Right then and there they become engaged and Jeff promises to return that night to see her. Lem decides to kill two birds with one stone by robbing the stage and making it appear as if Jeff had done the job. That night he and his pal attack Jeff as he is leaving Jane's house and steal his clothing while he is unconscious. They then rob the stage and drop Jeff's hat where they know it will be found.

The next morning the sheriff starts out to look for Jeff, as every one thinks that he is the guilty man. The stage driver finds him as he is groggily walking up the road and, taking him home, tells Jane to keep him there until he can get the sheriff. Jane believes Jeff when he says he is innocent and lets him go. She has a suspicion that Lem is the one who committed the crime, so she goes to his cabin to investigate. Through the window she sees the two men hiding the stolen money.

Jane jumps on her horse and gallops for the sheriff. But when the sheriff and his men arrive they find nothing but death in the little cabin. The thieves have quarreled over the division of the spoils and both of them lie on the floor mortally wounded. Jane then goes to where Jeff is waiting for her and the two are happily united. Jeff's name is cleared of all blame in connection with the crime and he and Jane are married.

THE INTRUDER (Aug. 12).—The cast: George Maitland (Harry Benham); Delta Maitland (Edith Roberts). Written by Catherine Carr. Produced by George Ridgwell.

Delta, the only daughter of George Maitland, a widower, goes off to a boarding school. Her father bids her good-bye at the raidroad station, and, chancing to meet a widow at the station, he takes her home in his automobile. In the course of time they become much attracted to each other, and after a brief wooing decide to get married.

At the end of the session Delta returns from the boarding school, and considers her stepmother in the light of an intruder, stubbornly resisting all attempts on the part of her stepmother to win her affection.

Shortly afterwards Maitland is called to attend a board meeting. After his departure Delta sees her stepmother kissing a photograph, and draws the conclusion that she has a secret lover. Thereupon, she goes to her bedroom and writes a letter to her father, in which she asserts that he has been deceived into marrying a woman who is involved in another love affair.

A man arrives and Delta sees him enter the parlor and fondly kiss her stepmother. No longer able to restrain her anger, the girl denounces her stepmother's scandalous conduct and is about to leave the room in great anger when Mrs. Maitland stops her, and, introducing Barton, says: "This is my son." She clears up the whole difficulty and all ends happily.

GOLD SEAL.

ONDA, OF THE ORIENT (Three Parts—Aug. 8).—The cast: Pedro Bonifacio (E. N. Wallock); Fernando Bonifacio (Duke Worne); Onda (Marie Walcamp); Colonel Renton (L. C. Shumway); Aldo (Eddie Polo). Written by Ben Cohn and Walter Woods. Produced by Henry McRae.

"More radical than this was the Katipunan—to secure independence by open revolt and began by wholesale assassinations of Spanish officials and friars."—August 25th, 1896.

The leaders were Pedro Bonifacio and Emil Aguinaldo. Pedro Bonifacio has lived in San Francisco for years. His wealth comes from an extensive plantation in the Philippines. Fernando, the son, is a dissolute young man. Onda, his supposed sister, tries to reform him. He dislikes interference and hates Onda.

Pedro, dying, confesses to his son how in Manila he was the servant of Gen. Lopez De Ayale; how, when the revolution of 1896 broke out he secretly aided the rebels, admitting them to the house, where De Ayale was assassinated; how he stole papers, heirlooms and other means of falsifying his identity, while the rebels looted and burned the house; how he rescued De Ayale's little daughter from the flames and escaped to America; how he forged a will in which the plantation was left to him and the proceeds from the estate has been paid to him ever since; how the real will was engraved on a dagger—he has the dagger, but the key, the scabbard, is in Manila, having been taken by Aldo, De Ayale's servant. Pedro confesses this as his conscience troubles him and he wishes to make amends before he dies.

The son promises to see that Onda is restored to her rights, but it is far from his intentions to be reduced to poverty while the girl inherits wealth. Onda comes to the bedside of her supposed father to hear him gasp out: "The dagger contains the secret of your parentage; also the will to your inheritance. The scabbard is in Manila—a Moro named Aldo has it—it is the key—your father's name was ——" He falls back dead. Onda takes the dagger and resolves to go to Manila.

Then Fernando, with the aid of some criminal companions, resolves to trap her in Chinatown, secure the dagger and kill her. The plan is frustrated by Colonel Renton. Another attempt is made on Onda's life as she is about to board the steamer. Failing in this attempt, Fernando and his companions take passage in the boat. On the trip Renton and Onda develop a strong attachment for each other.

On the boat is also Aldo, who has come to America on a mission of revenge. He has seen Pedro die—has followed the son and supposed daughter. Many mysterious events occur on ship board—the dagger is stolen from Onda and is later found buried in the breast of Fernando's female companion. Fernando is thrown overboard and is drowned. Aldo is about to kill Onda when he is discovered and arrested by the ship's officers. He then confesses his attempt to revenge his master—discovers that Onda is the daughter of his old master and restores to her the scabbard. The knife is fitted and the cipher will read. Ondo is restored to her rights and marries Renton.

NESTOR.

HE MAID ME (Aug. 7).—The cast: Winner (Eddie Lyons); Loser (Lee Moran); Grace (Priscilla Dean); Helen (Marcia Moore). Written by Ben Cohn. Produced by Lyons & Moran.

Eddie and Lee have a bet up over Arizona going prohibition—the winner to demand any duty to be performed by the loser. Lee loses and Eddie is pondering what he shall have him do. At this moment Grace, Eddie's wife, phones that their maid has left, and that he will have to get another, so he decides that Lee will have to play maid.

Later we see him installed as the new maid, Mary, and poor Lee is almost overwhelmed as he sees the big bunch of dishes and the dirty condition of the kitchen. Lee phones his sweetheart, Helen, that he is called to Mexico for a month. But Grace is very kind to the new maid—too kind, so Eddie soon begins to think and he is willing to call the bet off, but Lee is quite happy and wants to stay, for he knows that he is making Eddie jealous.

Helen comes to call one afternoon and Mary is asked to bring in the tea. Lee did not know that Helen was coming, and so great is his astonishment and embarrassment that he drops the tea things and is soundly berated by Eddie. Lee absolutely refuses to return to the other room. Eddie tries to insist upon his returning, but when Lee tells him that if he does he will tell the whole thing, Eddie is willing to let him go. Later Lee, dressed in Eddie's clothes, rings the doorbell and there is much joy for one little girl—his sweetheart.

SOME MEDICINE MAN (Aug. 11).—The cast: Pat (Pat Rooney); Grouch (Jean Hershoit); Medicine Man (Clyde Bensen); Indian Princess (Peggy Coudray); Her Father (Ed. Sedgwick).

Pat and Grouch arrive on the stage at Medicine Sap, a frontier town. He unfolds an invalid chair to the astonishment of the natives. When the Indian princess passes with her father Pat asks the clerk who she is. The clerk tells him it is Chief "Rain-in-the-Face" and his daughter. Pat is lost in admiration, but has to wheel Grouch to the hotel barroom. In the room Pat thinks of the princess. In the camp the princess thinks of Pat.

In the meantime the Grouch is going crazy. Pat comes in and gives him some medicine, but it only gets Grouch on edge. He is sure he is going to die and sends Pat out to get a doctor. The clerk tells Pat that the only doctor in the country is "Heap Much Dope," the Indian medicine man. Pat beats it to the Indian camp, gets the medicine man, sends him to the hotel and remains to flirt with the princess.

In the meantime the medicine man calls on the Grouch, and the latter promptly kicks him out of the room. So the medicine man and the chief declare war. The town people learn that the Indians are coming and wonder what to do. Princess promises to save them and she and Pat set out. Pat gets frightened when he sees the Indians and climbs a telegraph pole. The Indians try to smoke him off, but Pat throws down high tension wire and puts the Indians out of commission. He returns to town with trophies and is showered with praise and presents by the people.

UNHAND ME, VILLAIN (Two Parts—Aug. 9).—The cast: Gertie (Gertrude Selby); Bill, the motorcycle cop (Billie Ritchie); Chief Schmalz (Dan Russell).

Bill managed to work his little graft gag quite profitably until he tackled the wrong party. This party was the friend of the commissioner. Commissioner Logan immediately wrote a stinging letter to Chief Schmalz, who, in turn, issued an order forbidding any of his motorcycle cops accepting a bribe under the penalty of being imprisoned in a brewery with a muzzle on for life. Under this category came Bill, and sorely grieved was he to think he would have to work henceforth should he desire any of the luxuries of life. Suddenly an auto shot by him. Here was his chance for revenge, and, giving vent to his feelings, Bill went pell mell after the fair one in the auto. After a long chase he found himself face to face with a most entrancing beauty. Bill almost succumbed to her wiles, but he remembered his duty, so he proceeded to the station with the charming miss.

At the station Bill was informed that the young lady was a friend of the chief's, but Bill had made a hit with her and had no difficulty making an engagement with her for the following evening. The chief stood in with her father, and it was an agreed thing that Gertie must marry Chief Schmalz. Bill, however, was a resourceful sort of a fellow, so he and Gertie eloped. Bill, in his haste, had confiscated a flivver and the owner immediately reported its loss to the chief, who ordered an immediate search.

These flivvers are liable to turn one queer trick, and this one succeeded in driving Bill to the robbers' lair. They lassoed him and tied him to a railroad track. Gertie succeeded in escaping and managed to get a telephone booth where she sent an "S. O. S." call. Of course, Schmalz was determined to shine and once more win Gertie by exhibiting his bravery, so with lightning speed he was on the scene and rescued poor Bill from a horrible death by only a second's time. When the chief discovered whom he had saved there was blood in his eye, but Bill was too quick for him. He made one dash for one of the police flivvers, and with this good start would have managed to get away if the flivver hadn't started to leak. The chief saw his chance for revenge and set fire to the gasoline line which had leaked. The fire soon gained on Bill and blew up the flivver and Bill to the land of dreams.

VICTOR.

ASCHENBROEDEL (Two Parts—Aug. 10).—The cast: The Policeman (Ben Wilson); Leah (Dorothy Phillips); Reb. Litwak (Jos. W. Gerard); Litwak, the tailor (Fred Herzog); Sarah, his daughter (Sonia Marsell); Cohen, the schatchen (Chas. Ogle); Melikoff (Joseph Granby). Scenario written by Helmer W. Bergman. Produced by Ben Wilson.

Old Reb. Litwak always sits by the kitchen stove, playing doleful tones on an antiquated guitar. Even Leah, who does the housework, asks him to play livelier tunes, but he only smiles. The duty of Leah is to minister to the comforts of Litwak, the tailor, and his daughter, Sarah. Leah is jealous of Sarah's fortune and matrimonial prospects.

A few nights later Leah sits on the front steps talking to the policeman, when the schatchen appears with a handsome young man. They inquire where the residence of Litwak is and Leah directs them. The policeman asks her who they are and Leah replies: "Oh, that is a husband being brought for my cousin Sarah." At this the policeman makes the promise that, some day, he will bring a nice young fellow up to see her.

In the room upstairs a lively bargaining is going on. Litwak promises a dowry of $2,000 to the man that will marry his Sarah. The young Jew, with thoughts of the prettier girl on the porch in his mind, is slow to grasp his golden opportunity. The schatchen finally drives him into line when he reminds him that he cannot pay rent with good looks. The young man never takes Sarah out, as he prefers to remain in the house and gaze upon Leah. One afternoon he calls when Sarah is out and plunges into an animated conversation with Leah, declaring that if she had a dowry he would prefer to marry her instead of Sarah. He is much surprised to hear Leah say that the man she marries would get no dowry, that he would have to take her for herself alone.

The night before the betrothal ceremony the family is seated discussing the coming matrimonial event, when a thunderous rap sounds upon the door. Before a word can be spoken, the policeman steps in and surveys them. He inquires for the little girl and, with a cry, Leah springs toward him and then introduces the family. The policeman goes over to the tailor and announces that he wants to marry Leah, that is, if she'll have him. "But," stammers Litwak, "you are a stranger to me." "Sure, I am," admitted the policeman. "But it's me that's goin' to marry her," and the policeman puts his arms about Leah and begins to coax her. But she tells him that she has no dowry. "T'ell with dowry! I don't want money. All I want is you!" Old Reb then says that he will give all his money to the young couple, and so when the picture ends Leah has a fortune and a husband.

WHAT DARWIN MISSED (Aug. 13).—The cast: Prof. Alonzo Bozzle (Victor Potel); a Wise Oran-Outang (Joe Martin). Scenario by Frank Wiltermood. Produced by Beverly Griffith.

Prof. Alonzo Bozzle, an eccentric zoologist, has taken up the study of evolution as promulgated by Darwin and is pondering especially on the idea that there is a "missing link." One night he dreams that he is an explorer, and that he has just landed upon a foreign shore; he secures the aid of a mahout and an elephant to move his tent and belongings to the jungle, where he will take up the study of trying to find the "missing link." He builds his tent and establishes himself as comfortably as can be, and then with his trusty rifle starts out to explore the jungle.

Then it is that he encounters the wise orang-outang, Joe Martin; the two are attracted mutually and the professor takes Joe to his tent and there commences his education along the lines of table etiquette. That night while the two are in bed a couple of lions come prowling about the tent. This startles the two and Bozzle takes his gun and with the help of Joe fires upon the lions. At this juncture Bozzle awakens to find the papers on his desk burning and in extinguishing the flames his own clothing starts burning, so that he is compelled to rush from the house and immerse his body in a barrel of water.

BIG U.

THE SILENT MAN (Aug. 10).—The cast: The Silent Man (King Baggot); the Dance Hall Girl (Irene Hunt); The Doctor (Frank Smith). Written by Frank Smith. Directed by King Baggot.

The man is a mystery in the little town. He lives alone in his cabin and will not meet the advances of his neighbors. One night he talks and tells the story of his life. He had been a prosperous lawyer in an eastern town and was engaged to be married to the sweetest of girls. The night before the wedding day she died and in his anguish he called in the devil. The devil said that he would bring back the departed life, but that if the man laughed he would lose his love again. And in the man's joy at his sweetheart's recovery he forgot and laughed and straight the girl died.

"Here is Satan now," said the man, as he fell over dead.

JOKER.

SHE WROTE A PLAY AND PLAYED IT (Aug. 12).—The cast: Miss Scribbles (Gale Henry); Bill, her lover (William Franey); Romeo Ham, actor (Milburn Morante); Hero (Charles Conklin); Heroine (Lillian Peacock). Scenario written by Ben Cohn. Produced by Allen Curtis.

Bill Bones, the village undertaker, sheriff, judge and a holder of a few minor offices, is the sworn, avowed lover of Exeter, who has the writing fever. His suit has met with little success, owing to her interest in her new profession and Bill is stumpped.

Romeo Ham, from the legit's stage—and a long ways from it at that—has had a streak of hard luck and arrives in the village. His capital amounts to the sum of one "jitney" and he calls on the village merchant to buy some refreshment.

Romeo learns that Exeter is writing a play and at once his professional instincts are aroused. He introduces himself and he and Exeter at once find a common interest. Romeo suggests that she produce the play and act the leading part in it. He agrees to look after the production. This just suits Exeter and plans are put under way for the effort. Ham has learned that Exeter has a large bank account and his zeal is influenced mostly by the sight of her ample bank book.

The rehearsal proves quite a task and time after time Romeo is on the verge of quitting, but each time the vision of the bank roll comes to bolster up his courage. At last the play is produced and proves a "frost." The audience start out in disgust and then Exeter discovers that her manager has eloped with the cash, so she marries Bill and leaves the stage.

POWERS.

THE HENANPUP (Aug. 8).—It was a strange coincidence that Frank's dog and Mabel's rooster should have died at the same time. But it happened that way, and so the two were given a common funeral and buried in the same coffin.

A few months later Prof. I. M. Wise notices in the paper that there was a new bone exposition at the museum, and, being much in love with the widow, the mother of the two children, he decided to take her to the exhibit. Seeing the bones at the exhibit suggests to the children that their pets must be bones by this time, so they tell the professor that they know where some old bones are. The professor is delighted with the bones, as he thinks that he has discovered the remains of an animal that was the cross between a hen and a dog.

From the bones he draws a picture of the way the creature must have looked and calls it the "Henanpup." He publishes his discovery in the paper and thinks that he will be famous. At last he finds that the bones are nothing more than the remains of an ordinary dog and chicken and is chagrined. The children sell the bones for two cents and with the proceeds invest in a stock of candy.

BEN, THE SAILOR (Aug. 10).—Written by Olga Printzlau. Produced by R. F. Taylor and W. W. Wheatley.

Old Captain Jonah's stories of the sea make such an impression on Little Ben that he wants to be a sailor. He dreams that Captain Jonah is in command of a battleship, and that the captain accepts him as one of the crew. Ben is taken aboard and fitted out with a uniform. The ship puts out to sea.

The rocking motion of the ship makes it hard for Ben to walk on the deck and he even becomes seasick, but he is compelled to scrub the deck with the other sailors. He falls over with his bucket of water. The water runs down through an open skylight on the deck and falls on the captain, who is reading in his cabin below. The captain rushes up on deck to find the careless sailor who has splashed him and slips on the wet deck, falling at Ben's feet. Ben apologizes and is excused.

The captain shows him an "enemy" ship through his telescope about to launch a "bomb" at their vessel. Ben climbs down over the side of the ship and, hanging by a rope, awaits the approach of the missile. And when the bomb is about to blow up Ben's ship he hits it with a capstan bar used as a billiard cue and it returns to the "enemy" ship, which is destroyed by its own explosive. He goes to bed, but again falls out of his hammock and finds himself—on the floor of his own room, having tumbled out of bed in his troubled dream.

SALMON FROM THE EGG TO THE TABLE (On Same Reel As Foregoing).—Salmon are shown just a few hours old, with their translucent bodies and globular heads. They grow after grubbing for several years in mountain brooks, make their way to the sea. After a few more years they return to spawn and are killed as they jump up the waterfalls, and then friend Salmon finds his grave in the "tummie" of some hungry human.

UNIVERSAL SPECIAL FEATURE.

THE ADVENTURES OF PEG O' THE RING, No. 13 ("The Clown's Act"—Two Parts—July 24).—Episode number twelve left Peg and Dr. Lund on the projection on the cliff, with Marcus and his assistant hacking at the rope, by means of which they were about to climb up. As this episode begins they are finally helped up by the circus people, who arrive in time to drive the villains away. Peg is still in her clown's make-up, so they return to the tent in order that she can dress.

At the tent, Peg sees Marcus and his accomplice hide in a case, so she and the doctor and Flip arrange a false plan to put them on the wrong track. Marcus then goes to report what he has heard to Mrs. Lund. The doctor comes home before they have left, so they hide in the next room. When he goes into his room they attack him, and after a violent struggle succeed in overpowering him. They then lock him in the cellar. But the maid has seen what has happened. She aids him to escape by dropping him the key through an old stovepipe.

In the meanwhile, Peg is at the circus. The clowns have just finished an act where they make some one disappear in a box when Marcus and his gang arrive, disguised as clowns. They take Peg and rush her into a box in the ring of the circus, while the audience laughs, thinking that this is another of the clown's stunts. The circus people realize too late that Peg has been abducted. They run frantically after the car in which Peg is being carried away, but do not succeed in rescuing her.

Peg is taken to a shack nearby, where she makes a terrific struggle to free herself from the clutches of the villains. But they are too many for a single girl to fight. At last she is overcome and thrown into a room. A man is placed at each door and window to see that she does not escape, with instructions to shoot if she tries to get away.

Then Dr. Lund arrives upon the scene. He quickly overpowers the guards and changes clothes with one of them to escape recognition. But luck is against him, for the unconscious guards are discovered and he is attacked by the whole mob. He manages to get into the room where Peg is, but just as they are about to escape through the window a shot rings out and the doctor falls limp on the bed.

RED FEATHER.

THE MARK OF CAIN (Five Parts—August 7). The cast: Dick Temple (Lon Chaney); Doris (Dorothy Phillips); John Graham (Frank Whitson); Jake (Gilmore Hammond); Mr. Wilson (T. D. Crittenden); Mrs. Wilson (Gretchen Lederer); Dick's mother (Lydia Y. Titus); Dicks' father (Mark Fenton); Baby Wilson (Georgia French). Written by Stuart Paton. Produced by Joseph De Grasse.

Dick Temple is living a happy life with his parents. His father for many years has been a crook. One night the police come for him. Dick, in order to save his mother the pain of knowing that her husband is dishonest, takes the blame on himself and is sent to prison. Before he goes his father promises to live honestly, but two years later dies without confessing his true character. Some years later Dick is released from prison on good behavior. In vain he searches for some trace of his family. Employers are wary of hiring a jail bird.

Doris lives with her Uncle Jake, who makes her steal for a living and beats her when the returns are not large enough. At last Doris can stand it no longer and decides to run away. But the dreary streets are the only paths open to her and in despair she, too, resorts to the river. She is prevented from committing suicide by Dick, who has come there for the same purpose. Their common plight forms a tie for a strong friendship and they decide to help each other. However, the task is too much and they are at last destitute. Each fights his own battle. Doris is tempted to steal again, and Dick is sorely tempted to leave the straight path he has cut out for himself so as not to starve. One day Doris rescues a child from a burning house, and as a reward is given a position as nurse.

Dick meanwhile determines that he will steal rather than see Doris starve. But being a novice he is easily detected by the man whose pocket he tries to pick. Dick pleads with him and the man finally consents to give him a position in his office. Later a detective calls and tells the man, Graham, that Dick is an ex-convict. Graham is glad to hear this, as he is himself a crook, and this gives him a hold over Dick. When he finds out that Doris is in the Wilson home he plans to rob the house with her help. They send Dick to get in the house and then let the gang in.

Dick arrives to find Doris alone with the housekeeper. Doris is very excited, being on the point of letting Jake and his pal in to rob the house. She confesses her past life and he takes the hysterical girl to the housekeeper. Imagine his surprise and joy when he finds that the housekeeper is his mother. Dick then gets the idea of getting both crowds of crooks in the house and setting them on each other. As a result Jake is killed and Graham mortally wounded. But before dying he confesses and exonerates Dick from any blame in the crime. Doris and Dick marry and lead upright lives. Later they are happy in the possession of a beautiful baby and a little home.

KALEM.

HAM'S WHIRLWIND FINISH—(July 25). The cast: Ham (Lloyd V. Hamilton); Bud (Bud Duncan); Bambino (Ethel Teare); Tony (A. Edmondson).

Ham and Bud succeed in landing jobs as cooks to a gang of husky ditch-diggers. They are vigorous enough in handling the spaghetti and the vino, but finally the pace gets too swift for them and there is a pitched battle in which Ham and Bud defeat the crew—mainly because of the supply of ammunition provided by the kitchen. But later the pair's fondness for flirting brings about their downfall, when they arouse the jealousy of Tony, the camp foreman. A succession of laughs leads rapidly to Ham's whirlwind finish.

A MIX-UP IN ART—(July 26). The cast: Dolly (Ethel Teare); her aunt (Myrta Sterling); Tom (Victor Rothman); his uncle (Gus. Leonard); Tom's friend (Freddie Fraelick). Producer, Harry Millarde.

Tom and Ethel, back from their honeymoon, are offered a wonderful opportunity to get rich by Tom's friend, but they need five hundred dollars. Ethel's aunt is a painter, while Tom's uncle is a musician. The young folks secure the desired money by promising each relative that it is intended for the study of their favored art.

Later both uncle and aunt decide on the same day to visit their proteges and learn how the study is progressing. Tom assists Ethel in kidnapping a painter who is at work in the yard nearby, and while they lock the protesting artist in a cupboard Ethel prepares to receive aunty. When Tom's uncle arrives the problem is more difficult, but a solution is found by bringing a passing organ-grinder into the house and stationing him behind the curtains.

Ethel and Tom are getting along famously with their reception, but, of course, Tom's signals to the maestro at the organ get mixed up and Ethel's artist friend escapes from captivity. There are some hot words, but all is smoothed over when Tom's friend arrives with the news that the investment has tripled their money.

THE GIRL AND THE TENOR—(July 28). The cast: Nell Gotrox (Ivy Close); Signor Bologna (Henry Murdock); Gotrox (William McKay); Jack Hustler (Arthur Albertson); Signorina Bologna (Mary Taylor-Ross); the hotel clerk (C. D. Perucki). Written by Frank Howard Clark. Produced by Robert Ellis.

Gotrox, the theatrical magnate, is anxious to sign Signor Bologna, the celebrated tenor, who has just arrived, but he fears that the Signor will ask five thousand dollars a night. Nell, his daughter, offers to get Bologna's signature to a two thousand dollar contract—on the promise of a thousand dollar present for herself. She sets out on the task, but meets with violent opposition from the tenor's jealous wife and from Jack Hustler a rival manager. One ludicrous experience follows another, but finally Nell seems defeated when Hustler kidnaps the tenor in his automobile. Just as Bologna is about to sign the contract Hustler's auto goes over an embankment and when the dust clears Bologna and Hustler are pinned underneath the wreckage. Nell, following in her own car, offers her aid in extricating them as soon as Bologna places his signature on the contract—which is speedily done.

A PLUNGE FROM THE SKY—(No. 90 of "The Hazards of Helen"—July 29).—The cast: The Lone Point operator (Helen Gibson); Dick Benton (P. S. Pembroke); the foreign agents (G. A. Williams, George Routh and George Robinson). Written by E. W. Matlack. Produced by James Davis.

Agents of a foreign power are seeking to get possession of the plans of a new aeroplane motor invented by Dick Benton. Under cover of darkness they succeed in their scheme and are escaping in their automobile when it plunges over an embankment near Lone Point. The conspirators jump to safety just in the nick of time, and seeing an aeroplane from Dick's plant pursuing them they cut loose an engine in the yard and race away. When the aero arrives Helen boards it and the pursuit is taken up.

The aviator arrives over the Melinus drawbridge before the engine, and Helen, having formed a daring plan, dives from the air to the waters of the river. She raises the drawbridge, thus forcing the conspirators to stop, and at the same time preventing a certain collision with the Limited approaching on the same track. The agents reverse the engine and speed back down the track, but Helen quickly lowers the bridge, and uncoupling the engine of the Limited gives pursuit and overtakes them.

PEACHES AND PONIES—(August 4). The cast: Bess (Ivy Close); Ray (Arthur Albertson); Gluefoot Gasper (Henry Murdock); Henry Sutton (William McKey); Dolly Cole (Frances Nemoyer). Producer, Robert Ellis.

For a recent bridegroom Ray gives altogether too much money to the race track, to the neglect of Bess. To make matters worse, Bess has to discover his notebook with mysterious references to Fanny S., Grass Widow, Some Chicken, and other supposed charmers, who are in reality race track favorites. Bess engages the services of Gluefoot Gasper, who as a Sherlock is a scream. But Gasper gets on the job and trails Ray to a fashionable cabaret, where he dines with Dolly. Gluefoot hustles Bess around to see the evidence and there is a whirl of excitement that brings trouble and laughs in quick succession until explanations bring out the fact that Dolly is an out-of-town buyer whom Ray had been delegated to entertain, and also the harmlessness of the notebook entries.

A MYSTERY OF THE RAILS—(No. 91 of "The Hazards of Helen"—August 5). The cast: The Lone Point Operator (Helen Gibson); Tom Ransom (P. S. Pembroke); Jud Hendricks (George Routh); the sheriff (G. A. Williams); Gypsy Joe (O. Philippi). Written by Herman E. Blackman. Directed by James Davis.

Jud Hendricks, foreman of the construction camp, is being blackmailed by Gypsy Joe, who knows of a dark page in the Hendricks' past. Hendricks and Tom Rasom are rivals for the favor of Helen, with Tom in the lead. The latter, an engineer, is about to take his train out when he finds Gypsy Joe hiding in a box car. He throws him off and there is a brief scuffle. Later Gypsy Joe comes upon Tom from behind with a knife and a fight follows, which leaves Joe senseless on the platform, while Tom strides to the station. Hendricks, who has witnessed the fight, sees his opportunity to settle two grudges, pounces on Gypsy Joe and a minute later informs Tom that "the man he was fighting is dead."

Searching around the body, Helen finds the broken half of a pencil and holds on to it as a possible clue. Tom is arrested, while Hendricks, while proclaiming sympathy, stirs up the gypsy workers at the construction camp and a lynching is planned. Hendricks, pretending sympathy, hurries to Helen's station to send a telegram for help, which he knows will be too late. He starts to write the message, taking the broken half of a pencil from his pocket. Helen snatches it from him, and finds that it matches the one in her possession. Seeing that exposure is certain, Hendricks rushes from the station and boarding an electric hand car is seen speeding away.

Helen attempts pursuit on horseback, but is being rapidly left behind, when an approaching train offers a solution. Climbing a telegraph pole she swings out on a wire and drops to the train. As it comes alongside Hendricks she throws a lasso that drops over him just as he is about to leap to the ground, and he is pulled from his seat to the speeding train. The train is then quickly brought to a stop and speeds quickly back to the scene of the attempted lynching. Here a spirited battle has been going on, and the arrival of help is barely in time to save Tom.

LUBIN.

THEIR MOTHER (Two Parts—Aug. 8).—The cast: Jim Maxwell (Jay Morley); Ned Maxwell (Bob Gray); Mrs. Maxwell (Adelaide Bronti); Jerry Bennett (George Routh); Florence Bonnett (Eleanor Blevins); Kahn (George Berrell); Pete (L. Hahn); Chief of Police (Melvin Mayo). Written by Tom Gibson. Directed by Leon D. Kent.

Ned Maxwell finishes his college course and to do [illegible] of supporting his mother. His older brother, Jim, is a plain [illegible] difficulty in finding a job but finally does so as a jewelry salesman. [illegible] for a gang of crooks. [illegible] brother of Jim's sweetheart, is one of the gang, and believing that Jim is on him, reports to the gang who formulate a plan to get Jim discharged from the police force. He does not want to be a drag on Ned and leaves home. This throws the full load of supporting the family on Ned and he bravely assumes it. He discovers the true nature of his job, but fearing his inability to secure another position and care for his mother, keeps on with the gang.

Jim finds a clue which leads him to Jerry whom he accuses of being one of the gang. Florence stoutly defends her brother and breaks her engagement with Jim. He is unable to accomplish anything without authority and appeals to the Chief of Police. He is told that if he runs down the gang he will be re-instated. The present leader of the gang is deposed and Ned elected to succeed him. The deposed leader, Kahn, hoping to be revenged, tells the police and they prepare to raid the place. Jim locates the headquarters of the gang and discovers that his brother, Ned, is their leader. He thinks his duty is to turn Ned over to the police but is convinced Ned's motives were right, and they determine to leave and start all over again. The police raid the place before they can get away, and Jim, realizing that if Ned is taken as a crook, it will break his mother's heart, takes Ned's place and is arrested. Jim serves his time in prison in contentment, for Ned has reformed and Florence comes back to him.

BIOGRAPH.

THE TELEPHONE GIRL AND THE LADY (Reissue No. 70—Aug. 7).—The cast: The telephone operator (Mae Marsh); The lady (Claire McDowell); The policeman (Alfred Paget); The thief (Harry Carey); The girl's father (Charles H. Mailes).

Over the wire two friends were made and a catastrophe averted. Then in gratitude for her deliverance the lady enabled two young hearts to realize their desire. Watchful eyes had reckoned without the telephone girl and her many branching wires, while her father had reckoned without the sergeant on the beat and the lady. The father coveted the grocery-man and his store for the girl, but the lady found a way to satisfy all.

THE FATAL WEDDING (Reissue No. 71—3 Parts—Aug. 9).—The cast: Cora Williams (Irene Howley); Mabel Wilson (Millicent Evans); Howard Wilson (Walter Miller); Robert Curtis (Charles H. Mailes); Bridget (Mrs. A. C. Marston); Toto (J. Jiquel Lanoe).

Cora Williams, an adventuress, is in love with her wealthy cousin, Howard Wilson. Howard is in love with Mabel Wilson, and after a short courtship they are married. Cora accepts the attentions of Robert Curtis, a man about town. Several years elapse. Mabel is devoted to her husband and their two children, Jessie and Frank. Mabel has two faithful servants in Bridget, the cook, and Toto, the butler. Cora and Curtis are invited to attend the christening of Frank. Cora greets Mabel effusively, hating her all the while. She is still madly in love with Howard and plans to separate him from Mabel. Cora suggests her plan to Curtis and he agrees to bring about a divorce for a consideration of $20,000. Cora hands him a note in which she states that she will agree to pay him $20,000 on the day she becomes Howard's wife. Curtis starts to form his plans to make trouble.

Howard receives a message calling him to the club which in reality is a subterfuge to get him out of the house. Curtis leads Mabel to believe that Howard loves his cousin, Cora, and further states that he can prove to Mabel that her husband is unfaithful. He tells her to drop her fan as they are leaving if she wishes his help. Cora tells Howard that his wife is in love with some other man and intends meeting her lover that night. After the guests depart Howard tells Mabel he must go to the club. Mabel tries to persuade him not to go and begs him to return early. Mabel gives Curtis the signal and under pretense of having forgotten something he returns to the house. He forces his way into Mabel's room and locks the door. Cora meets Howard as he is leaving his house, tells him the letter was sent [illegible] to get him out of the way and that Mabel gave her lover a signal and that they probably are together now. Howard returns home, going immediately to his wife's room and is astounded to find the door locked. He climbs through the conservatory window and enters Mabel's room. The evidence is all against Mabel and Howard denounces her.

Howard brings an action against his wife, and is granted a divorce and the custody of the two children. Howard arranges for his cousin, Cora, to manage his house for him. Mabel returns to the house to say good-by to her children. Mabel pleads with Howard to let her have her children. Howard makes it clear to Mabel that he will provide her with plenty of money, but he refuses absolutely to allow her to have the children, and leaves the house. Mabel is desperate and explains to Bridget, who is packing to leave, that she is to be separated from her babies. Bridget suggests taking them without Howard's consent. Mabel, with the aid of Bridget and Toto, succeeds in abducting Frank and Jessie. Howard returns and discovers the children missing. He is utterly distracted and Cora immediately begins a search, realizing that unless she finds the children she can never induce Howard to marry her.

Eight years have elapsed since Mabel left her home with her two children. Bridget, now Mrs. Toto, is Mabel's best friend. Mabel makes her living by sewing and her daughter, Jessie, contributes to their support by selling papers. Cora pleads with Howard to marry her. He finally tells her that he will make her his wife after he recovers his children. Cora feels that her chances are slim. She meets Curtis at a secret meeting place and tells him Howard's ultimation. Later on Cora and Curtis see Toto on the street and believe at last they have a clue. Toto, having recognized them, rushes home to warn Mabel. Cora and Curtis discover Mabel and the children and notify Howard.

Jessie and Frank, who is very ill, are taken away from Mabel and Bridget is re-engaged to care for them. Cora is triumphant and Howard promises to marry her the next day. Curtis, slightly under the influence of liquor, calls, and Cora is furious at him. Toto, who accompanied the children home, hides behind portieres when Curtis enters the room. Cora asks for the written agreement and Curtis tells her that it is in his laboratory across the river. Cora refuses to give him any money till she is safely married.

Toto follows Curtis from the club, discovers where the paper is kept and takes an impression of the keyhole. Toto and Mabel go to Curtis' room and find the agreement. Howard and Cora are ready for the wedding. Toto and Mabel arrive just in time to denounce Cora and Curtis. Curtis attempts to shoot Toto and hits Cora. Before Cora dies she confesses the plot. Mabel gives Howard the agreement which Cora made with Curtis. Howard begs Mabel's forgiveness and they are reunited.

KNICKERBOCKER STAR FEATURE.

THE BETTER WOMAN (Three Parts—Aug. 11).—The cast: Gilbert Merrill (Reaves Eason); Mrs. Merrill (Lucy Blake); Mark Grant (Frank Erlanger); Nell (Jimsy Maye); Harper (Chas. Dudley); Marie (Myrtle Reeves); Makato (Makato Inokuchi); Bart (Edward Jobson).

Gilbert Merrill in the employ of Mark Grant, a wealthy broker and bachelor, is forced to work late in an effort to satisfy his wife's social ambitions. Mrs. Merrill takes advantage of his absence from home by receiving Grant's attention whom she believes will compromise her husband and arrange a future marriage. Merrill collapses from overwork in his office during which time Harper, a crook, enters and steal $5,000, which Grant promised to keep until morning for Wallace a friend of his. Merrill, after recovering from the attack, leaves the office unaware of the loss and, arriving home unexpectedly, breaks up a meeting between Grant and his wife. Merrill enters into a quarrel with his wife over a necklace which Grant has given her, when she refuses to tell where it came from. The following day the theft is discovered and Merrill is asked to resign. Mrs. Merrill believing it to be a frame up by Grant offering an opportunity for divorce refuses to have anything more to do with her husband, who later learns the truth of affairs from Marie, the maid.

Merrill, taking a gun, returns to the office in the search of Grant whom he finds has left. He leaves and enters a saloon, becomes intoxicated and falls into the hands of strangers, who place him in a car, and who rob him and leave him near a freight yard. Harper getting into trouble and fearing detection takes Nell, his girl, starts West where he opens a saloon and gambling den. Sometime later Merrill reaching the West enters Harper's saloon, where, defending Nell from Harper's attacks, he is knocked out by Harper and thrown from the saloon. Nell follows and administers to Merrill. Harper finds her and a second fight follows in which Nell, drawing a gun from the belt of Bart, a mine owner, fires on Harper, wounding him.

Bart owner of the "Breezy K" Mine who has seen the affair, offers Merrill and Nell employment at his mine. Both accept. Later Merrill and Bart accidentally discover a rich location and become partners. Harper is traced to the West. He is arrested and brought East where, in a confession, he clears Merrill of the Grant robbery. Bart and Merrill receive a large offer for their mine which they accept at about the same time Merrill receives word of

VIM FEATURE COMEDY.

THAT TIRED BUSINESS MAN (Aug. 9).—The cast: Hubby (Harry C. Myers); Wifey (Rosemary Theby).

Hubby after the day's work is done usually stops for a little lunch and a few cocktails while wifey waits at home for him with a hot supper. Hubby usually reaches home in an ugly mood finding nothing to his liking for supper and usually leaving the table without eating. Wifey finally insists on knowing what is wrong when Hubby tells her if she had to work for one day as hard as he has to she would be tired too. Wifey thinks for a moment and tells Hubby that she will take his place at the office for one day and he must take her place at home. Hubby thinking he has a snap consents.

The next morning wifey gives hubby a taste of what she receives each morning eating in silence and then asking what time it is to find she must rush off to the office. Hubby asks if she hasn't forgotten something. She remembers and gives him a long list of things to be done for the day. That does not satisfy him as he wants to be kissed. She hastily kisses him and leaves. Hubby goes over the list then decides that his wife has been too easy with the maid. He goes into the kitchen and there discovers a speck on a dish. The maid is very angry, looks at the plate and slams Hubby with the dish cloth and quits her job.

Hubby does not know what to do, he phones his wife who now is in the office working, that the maid has left. Wifey tells hubby the work must be done and that he should do it. Hubby does not like the idea, but decides he might try. He goes into the kitchen and begins to wash the dishes, but somehow cannot do it. After an hour or two of waiting without having washed the dishes he empties them into the ice chest and phones his wife again to send up a maid, but to his surprise the clerk answers the phone. When wifey finds her husband is on the phone, she tells the clerk to tell him that she has gone to get a drink with a friend.

DREAMY KNIGHTS (Aug. 10).—The cast: Plump (Babe Hardy); Runt (Billy Ruge); Maiden in Distress (Ray Godfrey).

The fish were to blame, they would not bite, so Plump and Runt dozed off and dreamed. The botle containing a message is picked up from the waves and they start out to rescue the fair writer of the script. Mounted on a mule and goat and armed to the teeth, they encounter many adventures. Deceived by the voice of a porker, they become lost in the forest and wander upon a pirate stronghold. Once more on the rail and more by good luck than management, they blunder upon the haunted house where the maid is imprisoned. Here they arrive in time to save the girl from being forced into an unwelcome marriage. Love hits them both and they are in a quandary how to solve the situation, when the fish begin to bite. Two or three vicious tugs at the lines and they wake up to find that though their qualifications as Knights Errant leave much to be desired, still as fishermen, they are in a class by themselves.

RUSHING BUSINESS (Aug. 11).—The cast: Pokes (Robt. Burns); Jabbs (Walter Stull); Cashier (Ethel Burton); Tough (Frank Hanson).

Pokes and Jabbs, having come into possession of a fortune, decide to invest it in a business enterprise. After examining and deciding against several places of business that are for sale, the attention of the two is drawn to a hat store, outside of which a crowd of men are struggling to enter. They decide that this certainly is a prosperious business and after a fierce fight finally succeed in entering the store. Quickly making terms with the proprietor, they buy the store and make ready to attend to the wants of the customers, only to discover to their chagrin that the struggling customers are seeking not to buy hats but to pay their poll taxes before the legal limit expires.

Nothing daunted, Pokes and Jabbs plan to make business for themselves by breaking the hats of every man they find. While Pokes attends to the breaking end, Jabbs business himself with selling new hats to all the men that Pokes has caused to patronize the store. Their Waterloo comes, however, when Pokes in his zeal to help business accidentally hits the tough guy of the district with one of his well aimed brick throws. The tough catching sight of Pokes, gives chase and Pokes seeks refuge in the hat store followed by the irate tough. In the mele that follows the entire store is wrecked, Pokes and Jabbs receive the beating of their lives, and the tough proudly emerges from the store the possessor of a new hat and the affections of the charming cashier.

ESSANAY.

THE THREE SCRATCH CLUE (Two Parts—Aug. 8)—The cast: Norman (Francis X. Bushman); Lynch (Bryant Washburn); Dr. Strong (Thomas Commerford); Helen, his daughter (Irene Warfield).

Lynch, a gentleman crook, finds his mode of living in stealing art treasures from the homes he enters as a guest. He learns that Dr. Strong has purchased for $50,000 an extremely rare book. Norman, his secretary, is in love with Helen, daughter of the doctor. Lynch meets her, too, and makes an impression. The thief tricks the doctor into leaving his study and then, disguised, breaks in. Norman and Helen find him. The former attacks the robber and is felled. He rushes out of the house and hires a taxi to trail the fugitive. As they near a lonely road he notes three scratches on the driver's face where he cut him in the first grapple. They resume their fight. The auto strikes a tree and as Norman lies senseless Lynch prepares to finish him with a heavy stone. Dr. Strong, his daughter and the police drive up and Lynch is arrested. The girl's infatuation for Lynch naturally vanishes and Norman wins her.

THE FABLE OF BOOKS MADE TO BALANCE (Aug. 9)—Once there was a husky employed as slave-driver, who kept the imported rabbits on the jump and increased the output. He was so handy that the directors declared him in on the watered stock. When he adjusted himself to Prosperity, his daughter Katie, who used to carry his dinner, became known in high school circles as Katherine. When Husky got his first wagon load of kale, daughter was registered at a vine-clad seminary overlooking the Hudson. There she became Kath-R-Y-N. She decided the mill town would never do, so she went to Europe with a chaperon who had seen better days. There she met the Roqueforts and Cameberts and picked out as manly a chap as ever borrowed money from a toe-dancer. Now about once a month the Markee shows up to make a sweel touch and reminds her that she must forget her vulgar relations in America.

MORAL—Europeans make the money and they have a right to pull it down.

WORTH WHILE (Three Parts—Aug. 12)—The cast: Jack Thomas (Bryant Washburn); Elsa Thomas (Marguerite Clayton); Philip Cole (Patrick Calhoun); Randolph Murray (John Cossar).

With death near Philip Cole sends for Jack Thomas, a young broker and his only close friend. He asks him to care for his little daughter. Thirteen years later Thomas has been true to his trust and his ward is known as Elsa Thomas. She is in love with him. Randolph Murray, a middle aged broker, is in love with her. She spurns him and he breaks Thomas. To revenge himself also on the girl he has a woman accomplice slip an expensive ring into her coat. When searched by the police Thomas declares he stole it. He is sentenced to Joliet prison. The girl goes to work in Murray's office. Ultimately he tells her of the plot, believing her love for Thomas to be dead. She tricks him into recording the confession before authorities and wins a pardon for Thomas, who changes from guardian to husband.

El Paso, Texas.—With a temperature hovering around the 100 mark, the boys of the 31st Michigan find work and pleasure in their daily routine.

San Francisco, Cal.—Arrests follow the attempt of strike-agitators, who try to induce the United Railroads platform employees to leave their cars and go on strike.

Coney Island, N. Y.—Commanded by Mrs. Elaine Craig, the volunteer members of the new order of "Police Mothers" patrol the beach from Sea Girt to Brighton.

Garden City, L. I.—In the final game for the open championship of the Metropolitan Golf Association, Walter Hagen wins by defeating Charles Hoffner and "Jim" Barnes.

Sing Sing, N. Y.—Sixteen hundred prisoners join in giving Thomas Mott Osborne a rousing reception on his return to Sing Sing as warden of the prison.

Berlin, Germany.—The famous wooden monument of Von Hindenburg is being rapidly transformed into gold, silver and iron by the thousands of nails driven into it.

THE GOLD SHIP (Three Parts—Aug. 7)—The cast: Captain Roscoe (Harry Mestayer); John Harding (Wm. Hutchison); Mary Harding (Edith Johnson); Humpback Joe (Sidney Smith). Written by James Oliver Curwood. Directed by Frank Beal.

Captain Roscoe, master of a sailing vessel, rescues Humpback Joe and his little dog from the hands of intoxicated seamen, and he takes Joe with him aboard ship. John Harding is the cook of Captain Roscoe's vessel, and he has with him his daughter, Mary, who aids her father in his work in the cook's galley. Mary is secretly in love with Captain Roscoe, but he thinks she is only a child. She seems too young to be given the love which he feels that he can give her.

Captain Roscoe is informed by his company that a consignment of half a million in gold is to be shipped on his vessel. While the gold is being placed in the ship's hold, a plotting clerk of the company meets with certain members of the crew and they lay their plans for securing possession of the treasure.

At sea the crew mutiny at night. Joe, the cripple, and Mary arouse the captain, who, after a struggle, is overcome, but is saved by Mary and Joe. Mary resolves to secure rockets, send these up and in that way call for help from any passing ship. She takes her life in her hands to secure them, and the cut-throats are dumbfounded when the roar of the first rocket is heard.

The mutineers find it impossible to break into Captain Roscoe's cabin so ably defended by Joe and little Mary, and resolve to make their escape in a boat. Half an hour later, the crew of a passing ship board Captain Roscoe's vessel, for they have seen the rockets. Captain Roscoe finally recovers from the wound received, and in his eyes little Mary is no longer a child, but a woman to whom he gives his whole heart and soul

A WESTERN MASQUERADE (Aug. 12).—The cast: Tom Bruce (Tom Mix); Vicky Withers (Victoria Forde); Jim Withers (Joe Ryan); Bill Stone (Sid Jordan). Written and produced by Tom Mix.

Tom Bruce finds a thespian's life is not a happy one, and when the theatrical company goes on the rocks, he lands in a western town where a school master is desired. In order to eat three times a day, Tom teaches school and not the least interesting of his pupils is pretty Vicky Withers.

An uncouth rancher known as Bill Stone loves Vicky, and when he sees that Tom Bruce and the girl are mutually attracted, he goes to Vicky's father. Old man Withers is a school trustee and he causes Tom to lose his job, and advertises for a school ma'am. Tom's ability as an actor comes to his rescue, and he masquerades as a school mistress in order to remain near his lady love.

Old man Withers is smitten immediately with the strange lady's charms. However, when he proposes the school ma'am proves herself to be none other than Tom Bruce, and the old man finally consents to Tom's marriage with his daughter.

FOR HER GOOD NAME (Two parts—Aug. 12).—The cast: Belmont Blair (Crane Wilbur); Capt. Radcliffe (Harrish Ingraham); Ponsonby Smythe (Frederick Montague); "Billie" Carrington (Allaire Smith); Mrs. Ponsonby Smythe (Mae Gaston); Grace (Corinne Bradford). Directed by Robert B. Broadwell.

Mrs. Ponsonby Smythe is the frivolous young wife of an elderly millionaire whom she does not love. Mrs. Smythe's younger sister, Grace, is a member of the family. Mrs. Smythe secretly accompanies "Billie" Carrington, a social adventurer, to "The House of the Mask," a notorious gambling palace where the rich play in secret with masked faces. Belmont Blair, a gentleman gambler, sees and recognizes Mrs. Smythe when her mask accidentally falls from her face. Later in the evening Blair comes to her defense when Carrington makes a drunken attack upon her in a private lounging room in the gambling house. In the ensuing struggle Carrington is accidentally killed. Blair gets Mrs. Smythe out of the house before the body is discovered and with his aid she reaches home without detection.

Captain Radcliffe, a noted criminal investigator, takes the case and in a pocket of the dead man's coat he finds a curious fan, the property of Mrs. Smythe. When Mrs. Smythe misses the fan, she is distraught and again turns to Blair for help.

A costume ball is given at the Smythe country home in honor of the "coming out" of Grace, the younger sister, and Radcliffe and Blair are both present. Beside the fan, Radcliffe has evidence in his possession which convinces him Blair is the guilty man. Blair meets Grace and the two fall in love. That night he cleverly steals the fan from Radcliffe's room but is seen by Radcliffe himself. To escape Radcliffe, Blair is forced to take refuge in a room which proves to be Grace's sleeping-room and rather than compromise the girl by being discovered there he leaps from a window to the ground many feet below.

The next morning Radcliffe discovers Blair in the act of burning the fan in a fireplace grate. He attempts to rescue it from the fire but Blair holds him back until the sole evidence against Mrs. Smythe has been destroyed. Radcliffe then produces his evidence against Blair and accuses him of killing Carrington. Blair is forced to admit his guilt and, although it would save him to divulge the woman's name, he remains silent. His love for the woman's sister and his own heart prompt him to sacrifice himself for a woman's reputation.

SEE AMERICA FIRST NO. 46 ("Philadelphia, Pa."—July 26).—Philadelphia, foremost among American cities in the writing of the nation's history, the home of Benjamin Franklin, and the birth place of the Declaration of Independence, is the subject presented in this release. Everything of importance in connection with the city's early history, including famous landmarks, carefully preserved, is shown. Philadelphia of to-day, with its hustling crowds, lofty buildings, beautiful homes and drives, and modern transportation facilities are presented in this film.

REEL LIFE NO. 13 ("How Gold is Mined in Georgia"—July 30).—Although it is not generally known, Georgia has been a consistent producer of gold since the days of the revolution. While in amount no great sum has ever been mined in any one year, yet until the discovery of gold in California in 1848, it was the only source of supply worthy of mention within the confines of the United States.

Georgia even emulated the turbulent mining camps which we have been accustomed to associate only with the Far West. A United States Government mint was erected at Dahlonega, Ga., in 1838. This was in operation until the discovery of gold in California. Its site is now occupied by the North Georgia Agricultural College. All the processes which the ore undergoes are shown in the pictures. Some of them are extremely primitive and picturesque.

On the same reel are pictures of fishing on the Jersey coast. As the sharks are now plentiful, spectators will be interested in a battle which resulted in the capture of a baby shark. A drum fish weighing 40 pounds, is also landed in front of the camera. The reel is completed by views of "Four Fingered Joe," a celebrated southern negro who is without a peer in the art of making palmetto leaf fans.

MUTUAL STAR PRODUCTION.

THE STRENGTH OF DONALD McKENZIE (American—Five parts—Aug. 3).—The cast: Donald McKenzie (William Russell); Mabel Condon (Charlotte Burton); Maynard Randall (Harry Keenan); John Condon (George Ahern); Pierre (John Prescott).

The story tells of the struggle of Donald McKenzie, a guide of the North Woods and a poet, to have his verses recognized. Condon, a publisher, recuperating in the woods, has a camp near Donald's. His daughter, Mabel, is the inspiration for many of Donald's verses. When they are completed, Donald sends his poems to Condon under an assumed name. Condon is backed in his publishing business by Maynard Randall, a wealthy idler, who is engaged to Mabel.

Condon goes to the city, but is forced to return to the woods again. He brings Mabel and Randall with him, together with the manuscript of the unknown poet. Mabel meets Donald again and begins to admire his great strength which she cannot reconcile with his deep poetical nature. Randall notices the growing attachment and tries to belittle Donald on every occasion. Donald acts as guide for Mabel in her trips through the woods. Randall, in pique, makes advances to Marie, a clerk in the camp store. His actions become odious and Donald administers a severe thrashing to his rival.

Aided by Pierre, an enemy of Donald's, Randall plans revenge. While Mabel and Donald are on a long trip in the mountains, Pierre changes the guide posts and the couple are forced to spend the night in the woods. Randall poisons the mind of Condon against Donald, and when he returns he is accused of losing his way to purposely compromise Mabel. Donald informs the irate parent that they are to be married. Randall then declares that, unless Mabel marries him, he will withdraw his money from the firm.

Pierre then confesses his part in the scheme, and Condon, sure that Donald's poems will aid him in getting his business going again, denounces Randall, who tries to destroy the manuscripts, but is prevented by Donald, who discloses himself as the author.

CHAPLIN-MUTUAL SPECIAL.

ONE A. M. (Two parts—Aug. 7).—Charles returns home at an early morning hour after an evening of celebration, in which water was not the principal liquid consumed. After an altercation with a taxi chauffeur over the charge, and after numerous disastrous attempts to get out of the cab, he discovers he has left the key to the house in another pocket and climbs into the house through a window, upsetting a bowl of gold fish on the way.

Charles does a series of his grotesque falls when he steps on a rug, laid on a highly polished floor. Picking himself up, he finds himself with his hand in the mouth of a ferocious tiger, while the blazing eyes of a lynx gaze at him. The floor is covered with skins of wild animals, and Charles imagines himself in a jungle of ferocious beasts, for the walls are adorned with trophies of the chase and stuffed animals of every species.

Many of the funny antics employed by the eccentric comedian follow one another during his endeavors to escape from the beasts, which he feels are pursuing him, for no matter where he turns he is confronted by some denizen of the jungle. Finally, he spies a decanter on a table, which has a revolving top. Whenever he tries to reach the bottle the table revolves until he finally sinks exhausted to the floor and the bottle stops in front of him.

Charles takes a final drink before retiring and encounters more difficulties when he tries to ascend the stairs. His feet become entangled in the carpet, and while he is able to negotiate part of the journey, he invariably tumbles to the bottom. Seeing an alpine costume, he dons it, and employing a hall tree for a ladder succeeds in reaching the upper floor. In his bedroom is a folding bed, the mechanism of which is too much for Charles, who retires for the night in the bathtub with a bath mat for covering.

VOGUE.

PAINLESS EXTRACTING (Aug. 1).—The cast: A couple of bums (Rube Miller and Owen Evans); The dentist (Ward McAllister); His wife (Lillian Hamilton).

Rube and Evans, a couple of tramps, see a man and a woman seated on a bench in the park, and as they are short of money, they decide to let the man make up that deficiency. They rob the man. Later they meet a girl with whom they flirt, and while they are trying to cut each other out with the girl, a policeman appears. They both get nervous and leave.

A flirtatious dentist has a large practice, and decides to put a sign outside of the house for an assistant. He does so, then goes inside and invites a girl patient to go out with him. As they are ready to go, Rube and Evans come along and see the sign. Both go in to get the job. Evans lands it. The dentist and the girl go out leaving the place in charge of Evans. Rube and Evans then proceed to rob the patients, while they are busy robbing one, the girl of the park enters the private office. Again they both try to make a fuss over her. She informs them that she is the wife of the absent dentist.

In the meanwhile, the husband of the girl that the dentist is out with, sees his wife and the dentist, bawls out the dentist who hurries away and returns to the office. There he sees Rube and Evans trying to hug his wife. This is too much, so he pulls his trusty revolver from his pocket and starts shooting. Rube and Evans start to run from one room to another. Each of the patients whom they have robbed discover their loss and return, arriving in time to block them at the different exits. They finally get away and while they are dividing up their ill gotten gains, they discover that they have seated themselves at the side of a sleeping policeman. He awakens, only to be caught by the dentist and pursuing patients. After being roughly handled, the policeman enters and gives the plunder to the patients, and everything is once again all right, with the exception that the run of hard luck has driven both Rube and Evans crazy.

LOST AND FOUND (Aug. 6).—The cast: The Man from Nowhere (Rube Miller); From the Same Place (Ben Turpin); The Girl (Lillian Hamilton). Written and directed by Rube Miller.

Two crooks see Rube and Ben who have just arrived in town with a bag of money. The crooks follow them and steal their bag, taking it with them to their rendezvous. The rubes are unable to locate the crooks, and finally land in a park bemoaning their loss. While in the park they read an advertisement for shoe clerks. They apply for the positions, and are employed. Rube is given the men's department and Ben the women's. Ben complains to the manager, demands the women's side, but is refused.

A girl whom they had met in the park happens along, and comes in to purchase a pair of shoes. Ben insists upon waiting on her, and Rube, refusing to let him, starts an argument, while the girl intercedes. The girl's sweetheart comes into the store and recognizes Rube and Ben as the two men he saw making love to his girl in the park. Thinking they are now trying to make love, he becomes angry and starts an argument.

The manager, hearing the uproar, comes in in time to see them start a fight which tears up his store. He goes for the police and returns with three large officers who mix up in the fighting. Unable to win against these odds, Ben and Rube flee, and a chase ensues. The chase leads Rube and Ben to a bar-room, where they discover the two crooks with their bag of money. They seize the bag and start a struggle. Meantime, the manager of the shoe store, lover and girl reach the exterior of the saloon; Rube and Ben are thrown against the brick wall, going through upon their pursuers amidst a falling of bricks and dust.

AMERICAN.

THE DREAMER (Two Parts—July 31).—The cast: Betsy (Lizette Thorne); Ezra Caldwell (Frank Thompson); Martha, his daughter (Louise Lester); Roland Delaney (Edward Coxen); Sim (John Gough); George Caldwell (George Field).

On a small farm on the outskirts of a large city lives Ezra Caldwell, the owner, and his son, George. Betsy cares for the household while Sim, a half wit, who answers for a hired man, does the chores. Ezra Caldwell is reputed to be a very mean man. His treatment of Betsy, whom he calls an adopted daughter, has made him despised by all the neighbors. Betsy dreams and hopes for her release from old Ezra's abuse and through these dreams run recollections of better days long past. She remembers the first time she came to the farm with her mother, though old Ezra was with them even at that time and his son, George, was a small boy of whom Betsy was mortally afraid.

Roland Delaney, clubman and wealthy idler, lives alone in the city. Receiving an invitation to a week-end party at a friend's house in the country, Delaney motors down. At this time Ezra is getting ready for the harvest season and has told Betsy to prepare for several extra hired men. Delaney's car breaks down on the road and he goes to the nearest farm house for aid—arriving at the Caldwell's while all but Betsy are in the fields at work. Delaney, dishevelled and dirty, appears to her only as another hired man and she interrupts his questions to tell him to wait for Mr. Caldwell's return. She offers him a seat in the kitchen and Delaney enters into conversation with her. He finds unsuspected interest in the little slavey, and by the time Ezra and his men get back, Delaney has decided to see the thing through. He applies for a job and gets it.

Delaney spends his evenings with Betsy and learns of her dim recollections of the past. He wonders at the peculiar make up of the girl [illegible] to find the class of [illegible] were left her by [illegible] to Delaney. Shortly [illegible] Delaney was [illegible] ully for daring to talk back to him. Delaney steps in and turns the [illegible] at the same time earning George's enmity. As Delaney takes Sim away he tells his benefactor that Ezra does not own the farm and that it is the property of Betsy. That night [illegible] return. Sim tells George that he "will fix them and Betsy will send them away from her farm." [illegible] and he is frightened.

Delaney is in the city investigating the situation and tracing back old records of the county [illegible]. At the farm things have undergone a decided change. George and [illegible] are doing all they can to make life attractive for Betsy and she is mystified at the change. Another servant takes her place, and George professes love for her and proposes marriage.

George and Ezra determine to force the issue. He and old Ezra then lock her in her room and threaten her with continued confinement unless she gives in. Delaney arrives and demands to see Betsy. Ezra and George tell him she has gone, but he refuses to believe them. He confronts them with the facts he has learned and accuses them of having practically stolen the farm and kept it from Betsy all these years. He starts to search the house despite their opposition and a fight follows, at the end of which both Ezra and George are left locked in the kitchen while Delaney goes through the rest of the house. Upstairs Delaney finds Betsy and carries her away with him. On the way she tells hem what she has been through, and finishes with the statement that "she would lots rather marry a poor man like him than marry George with all his money." Delaney says nothing.

In front of Delaney's palatial city home he stops the car—a "rent car" as he has explained it to Betsy. She, tired out with all that has passed, lies back in her seat sound asleep. He picks her up and carries her into the house. She awakens as she lies upon the couch in the drawing room. Delaney explains the mystery as they are eating supper; also the deception he has practiced. He explains further that she is the owner of Caldwell's farm, the proofs are on their way now, and, if she will consent to marry a poor city chap, she may have two homes—with him in them both.

MUSTANG.

SANDY—REFORMER (Two parts—Aug. 4).—The cast: Sandy (Art Acord); Henry Botsford (Warren Ellsworth); Beth, his daughter (Helene Rosson); Harvey Mortimer (Ashton Dearholt).

Sandy, a cowboy, has saved up $2,000, and when he reads the alluring inducements of a mining company he exchanges his hard-earned money for worthless mining stock. He tells the other boys about it, and when it is finally impressed upon him that the stock is utterly worthless, the boys have the laugh on him, and when one night Sandy can stand their ridicule no longer he packs up and with his horse rides off into the night.

Henry Botsford is a mining promoter, and the man who sold Sandy his stock. He has a daughter, Beth. Harvey Mortimer, a wealthy idler, has long been a suitor for Beth, but she despises him. Botsford gets into financial difficulties and, knowing that if Beth will only agree to marry Mortimer, he will be able to obtain loans from him, he insists that Beth consent to an engagement. Beth refuses.

Leaving his horse to obtain a drink of water, Sandy climbs down a small embankment and stumbles across a skeleton of a man. By it he discovers a small chamois bag, which contains some gold nuggets. Taking these to town, he finds that they are of considerable value. An idea of revenge comes to Sandy and, exchanging some of the nuggets for currency, he rides off to the town where Botsford lives.

Meantime, Beth decides that she will never have any peace at home, since her father is always insisting that she marry Mortimer, and, writing a note to her father to the effect that she is going out in the world to make her own living, she leaves. Back in the mining town Sandy meets Botsford and takes him out into a canyon some miles from town. There he brings him into an old cabin, and Sandy makes him a proposition. He tells Botsford that he has some mining stock for sale and shows him the same certificates that he bought from him. Botsford refuses to consider buying them back, and Sandy locks him in the cabin and tells him that he is going to give him plenty of time to think it over.

At the restaurant Beth has obtained the position of waitress. Sandy enters, and recognizes her. He had never been much of a hand at making love, but he caught on quick, and that night told Beth that some day she was going to marry him. While out in the old cabin, Botsford, terrified by strange noises, finally manages to fall asleep on the table. With the morning Sandy again puts his proposition to Botsford, and this time Botsford agrees, and writes out his check for $2,000. But Sandy refuses to give him his freedom until he has obtained the money from the check. With the $2,000 in his pocket, he meets Beth, and tells her that if she won't marry him he is going to marry her anyhow. Picking her up he carries her to the Justice of the Peace's office. Beth concedes that Sandy ought to make a good husband, and they are married. It suddenly occurs to Sandy that Botsford is still at the old cabin, and with Beth he goes out to give him his freedom. Opening the door, Botsford storms out—and discovers that the man who has held him captive is now his son-in-law.

BEAUTY.

DAREDEVILS AND DANGER (Aug. 2).—The cast: Art Howell (John Sheehan); Madge (Carol Halloway); Jenks (John Steppling); Michaelvski, a Government Agent (Dick Rosson); Jack (Earl Montgomery); Gritch, a chauffeur (Al Thompson).

The United States Government had conferred upon Art Howell the honor of improving a "Self-aiming-Gun" which had just been invented. Madge Dare and her brother, Jack, lived next door to Art. Jack was somewhat of an athlete and was practicing the international game of baseball when Madge called Art's attention and invited him over to her place. Art promised to come over and demonstrate the new invention. Then Jenks, Art's valet, taking advantage of his master's absence, signaled to two mysterious foreigners in a machine across the way.

While Jack and Madge were watching Art demonstrate the gun, which he did by shooting a baseball in midair, the foreigners "blew" the safe that held the blueprints which showed the secrets of the invention, and started for the border. Art, on hearing the crash, rushed into his apartments to find the destroyed safe and the blueprints missing. He was at a loss, but Jack promised that he would give chase to the villains and bring back the precious documents.

The speeding auto followed the motorcycle, raced trains, jumped ditches, smashed through fences, hurdled walls and finally jumped the fence to a ball park, landing after a leap of forty feet. The jar disconnected the gas in some way and there was a terrific explosion. When the smoke cleared away, those who had come to see a ball game saw a wonderful fight between Jack and the two foreigners. Jack recovered the papers and rode for home.

Jack, disheveled, rushed into the apartment at the dire moment and handed Art the papers. Jenks, the valet, muttered curses, but he muttered them too loud. Jack got wise, tipped off Art and the last of Jenks was a fleeing form scooting down the road with a "Self-aiming-Gun" pumping puncture pellets into his anatomy. Jack was the hero—but Art was there, too, when Madge handed out the kisses and embraces.

JUST AS HE THOUGHT (Aug. 6).—The cast: Al Cohall (Orral Humphrey); his wife Liza (Dixie Stuart); Mrs. Banks (Jo Taylor); Father Easter (Joe Massey).

Al Cohall is blessed with a wife who rules him by the mother-in-daw method. Mrs. Banks calls daily and renders every room in the house a bedlam by her ubiquitous presence. In despair, Al drowns his sorrows in drink. A revival meeting, announced by Father Easter, is hailed by Al's relatives as a sure cure for his perverted nature.

He is enticed to a meeting, but disgraces himself and his family. Father Easter tells them that the end of the world is at hand. Al scoffs at the warning, but when later he steals around behind some newly arrived cases to take a drink and finds them marked in great big letters "G. O. D.," his fears are aroused and he rushes from the depot to spread the news to Father Easter and his flock. He dashes to them with the announcement, of which the preacher is only too anxious to take advantage, because it bears out his own warnings of the end of the world.

when the end comes, and to steal a march on the others, he climbs on top of a haystack to await his doom. He falls asleep. A tramp crawls into the lower end of the stack to sleep, forgetting to put out his pipe, with the result that the stack takes fire. The revivalists and the harvesters all gather around the blazing stack, on top of which Al awakens at last, somewhat scorched, with the exclamation: "In hell, just as I thought." While the smoke from the burning stack is ascending in clouds, Al strikes a dramatic attitude and swears "Never Again."

THE SECRET OF THE SUBMARINE, (Chapter 12—Two Parts—Aug. 7).—While Cleo is waiting for the happy day which will unite her to Lieutenant Hope, the latter receives a letter from Inez Machin, begging him to marry her to protect her honor, because she had been forced to spend a night in a cabin with him when lost in the woods some months before. Hope seeks an audience with Cleo at once and, disclosing the contents of the letter, relates the circumstances in which he was altogether blameless. Cleo agrees with him that the honorable course is for him to give up Cleo and marry Inez. Immediately thereafter, Hope is summoned to Washington and departs.

Hook grows dramatic when informed by Cleo of the termination of her engagement to Hope and threatens to force Hope to answer. Cleo convinces him that Hope is not to blame and Hook finds cheaper quarters for Cleo, as economy must pe practiced now. On arrival in Washington, Hope learns that he has been left a fortune by the late Mark Edmond, whose life he had saved on a railroad trestle. He later visits Inez, and making her cleary understand that his heart is given to another, but he agrees to marry her to savé her reputation.

In the meantime, while Hope is in Washington, Cleo and Hook undergo all the privations of poverty. Cleo cannot find work because of her inexperience, and Hook is handicapped by his crippled hand. One by one Hook parts with his few keepsakes to raise money. At the same time he prevents Cleo from pawning anything of hers by insistenly maintaining his ability to get along. Mahlin and Morton and Olga and Satsuma are still making desperate efforts to locate the missing book.

The cowboys give a dance where Olga and Morton are still staying and while the festivities are in progress, bandits attack the party. Morton and Olga attempt to escape, but just as they think they are safe, the bandits swoop down and capture them. They are tied on the backs of horses and carried off to the bandits' den in the mountains.

MUTUAL.

MUTUAL WEEKLY, NO. 83 (Aug. 2).

With the Bombardiers on the French Front. —Subtitles: These men become very skilled in hurling grenades and can throw great distances with little effort. (Note the different types of grenades used.) Bombs which produce a heavy curtain of smoke are used to mask the movements of troops. Compressed air guns are almost noiseless and can hurl a bomb farther than a man. Trench serial guns are of small calibre and fashioned from used shells of piping.

Boston, Mass.—Salvation Army opens fresh air camp.

New York City.—Excursion boat is rammed by tug. Two hundred women and children saved as steamer "Keyport" sinks off Battery.

Newport, R. I.—Boys of the Atlantic fleet have semi-annual field meet. Subtitle: Gov. Beekman of R. I. (on left) acted as referee.

San Francisco, Cal.—Strike agitators tie up street car traffic during rush hours. Many arrests made.

Indianapolis, Ind.—Hoosier poet dies. James Whitcomb Riley passes away suddenly here. Subtitle: Note—This picture of Mr. Riley (on the left) was made on the beach at Miami, Florida. The gentleman on the right is "Marse" Henry Watterson, famous editor.

New York City.—Demonstration of the Dunn Diving Hood. City officials watch test.

Seattle, Wash.—State naval militia off to Alaska. U. S. S. "New Orleans" loaned by the navy for cruise.

Polo Grounds, N. Y. City.—Christy Matthewson in new uniform wallops "Giants." Leads the "Reds" to victory on old home grounds. Subtitles: Charlie Herzog, former manager of the "Reds." Dave Robertson, the "Giants'"

CUB.

JERRY'S CELEBRATION (Aug. 11).—The cast: Jerry (George Ovey); butler (George George); chief (Gordon MacGregor); 1st brave (Joseph VonMeter); 2d brave (Arthur Mund); 3d brave (Ray Lincoln); 4th brave (Harry Jackson); 1st policeman (Jefferson Osborne); 2d policeman (Bob Kenyon); father (Louis FitzRoy); mother (Janet Sully); daughter (Claire Alexander). Directed by Milton H. Fahrney.

Jerry starts out to celebrate the Fourth. He starts off by blowing up a stand of fireworks after he has appropriated a number of giant crackers to himself. Pursued by the proprietor of the stand, Jerry seeks refuge in the park. He comes across a policeman slumbering on a bench and rudely awakens the guardian of the law by exploding one of the big firecrackers. A chase follows and Jerry almost runs into the police station. A small runabout attracts his attention and as an angry squad of police close in on him he leaps into the automobile and speeds away.

Arriving at his sweetheart's home he takes pride in describing his new automobile, but when the father sees it he orders Jerry away. Jerry goes for a spin in the country and comes across a settlement of Indians. A happy thought comes to him to sell the machine to the chief and with the money buy a better car so as to win over the consent of the parent of his sweetheart. The chief pays a fabulous sum for the car.

In the meantime the entire police force turns out to find Jerry. They soon discover him talking with the Indians. In the mix-up Jerry escapes, and steals the auto. The police and Indians fight over the ownership of the small car, the former finally starting off with it with the redskins in hot pursuit. Jerry is overtaken as he enters his sweetheart's home. The Indians have flocked about the house and a battle is in progress between the police and the angry warriors. Jerry pretends he has been shot and drops at the feet of the father. The girl is heartbroken until Jerry winks at her. Jerry is unable to carry his ruse out and he is observed by the officers. The house is in an uproar but Jerry at last leaps from the top floor of the building to the gardens, runs to the street and speeds away in the big car. The Indians gain possession of the car their chief bought, and they, too, speed away, leaving the entire police department defeated.

WHO'S GUILTY?—"The Goad of Jealousy"—(Arrow—Two parts—July 31). How Tom Olcott falls in love with Olive Hall, a nurse in the hospital where he has gone to have a fractured shoulder healed; how this girl is made up of nine-tenths jealousy; how there is a gigantic misunderstanding that results in Tom's leaving her, and how he repents and comes back to find her dead form an interesting theme for this drama.

THE GRIP OF EVIL NO. 3—"The Upper Ten"—Balboa—Two parts—July 30)—Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Howell, of society's "upper ten," are trying to marry their daughter, Marjorie, off to John Burton, multi-millionaire. Burton is the man who has lately inherited a fortune and is devoting it to a solution to the question "Is Humanity in the Grip of Evil?"

Burton, far from wanting to marry Marjorie, helps Ralph Morgan to elope with the girl.

Box MP-2, Detroit, Mich., U. S. A.

On the way home Ralph and his wife are hit by a train, Ralph coming off unhurt, but Marjorie sustaining disfiguring injuries. Her chances as a "catch" gone, she is neglected by her parents. Her beauty gone, she is deserted by her husband. And John Burton has another drop of the cynic mixed in his nature.

A MATRIMONIAL MIX-UP—(Muttenthal—July 31)—Heinie and Louie are commissioned to kidnap a fair dame whose father is about to have her married to some anaemic count against her will. For this job the 'ansom 'ero offers them one thousand dollars. They pull the trick and demand the thousand, upon which the elopers bind them, change clothes with them and rush off. Hienie and Louie are found by irate papa, who thinks them the runaway and they are hauled off to the station house, where the big disclosure stuff is worked.

LOSING WEIGHT—(Pathe—July 31—Goldberg Cartoon).—The following inserts taken from the picture itself will give some idea of the character of the film. Let Goldberg tell it:

"At my salary of $12 a week I would have to work a year to buy her a light lunch" muses a poor shrimp on looking at his well-upholstered queen. "Fatima decides to reduce. She follows Lillian Russell's example to roll it off. Doctor Grabcoin, the great beef specialist, recommends hot noodle soup baths for reducing and she takes the doctor's advice." There are a number of other cartoons before the subject is ended.

SOME TROPICAL BIRDS—(Pathe—On the same reel as foregoing).—A description of this film will be published in a later issue.

UNCLE SAM'S IMMIGRANTS—(Pathe—July 31).—A one-reel educational film, taken with the approval and under the direction of the U. S. Department of Labor and Immigration Service. The film shows the details of the inspection prospective Americans have to undergo before they may pass Ellis Island, New York's great clearing house for immigrant aliens.

WHO'S GUILTY? NO. 14.—"The Irony of Justice."—(Arrow—Two Parts—August 7).—As a boy, Tom Morrisey is accused of skylarking and has his name put on the police blotter. In later years, when it will serve the interests and spite of certain men to have him out of the way, he is arraigned before a crooked district attorney on a petty charge, and his "past record" is dug up. He is sent away. Later when he comes out he makes an attempt to save his sister's honor from his old-time enemy, is again arrested and sent away for a long term.

THE GRIP OF EVIL NO. 4—"The Looters."—(Balboa—Two Parts—August 7).—John Burton is persuaded to be a mayoralty candidate on a so-called reform ticket by a crooked political bunch, in whose hands he will be soft stuff. He comes to a realization of the characters of the men with whom he is associated when he has to beat one of them to rescue a girl from his "attentions." He is double-crossed by this man, loses the election, and in the events that follow is more strongly than ever convinced that humanity is in the grip of evil.

LUKE'S LOST LAMB—(Rolin—August 7).—"Lonesome Luke," as Harold Lloyd is known, takes his wife and child to the beach, there to disport himself. His wife can't see that stuff though and sets him to mind the baby. There's another little family there, namely, Snub and his wife. Also some girls. Luke forgets about the baby in observing the girls, with the usual disastrous result to himself.

TOKIO, CAPITAL OF JAPAN—(Pathe—August 7).—The subject gives closeup views of the architectural appearance of the city and depicts the daily lives of its inhabitants.

JUMPING ANALYZED—(Pathe—On the same reel as the foregoing).—The detailed action of the various muscles of the body form the subject of this interesting split-reel. The successive stages of human movements are too rapid for the naked eye to perceive in detail. By first showing ordinary motion pictures of an action and then showing pictures taken with the Pathe Ultra-rapid camera the movements missed by the eye can readily be observed.

PATHE NEWS NO. 59 (July 22).

New York City.—Golf is fast becoming a National pastime and Van Cortland Park is the scene of many an interesting game. Subtitles—Even children have taken to what used to be an "old man's game."

Branchville, Conn.—Hundreds of poor, underfed children from congested city districts are given an opportunity to regain normal strength and health on free Fresh Air Farms. Subtitle—The water holds the most attractions for the kiddies.

Belmont, N. C.—Railroad bridges are wrecked and many lives lost when the Catawba River rises forty feet and inundates many miles of fertile country.

Film Fashions.—Miss Jackie Saunders, famous as the "Maude Adams of the Screen," gowned as she will appear in the great Pathe master plot, "The Grip of Evil."

El Paso, Texas.—Boys of Massachusetts Field Hospital Corps make it a rule to initiate every new member of the company. Subtitle—Regardless of their own privations, the mascot of this unit is well provided for.

Evesham, England.—Women are now employed in the famous truck gardens of this district growing vegetables for the army of Britain.

London, England.—Hundred of blooms are thrown into the carriage of Queen Alexandria as Rose Day is celebrated.

Chicago, Ill.—The revival of racing at the Hawthorne Track is celebrated by thirty thousand enthusiastic turf followers who turn out to see "Dodge," the Latonian Champion, capture the American Derby. Subtitles—They're off! Dodge wins the laurels from many noted entries.

Portsmouth, England.—Jack at play while on furlough indulges in very interesting and novel sports. Subtitle—His aim with fifteen inch guns is more true.

New York City.—The great advance in American shipbuilding is seen when the 260-foot steamship, George E. Warren, is cut in two by oxy-acetylene flame and a 50-foot section inserted. Subtitles—The steel ribs are then put in place, on which the plates are riveted. The completed boat is 310 feet long.

Charlestown, Mass.—The "Plattsburg" idea of training citizens in the art of defense extends from land to sea, and many Naval Militia Corps receive instruction on Uncle Sam's ships. Subtitle.—The warships loaned by the Navy take the men out for real practice on the high seas.

PATHE NEWS, NO. 60 (July 26).

San Antonio, Texas.—Ladies of the American Red Cross Society present the national colors to the United States troops at Fort Sam Houston. Subtitles: The soldiers pass in review before General Funston and his staff, proudly bearing their new colors. With drums beating and fifes playing they start on one of their daily ten-mile hikes.

New York City.—With all of the four hundred pleasure seekers safely removed, the large excursion boat Keyport sinks off the Battery wall after collision with a tug. Subtitles: A diver goes down to lay cables around the hull, preparatory to raising the vessel. After being raised, the boat is taken away, cradled between two wrecking tugs.

The North Sea.—Tireless guardians of the deep, the Allied warships roam the waters of the North Sea, ever on the lookout for enemy ships. Subtitle: At times the little torpedo boats are sent to scout close to the foe's country to catch a glimpse of the German battle fleet.

Hilton, N. Y.—Progressive farmers of the Empire State gather at the Monroe County Fair to witness a demonstration of the latest tractor plows. Subtitle: Horticultural experts give an exhibition of dusting fruit trees to prevent leaf curling.

Etampes, France.—General Joffre, head of the great allied offensive that is sweeping back the German lines; reviews a detachment of French infantry before it passes on to the great battle. Subtitle: A short halt in one of the picturesque fields of France as yet untouched by the ravages of war.

Ysleta, Texas.—National Guardsmen stationed near the border clear away the cactus and weeds around their camp sites to insure sanitary conditions. Subtitles: Every soldier is innoculated with typhoid serum. Two thousand men of one regiment attend field mass and kneel in prayer for the success of their country.

New York City.—A hot day in the great metropolis and thousands flock to nearby beaches and open pools to enjoy the exhilarating effects of the cool breezes. Subtitles: Alas for the corpulent ones, who must employ unusual means to keep up with the times. The polar bears at the Zoo are kept in a frigid atmosphere while Hattie, the elephant, takes matters "into her own hands." That dainty summer dish, ice cream, has more than one devotee. It's nice and cool under these——.

Wandsworth, England.—Recovered wounded soldiers and their nurses forget the terrors of the sick room as they engage in friendly sports. Subtitle: Pillow fighting is one of the favorite pastimes.

Riddle, Oregon.—Sport in the immense pine forests of Oregon reigns supreme as huntsmen set out to catch wild game for a venison barbecue. Subtitles: The best of the day's round-up is proudly exhibited. The venison is then roasted on the ground and served to the crowds that gather whose appetites have been sharpened by the savory odor.

RICHARDSON'S
MOTION PICTURE
HAND BOOK
FOR MANAGERS and OPERATORS
Published by THE MOVING PICTURE WORLD

RICHARDSON'S MOTION PICTURE HAND BOOK is a carefully prepared guide to perfect projection.

It is an invaluable help to every single individual in the trade who has to do with the mechanical handling of motion picture film or the management of a moving picture theatre.

There are over 680 Pages of Text and the illustrations include detail diagrams of all the leading makes of projection machines.

REFRIGERATION
FOR FILM DEVELOPING TANKS

The McClellan Refrigerating Machine No. 3 for use in MOVING PICTURE PLANTS

and for all purposes where refrigeration is required.

It actually GOVERNS THE TEMPERATURE of the liquid wash and holds it at any degree desired in your developing and hydro tanks.

It eliminates the usual trouble experienced by the use of ice and is guaranteed not to interfere with the chemical solution.

The McClellan system is adapted to all conditions and can be attached to any tank. It is very simple and can be readily installed.

It is a specially designed, small, compact, highly efficient refrigerating machine, connected by piping to a coil located in the tank.

It is operated by electricity, motors for which are furnished with machine.

The refrigerating gases are automatically controlled, and a simple turn of a water valve handle starts and stops the machine.

The McClellan system is now in use and highly endorsed by Burton Holmes at his studio at 7610 N. Paulina St., Chicago.

"MARTIN"
ROTARY CONVERTER

For Real
"SUN-LIT PICTURES"

PERFECT REEL DISSOLVING

The voltage of the "MARTIN" poly-phase converter is maintained constant, so that the starting of the second arc does not disturb the light given by the first, making the dissolving of the reels as simple as if the arcs were operated in a Direct Current district. Our emergency panel does away with expensive compensarcs and cuts the wiring and installation cost in half.

is your business worth $8.00?

If it is, why not buy the most efficient fire extinguisher to protect it ?

You probably believe in insurance, but the biggest insurance policy can't save your building or the good will of your trade when fire comes. It takes only a few moments for the whole building to go up in smoke, but it requires months for it to be rebuilt—months that are "candy" for your competitors.

Fires start small—be able to snuff them out quickly by placing a

Johns-Manville Fire Extinguisher

at every danger point.

In cramped quarters, the "J-M" Extinguisher is the most efficient and powerful extinguisher of the one quart type. A few quick strokes, with nozzle closed, store sufficient air pressure to discharge contents when nozzle is opened. With both hands free to aim, the operator thus has complete control over the stream. Where space permits, the "J-M" can also be used as a pump extinguisher. This two-way operation is an exclusive feature.

The J-M Extinguisher Fluid is the only liquid recommended and guaranteed for efficiency in the J-M Extinguisher. It is non-deteriorating, a non-conductor and it is sold in cans bearing the J-M trade-mark. It is effective against any incipient fire, including those of gasoline, grease, oil and electric arc origin. Approved by the Underwriters Laboratories, Inc., and included in the list of approved fire extinguishing appliances issued by the National Board of Fire Underwriters.

If you want to protect your business and the lives of your patrons, order a "J-M" Fire Extinguisher from your dealer today.

The Largest Motion Picture Directory in the World—

336 theaters, of Chicago's 521, advertise in the Herald. Over 100 others are under contract to advertise their programs when they open in the Fall.

Smart exhibitors throughout the Central States have discovered that there is money to be saved and made by the thorough reading of these programs each day. The record of daily changes shows the plays that are winning and failing in one of the largest film centers of the world. To the far-thinking exhibitor, this daily barometer is invaluable.

To the film manufacturer or distributor the Chicago Herald is a powerful advertising medium. Aside from reaching the largest single concentrated group of Moving Picture fans, there is an added opportunity to talk to the Central States exhibitor. Two hundred and eighty or more Theater owners are obliged to read the Chicago Herald to check their own programs daily; many more read it for the purposes mentioned above.

Why the Chicago Herald is Supreme in Motion Pictures:

It has the largest daily program directory in the world—336 theaters.

It has published over 400,000 lines of paid advertising to stimulate the interest of its readers in Motion Pictures.

It prints more about Motion Pictures than all other Chicago papers combined.

It has appropriated $27,000 annually for gathering in new "Movie" fans as readers.

It has a remarkable following for its criticisms, due to the unimpeachable integrity of its unbiased and competent daily reviews.

It has the exclusive rights to the articles of Louella O. Parsons, famous, sincere and popular.

It has printed more Motion Picture stories, including serials, than all the other Chicago papers combined.

It has the first and only "Exhibitors' Aid Department" to help the Exhibitor of the Chicago territory to rent good films.

It has 69% of the Chicago Theaters advertising in its columns every day and Sunday.

It has the rest of the Chicago territory Theater Managers reading its Daily Directory to see what is showing and where.
